Annual of 1924
To be Dedicated
At Noon Friday
For the first time this year the 1924 Dome the members of the junior class will gather in the library.

The editors hope to have the book printed and bound in time for the dedication.

The S. A. C. voted at the last election to give the seniors-class right to put into the book something devoured though even the annual is in junior hands.

Searches Near Portage Expected to Be of Importance to Notre Dame

The news of the discovery of valuable plates in the lake region, plates that seem to indicate any previously discovered even in other countries, and which are being examined by scientific evidences, has lead to further information as to the location of the plates.

It was the beads of the St. Joseph River, not far from the monuments raised to honor Father Allouez, and near the place where the ancient Indians may have lived, that were discovered.

The beads indicate that the Indians who lived in the region were probably of the same culture as that of the Indians who lived in the region, and the early story of the University. The present work is in the region of Portage, already established as a very important post in early American history.

Motor power is now being employed in the search, and much ground has already been covered.

It is planned to rush the work so that the entire region may be covered during the swelling days of late June and early July.

IRISH TRUMPH OVER PURDUE.

Captain Castner Pitches Crippled Irish to Victory; Michigan Today

By JOHN SHOWEL

The recent award of the baseball title by Captain Paul Castner, defeated Purdue, in a close game yesterday at Cardfield. The big south- erners allowed the Boilermakers two hits and was the master of the game at all times. The Irish captain bats in the second hit, made three assists and a put out and played shortstop on the diamond.

The Notre Dame line-up was considerably weakened by injuries, but the Irish played good ball in the field and at bat in Cardfield. Captain, the Purdue pitcher, played the game and allowed seven hits, but the loose field play of the Boilermakers en- sured Irish victory, three times in the second inning.

Sheehan, Capt., and Kline placed his position at shortstop. George Vranos played a splendid game at third. He handled all his chances without an error and made six assists. Collins played the left side in Burn- man's place. Foley's hand has im- proved and he played a splendid game at the shortstop position, and led the Irish batters with two singles and one double in four tries to the plate.

Fifty thousand dollars has been promised by the Knights of Co- man for the building fund to be paid within three years, according to an announcement before the annual state convention of the K. C. of St. Michael's Council, practically every council in the state, reported Timothy F. Galvin, of Valparaiso, that he has pledged his support to the Uni- versity of Notre Dame. The banquet William H. O'Brien, president, was attended by one of the prisoners, and was a splendid dinner, which was warmly re- ceived by all of the visitors, and many speeches were given. Rev. Thomas J. Noonan, Visitor in the name of the Knights of St. Michael's Council, gave the toast from the Knights of Indiana.

On Monday the delegates were entertained by the President of the University, at a splendid dinner, during which Miss Jean- ney said some words. At this the convention proper started.

TE SALUTAMUS

The gods were merciful to the dead. Those ivory idols for which our ancestors bled so madly did not, for them, turn to green sphinxes, because of the hate, the lust, the libido facets, the manifold evils of war. Their blood and the smoke of their war was frankincense and myrrh before their idols, their ideals; and they were never to know the ghastly countenance of those that stood in the war in which they engaged. The deal was spared such after-glimpses.

The memory of millions of whom beautiful memory we celebrate today. They rest in peace. The heritage of cynicism and disillusion bequeathed to us by the assassins of the consciousness of those that release from slavery, struggle, and toil their right. They did in the splendid fervor of an ideal. And the exhortation reminds us that we all were dupes and will ever be so; but we have lived there as long as there is war, and there are shrewd diplomats, that we were multitudinous martyrs in the game of a Satanic diplomacy, will never have occasion to see a great victory, and will always be free, if we choose to be free, to make the world, as it is, a free ground to good and evil.

The Band

Notre Dame had a band during the early part of the year. They had the largest band that ever represented the University. Troubles came, which from the viewpoint of time and position, seems to have been a trifle too much for two parties.

But this is past.

The band, as it is, is a well organized, reorganization was a desperate task, but such men as Jimmie Egan, who will never give up, could not have set before them an ideal, have succeeded in gathering together a new body of human beings. The band now consists of B.G. and others, are building again, and they are building with effort and will. It is soon better than the one that was wrecked by a misunderstanding.

Although a few courageous men may keep the life in an organization that the number of students, the band is still in existence. They must be aided by men who can play, the men who sit in their rooms and blare away in the hall are not able to bring a band. A number of men are beyond Professor Farquart and Jimmie Egan. Those men deserve commendation. The men who are not behind them deserve commendation for they are not our fault. If the men are supposed to give life to the band the splendid uniforms that are certain for next year, the tools are in hand, and this can better than the one that was wrecked by a misunderstanding.

FROM OFF STAGE

Whether or not you will like “The Man from Hell’s River” will depend on whether or not you like the brand of pictures for which the Proctor is responsible. It is a Curwood story with a Curwood hero, a Curwood girl, and a Curwood adventure. It’s a real Curwood girl, however, who is to all intent and purpose until the secret of her birth is revealed.

In “The Man from Hell’s River,” Irving Rockwell, as member as having played the villain in past experiences in your part,—assumes the hero’s part and is of the strongest of them, and it must be confessed he does it rather well. Mr. Jack Basset, who plays the hero, is a very good actor, but his part in the play falls short of what he is capable of doing. The thing that is true and powerful in the play is the way it is written, the way it is directed, and the way it is acted.

There is nothing distinctive about this movie. It is just an average “red-blooded, red-meat” story which is in the prescribed fashion. The only feature is that it adds to the already plentiful list of Wallace Beery’s films. Beery is a good actor, and deserves more notice than he has been receiving.

And after all, your point is what professor?

The Editor,

I am aware that I am probably marked off as your worst student, and that your last paper, as well as your last column, shall be very brief. In keeping with the order of your issue of Sunday, I was very surprised to see your hooded head, and I was sure to be surprised by your letter, which is the same that I expected to see in the face of every student.

JIM IS ON THE RIGHT PATH

We were telling Jimmy Swift that from the figures compiled at Ohio State University we learned that a college co-ed of training, along the social lines alone, makes the university more than her board and room together. She belongs to her family. Jim did not seem to doubt that, but what he wanted to know was what the statistician stopped at that. “It makes the grade as a college co-ed,” social training,” he said, “why they don’t find out how much she costs the club.”
