Lowenstein sees change possible

by Cliff Wintrobe

Senior Class Fellow Allard K. Lowenstein, Congressman from New York, last night at the Senior Fellow spech that the dissatisfied citizens of this country work together to end "all problems that have borne down on us for so long as people that now are at some turning.

Saying "that we are grasped and wounded, and we are tough and ready to fight," the outspoken liberal freshman congressman unfurled a receptive overflow Washington Hall audience that "we shall prevail."

Lowenstein said "that we can cause a turn in the country's mood similar to the change that toppled Johnson, but the road will be "longer" and it will be "tougher" because it will be longer."

Declaring that it is "notwise to stop the movement," he said "instead of escalating our own resentments and continuing with this self pity..." our job simply is to take the facts to the people.

Lowenstein viewed the completely unexpected reversal of American opinion on the war primarly by the efforts of students during the spring and early summer of 1969 as an indication that once again the country's thinking process can be changed.

If the country had not responded to the plea of the students, then Lowenstein felt that maybe it would be justifiable to say the country is without hope, but that the response dictates another try on the part of the students.

"Are we summer soldiers...? I just do not believe that," he said.

"We are the pillars of the constitution, and we are the heart of the land... We are the majority, and we will no longer remain silent... Soon the country will march to stop war instead of marching to go to war," said Lowenstein.

Lowenstein said it is important to ask "what has produced" the kind atmosphere in the United States that can turn the young people against the government with such bitterness that they would march on other young people wearing its uniform.

"It is not something planted as a basic culture. It is not something composed or organized by books. It is something done to our people, to our young people especially, by our government," said Lowenstein.

Calling this an "atrocious" fact, he said only the government could have created such bitterness, for our young people "grow up loving this country, caring about it as much as any generation ever has, more than most."

"They find themselves in a situation, thus, in which all the things they love, and are told are true seem not to be true, and is this tremendous scourge of pride for being American, fidelity to the traditions and heritage of this country, is precisely the opposite that produces the kinds of hostilities, the kinds of resentment, the kinds of oppression, the kinds of frustration that lead to the kinds of outbursts that then produce the kinds of oppression and killing, that are then observed and made outbursts," explained Lowenstein.

He blamed "by all odds, the government" for causing since 1969 the "most hopeful, concerned, generous human species produced" to feel "so as bad as they are" to all people who are "meant" into believing things are better than they are, "we can change the direction of this country," he said.

Lowenstein praised "that a recent quote from a Vietnam colonel about the draft's complaints compared to those at home, that he felt summarized the "horror show" of the last few years.

"The young are idealistic, and their rage is directed at man's inhumanity to man. As they get older, they will become wiser, and more tolerant," said the reported quote.

He traced the reason why "I find myself unable to feel the kind of despair and gloom that seems to be so pervasive among so many of the people that feel as I do about goals, "to the feeling of frustration" that is "now limited to the usual groups."

"That frustration is now throughout the country, and if we can regroup and take it on ourselves to explain why things are as bad as they are" to all people who are "meant" into believing things are better than they are, "we can change the direction of this country," he said.

Lowenstein denounced "that a recent statement from the student center's reaction which respond to a widespread campus consensus in the present circumstances, is not to be regarded as setting a precedent."

Walsh suspends normal routine

by John Powers

Yesterday afternoon the Rev. John E. Walsh, C.S.C., Vice President for Student Affairs, released a letter to all teaching and research faculty members. The letter is the result of a Student Life Council resolution of May 4 and calls for the suspension of classes today on Wednesday, May 6.

The SLC resolution calls upon "the student body through its officers, the officers of the administration, and the faculty to plan and set aside Wednesday and Thursday, May 6 and 7, as days for student, teach-in, and liturgical ceremonies to express the deep feelings and reservations about our government's recent actions in Indo-China.

The SLC went on to say that it hoped that "these days will embody the Spirit of the Declaration written by Father Hes-baugh and endorsed by the Student Life Council. The Student Life Council hereby designates Mr. Krush, Mr. Wemings, Professor Hooke and Mr. Faccenda to use their best efforts to see that this goal is implemented."

"A majority of the Executive Committee of the Faculty Senate endorsed the resolution almost immediately. Within several hours a clear majority of that faculty contacted by the dean also approved the resolution.

Krashna will give indefinite support

At yesterday afternoon's rally in the Fieldhouse, Student Body President David Krashna said that student government and the strike committee were committed to an indefinite strike. He said that he would not unilaterally call off the strike and pull out student government, "for an indefinite period of time without a democratic consensus."

