Kennedy Institute develops Anti-Racism programs

by Jim Holsinger

The Rev. Theodore M. Hesburgh, C.S.C., president of the University of Notre Dame, spoke of the problems facing the University and the programs and policies for its future at the 15th annual faculty meeting held yesterday in Washington Hall.

Hesburgh's address to the faculty, which lasted slightly over an hour, began by analyzing the university's present financial situation.

"I know of no other period when the university is expected to do so much, and in given less in resources to do it," Hesburgh said. Rising operating costs and a twenty year period of explosive growth were blamed for the present financial problems.

Hesburgh revealed that Notre Dame has grown from 8%-12% each year since World War II. The University has remained solvent over this period only because of an increased income from tuition, endowments, and the generosity of the contributing alumni. Now, with the tuition charge rising only 5% per year, the university is faced with a budget deficit of $300,000 this year. Hesburgh told of the difficulties of balancing the budget, and called for understanding and cooperation in deciding priorities.

He emphasized that education was the university's top priority, and said that the university must look carefully at the allocation of funds. Hesburgh reiterated his ideas of the University of the future, and pointed out that it would bring the different members of the community together to discuss problems and communicate.

At the meeting, he discussed several of the programs now under study by various committees including coeducation, an urban community to be organized in the South Bend community, the proposed Black Studies Program, and the program for the study of non-violence.

Hesburgh emphasized the importance of the relationship between Notre Dame and the South Bend community. The university will make its academic resources available to South Bend community leaders to help solve urban problems.

In the future students may be given lab credits for work done in areas of South Bend as a part of the new Urban Studies Program.

Hesburgh described the Black Studies Program, which is planned to take effect next fall as "not new in its reality, but new in our perception of its reality or its urgency." The budget for this year includes some funds for a black recruitment program which is also supported by the student government. Hesburgh promised to seek more aid for this program and scholarship aid for incoming black students.

Hesburgh said that the university is the microcosm of the country and society. Just as the country must seek some anchors for its rapidly evolving society, the university must place an emphasis on the humanities in the age of dehumanization.

Hesburgh vowed to seek an answer beyond what he called "the institutional answer." "I don't think the success of the university is opening its doors every morning," he said.

Hesburgh then reported that the Curriculum Revision Committee should report to the University Council soon with their proposals for change. The goals and principles of this committee were discussed in a letter by Fr. Hesburgh last year, and he stated yesterday that this committee is still seeking to find the right place for the university in society in which we live. By their analysis and suggestions, the committee hoped to provide the Notre Dame student with a diversity and freedom of education to be able to choose an acceptable lifestyle.

Hesburgh told the faculty that Notre Dame had a good student-faculty ratio, but that he felt that there was an enormous feeling in the student body that the faculty should be more available.

"I don't know that this university could be anything if there weren't a continual relationship between the faculty and the students," he said.

He spoke further of the "schools of competence" in the university and their action. "We can't build a community by falsifying the competence of anyone.

The levels of competence, he explained were the faculty, the administration, the alumni and the Board of Trustees and the students. The levels each have a particular purpose in the community, but Hesburgh said that the students were the reason behind the university.

Kennedy Institute develops social action

by Bill Carter

In its first official function at Notre Dame, the Kennedy Institute will hold a "social action night" tonight in LaFortune Student Center.

The purpose of the meeting as outlined by Institute Chairman John Mroz is to get all the social action groups from the South Bend and South Student together for one night so that anyone interested in getting involved with the social action movements in the area can examine all the programs at once, and decide which he would like to join.

"We really hope it is that the guys who are not involved in one of these activities already will come down and talk to people and see what the organizations are interested in. We've had hundreds of calls from people who wanted to find out about the Institute's plans for this year but who didn't know how to go about joining or... getting some information," Mroz said he thought there would be about 15 or 20 organizations represented at the meeting. The Kennedy Institute and the Student Government are co-sponsoring the meeting with the Institute in charge of the operation.

When the meeting opens at 7:30 there will be speakers from some of the South Bend groups: including the Chamber of Commerce, the Urban Exploration Group, and the Migrant Workers. Mroz said that the programs for the meeting will be conducted very informally and that anyone could come in anytime between 7:30 and 10 to talk to some of the people there. Those interested in a particular group of the programs will be able to sign up right there and group leaders expect to have plenty of printed information available describing the purposes of their organizations and what their programs for the coming year will be.

This will be the first time that the Kennedy Institute is open to membership from the Student Body. Mroz said he planned on having handouts to distribute which would describe how the organization was founded and where it intends to go.

