EDITORIAL: ROSSIE FOR 'SBP

We all know that somehow, somewhere the Administration ran out of ideas about how to deal with students. At one time, the rules whose vestigial manifestations still occasionally bother us did in fact represent a kind of concept of the sheltered, monastic place that a university should be.

Little by little, this all changed. Step by step, rule by rule, the old rationale began to disintegrate. Mr. Dowd's note that two "bulwarks" remain--no women in the halls and no drinking on campus. But what precisely are they bulwarks against? One can only suppose that they remain to indicate the Administration's surviving belief that it is dealing with children.

But there is a question of whether we the students are willing to accept this definition any longer. We've advanced, stumbled and stumbled to a piecemeal assertion of our rights. And even if we feel no opposition to the Administration as such, even if we view the Administration as essentially superior in intelligence and experience, are any of us willing to assume that we are still too irresponsible to govern our own lives?

It is a contradiction of common sense to suppose this. Too much of our life under the present system is in fact depends on our own responsibility. We decide when we will get up in the morning, how long we need to study, or try to date. In short, most of the decisions in fact have some sort of right to participate in collegiate lives. But only one has demonstrated a right to participate in the decisions of the university in the areas involved in this position. That man is Richard Rossie.

Rossie has both the practical and a sort of magical character that takes them out of their own power. Rossie among the candidates seems really to realize, is that the students must be considered as a responsible part of the decision-making process. Otherwise, we may eventually suppose this. Too much of our life under the present system depends on our own responsibility.

Mr. Dowd will not comment on the incident. On Fri. night, Dowd respon­ ded to numerous adverse editorials by seven editors immediately issued a statement condemning the choice as irresponsible of the magazine's staff. Dowd said "another would-be pooh-bah" and a "political chameleon," they are the remnant of Scholastic editors have already attempted to induce members of the Observer staff to the magazine in order that they can publish this week.

Richard Rossie finally met the Dowd administration, or in fact an integral part of it at all. Rossie has so far refused to respond openly to the charges hurled at him by his opponents, but has conducted his campaign along the same lines: academic reform and increased emphasis on campus activities. Rossie claims to be heading the only "balanced, experienced, and diversified" ticket, and thus argues that he and Nau can most effectively handle a team the wide display of problems that confront the whole student government.

Fr. Hesburgh's Mother Dies

Mrs. Anne Hesburgh, mother of University President Rev. Theodore Hesburgh, C.S.C., died yesterday at 9:15 p.m., in Syracuse, N.Y. Fr. Hesburgh had been called home to her bedrock last week-end. Funeral Services will be held Tuesday, 10:00 a.m., at St. Anthony's Church in Syracuse. Other survivors include James, Fr. (Fr. Hesburgh's brother), International Vice President of Wheelabrator Corporation, Morawski.

48 Leave Scholastic After Policy Clash

In a surprise move last Friday, three Scholastic editors and seven seni­ ors, gave that magazine's SBP endorsement "hesitantly" to Pat Dowd. Seven other Scholastic editors immediately issued a statement condemning the choice as irresponsible of the magazine's staff. Dowd "another would-be pooh-bah" and a "political chameleon," they are the remnant of Scholastic editors have already attempted to induce members of the Observer staff to the magazine in order that they can publish this week.

RICHARD ROSSIE

Dowd also labeled the seven fired editors open liars driven by a "personal hatred" of himself. Rossie and Nau have been told by attorneys that the statement was libelous, and are con­ sidering initiating legal action.

Dowd's reaction was also direct­ ed against the news story in the "Campus" section of the Scholastic which discredited his increasing attacks on the group rallying to the support of Rossie and Nau. The story concerned Dowd's denial that he ever sup­ ported a statement from party members.

Talk Now Charlie Brown

Charlie Brown, boo-boo of the Berkeley Bag of the Neo­ American Church, returned to campus Fri. night after spending Thurs. night in the St. Joseph County Jail. Organized by the students who brought Brown to the campus, the demonstration drew more than 200 students. With a sign pro­ claiming "Our Student Center" serving as a backdrop, YCS Pres­ ident Bill Brown (who introduced Brown in the Law Auditorium Thurs. night), and new alumnus Lenny Joyce took turns interpreting the events of the past twen­ ty-four hours. Brown, whose real name is Charles Artman, sung songs to the accompaniment of his auto-harp, answered questions and just did his thing.

