BOOK ON VERSE BY CHRISTMAS

Prof. Luther Talks; Urges Writers to Write for the Society; Pins Anx Pins

The Scrivener's Anthology of College Verse will probably be issued before Christmas, it was stated at a meeting of the Scrivener's Anthology of College Verse on the evening of October 6. The Anthology of College Verse contains verses of the Notre Dame poetry published since 1920, and is issued in the interest of the new organization.

A committee, consisting of Edward L. Scott, president, and James Hay, secretary, was elected to select the committee of the Scrivener's Anthology of College Verse. They will select their members to a number of the faculty for his approval after their selection.

Professor George N. Shuster, chairman of the Committee of the Scrivener's Anthology of College Verse, addressed the meeting last night. His emphasis was on the importance of contributions for The Scrivener's Anthology of College Verse, saying that the Scrivener's Anthology has all the thrill of the effect of Cretan marriages. The magazine will be 64 pages, and, consequently, he said, every effort will be made to avoid the impression that the Scrivener's Anthology has all the thrill of the effect of Cretan marriages. Through the Looking Glass

When Larry O'Halloran came to town
He said, "I get the marks. Just watch me and see.""Circumstances may change, but not his intelligence," I thought. He went to exame with a nice big nose—
He got a smell mark—but he's not at N. D.

EXTRA
HOODA HAS MET LOUVN AND LOST.

Hooda wishes to announce that there will be no more reminders of cupids producing bugs. He says that now he has another one and that he also has a spare one to sell. It looks very queer. It looks too sweet to be true. We asked him where he got it. Hooda blushed, and on his right foot with the left, placed his finger in his mouth and said, "I don't tell a soul." We asked, "Is it a charm?"

"Nothing is charmed at our house," he said.

"Since you left?" we suggested, and ran ahead. The paragraph that he has, yes. And if you are one of the men who does not say "Hooda," read the above paragraph so that it fits you. And begin in say "Holla."

Even viewed from a purely utilitarian standpoint, say 'Hello' it worthwhile. The combination of smiles and greetings makes you feel better—until even grumpy bugs like those.

JOINT AND SUBJECT

This editorial should be a poem. But poems come from poets, and editorials come from would-be editors. Nevertheless it is concerned with nothing more than sentiment, a feeling; its message will not move the campus, as do the entirety of adoration, but there are men who pay serious heed to the heart which makes the joys of one the joys of the other, and the least pain of one the greatest pain of the other. It is really love, but when it exists between men, we call it, in our shy way, only friendship.

Friendship is a rare thing—not acquaintance, not liking, nor the glamor of personality which sometimes joins two men in mutual attraction; nor any of those, but that kind of heart which makes the joys of one the joys of the other, and the least pain of one the greatest pain of the other. It is all love, but when it exists between men, we call it, in our shy way, only friendship.

At college we are thrown amongst men; we live with them, we strive with them, we laugh with them, and sometimes we have a tear with them. We are young, and they are young; our hopes are great, our enthusiasm great, our tolerance of little faults is great. As surely as God is in His heaven, the delicate flowers of friendship will peal their heads somewhere in this fertile field. And if they do—if in God's good time, a tender heart find us some waking where some one wearies of the world, and the winds that greatly stores its name, guard it with all your soul, nourish it in happy friendship; in the future, the flowers with the chink of humility, if winds would mingle its tender petal erect around it the stern barrier of self-sacrifice; and if the roots of the flower itself would dry up in a sudden despair, worlds with them as in friendship, and if it is, you are a rich man; you have not in vain come to Notre Dame.

"MAKING SPIRIT"

When the new hall planned for freshman is built on the campus next year, the student body expects that no freshman will remain in town. If the endowment campaign continues to be successful, it is said that the hall will be ready for the new school year.

The housing of the freshman class on the campus is joyous news. It proclaims a great stride toward the Greater Notre Dame, a Notre Dame in every man lives on the campus, where distractions are few and the aim is one—men are united in purpose and spirit in an atmosphere like that of the old universities, Oxford, Cambridge, and the Sorbonne. With all the men on the campus, Notre Dame's spirit would become universal, stronger, better.

Every man, not excluding five hundred as soon, would be one of the great Notre Dame family.
