Dunn discusses disorders

by John DiCola

Law enforcers across the nation are confronted with the problem of balancing the rights of individuals with the rights of society, according to Brigadier General Richard T. Dunn of the Illinois National Guard.

The General, also a lawyer, cited legal precedents as a definite asset in relating law to the facts.

In his talk in the Library auditorium last night, Dunn continued what the National Guard troops involved in the 1968 Chicago convention disorders, pointed out that it is the problem of people living together that causes a conflict of rights to come to the fore. Dunn felt that "the convention illustrated that.

The General first laid down both the principles for the protection of both individual rights and the rights of society, which sometimes come into conflict. He stated that we are a government and a people under law which embraces both order and justice. People who advocate law and order are now considered somewhat conservative, and those who proclaim justice over law and order are considered liberal. He added, we must arrive at a balance between these two – there must be justice in law and order.

Dunn commented that it is elementary that certain personal liberties granted to us by the Constitution are subject to personal whims. Also, freedom must not become a license which would allow us to infringe upon the rights of others. For example, a constitutional right must be engaged in accordance with such limitations as to make the enjoyment of the individual consistent with its enjoyment by all.

The General said the rights of the majority can never be over the rights of the individual. There are many limitations imposed by both federal and state laws which place the lawmen on a tightrope. Dunn gave as an example the Illinois law which makes it illegal for an officer to neglect to dispense a riot. He cited a federal provision which makes it unlawful for an officer to deprive an individual of his constitutional rights. The official must make an evaluation of the situation and act accordingly.

There is also the question of the amount of force to be used in the dispersion of an unruly or riotous crowd. And, Dunn said, "when applying force, use only the minimum force necessary to accomplish the mission." The lawman, in his opinion, is confronted with two major problems in confronting a riot situation: whether to use force at all and how much force to use, should it become necessary.

"In my opinion, law enforcement cannot be selective," Dunn said. Except for certain instances on the individual level, the general believes that there can be no compromise of the laws which guard the rights of society. "I don't believe that freedom of expression permits blocking traffic and destroying property," the General added.

"It is a difficult time. It's a time when individual rights seem to conflict with society's rights. One wants to destroy the other," stated Dunn.

Crowther, with the Rt. Rev. Mag. Paul Fury of the Catholic University and Rt. Rev. Daniel Corrigan of Rochester, led those willing to be arrested to the basement of the Pentagon where officials waited to process their release.

"Notre Dame" straddled a large Greek Omega – the symbol of the resistance movement.

First to be photographed and to head for the Alexandria District Court was Jack Dunleavy, the brother of the recently deceased peace activist. David Dunleavy, a junior at Notre Dame, had previously committed himself to the resistance movement by tearing up his draft card during Notre Dame's October moratorium ceremonies.

Shortly afterward, followers of Brian McNerney, one of the founders of Notre Dame Coalition for Political Action, were processed, in their time, were Professors James Douglas of the Notre Dame Program for the Study and Practice of Non-Violence, Sister Mary of FFC, Professor Peter Smith, Tom Henehan and Karen Weller, also participants in the October draft card tearing ceremony on campus.

"When you folks go to leave," he cautioned. "Anyone who does not wish to be arrested may leave." Minutes later guards moved in to begin arrests.

The marchers, numbering in the thousands, passed single file and hand-in-hand along the route. There were no reports of trouble during the initial stages of the three-day anti-war show-up in security edg Washington. Participants in the protest, opposing President Nixon's war policy were halted for red lights.

The Student Affairs Subcommittee, which met Tuesday, has set the potential jobs for a more effective body than the University Forum and similar bodies, in the opinion of SBP Phil McKenna.

"I think it is much more important than the University Forum or anything like this because it gives us some power to present concrete proposals to hear the other views and to have the proposals voted upon," said McKenna. He also added that the four undergraduates and two graduate student representatives on the committee give us "very good representation."