Thurs. night Brown was about 45 minutes into his candlelight session, speaking, singing, and offering his peace pipe to the more than 300 in his audience, when a campus security officer walked in. "By order of Dean O'Meara," he announced, "this meeting is closed. You do not have permission to use this building." Bill Siska, a senior from Lyons Hall, produced the signed permission slip from the Rev. Charles McCarragher, C.S.C., Vice-president for Student Affairs, which authorized Brown's use of the Auditorium.

The campus police were called earlier in the evening by an unidentified law student who complained that the speech, taking place beneath the Law Library, was hindering study. When the Campus police didn't arrive, he informed Dean O'Meara who then called both the Campus police and Elmer Sokol, St. Joseph County Sheriff.

After closing the Thurs. night meeting, the Sheriff's men took Brown downtown and locked him up. A spokesman for the Sher­ iff's office said that Brown was not officially but was held overnight on a suspected violation of the Selective Service Act.

Brown said Fri. night in the Student Center that he considered the police action "a breach of my freedom of speech," but planned no public protest action. He called his arrest "a failure in communica­tion."
"What does IBM offer a Ph.D? I'd say diversity. But judge for yourself when they're here March 4th."

"I think IBM's worth listening to because the advantages that attracted me are even stronger today. (This is Gary Kozak, Ph.D. in Analytical-Physical Chemistry, an IBM Development Chemist and Project Manager.)

"At IBM you're constantly working with people doing advanced work in many different fields. That's a great asset to any scientist because today's problems are often interdisciplinary. You can't solve them with one kind of background. You need inputs from three or four different kinds of people.

"A good example is the solid logic technology used in building the IBM System/360. The EE tells you how many conductors you'll have, where they go, and what should be at the terminals. An ME designs fixtureing and automatic processes. A Polymer Chemist formulates insulators and says how they should be used. The Metallurgist specifies alloy compositions. The Physicist decides how to optimize a process for producing transistors and diodes. And all these people have to talk with each other and help each other.

"It's a stimulating environment, and it keeps you technologically sharp. Of course, to do all this interfacing with other disciplines, you need a free and informal atmosphere, and IBM has it. It's a good place for a scientist to work."

There's more to the IBM story than Gary has mentioned. You can get all the facts when we interview Ph.D.'s on campus. Make an appointment at your placement office, even if you're headed for military service. Or if you can't make a campus interview, send an outline of your interests and educational background to Mr. I. C. Pfieffer, IBM, 100 South Wacker Drive, Chicago, Illinois 60606. A group of Notre Dame alumni who live or work in the New York area have formed a committee to "call upon the directors of the NYAC to explain in detail their membership policies and practices with regard to non-white individuals." The committee, formed in response to the boycott proposed by Negro athletes of New York Athletic Club-sponsored events, seeks the support of Notre Dame alumni. In 1969, 2000 Notre Dame graduates.

The committee, Notre Dame Against Racial Discrimination in Athletics, also supported last Friday's boycott of the first NYAC meet of this season in the new Madison Square Garden (Notre Dame's track team did not participate).

The committee was originated by Kenneth L. Woodward, '57 graduate. Woodward, the Religious Editors of New York Magazine, founded the committee on Feb. 5. He first sent a letter to the New York Athletic Club, which is the sponsor of the National Alumni Association asking for a statement of principle on segregation (not the NYAC specifically) which practice segregation membership. The Board, after six hours of debate last week, issued the following statement: "The Board of Directors of the University of Notre Dame Alumni Association supports the position of the University of Notre Dame Alumni Association on segregation as a matter of principle."

Woodward feels the statement should be included clubs that practice segregation. He wanted a "honest, Christian, hard-nosed statement," and got something less than that. But he feels it is a start; it is the first statement of this nature ever made by an alumni association.

Woodward then sent letters to all alumni in the greater New York area asking for support. These letters brought up the point that the NYAC is considered a "Catholic club" and that Notre Dame alumni are particularly welcome in the club.

In addition, the letter, to the club's newsletter, gives the example of Ricard Urbina, a New Yorker of Hispanic Puerto Rican descent, a student at Georgetown Law School and an immeasurable half-mile Undefined. Urbina was recently named member in the NYAC track team. The club gave no reason for the refusal. No one, in fact, can remember a Negro having worn the colors of the NYAC in an amateur athletic event. The committee sees this condition as a "serious violation of fundamental Christian ethics."

