New Highrise Dorm Plans Unveiled
Construction to Start in Late April

Class Books To Be Examined

"We're not $600 in debt, in fact we're about $1200 in the black right now," said Mike Minton, Senior Class President, concerning his class's financial status. Rumors questioning the financial position of the Senior class have been circulating since Chris Murphy, Student Body President, and Tom Gounder, Student Gov't Treasurer, ordered the seniors to submit their books for investigation.

Although Murphy made a declaration of "no comment," when asked about the rationale behind this move Murphy did say that there was nothing unusual about calling in the Senior books at this time of the year and that it was an annual practice of Student Government.

Any debt left by the outgoing Senior class is not incurred by the incoming class but rather by student government and Godbout says that the present financial condition of the government and the Student Union have made Murphy and Gounder slightly apprehensive about large class expenditures.

Including an income statement and a balance sheet, Murphy has requested Godbout to prepare a prospectus of future financial expenditures of the class. Minton plans to use the entire $1200 surplus on hand right now in financing Senior Week activities. Senior room needs will be taken care of by the monthly $450 received from the new Senior Bar.

Minton and Godbout both realize that student government can effect an indirect reduction in class spending by influencing the granting of activity permission slips by Fr. McCarragher, Vice President for Academic Affairs. Both agree that the seniors should be the last class to be submitted to such monetary pressures.

"Financially, we are in better shape than any other class," said Godbout. "It's my job to see that our class leaves no debt behind. Our present plans call for a total balance of $10 at the end of the year."

Pagorski Resigns Farnam To Be New Crux Editor

Beverly Pagorski, editor of the St. Mary's student newspaper, the Crux, announced yesterday that she was resigning her position which she has held since February. She said that she was resigning for personal reasons.

"I had to decide whether I was going to be a student or an editor," Pagorski said. She said that she regretted having to leave her post. Pagorski has been involved in journalism since her high school days, and has done summer work for various papers.

Mrs. Mary J. Matz, advisor to the Crux, announced that four SMC juniors have been appointed to a joint editorial board to head the paper. The four students are Mary Farnam, Betty Dickson, Nancy Carlin, and Kathy Gournier. Farnam will act as editor-in-chief of the board. The other three girls will be associate editors.

Wiston unveiled the floor plans of the new dorms stating that the two would hold 1076 students; with the completion of the third dorm, 1500 students will be housed there. Each dorm will have a small meditation chapel on every floor and none of the rooms will be air conditioned will be equipped with sinks since it is believed it will make the room a little cleaner.

Jim Barr spoke about the cost of carving the dorms; he used Fisher hall as an example where he calculated it would cost $1500 per floor for a rug that will last 7-8 years.

The Crux's editorship is being made from Rev. Michael Murphy's letter to Fr. Hesburgh dated Feb. 6, 1967 concerning the estimates of over crowded conditions on campus. At that time Zahm was the most overcrowded followed by Dillon and Cavanaugh.

News In Brief:

Wanted: Scholastic Boss

Applications for the position of editor-in-chief of the Scholastic are being accepted by Rev. Charles McCarragher, CSC, vice-president for student affairs. Applications must be made in triplicate and should be received by Fr. McCarragher's office by Mar. 25 and the new editor will be selected by a board consisting of Prof. Frank O'Malley, O'Kane, retiring Scholastic editor Mike McNerney. The editorship is open to any undergraduate, and Fr. McCarragher has announced that next year's editor and assistant editors will receive no stipend from the university.

Committee Hears Law on Parietals

By TIM O'MEILIA

The Student-Faculty Committee on Student Life learned Mon. that the state of Indiana does indeed have a lascivious conduct law, but the question still remains whether or not the law applies to the University dormitories.

The committee presented the opinions of two lawyers, Law School Professor Thomas L. Shaffer and University lawyer William E. Farabaugh on the question of whether parietal hours would violate any state laws.

Student committee member and Howard Hall President Gordon Hunt said that "the law referred to boarding houses, hotels and homes which the owner knows are being used for prostitution or for immoral purposes." Hunt said there was a problem as to whether the dorms can be classified in the same category as hotels, boarding houses, and brothels. He said he doubted whether the University could be included under the law since it does not knowingly allow prostitution or immoral behavior.