At the next meeting in mid-January, an extensive report outlining a plan for a co-education separate from the co-exchange program, will be presented to the committee along with arguments in its favor. "This topic was specifically chosen," remarked McKenna, "because it is one from which we might be able to make some compromise mandates to the Student Affairs Committee."

The original plan for the committee, suggested by McKenna, was to have five students sit on the committee ex-officio but this was rejected, as well as the idea of a second plan calling for two or three ex-ficio members, two floating members, and floating members. "The "floating members," he said, "would appear before the board when a specific issue of concern to them, would be up for discussion. "Floating members" were rejected because they would require speaking privileges which are reserved for permanent members. The ex-officio member was banned according to one trustee, because the trustee members were selected for their concern for student affairs and not by virtue of their office."

According to McKenna, the trustees were "somewhat sympathetic to the students in that there were no innovative changes." Facts and figures were presented by the graduate representatives concerning the T.A. situation.

The Observer yesterday asked several students to express their opinions on the Vietnam Moratorium. The main idea behind the interviews was to determine if student attitudes toward the moratorium have changed since October.

Senior Bob DeVita attended the Oct. 15 activities on campus. He felt that the program proved to be more worthwhile than he had expected. However, he felt that the moratorium is now becoming meaningless since it consists of a lot of people “beating their breasts”. Additional demonstrations, in his opinion would not improve things.

Junior Dennis Sudjak felt that a lot of people interpreted the purpose of the rally to be an anti-ROTC. He said that the military is necessary for the safety of the country and that it is foolish to oppose the idea of having qualified leaders in it. He was disappointed that the resistance mask was so named. He felt that it should have been called a peace mask. He thought that he would probably attend moratorium activities in South Bend this weekend but had hoped that something would have been planned at Notre Dame since it would have been interesting to see who would have come around the second time. Sudjak found it hard to predict what will happen in Washington this weekend. “I hope there are no bloody incidents,” he said, “because then I could see the conservative elements clamping down on the universities.”

Sophomore Mike Kretzehagen felt that the October speeches were informative but one sided, since he had been lead to believe that the moratorium was going to be a discussion on the war. He thought that the Washington march would have some effect but that it would not cause the Nixon administration to change its stand. If additions to the speeches to be held at Notre Dame he might attend them but would not cut any classes to do so.

Some students also expressed negative views toward the activities of the Moratorium, contending that the idea behind the moratorium is expensive. They also disagreed with the way the activities were run.

Sophomore Mike Krol also did not attend the October activities because he felt that classes were more important. He contended that many students had used the Moratorium as an excuse to get out of class. He didn’t think that anything positive would come from the Moratorium run.

Freshman Steve Merkly said that the people behind the Moratorium are not acting in a practical manner. They complain about the war, said Merkly, but have no worthwhile solutions.

Mastriana evaluates hall fellows program

by Marty Graham

Former Hall Council President Ron Mastriana stated yesterday that this year’s Hall Fellows Program has gotten off to a very good start. “The program,” he stated, “has expanded since last year to include halls and halls of faculty members.”

Mastriana, who is presently a member of the Student Life Council, stated that the purpose of the Hall Fellows Program is to establish a closer tie between the students and faculty members.

He said, “Most students don’t realize that the faculty is interested in what they are doing. This is a way of establishing ties between these two groups.”

The five halls that have begun to take part in the program are: Moneyray, Farley, Cavanaugh, Breen-Phillips and Zahn. Mastriana stated that these halls have already gotten together with their hall fellows.

Some of the faculty members who have taken part or plan to take part in those meetings are: History Professor Samuel Sha- piro, Chemistry Professor Emil T. Hoffman, Father Ernest Baren- belll of the Economics Department, Psychology Professor John Borkowski and Lieutenant V.A. Meyers of the ROTC Naval.

Two of the halls presently participating in the program, Breen-Phillips and Zahn, have already had some of their hall fellows attend their meetings.