Also, since it is widely believed that many priests in the Metropolitan area are members of the club, similar letters were sent to the Administrator of the Archdiocese of New York and to the bishops of the dioceses of Brooklyn and Rockville Center. The bishops are asked to discover if any priests under their jurisdiction belong to clubs that practice segregation, and, if so, to remind them of the "sin of racism and the contradiction of living the Gospel and belonging to such clubs." At this point, the bishops of Brooklyn and Rockville Center have responded favorably.

The New York club's lack of a commitment to the above aspect of Woodward's action. The basic concern of the committee is the alleged members on racism that exist in the NYAC and other athletic clubs. The NYAC is the largest private club of this type in the country. The other clubs are not set to make the Alumni Association and its alumni most meaningful.

Woodward told the Observer that "younger alumni" are being turned off by the established Alumni clubs. Older alumni tend to run "pointless drinking and nostalgia clubs" and the younger men, as a rule, would rather participate in something with more import.

This Man McKenzie

By Terry O'Neil

What sort of man is he? He looks like Everett Dirksen, says J.W. Fullbright and writes about Jesus Christ.

McKenzie, in his second year at Notre Dame, has two books in print, looks including two Bible analyses which are the basis for various fundamentalist theology courses.

What does he find wrong with the Administration's war policy? "Everything," exclaims Fr. McKenzie. "It is hard to find in history a government action whose I have total objection; but this one is.

If only his silver-rimmed glasses could be changed to black. McKenzie would be a fine double for Senator Dirksen. The stomach is ample, the face wise and experienced, the voice quick and gravelly, the hair grey and slightly unkempt, lacking Everett's wild curls. And like Fulbright, he swallows the last few words of each sentence in challenging LBJ's views.

Last month, Fr. McKenzie joined 255 other United States priests in asking Pope Paul to send a message to the American people condemning the Vietnam War. In a cable, drafted by the New York Catholic Labor Council Fellowship, the priests told their Pontiff, "We ask you to condemn the American war in Vietnam. We ask you to choose such words that are decisive, final and crystal clear. Let your words, we pray, impress the nation, influence its leaders, and above all, no senator, no bishop, no soldier, no citizen, can fail to understand.

The committee, "We have written, prayed, protested, fasted, debated. Some of us have been jailed. To no avail; the war mounts, a rhetoric of appeals are launched in favor of nationalism, violence and racism to justify each new horror."

Fr. McKenzie adds his own touches. "I don't new the United States has a mission to promote democracy in Southeast Asia," he says. "I still don't know what we are supposed to accomplish there. If we want a line we have in Korea, the price we're paying is extremely high."

"The laws of war do not permit one government to destroy another," he contends. "What we have is that the government of South Vietnam. It has only professional soldiers any more. We have no assurance that we are doing what the South Viet-"
Prophets And Quicksand

Every year self ordained Isaiah's arise from the student body to preach to the masses about their corrupt kings and the infidelity of various leaders. The prophets then proceed to work multitudinous miracles and forecast Elyssia on campus with their elections. They pass out literary mantra and promise bread and circuses to the students near electorate. Spring in and spring out we the voters are ushered forth to teleology on earth.

The prophet of the truth is elected and come September and that long awaited our new official Moses always forgets that his imperious was to lead his rabble out of the desert. Instead he leads them into a sandbox of quicksand where stagnation is the game to be played.

A couple of years ago a few people didn't want to build castles in the sand. They didn't want to play because they had gotten their feet dirty once too often. They didn't want to play because they feared for their dental health and because they had eaten sand in too many places and in too many times before. They didn't want to play because they had finally realized that sand and sandboxes could only choke people and their ideas.

Thus a couple of years ago Lenny Joyce, rebel in residence, told the rabble the big world and the real world was outside the canopyed sandbox. Joyce was a man who refused to play the tact game so well defined by the smiling political chameleons. Joyce ran and he ran hard but he didn't win. Nevertheless he did manage to garner 750 votes in a settember day while paternalism cringed in his well fortified tower.

And then suddenly is today and today the war clouds have gathered once again. Four hats in the proverbial ring and come Tuesday one shall be chosen. The choice shall set the tenor and the fruits that we shall reap from that choice shall be either good or ill.

