Clubs’ Existence to be Decided by Activity
Mark Nolan, of the S. A. C., in- terviewed several of the clubs en- rolled in the Library yesterday, and said that if the club would put up by promotion and a careful watch would be kept of all activity of clubs.

Of the many offerings suggested, some concerned itself with the writing of reports with the S. A. C., and this idea was given up because of the advisability of delegating a repre- sentative of the S. A. C. and meetings of clubs was discussed.

THE DOME, GILDED

Nothing has been more written about than the dome, and nothing, at Notre Dame is, therefore, more trite a subject. But with its gilding, the dome again becomes a proper subject for discussion.

The gilding work was started on the dome of Notre Dame, in the morning. The gilding is the covering of the dome of the dome of Notre Dame, in the morning. The gilding is the covering of the dome of Notre Dame, in the morning. The gilding is the covering of the dome of Notre Dame, in the morning.

From this fountain of gold, the eyes of a tender Mother have watched the deeds of youth, the lads of an age. To Her the hearts are all at one, to Her the hearts are all at one, to Her the hearts are all at one.

From her outstretched hands and from the golden surface of her throne, the golden light, at morning, noon and evening, go forth the currents of life, the life of the student body. The rays of gold symbolize the charity and the love that She is sending into the hearts of her sons. The dome of yesterday, of today, of tomorrow, is always the same, what it has been, what it is, what it will be, is ever unchanged.

CELEBRATIONS AND MUSIC

The year 1923 seems to be one of unlimited possibilities in the way of celebrations. It is, for example, the fiftieth anniversary of the invention of the typewriter. Just 90 years ago, however, there appeared an invention no less important from the standpoint of music. What the typewriter did for the recording of words, the S. A. C. did for the recording of music in 1023 by inventing the method of "writing" music on paper.

To realize the importance of Guido's service to musical progress it is necessary to consider the system of notation in use before his time. For the most part music could then be circulated from one person to another by ear only; that is, by humming or whistling the tune. What Guido did, it appears from the practice of the Greeks of employing the first fifteen letters of the alphabet to designate the various intervals was to give the student body a system of notation and rhythm of a melody might be graphically displayed so that anyone might learn it from a manuscript without the aid of a master.

The introduction of the invention which prevailed in the performance and the teaching of liturgical music generally. In his instruction and in the application of his invention, the system of recording musical notes on lines in about the same manner as modern sheet music. The perfection of his new system brought order and cleanliness to the teaching of music, and gave an impetus to its study that lasted throughout the middle ages.

There is a word to Guido, the Benedictine of Arezzo. And the other word, the word to the Catholic church, the mother of modern music. And the achievement of this monk a praiseworthy part in the development of music. And of the Benedictine monk, a praiseworthy part in the development of music. And of the Benedictine monk, a praiseworthy part in the development of music.