Hall member Joe Brether stated that Breen-Phillips held a meeting last Saturday night for its hall fellows, their wives and students with dates. The participants watched the Pitt game on B-P’s new color TV and held an informal get-together afterwards. In the future meetings between residents and faculty members will be continuations of the meetings.

Zahn Hall President Phil Rice stated that hall fellows have been formally introduced to the students last Sunday. Rice stated, “I was extremely surprised at the enthusiasm shown by both the faculty and the students.”

Rice also stated that plans have been made for the hall fellows to return this weekend for discussions on the Moratorium.

The Hall Fellows Program does not consist only of having the faculty come to the halls to meet with students. Mastriana stated, “If hall fellows will also attend mass with members of the halls, meet with them for lunch and invite students to dinner at their homes.”

Most of the halls are presently taking part in the freshman gab fest where faculty members invite freshmen to their homes for an informal dinner followed by discussions of such things as the problems the freshmen may have in adapting to university life.
McCarthy rallies support for Selective CO

by Dave Lammers

Professor Charles McCarthy spoke to students last night on the proposed selective conscientious objector amendment to the draft law, and placed responsibility for support of the law squarely on those students who will soon be facing the draft.

The amendment would allow conscientious objection only to those pacifists who base their objection on religious beliefs.

McCarthy explained that a draft lottery, which will soon be considered by Congress, and most likely passed by Congress, will include all those who presently hold student deferments. Thereafter, the lottery will not draft 19-year-olds exclusively until five years from now. Unlike a selective C.O. provision included in the lotteries proposed by McCarthy, the lottery will not face the without a selective C.O. option until July 1, allowing major draft reforms to come due.

McCarthy, who holds a law degree from Boston University, emphasized that a change in the law will only come about if students who face the present draft law system mobilize their political influence.

Tank replaced, Apollo ready

CAPE KENNEDY (UPI) — Workmen at the Cape feared "couldn't be done" yesterday and put Apollo 12 back on schedule for its 11,22 a.m. (EST) blastoff today on man's second moon mission.

Technicians worked around the clock Friday to replace a faulty liquid hydrogen tank in the moonship which threatened the flight with a month delay.

"At this time, conditions are all good," mission director Chester Lee said in an afternoon briefing.

Meanwhile, astronauts Charles "Pete" Conrad, Richard F. Gordon and Alan B. Bean did some last minute checking over the moonport in sharp-nosed T-38 jet trainers.

With the new hydrogen tank installed and filled with frigid liquid hydrogen fuel for the ship's electric generators, everything looked good for an on-time launch.

If the three Navy commanders are unable to get off by 3:50 p.m. (EST) today they will be grounded until Dec. 14.

Showers and occasional flashes of lightning occurred in the moonport area yesterday and throughout the practice launches. Skyward closed showers, low clouds and 23-mile-an-hour winds for launch time. These conditions were acceptable for blastoff but may ruin the view for thousands of personsr eager to watch the moonship leave Earth's atmosphere.

Prof. Charles McCarthy in Washington and around the country, informing them of the draft amendment and asking for their support.

Law School Professors William Warners and Thomas Schaefer spent all of last week researching the legal precedents of the selective conscientious objector amendment. The amendment to the draft law consists of adding the word "or" to participation in a particular war or armed conflict then being waged by the United States.

The Notre Dame lawyers spoke of the basic necessity of a selective conscientious objector provision in any draft law. Such a provision exists in most European countries, notably Germany. The lawyers outlined the very unsatisfactory alternatives open to a person who presently objects to military duty in Vietnam on the grounds that the war is unjust.

The present alternatives to a person who objects to the war in moral grounds are, "first, to go into the armed services and become a murderer; secondly, to go to jail; thirdly, perjure himself by saying he is a total pacifist; fourthly, leave the country; or, lastly, to cower in fear behind various draft deferments hoping he can receive a physical injury he doesn't want or get a job he doesn't want in order to avoid being forced to be a murderer."