One of the hats in the ring belongs to Mr. Graham. Graham styles himself in the line of traditionalism reaching all the way back to Ken Beirne. Unfortunately he suffers from a lack of mental acuity and lack of awareness that does much discredit to Beirne's good name. Perhaps the most serious charge that can be leveled at Graham is that he hits below the intellect without ever understanding the very nature of dignity. In his literature he displays a picture of a bearded Paul Higgins and relates it to moral turpitude. In short, his campaign borders on the region that we usually refer to as the gross.

Another hopeful is Chuck Perrin. Perrin is a nice young man and undoubtedly sincere. The trouble is that he is wrong. Student Government, far from withdrawing from the students in the last few years, has shown a marked propensity to relate itself to the student body. The recent Assembly is just one manifestation of this tendency. Perrin's conception of the art of the possible as being completely evil is symptomatic of his well meaning naivete.

Yet another is Mr. Dowd. And much trammeled he should be. Dowd has about as much radical guts as the gross. Graham is that he hits below the intellect without ever understanding the very nature of dignity. In his literature he displays a picture of a bearded Paul Higgins and relates it to moral turpitude. In short, his campaign borders on the region that we usually refer to as the gross.

Another hopeful is Chuck Perrin. Perrin is a nice young man and undoubtedly sincere. The trouble is that he is wrong. Student Government, far from withdrawing from the students in the last few years, has shown a marked propensity to relate itself to the student body. The recent Assembly is just one manifestation of this tendency. Perrin's conception of the art of the possible as being completely evil is symptomatic of his well meaning naivete.

Dowd, says Joel Connelly, was really upset when he was told that I considered his letter to the student body about the Observer poll and the Scholastic editorial and counter-editorial as both personally vicious and incred­ibly dishonest. And maybe he wrote us an apology because he was hurt and upset and not because he was afraid I'd attack him. But I doubt it. If Pat Dowd is not a liar, then Tom Brislin, Harry Dooley, the forty-three people who attended the ASP nominating convention and the seven editors of the Scholastic must be. If Pat Dowd has not changed his positions on many and varied subjects throughout the campaign, then the fact that so many of us think he has is due to his inability to express himself with any kind of clarity at all. Perhaps he should not be upset, for Dowd's attack on the Observer and my own integrity was more or less parenthetical and just ambiguous enough for him to pretend that he didn't mean anything like that at all. Although he knows "the results are exaggerated," good old Pat Dowd would never do anything like saying I had made up numbers (because I can disprove that). He'd much rather just intimate and leave himself a way out.

I'm sensitive too. I brood over personal criticism of my material. But ordinarily it's fair criticism of my ideas or my viewpoint, something which everybody who reads a journalist is entitled to do. But Dowd is still trying to take advantage of the old Observer's reputation as a sensationalist rag and it's just not true any more. When Dowd starts answering questions about the poll as he campaigns with cute answers such as "You know how they feel about me up there," then he is directly challenging the integrity of every one of us.

I believe in us and I know I've been fair in my news stories. Dowd, backed into a corner by his half-truths, admits this himself. As for the fired Scholastic editors, they all assure me that the letter was their own idea and that at no time did they even consider trying to confiscate the Scholastics. And I trust men like Joel Garreau and Bill Cullen, because I haven't come into contact with twenty people who tell me that they have told somebody else exactly the opposite of what they've told me. Pat Dowd has that reputation among those who've associated with him. He deserves it.

Frakly, I don't believe that Pat Dowd is personally dishonest. But he thinks that politics is a game of manipulating people and getting away with what you can. The strange thing is that he doesn't play his own game very well. He gets caught too often.

When this election started, I was mildly in favor of Rossie but I felt that those who supported a more moderate position might well be justified in voting for Dowd. This is no longer true. He no longer represents any position. He has shifted around too much, attacked too many honest and good people. He no longer deserves anyone's vote.
Infirmary Above Average - Colip

By SAM RUMORE

This is the first in a three part series dealing with Notre Dame's Health Facilities.

At the time of its construction in 1935, the Notre Dame Student Infirmary served the largest boarding school in the United States. There were then 3000 students enrolled with 2500 living on campus. The new infirmary, costing $250,000, could accommodate 100 people, which included patients, visitors, and guests.