Committee Chairman Rev. Charles L. McCarragher CSC, vice president of the University affairs said, "There is a lascivious conduct law but whether it could be applied to the University is another question." Fr. McCarragher also said the law was vague as to the "immoral conduct" clause and the category of the University as a boarding house. The lawyers quoted several cases but "lawyers don't like hypothetical cases," and the question still remains open, according to Fr. McCarragher.

Hunt also said, "In the case of any board the University could be held responsible if the offended party could prove negligence as the situation is now."

Dillon Hall President Vince Terlep said, "It would be more advantageous to have parietal hours in the event of a suit because the University would be less liable."

Hunt also said that no matter who makes the rules or enforces them, the students or the Administration, if they are not enforced properly the University is responsible.

The lawyers also said that it is unconstitutional for the guards to enter a student's room unless there is reasonable evidence that some University or state laws are being violated. However, Hunt said there was a question as to whether a guard has the right to enter a room if the student refuses him admission.

The bills passed by the General Assembly for the committee at the next meeting. Hunt says that when the parietal hours bill comes up that the students will attempt to get a clarification of University President Rev. Theodore M. Hesburgh's rationale. Hunt is particularly interested in determining if Fr. Hesburgh's argument is primarily based on the moral conscience. Hunt says they hope to have a good argument to oppose the rationale when the bill is presented to the Board of Trustees in May.

It was also determined at the meeting that the contract signed by the student on his application form for admittance to the University is not actually binding.

Senate Passes Sherry's Judiciary Bill

By CHERS WOLFE

The Student Senate passed motions Monday night concerning a Student Judiciary and the "Charlie Brown incident", and heard reports from several standing committees.

Sherry presented a bill which calls for "a student judiciary which shall enforce all rules of discipline which pertain directly to the good order of the student community of this University". He said that at present the judicial system was "an organ of the administration", and should be extended to include enforcement of student rules, as well as those of the University.

A friendly amendment proposed by Sophomore Senator Richard Storatz was accepted by Sherry. He called for the appointment of two campus senators and a student to present the bill to Vice-President for Student Affairs Rev. Charles McCarragher, CSC, within 14 days. In the case of its rejection by Father McCarragher they would testify before the Senate giving Fr. Mc-

Carragher's rationale for rejection.

The debate on the matter was mostly concerned with whether the bill should be reported back to committee. Jack Powers of the Senate Affairs Committee said that the bill should be more specific, and moved that the bill be returned to committee for discussion among Sherry, committee members, and administration figures. His motion was defeated by voice vote, and Sherry's original motion then passed easily. The students appointed by SBVP Tom McKenna to see Father McCarragher's rationale for rejection.

The motion to accept the motion was reconsidered by Father McCarragher, who then asked Fr. McCarragher's rationale for rejection.

Mike Kelly of Breede-Phillips action against Charlie Brown, whose YCS sponsored speech in the Law Auditorium, Feb. 15, was broken up by police. Brown was arrested for not having his draft card in his possession. He was released after a night in the St. Joseph's County Jail. The police had been called to the auditorium by Dean O'Meara of the Law School, and had apparently misunderstood Father McCarragher when they were trying to ascertain whether permission to use the auditorium had been given.

The motion called the action of the University Board of Trustees as censure, but was defeated by a narrow margin. Hunt says that in the future, if a committee does not pass a bill, the bill will be returned to committee for another hearing. The motion to pass the bill was defeated by a narrow margin at the next meeting.

Mister Mtxypzpl

Mr. Mtxypzpl, that mysterious Superman comic character has in spired two comic captions with an excusing unoriginal word game that's called Mr. Mtxypzpl. The concept of the game is to unscramble the sets of letters, so that they construct a word. Then by taking the letters from the appropriately marked boxes, form a word or series of words which completes the puzzle described in the caption.

Mr. Mtxypzpl will appear regularly in the Observer, but you must save your correct Mtxypzpl for valuable prizes at the end of the month. That's when Super Mtxypzpl the unoriginal big word game appears.

Award To Be Changed?