"Another big reason why we're having this night is because if the groups will be able to sign up together, you can give us grants if we could supply a list with the names of the members. They'd like to talk to some of the people in the organization in a one to one situation to see if we really are to social action.

The Institute will have a list of all the programs formed this year that they will be associated with. Mroz said he expects a big turnout.

The meeting will be in the Main Lobby of the Student Center.

Halls to plan Anti-Racism programs

by Jim Rocap

Jim Rocap, speaking for the Students Against Racism tonight at the Hall Council meeting, asked the Hall Council's planning committee to put some of the programs of the Kennedy Institute to work on the Hall level.

Rocap explained that the purpose of the meeting was to discuss the Institute's plans for weekend anti-racism conferences before the HPC.

"What we're doing is to give all the halls information about the Institute's plans for weekend anti-racism conferences before the HPC.

Halls' planners hold problem and plans

by Jim Rocap, speaking for Students Against Racism, outlines his proposals for weekend anti-racism conferences before the HPC.

He pointed out that a chairman for the event had not yet been appointed, and that once the chairman is selected the event will get more publicity and concrete planning steps will be taken.

A proposal mentioned was that usually only a small group within the hall benefits from the event. Vecchi said that the committee would try to open up the planning, and mentioned that some halls had engaged sponsors to pay for part of the cost.

Each Hall President was asked to write a report on his hall's feelings toward hall autonomy and student responsibility. These reports will be presented to the SLC.

Halls to plan Anti-Racism programs

by Jim Rocap, speaking for Students Against Racism, outlines his proposals for weekend anti-racism conferences before the HPC.

He pointed out that a lot of people who are not vocally anti-black are wondering about black separatism and black culture. He thought that these people would particularly benefit from the program.

HPC chairman Tom Suddes explained the procedure concerning the selection of committees. Each hall is to submit a list of faculty members that the hall would like to see as Fellows. Then fellowships would be allocated to various halls according to the lists. He pointed out that the purpose of the program is to increase contact between students and faculty through informal meetings and hall social events.

Social Commissioner Dave Vecchi addressed the concerns of the people there. Those who are not vocally anti-black have no way of raising money to pay for them. Vecchi explained that the halls had signed contracts for the carts and must pay the Social Commission $100 for their cart. After that the halls would be free to keep or sell the cart. He hoped that the halls would not sell the carts since the Social Commission wishes to expand the event this year. Thieves have good weekend

by Tom Bornholdt

A stolen car battery and malicious destruction of light bulbs were among several interesting crimes committed last weekend; it was reported yesterday by Director of Security Arthur Pears.

During the weekend, Ken DeCourcey reported his car stolen. It was found pushed in the woods near the southeastern corner of the C3 lot. The cable had been cut and the battery was missing. Nothing else was stolen.

On Sunday, student John Kratz discovered the car owned by his sister Patricia had been broken into. The only thing he could find missing were the registration papers and a console cover.

Around 6:00 p.m. Sunday, Joseph Skelton, a student, reported his car broken into and its stereo tape player stolen together with three tapes. Later he changed his report to five stereo tapes plus a flashlight. The stereo tape player was valued at $100.

At 2:35 a.m. Sunday, campus security received a call from a group of students who were holding a fellow student. This student, a bystander, had found light bulbs in the vicinity of Baldwin and Howard with a sting. This annoyed a group of students who caught and re­strained him until campus security arrived. Pears felt that the increase of crime that had occurred at the beginning of the year, appears to be tapering off.

Lack of quorum postpones budget

Failure of the Finance Committee to meet yesterday after­noon may prevent the Student Government from introducing their version of the 1967-70 budget to the Student Senate ton­ight.

The Senate, however, will probably get to the budget at their meeting tomorrow.

According to student body Treasurer John Coughlin, the Finance Committee found itself lacking a quorum today when Fr. Charles McCarraghey, vice president in charge of Student Affairs, and faculty advisor Prof. John Houck were unable to attend due to prior commit­ments. Coughlin says he has "little doubt" that the budget, which is slightly in excess of fifty-thousand dollars, will be accepted in the final Finance Committee report.

"No organization got as much as it asked for," said Coughlin, in explaining the budget, "and some of the organiza­tions had their budget cut entirely." Coughlin declined to reveal the names of the organizations whose budgets were cut, stating that he would prefer working un­til he could notify all the organi­zations and explain the decisions of the committee.