According to Infirmary records, in 1936 the average volume of bed patients was 225 a semester or 4.5 per week. There were 15,395 treatments administered for the school year 1935-36. March was the busiest month with December the least active. Three contagious diseases, measles, mumps, and chicken pox, were recorded, the busiest month with December the least active.

Colip, who began his career at the Infirmary, is one of two full-time physicians at the University. His colleague is Dr. Robert Speybroeck, also a graduate of Loyola in Chicago. The Infirmary has three examination rooms which accommodate general examinations and minor surgical operations. Other facilities include a Lab for clinical tests, a Pharmacy for the dispensing of medications and minor surgical operations. Facilities to bed every year or 3-4 patients per day. The Infirmary commits nearly 1200 students to bed every year or 3-4 patient days per student.

Dr. Colip pointed out that at least six boys' homes had been saved this year by service directly attributed to the Infirmary. They have made early diagnoses of four malignancies. Dr. Colip also noted that the University has been free from infectious disease this year. Last year there were approximately 2500 patients or about 150 cases per day.

The Infirmary presently has 35 beds available for occupancy. There are found in four wards and several private rooms. The number of available beds has decrease from former years due to the new Psychological Services Center which now occupies the third floor.

Dr. Colip stated that this service along with the availability of two full-time physicians were major additions to the Infirmary. "By 'full-time' physician Dr. Colip meant that the doctors worked a regular 40 hour week and were employed solely by the University. He also said that a doctor was "on call" 24 hours a day.

As regards the number of students using the health facilities offered, Dr. Colip explained that there are 22,500 patients each year. This figure is pretty evenly distributed through the school year, and each month there are approximately 2500 patients or about 150 cases per day.
Half-Truths

Dear Sirs,

In our letter to the student body on Friday afternoon, we referred to the Observer straw poll as "exaggerated." In doing so, we had no intention of questioning the integrity of those who worked on the poll; we only wished to point out that the poll did not accurately reflect the sentiments of the student body as we gauged them.

We feel that Mr. Gallagher made every attempt to analyze the results of the poll fairly. Also, we wish to thank the news staff of the Observer for their genuine efforts at fair coverage of the campaign.

Sincerely,
Pat Dowd & John Gallagher

The Whole Truth

Dear Sirs:

I want to clear up several misunderstandings concerning the ASP's convention of Feb. 5, and its subsequent endorsement of Richard Rossie for SBF.

An article concerning the convention was written in the Feb. 7 issue of the Observer by Joel Connors, a close friend and chief supporter of Pat Dowd. In his article Mr. Connors drew erroneous conclusions, quotes out of context, and in at least one case, completely reverses that which was fact, in what was an overzealous attempt to lessen the effect of Mr. Dowd's defeat at the convention.

The ASP did endorse Mr. Rossie, but not reluctantly. "New guys from Farley," if there really were any, certainly did not swing the endorsement. And finally, ASP Chairman Jon Sherry was definitely not opposed to the endorsement. In point of fact, he was personally in favor of the endorsement, but as chairman it was lastly felt that Mr. Rossie was the only one who could implement the principles of student self-government.

Further, those who supported "no endorsement" went, at no time, in opposition to any of this reasoning. Their reasons for support of "no endorsement" were mentioned earlier.

Finally we come to Mr. Dowd who currently solicited the ASP's endorsement. In addressing the student body, Mr. Dowd was seemingly handling himself very well with his tale of conservative turned liberal. He was most repentant for the body for his vicious anti-ASP campaigns of the past, and asked our forgiveness—as he was truly with us now. He was doing very well for himself indeed and I personally feel that there may have been 2 or 3 present who actually believed him.

But when then commenting on his voting record, in last year's senate, he lied! He didn't make a slip, nor did he make a mistake, he took a calculated risk and lost. Fortunately, there were those present who were aware of the actual facts, and caught Mr. Dowd in his deceit. One can only wonder whether Mr. Dowd, while campaigning on the campus (and particularly on the freshman quad), has again resorted to calculated risks. Unfortunately, there's someone present who knows the facts, we'll probably never know.

How Dow?

Dear Editor:

Where have all the peace demonstrators been? Have they formight their offensive too late? Have they left the carriers of the napalm pads come to the Notre Dame campus unnoticed? I think they have. On November 13, U.S. Steel Corporation came by un­conspicuously to try to lure war mongering students into work­ing for them. Bethlehem Steel also came unhampered by pro­tests. In fact, every company that visited this campus this year for job placements has in some way a connection with the war in Vietnam. But why hasn't the peace protesters protested the whole job placement bureau itself, or for that matter the uni­versity for allowing such a bu­reaux?