He also indicated that the strike, initiated Monday, would extend past the two-day mora-tion recommended by the Student Life Council and approved by the Vice-President for Academic Affairs, Rev. Walsh.

Representative Allard K. Lowenstein, the 1970 Senior Class Fellow also addressed the rally. Organizer Jim Leary said that he was drawing up a "we won't go" petition and would be circulating it among the students for their signatures and Bill Mitchell read a statement of protest to President Nixon to be sent along with draft cards, to be collected in the "Scholastic" office, to Washington.

Lowenstein denounced President Nixon as the "prime violator of this Constitution" and at the same time defended the people who are seeking an end to U.S. involvement in Indo-China.

He said that the President and the administration were trying to divert attention away from President Nixon's Vietnamization program as an emergency that are "myths. They cannot work."

He felt that There's government was never going to get popular support and our support of that (continued on page 6)
McCarthy: sanctuary should be created for protesters

by Dave Lammers
Professor Charles McCarthy advocated last night a talk at St. Edward’s hall that Notre Dame’s administrators, faculty, and students combine to create a sanctuary for the students and alumni of the University that resists induction into the armed services in the context of the Vietnam War.

"The moral crisis has reached huge proportions," McCarthy said. "If a man comes out with the conclusion that the killing in Vietnam is unjust, he is in an enormous human dilemma. We must stand together now, for this may be our last chance."

McCarthy spoke at length about the anxiety and suffering of the students who have decided that to kill in Vietnam is unjust.

"What can we do to relieve the human suffering in Vietnam and here at Notre Dame?" McCarthy asked.

The professor’s proposed sanctuary would mean that students, faculty, and administrators would stand together within the community. Students and alumni that would not take part in the protest would be a follow up on our proclamations to moral

Meeting for all students to be held

by Shawn Hill
At 8:00 p.m. at Stepan Center there will be a general meeting of all students to discuss strike proposals. Other activities for today include a general discussion on the main quadrangle. Class enrollment Mass by Fathers Amen, Bartell, Burrell, Shilts and Whelan.

After Friday night’s meeting of the steering committee for the student strike, Steve Preston, committee member in charge of publicity, supplied the following information to The Observer.

The primary objective of the strike, according to Preston, is the “immediate withdrawal of all U.S. troops from Vietnam, Laos, and Cambodia.” Preston stated that this is the main goal of the steering committee, although they recognize the other aspects involved in the strike.

Preston stated that the following resolution was passed by the committee: “We do not advocate any form of violence or participation of strikers during the strike.”

According to the resolution and said that the committee strongly supports all strikers to abide by the resolution.

According to Preston the members seriously questioned their status as steering committee and concluded that they were hopelessly representative of striking students. He said that the committee was "very self-conscious" about taking any action that was unrepresentative of the students, and that it would do everything possible to Fire discovered by Al DeFreese

Early Tuesday morning two unit Matolay cocktails were thrown at the Military Science Building and at three a.m. a gasoline fire was set at the rear of the building.

A security guard, discovered the fire, then stamped it out with his foot and called the fire department as an added precaution.

One of the firemen sent out to the fire said that searching of the paint was the only damage done to the building. The firemen, however, were worried that it “would give people ideas.”

Major Joseph Maio and Colon Max Lake of the ROTC program said that the incident would not disrupt activities in the building.

Father James Riehle, Dean of Students, stated that students were seen in the area of the ROTC building, but that no arrests have been made. Riehle also said that adequate measures have been taken to prevent any further harm to the building.

Meeting for all students to be held

p.m. on the main quad after which the assembled students and faculty are scheduled to march to Howard Park for a city-wide rally. Leafletting was scheduled for this morning in many of the factories and high schools in the area. It was expected that the march from Notre Dame and St. Mary’s would be met by streetbands from Indiana University at South Bend and various high school demonstrators.

However, the march to Howard Park was not granted a parade permit. The march organizers say that they expect to have 3000 marshalls to see that the march is carried on in an orderly fashion. The marchers will be required to march two-by-two and stop at all stop signs.

Faculty reaction mixed

by Mark Walburn
Faculty sentiment to the strike appears mixed. Yesterday afternoon, The Observer spoke with several faculty members who shared their views about the strike.

Professor Bernard Noting, Chairman of the History Department, thought that the strike would not achieve anything. "Previous rallies bold, he said, "tend to have the effect of making the individual's opinion clearer to himself, but such rallies have not had any effect upon the President."

The present Administration pays no heed," said Noting.