After Jerusalem

Saints and saints’ days are, for many, closely associated with the menacing rattle of massive black rosebuds, dangling at eye level for the second time in years. The secular mind will find it the starting point of studying the lives and the men and women whom the Church commemorates today. These do well to consider models now much ignored, even on this most Christian campus, most Christian campus.

The two best-known saints are Simon and Jude. Both are referred to as the “brothers” of Jesus in Butler’s and Baring-Gould’s versions of The Lives of the Saints. Simon, a disciple of the Zealots, that is, one of a group of Jews who fought the Romans for the liberation of Palestine, resorting to terrorism in their zeal for the honor and tradi­tional purity of their religion. Jude had been a Nazarene, a member, with two sons, before the two were called to be apostles. It was Jude who, after the last supper, asked Jesus why he did not instigate a movement to bring his Word into the world, as, the exposer of the Zealots was expected to be in an earthly kingdom. They understood after the Ascension.

After the Ascension, Simon became a missionary to the East and was finally crucified, it is said, by the priests of the idol of the Persian state power. Jude was crucified and spared to death, also in Persia, after having written an Epistle. His sons continued as poor farmers, with little land, until they were brought before the emperor to be condemned as Christians, to prevent revolts against the Roman power. Their simple faith in a kingdom not of this world made them the only things they were feared. Another first-century disciple was Thaddaeus, who is said to have been brought before the king of lands east of the Euphrates, who had an incurable disease; the king was cured. Thaddaeus refused the king’s reward, saying, “If we have left our own goods, how shall we take the things that belong to other men?”

The next group of saints remembered today lived in the second half of the third century, when the Church had spread throughout the Roman Empire. St. Firmilian was a student of philosophy when he was called as Bishop of Cappadocia, an important leader in a series of synods. The councils excluded heretics and declared baptism compulsory for converts to attain the status of Christian. Firmilian, in accordance with the earliest Church traditions, Pope Stephen refused to accept the decisions; Firmilian labelled him a schismatic, or a heretic, who had broken away from the unity of the Church and the will of heretics – “in Rome,” he wrote, “things are done without tradition to support them, and are pretended to have apostolic authority.” The Church was maintained when Stephen died as a result.

Firmilian was later to lead the attack against a heretic, Bishop Paul of Antioch, who denied the divinity of Christ, but died before the debate was resolved. St. Malchior, also commemorated today, took up the issue. A skilled and well-studied debater, he exposed heresy, Paul was deposed.

St. Fulda, of the same period, was one of three Roman soldiers who deserted the army rather than do sacrifice to the Emperor. They were caught in the mountains to which they had fled, and sentenced to death. Two of them were crucified. Thaddeus was half-mad, after his torture. Fr. Charles Coughlin, a bystander, gave him a drink of water – he was wasted and the two were be­headed together by the Roman authority.

Two more of the saints of the day lived centuries after the fall of Rome, when the Church was supported by the power of kings. The differences between these saints and the ones of earlier times is suggestive of how the times had changed with the growing alliance of Church and State. St. Faro was a French nobleman. Although his life at court is said to have been devoted “to the promotion of virtue and the distressed,” he and his wife decided to devote all their energies to the spiritual life. They separated, he to a convent and she to become a nun’s waist. The secular mind will find it hard to see the secular mind will find it hard to see the care of his diocese, so as to stifle his regrets.” Coughlin, explaining the budget, said Coughlin, explaining the budget, “he would prefer working until he could notify all the organi­zations and explain the decisions of the committee.”

The Irish spent another frustrating weekend on the soccer field and lost to Loyola, 3-0, Saturday afternoon. But the following week the Troubadors were unable to handle the Notre Dame Rugby Club and tied another to bring their season record to 3-3-2, which is very surprising considering their 48th win in their 48th contest, by drubbing the Farley three where Mike Brandt threw a 22-yard pass to John Conlisk to first TD run. Chuck Reilly ran for the two-point conversion. The final score came to the Farley three where Mike Beck pounced on a fumble to prevent Cavanaugh from scoring. However, at halftime, all of the Troubadors could have been beaten out of the season, at the hands of the Notre Dame Rugby Club, 17-12 victory over an accurate shot. Ruggers dump South's best

Led by John Laino's points the Notre Dame Rugby Club registered a 17-12 victory over an experienced Tulane University squad Saturday afternoon in New Orleans. Tulane, the Irish ruggers third victory in four contests, was played at its regular number one club on the basis of several conservation of position, but were unable to handle the hard-nosed Irishmen. Laino booted three penalty kicks and a conversion through the uprights in posting the high.