It was pointed out at the meeting that students from Notre Dame have influence in every state because of the geographic distribution of the student body. It was judged by those attending the meeting that considerable political pressure can be placed upon the legislators by student letter-writing campaigns. Professor McCarthy also mentioned that the "moral rightness of the respect due to the individual conscience" is impossible to deny.

No one gives a damn about a selective C.O. law except those people who are going to be had by a lottery system without a selective C.O. provision. No rancher, congressman, church official, or journalist can deny a man's right not to kill, if he considers that killing to be unjust," McCarthy said.

Presently, 50,000 fliers are being distributed in Washington by a group of Notre Dame students. The fliers explain the possibility of denial.

Challenge

For the next few days, Americans are going to be experiencing the agonies and excitement of two of the most striking events of this decade: the astronauts flight to the moon and moon walk and the Vietnam Moratorium.

The space flight is the result of a country unified in body and spirit striving to satisfy a dream that many had considered impossible. The Moratorium represents the opposite, a country divided in aims and now apparently in spirit, so badly shaken that it may never recover.

We believe that these two events allow the nation the much needed opportunity to see the best and the worst of America at the same time. More importantly, they give the nation a chance to discover the reason for the great disparity.

After the first moon landing last July, there was much talk of reviewing our priorities. Many argued that space flights should be low on the list. They felt that solving problems at home was more important than exploring space and resources should be channeled toward pressing the moon and moon walk and the most striking events of this decade: the astronauts flight to body and spirit striving to satisfy a dream that many had human needs at the expense of the space program.

We believe that space flights should not be relegated to a low priority. The unquenchable spirit of adventure and curiosity that have been the primary reason behind many of the great achievements of mankind should not be denied to modern man. Space exploration manifests that spirit. Indeed, many people feel that the basic cause of our nations ills is the lack of new challenges and horizons for the average person.

Space exploration has harnessed the spirit of adventure and curiosity to produce a drive and a determination that has awed the rest of the world. We believe that the same forces can be the catalysts for a new united, national drive to eradicate the problems that separate us. The space flights prove that with determination we can do the "impossible"; now we must begin to work at home.

It is quite obvious that our social problems have not been solved and there is not much evidence that anyone is trying very hard to solve them on the scale that is needed. We are bogged down in a war on foreign soil that has sapped the will and strength of America. There is promise of relief from the financial problems that our big cities are experiencing. Like a drought they become more critical and ominous with the passing of time. There is no promise of a cutback in the defense budget to alleviate our earthly problems. We do not believe this is so.

We believe that those Americans who are disgruntled with life because they feel there are no more challenges and no new horizons are sadly ignorant of those that exist. Astronaut Conrad has said that today will mark the "opener of the next generation." We hope that all Americans will make today the opener of a new era in American life.

Letters

Far from Political

Dear Fellow Students,

The letter written by T.C. & M.W. is indeed a timely one. From the content of the letter, it is undoubtedly clear that T.C. & M.W.'s political commitment is anti-Chinese as well as against the regime of Chiang-kai-Shek. Hence, it is understandable why he requested anonymity for the safety of his family back in Taiwan.

If the aim of the letter was to boycott the "China Day" activities, it is certainly well thought out. There is no question that it may arouse the passions and convictions of Chinese, specifically, "Taiwanese" who may have similar commitments as T.C. & M.W. For others, who are neither "Taiwanese", nor "Mainlanders", in Taiwan, nor Chinese at all, the letter creates a misleading impression, and provokes feelings ranging from curiosity to indignation.

The problem if any, is one of nationalism. One localized in Taiwan. The organization of the Chinese Student Association is neither political nor regional. It was meant to be an organization for all the Chinese students in the South Bend community. The goals and aims of the Chinese Association, like many other organizations are social, academic, cultural, and FAR from political. Its membership is open to Chinese who come from all parts of the world, not just Taiwan, but Hong Kong, Macao, Thailand, Malaysia, the Philippines, Panama, and the United States.