By TOM EHRBAR

One week ago tonight, President John Kennedy spoke to a crowd of 300 in Strain Center. The meager attendance has prompted discussion on the need for re-evaluation of the Patriot Award.

Senior Class President Mike Minton thought that the poor turnout was due neither to student antagonism toward the war nor feeling against the award. Rather, he claimed, it was due to a lack of understanding on who John Gardner was and what he stands for. Minton said, "I'm very disappointed, not because of the small crowd but because of the large number of people who missed what has been called the greatest patriotism speech in the history of the award." He also felt that honoring patriotism has become quite rare at Notre Dame and that the emphasis should be shifted to recognition of an outstanding individual.

Jon Sherry, chairman of this year's Patriot Selection Committee, found the ceremony "kind of disappointing." He believes the Patriotism Award is becoming more important every year. "The senior class no longer identifies with this tradition," Sherry said. He thought the fact that Gardner was not a non-controversial figure further explains this year's failing. "Most students are alienated from the Establishment," Sherry con­cluded. "We must re-structure our idea of patriotism."

Junior Class Vice-President Dave Witt, an official observer on the Patriot Selection Committee, has pro­posed a program to re-structure the Patriot of the Year Award. Witt felt the attendance at last Wednesday's presentation was not an indication of patriotism, rather it revealed "first, the lack of identification of the senior class with the award, and second, the need for research into the future form of the program."

Witt's suggestion is a modifica­tion of the Chubb Fellowship which has been very successful at Yale. Several times during the year, distinguished guests are invited to the university on an informal basis for a week's stay. Even more impressive, "They mix among the students and converse freely. Past visitors have included Mayor Lindsay, Pennsylvania Senator Joseph Clark, Governor Ronald Reagan, and writer and scientist C.P. Snow." Witt added.

The Academic Commission under Chuck Nau has studied the possibility of establishing a simi­lar fellowship at Notre Dame, but was discouraged by financial limitations. Witt suggests limiting the program to a six-week stay. His itinerary would include one formal lecture, seminar classes, informal discussions with small groups of seniors, even meals in the dining halls.

Witt will formulate his proposal and submit it to the senior class in the fall. Whether his program a senior committee would select the distinguished individual, even meals in the dining halls.

Jan Kaminski, a Polish factory worker was watching television the other night when the Million Ruble Movie was interrupted by a special news bulletin. "Students are rising in Warsaw," the announcer said. "For that story we switch you to our Warsaw correspondent."

The riots had broked out when the Gomulka government upsed a popular anti-government play "Gomulka," which suggested Gomulka's blame for the deaths of six million Jews. According to representatives of Warsaw University, the play was not the cause of the rioting at all. Instead, non-students were reponsible for the unrest.

"Capitalist conspiracy. Crummy straight-eyed bastards," Jan muttered to himself as he uncorked a bottle of Painskis, the international beverage. "Josef McKay was right."

"Page two for Kasinski Motor Honki," the Warsaw correspondent went on. Four thousand students were involved in the demonstra­tion which began on the campus and ended, after skirmishes with the police, at the headquarters of the Communist Party. For more than two hours, rioters blocked boulevard traffic and harried rocks at police officers, all the while shouting, "Gestapo, Gestapo."

"Never should have put in the proletarian review board," Jan thought.

Several of the student leaders, breathless and angry, were interviewed. "Disinguising," Jan said. "Why don't they wash? Ought to be in the Army. If they don't like the country, why don't they just go to America?" He scratched his head and implored comfortably into his chair. "This is the beginning of the revolution," one of the student leaders said. "Lesin predicted it in What Is To Be Done, p. 13, para. 3, when he wrote "Wherever two or three are gathered together in my name, there is insanity among you."

"Too smart for their own good," Jan said.

"So this is Warsaw on Monday, March 11, 1968. Back to you, Cherkal."

The Warsaw correspondent said, a crown in turmoil behind him, office workers hanging out of windows cheering.

"Just want attention," Jan thought. "What's this country coming to?" to when this kind of nonsense is allowed. Breakdown in disrepect for law and order, that's what it is, believing in the family, marriage, property. Proletariat hangups, huh? I'd like to break that bearded son of a bitch in."