Noting said that strikes disrupt education and provoke students with politics when they should be devoting themselves to their studies. He said that after students complete their studies they can involve themselves with political affairs.

"Past experience has indicated that strikes by students have been harmful to education without being helpful to the public life of the country," said Noting.

Noting said that a strike for two days would do no harm. He said that if he meets with students during the strike he would discuss either public affairs or the regular course material, depending on the wishes of the students.

Professor Gerhard Niemeyer of the Government Department said that any strike implies an amount of violence between groups. He said that it was self-defeating in its violence. He added that the President would not give way to violence.

Professor Niemeyer’s class on Monday consisted of 15 students chanting “Strike! Strike!” in the corridors. He said that he did not dismiss his class but continued teaching.

President King called the situation "intriguing." He expressed the hope that in the next two days the Administration, faculty, and students will be able to discuss peacefully the war and other related issues.

Mr. King, a teacher in the Sociology Department and President of the Graduate Student Union said that the term “strike” was a bad choice.

"I am against any strike against the University," he said, "we are trying to foster public opinion or to have discussion on a moral crisis." King called the situation a "suspension of normal duties." He said that he was in favor of this suspension.

King asserted that one problem with strikes of this sort is that the University can become "politicized." He said that the University could not be used as a "political battleground."
Seek to determine Guard motive

KENT, Ohio (UPI) — A broad cast on a sheriff's radio frequency yesterday morning concluded that the incident at the University of Notre Dame was a result of violence and not a demonstration.

The announcement came from the office of the university police. Assistant police chief John Connelly, named as the incident in his personal capacity, said he was not aware of the incident.

He said he finally was able to set up a walkie talkie system with the campus radio station to "try and get the facts correct." Four students were slain and 10 wounded, three critically, in the three second volley from the rifles of about 20 guardsmen who were retraining under a barrage of rocks thrown by demonstrators.

Two of the dead were girls, and at least one of them, a pretty 19 year old brunette named Allison Krause, was an innocent bystander who had telephoned her parents a short time before to express disapproval of the demonstration on the 20,000 student campus.

"She was completely dejected with the whole thing," said her father, Arthur Krause of Columbus.

"And now she's dead. Who in hell couldn't they have fired blanks or tear gas, or something besides live ammunition?"

In addition to Miss Krause, Sandra Lee Scheuer, 20, a junior of Youngstown, Ohio; Jeffrey Miller 19, a freshman of Plaistow, N.Y.; and William K. Schroeder, 19, a sophomore of Lorain, Ohio, died in the gunfire.

John Cleary, 19, a freshman of Scotia, N.Y.; Dean Kahler, 20, a freshman of East Canton, Ohio; and Joseph Lewis, 19, a freshman of Massillon, Ohio, were reported in critical condition at Robinson Memorial Hospital in nearby Ravenna.

A full investigation was ordered by Gov. James A. Rhodes, who sent guardsmen onto the campus during a weekend of rioting triggered by President Nixon's Thursday night broadcast announcing U.S. troops had entered Cambodia.

"Rhodes called it "the saddest day I have known as governor."

The President, learning of the tragedy at the White House, said it should convince educators and students alike that when the next "I love you, ALICE B. TOLKAS (AND YOUR HASHISH BROWNIES) PLUS THREE COLOR CARTOONS

We are deeply shocked by the violence that has swept college campuses in response to President Nixon’s actions in Cambodia. We are equally troubled by the fact that otherwise intelligent men and women seem compelled to make violence a part of their life style. This is not the time nor the place for such violence. It is a time for the responsible political action stressed last night by Allard Lowenstein in Washington Hall and in the rally in the Fieldhouse yesterday afternoon.

It is for the re-education that David Krashna envisioned when he declared the student strike. There are hopeful signs that this education will take place. The response from the faculty and administration has been heartening. And student attendance at the rallies on the quad in the fieldhouse indicate heightened student concern.

But any time that emotion runs so high in a closed environment such as we have at Notre Dame there is a danger that it will be released in violent and foolish actions. For despite any positive contributions that the Dome community might make, it will never be registered as thoughtful political action if violence erupts. Violence does not convince anyone of the righteousness of any argument. We have only to look at Vietnam and the suffering and misery that have gone there in the name of righteousness to know that this is true.

There is a very real threat of violence at Notre Dame. Two attempts have already been made on the ROTC building. While serious questions have been raised as to the role of ROTC at a Christian University (the questions must be resolved during the strike) we cannot condone the violence that these acts typify.