Overseas Chinese students have a different set of reference systems, shaped by the political, economic, social, and cultural background of the country they grew up in. As such, they are not overly concerned about the political atmosphere in Taiwan. Therefore, in a way that the activities are "political" is a gross indictment. Nothing could be farther from the truth.

What is political about a documentary film on Chinese dance, or for that matter harmonica playing, a trio performing face by face, or a display of pillow cases? To question "Why does China Night have to match its schedule with the activities at St. Mary's College?" We ask why not?

It is thus obvious that T.C. & M.W. is exploiting a cultural event to make their personal political points.

Facts are facts, we know what is true, we leave it to you to decide yourselves.

Sincerely,

The Notre Dame and St. Mary's Chinese Association.

Raceirn Rapes

Editor:

We write with heartfeltriers in hand and tears streaming down our cheeks. We regret that we are not as fortunate as Mr. Jesselnick, in that we must live with "the Problem." We too have come in innocence to this university as freshmen this year, but we came with the attitude that this university existed to seek solutions to, rather than to hide from, the problems. We are sorry that Mr. Jesselnick's "Real ND community" has been raped by the reality of racism. But we must point out that the problem was here before Mr. Jesselnick arrived and it is an unfortunate oversight that it was not listed for him in the University catalogue. Since he does not accept the reality of the problem, he, in his letter, typifies the essence of the problem (racism). That attitude is the Problem.

In the Christian spirit, we have nothing against Mr. Jesselnick personally, but his actions and attitudes are what we in true conscience must attack.

Last spring, Notre Dame broke tradition by adding four St. Mary's girls to the cheerleading squad. (One point for the liberated woman.) After several weeks of try-outs and practices, personal interviews with the girls were conducted and Molly Tiernan, Ann Stringer, Terry Back, and Missy McCrary were selected.

The idea to have girls on the squad originated about six years ago, according to Uel Pitts, head cheerleader. Girls were selected and ready to go out onto the field when the decision was made to wait until full student approval was obtained. The Student Senate approved the idea in 1967, but by a close vote which resulted in a student referendum. That vote came to a tie and so the girls first appearance was delayed again.

Cheerleader Davy Jones initiated the idea again last year and the Senate passed it. This time there were no delays and SMC made its official debut.

Molly Tiernan described the students' reaction to girl cheerleaders as, "99 to 100% favorable. There are always one or two who don't like it but the reaction has been mostly complimentary."

I asked Molly how we in the stands look from her position on the field. "You look good. It's exhilarating to see the colorful."

Jess talked about the expectations held for the girls. "We were hoping that the girls would be enthusiastic enough not to take it out on the team-not too much."

The idea is that the girls will stir enthusiasm. We have a fantastic student body. They have a different kind of enthusiasm. It's subdued, but it's there."

ND-SCMC has one more chance to demonstrate enthusiasm at Air Force.

at street corners as they headed for the historic Pennsylvania Avenue fences at the White House where Nixon and his family spent the evening.

They were led by the 23-year-old widow of a Navy lieutenant killed in Vietnam and they marched to the mournful cadence of seven drummers.

The first official activity of the “New Mobe” demonstration began in near dusk a few hours after Nixon had paid a personal unexpected visit to the House and Senate to personally thank congressional supporters of his Vietnam efforts for peace with honor.

Most of the marchers were young, often bearded, but orderly. The organizers of the protest had assigned parade marshals of their own to help avoid conflict.

The march set out from the edge of Arlington National Cemetery, crossed the Potomac to the Lincoln Memorial, then proceeded to the White House. As they reached the avenue in front of the Executive Mansion, the shutter of the protesters subsided.

Some of the candles lit at Arlington had blown out. Others were shielded from the November wind by anti-war pamphlets carried by the protestors.

Coffee vendors set up business on the route from the cemetery to the White House. Salesmen patted buttons at street intersections.

The marshals trained by the crowd organizers rode motorcycles and kept entraining the marchers to keep up the pace as they neared the White House.