FENCING
The Notre Dame fencing team swept a quadrangular meet in the Fieldhouse Saturday and ran its win streak to 29 straight. The Irish slipped by Ohio State 143-0 and won easily over Duke and Michigan State, 189-2 and 21-6, respectively. Leading Coach Mike DeCicco’s squad to the longest victory streak in Notre Dame fencing history were seniors John Crickelair and Mike Dahar. Dahar finished 7-0 in the saber while Crickelair was 6-1 in the foil.

WRESTLING
Irish wrestlers found it tough going in the Wheaton Invitational Tournament, placing one man second and two others fourth. Jim Hughes (152 pounds) pinned Joe Nelson of Mac Murray Friday and decisioned Ron Fugger of Dubuque 6-3 Saturday afternoon but Hansen bowed to Jim Gustafson of Wheaton 3-3 in the final.

Heavyweight Pat Mundron and Dave Olmstead were the fourth-place finishers. Mundron pinned one opponent, won by default over another, but dropped narrow 4-3 and 3-1 decisions. Olmstead posted a 1-2 record, all three matches were decisions.

TRACK
Michigan’s track team broke one meet record and tied another as it defeated Notre Dame 76-64 Saturday. The Wolverine’s took nine of 15 events, setting a school record in the two-mile run and tying the mark in the low hurdles. Notre Dame started strong by winning the mile and 440 dash. Chuck Vetrom and Bob Watson of ND ran one-two in the mile, winning time 4:13.3, while Bob Tinn captured the quarter in 50. Pete Farrell, Bob Walsh, and the mile relay team also triumphed, but Michigan swept the field events for the decisive margin.

SWIMMING
Notre Dame took a dunking from Purdue 74-48 Saturday. John Cox won both the 100 and 200 yard freestyle and the 200 yard medley relay as ND went 1-8 overall. The Irish fell to 17-8, while Purdue moved to 19-5.

Junior guard Jim Derrick and his Irish teammates face New York University Thursday in the new Madison Square Garden.

Always Next Year For Ex-Irish Cager

What else could happen to former Notre Dame basketball star Jay Miller?

Following his graduation in 1965, Jay embarked on a tough road to the National Basketball Association. He finally reached his goal this season, earning a spot with the hustling Notre Dame basketball star Jay Miller? Besides, Jay had to contend at guard with a kid just learning the game and 1 watched President’s Medalion. In 1966, he was tabbed Athlete of the Year, copping the Golden Dome Award. An excellent student-athlete who majored in business and finance, Jay helped found the Honor Society.

Looking for more floor experience, Jay went to work for the Goodyear Rubber Company and played on its AAU team. He immediately became the top player on the team, leading Goodyear to the AAU National League title, the National AAU crown and the World AAU championships in Rome in 1966. Jay was tapped the Most Valuable Player in the Rome tournament after pacing Goodyear to a 57-3 record.

As a final preparation for the NBA, Jay played on the United States club which won the Pan-American Games basketball title in May, 1967. Jay converted two free throws with 0:01 remaining in the game to defeat Russia, 89-88.

A few months later, Jay joined the Hawks training camp at Concordia Seminary in St. Louis. He couldn’t have picked a tougher team to make since the Hawks have the highest percentage in pro basketball and are currently leading the Western Division by six games.

Besides, Jay had to contend at guard with Pogo Joe Caldwell, Len Wilkens, George Lehmann and Dick (The Rake) Snyder. But Jay stuck with St. Louis, only to have disastrous injuries ruin his season. Twice, he hurt his ankle, then missed three weeks with an appendectomy. Just when he was rounding into shape

Last month, his Army reserve unit called him up for six months active duty. Altogether Jay played only 51 minutes for the Hawks, but there’s a good chance they’ll vote him a share of their playoff winnings.

"I followed the Hawks ever since I was a kid just learning the game and I watched them every chance I could when I would return to St. Louis for visits with relatives," says Jay. "The chance to play pro ball in a city that has always been like a second home for me in a dream come true. This is a great opportunity for me and I’ve been waiting for it a long time. Next year’s another season."