Gomulka, when reached for comment, would only describe the demonstrators as "nervous nerries, removed from the reality of the situation." Premier aspirant Richard Nixski was more explicit. "On the one hand and on the other," he told a cheering throng of supporters.

"That's tellin' 'em, Dick," Jan said, a lump swelling in his throat.

Gomulka was visibly discontented, not so much by the uproar at University, but by his elevator trapped between floors. The Polish Diet, a legislator interviewed, said, was in the process of considering a declaration of war on capitalist pig elevators. Besides ridding the nation of the elevate­n, mence, he said, the move would also silence dissent. Those in opposition to the legislation questioned its validity. One legislator, with his necktie loose and wrinkles and his shirt, shouted that "the time has come for Polen to withstand the Americanization which is undermining the ideals of the nation."

"That's for sure," Jan said.

After a pause for a Comer-Cola commercial (the drink of the future for the new generation), the camera focused on three students burning their Communist Youth Club cards before Party headquarters. "I served my time," Jan said to no one in particular. "Why can't they? That's the trouble with kids today—no party discipline."

The scene switched to Warsaw once again where the anti­ government rioters, who had marched back to the campus of Warsaw University, were involved in a panty raid. "Get back to the movie," Jan said. He got up to switch the channel.

The Sad To Be a Slammer

Buried in the maze of cubicles on the thirteenth floor of the library is the office of Dr. George N. Shuster, head of the Center for Study of Man. The noise of the hubbub of a vast operation involved in the discovery and research of modern society is the buzzword.

Dr. Shuster described the "two tracks" of the program. The first one, he said, involves the Stay Hall plan. The second track is concerned with the way the university as a whole can benefit human society through research and investigation.

The findings of the research teams working on the second track are made available, through books and reports, to the various government agencies, such as the Department of Health, Education and Welfare.

The Editors

Editor: I really hate to gripe, but "in the best interests of journalistic accuracy" I must call your attention to some points concerning the STAY HALL story, printed on page 6 of Friday's issue.

Contrary to the stay hall story printed Friday, absolutely no decisions have yet been made - either by the Student Government, Father McCarragh, the Administration, or the Hall Council - concerning the switch to Stay Hall this spring.

The process which Mr. Fronczak mentioned in his article will follow this:

1) Allocating reports from the ROTC program which classify the deities of the individual hall and a report on the physical capacity of the hall.
2) Establishing a "quota" system for the distribution of next year's 1,500 incoming freshmen.
3) Final publication of the minimum requirement quota for each hall in coordination with the Office of Student Accounts, based on points 1 and 2.

The Stay Hall Committee will have the individual hall reports filed by next week. Until then, absolutely nothing can be done.

Mr. McCarragh last Thursday was strictly for planning purposes and did not alter the primary coordination between the Student Government and the Administration.

One last point of clarification: neither the Stay Hall Committee nor any "trouble" with various halls has anything to do with the Stay hall plan. The plan has gained approval of the student community, and the support of student government and the administration. For any individual hall to attempt to block the plan would be a slap in the face to the rest of the campus.

We fully expect the plan to be a slap in the face to the rest of the campus. The plan has gained the approval of the Student Government. For any individual hall to attempt to block the plan would be a slap in the face to the rest of the campus.

Dr. Shuster enumerated six of the center's major areas of concentrated study in the second track: making quite clear that there are "many more." These areas include the urban situation in the U.S.; education; area studies, especially in Latin America; population studies; Catholic sociology; and the relation between philosophy and science.

Although Notre Dame is not alone in these projects, it is in the center. One of the principal aims is "to orient research for what Notre Dame can uniquely do."

"The Notre Dame project," as Dr. Shuster called it, is a urban renewal studies. Small centers of operation were set up in the suburbs of New York, Chicago and Washington, D.C. Workers were sent out to gather information from the people and the people themselves were encouraged to come to the center for discussion.

The place to start, says Dr. Shuster, is with family ties which need assistance; to the people who are encouraged to come to the center for discussion.

The first one, he said, involves the Stay Hall plan. The second track is concerned with the way the university as a whole can benefit human society through research and investigation.