Peace Corps preparation is expanded

Officials of the Peace Corps and the State University of New York College at Brockport announced completion of arrangements for continuing and extending the unique Peace Corps/College Degree Program in order to admit a fourth group of candidates in June, 1970. The members of the first contingent completing the fifteen-month program, which combines upper division undergraduate education with Peace Corps preparation, are now serving on bi-national educational development teams in the Dominican Republic. The second group is now serving in similar assignments in Peru and Honduras, and the third group is now in the academic year phase of this joint project and is slated for overseas assignment in Latin America, 1970.

The candidates will be selected from the ranks of students in good standing at an accredited college who are completing their sophomore or junior year by June, 1970. Those selected will be able to earn an A.B. or B.S. degree and be eligible for a Peace Corps assignment in one academic year flanked by two summers of fully subsidized and integrated academic courses and Peace Corps training.

They are expected to major in mathematics or the sciences, those who have completed their junior year prior to entrance into the program have an opportunity for a double-major.

“This integrated program is based on our two-fold conviction that (1) to combine the college and Peace Corps experiences is to make both more relevant and meaningful and the personal product more valuable (2) to provide much-needed skilled specialists—mathematics and science teachers—as Peace Corps Volunteers in Latin America is to make a significant contribution to all concerned,” said President Albert Warren Brown, of the State University College at Brockport in announcing the extension of the partnership.

Vail to speak

Thomas Vail, publisher of the Cleveland Plain Dealer, will speak on “The Implications of Carl Stokes” at 8 p.m.Wednesday (Nov. 19) in the University of Notre Dame’s Washington Hall.

Stokes, the first Negro to be elected mayor of a major American city, was re-elected in Cleveland by a narrow margin earlier this month.

The talk, which is open to the public, is sponsored by the Student Union Academic Commission.
Letters to the editor

Quid Qua O'Connor

Editor:
During his recent visit here, David Ramsay pointed out that one's religion must be in his politics and that politics in his religion or neither has any validity. One should not mistake that suggestion for a decision to willy-nilly apply easy phrases about politics and religion to the thought of anyone. Is your lead story today ("ND profs propose draft amendments," The Observer, November 12), it seems that just that was done by calling John Courtney Murray and Paul Ramsey "right-wing theologians." It is exceptionally unfortunate that the story was confusing as to the source of that designation. I sincerely hope that, Mr. McCarthy was not. But a few distinctions should be made here, simply for clarity's sake.

In the first place, Paul Ramsey is a Protestant and John Courtney Murray was a Catholic, in fact, a Jesuit. They were both considerable theologians during the forties and fifties, but beyond that had little to do with one another. Father Murray was not only not a right-wing theologian, he was a rather left-wing theologian; one of his most prominent associations was with the Fund for the Republic, the most active of the Center for the Study of Democratic Institutions. I do this is entirely accurate to call Paul Ramsey a right-winger, although the term is probably more apt in his case.

The central problem is that these two men are in a tradition which is in great danger of being abandoned these days in the all talk about Chris qua anarchists they were serious theologians who were considering political problems ten or twenty years ago, when such was not the rage. And they did not commit the mistake of so many theologians were then glanced at politics; they knew what they were talking about. They came out of a liberal political tradition signalized by George Orwell's famous observation that "War is evil and it is often the lesser evil." That is certainly a tradition that we in our sheer desperation must go beyond, but it is a respectable one and does not deserve such a revolting dismissal as "right-wing theologians." The entire tone of the passage mentioning their endorsement of selective conscientious objection would lead one to believe that their endorsement was considerable not because they were intelligent men, but simply because they were lost in that darkness of conscience. We are lost in the darkness now and Christ will not come shining through to enlighten us just because we call on him. There is no light in the offing and while we may be justified in not looking back to the forties and fifties for our theology, we might as well admit that those decades were a fool's paradise to our hell.

There is something cheap about the rhetorical moral superiority of calling John Courtney Murray and Paul Ramsey "right wing theologians" and there is something sneering and proud, there is no point in cheapening what little we have now.

Sincerely,
Michael Patrick O'Connor

Strike-out

Editors:
With all the charges, counter charges and so forth coming out of the GE strike, I am rather perplexed by what form logic. For example, GE maintains that its original offer was inflationary so that the union's demand is exorbitant. This was in a newspaper ad, so it is obvious that GE wants the public to think that GE is responsible while the union is not. But if GE is responsible, why would it make an inflationary offer? Why is GE responsible if it makes an inflationary offer but the union is irresponsible if it makes an inflationary offer? Is this not, an argument that GE stooped to a sign of responsibility?

And now we come to the union. It 'justifies', its request on the fact that the cost of living has increased. But what caused this increase? Inflation caused by increased taxes and increased wages without increased (proportionally) production.

While we're looking at the union, let's examine some union rules and goals. In some states, there is a "right to work" law which states that an individual has the right to work for a company (or whatever) without being forced to join a union. Great idea, isn't it, the union will be forced to truly represent the workers, people will join only if they want to. The unions (i.e. AFL-CIO et al.) oppose it. In fact, some unions, notably construction unions, use their power to blackball members to exclude non-white members which means that many blacks, Mexican-Americans, etc. actually cannot work in states where there is no "right to work" law no matter how badly they may want to work. Then the union members complain about high welfare costs and say many of the people could be out working. On top of this, many unions penalize industrious workers who make mediocre workers look, well, mediocre.

I am not saying that the unions or GE are ogres. I am saying that neither the unions nor GE (or any other management) are far from being the Incarnation of Good and that accordingly, people should begin to question both the practices of management and the practices of unions.

Sincerely,
John F. Kurtzke

DON'T CROW DECLARATION

NOVEMBER 18-19

Indiana Bell
Use your long distance calling number. Save time. Dial your own calls.
The polls are beginning to wear a me a little thin. There is no reason on earth why Notre Dame should not have been dropped in both wire-service ratings this week. Again, Irish fans should have been more than happy because of the intrinsic merit of the team or because it can run up 52 points against a fourth-rate team. Just because Ara Parseghian tries to keep some element of courtesy in the game by holding down scores, should that result in 4-1-1 into the Top Twenty for merely winning and not winning 460? Notre Dame does have a real team. This is known to do impossible things at the most inopportune times, while other times coming up with the sparkling play when least expected. Sophs and Tech has lots of them.

The Irish hockey team opens its regular season at home this Saturday night against a tough Wisconsin team. The match has been moved up to 7:00 p.m. so as not to conflict with the ND-Georgia Tech football game which starts at 9:30. Although ticket prices for general admission seats have been raised to $1.50, ND students can still get in for $1.00. GA tickets can be purchased at the stadium.

Notre Dame's freshman football team has played its way into the Top Twenty for merely winning and not winning 460. The team has been playing well against some tough opponents. Despite fumbling seven times, the team has been able to keep the ball in the air for the most part. The team's defense has been playing well, holding the opposing teams to less than 20 points per game.

The line-ups south for the winter?

John Gasser, and Ralph Stepa­ niak have 22 Passes-Broken-Up between them.

The Irish are hoping to begin Saturday's game like they did last week. Crowds werewaiting for an opening kick which took a high hop in front of him. Leaping, he grabbed the ball and rammed straight upfield for 39 yards to the Pitt 45. Panther Bob Basel (81) cut out of it's perm. It was the longest kick-off return of the season for ND.

As an added attraction, you can bet everything your beads that there'll be about 5,000 important people with bowl connections in the stands Sat­ urday night. Bids come out officially this Monday night and maybe then we'll see just how true all those rumors are about the Irish heading south for the winter.

Awards for the seniors

Senior Class President Jack Crawford has announced that a special award will be presented to both the outstanding senior offensive, and defensive player. Crawford says that head coach Ara Parseghian is very enthusiastic about the idea and has given his permission for the ceremony. Before the game, the seniors on the squad will be introduced individually. During half-time, the special plaques will be presented.