And again there is a threat of violence this afternoon on the way to the rally to Howard Park. Confrontations have been avoided because activities have been held on campus. But as soon as students stay off the campus they are entering the atmosphere that does not give them that same respect.

We agree that the march to Howard Park should be held. It is the type of responsible political action that we have been advocating. It will bring a larger audience. But it will also require greater restraint. We have only to look at the tragedy at Kent State to realize when confusion reigns.

Letter

We, the undersigned members of the Student Senate of the University of Notre Dame du Lac, request the faculty of the Department of Physics to substitute for the scheduled lecture some discussion on topics such as "research at Notre Dame" and "Science and Morality." We ask the College of Science to scheduled lectures or panel discussions in the near future, on these and similar topics, to be open to the entire university community. We also would like to make known our disapproval of President Richard Nixon's "Cambodization of the War"--an obvious invasion which is "not an invasion."

As they cut across the lawn past Madeline's yesterday, hundreds of them, the battle cry was not that of the panty raiders, "stop the Irish," but of peace, "make love, not war." Yesterday they weren't coming over to rally, they were coming over to listen. Today they interspersed in the crowds as they marched over to girls, although most girls joined them later at the rally.

What a change. Were they the same boys we watched over here the other night? Essentially they were, yet some change had occurred. A commitment? Perhaps some final feeling they have been pushed too far. Whatever the case it was obvious that a lot of individuals were not on their way over here to play games.

They wanted to rally for peace. And they walked all the way across the road to rally. Not for a date, not for goodies, but for peace. I really feel as if SMC might now be part of the ND community. At least now we are all working together on something besides the social situation.

Thank for coming. Peace.

Jeanne Sweeney

The following is written by three St. Mary’s seniors: Kathy Carbon, Robert Ducey, and Kathleen Kelly.

The strikers have called for a “new educational policy at Notre Dame.” They have asked for an indefinite suspension of classes in order to examine the immediate “relevant” problems of militarism, racism, and xenism. We do not here question the value of a temporary moratorium of classes to publicize the University’s indignation at the move into Cambodia. We do question the implicit assumption in this plea that the traditional classroom content is not relevant to contemporary problems.

Every day I get letters from anxious students who are concerned by this very problem. I have set them down before, but here again are a few signs to watch for:

This may be an attempt to hide bloodshot eyes. You do constantly wear long sleeved shirts, even in the shower? You may be hiding needle marks or "dung", as they are called. the problems that they were able to solve, "so that they can centralize on the one issue that they can win on", the only issue that they can win on, the issue that does concern people in the terms of what they do and what they have used again the other night when he spoke of the fact that the problems of the country were all traceable to the hippies, the yuppies, the complainers and no complainers and no protesters.

Lowenstein continued, "Now I've tried to think since that remarkable announcement of all the problems that confront the United States...and I won't mention any of all the problems that would go away if we had no hippies, yuppies, misunderstood and no complainers and no protesters.

The answer to Agnew's type of logic, he said, "is to focus on the things that they can't solve and not give them an ammunition to split the country apart."

In reference to the "win or get out" thinking of many Americans, he said, "I think it is time to assume the good will of the people who have thought that way and explain to them explicitly why our position means that they should not try and win the war with us. The United States is not going to win the war in Vietnam."

And therefore, he said, "When people say win or get out, it ought to be our job to explain to them very simply that fact that they ought now to be saying the President has committed himself not to try and win the war. It is accepted in the wrong frame to go on extending the war. You do not shorten the war by widening its reach. You do not fool the American people about your goal by pretending that you are leaving and then going on and on in a method that cannot win and cannot end the war."

Lowenstein also said that the House resolution to seek peace in Southeast Asia through free elections was a sham. He went into the dishonesty of the Thieu-Ky election to illustrate his conception of a "free election in Vietnam."

But he added "Why do you think that they talk about free elections in Vietnam in the resolution? Because they want the American people to think that there is something virtuous about what we're doing in Vietnam. That's what they want people to think. They want people to believe that we are defending democracy."

"I don't trust 'em, he shouted, "that there is no reason on earth for anybody from this country to die in Vietnam anymore."

The statement drew a one minute standing ovation.

After his address, the rally at Notre Dame broke up and the majority of the nearly 1,000 participants marched to St. Patrick's ROTC building on the way.

He said the logic of President Nixon's decision to send troops to Vietnam had been "unimaginable. Lowenstein questioned the reasoning that a report by the Joint Chiefs of the United States could enlarge its field of operations while decreasing troops in Viet Nam and accomplish what five years of combat had been unable to do -- force Hanoi to seek peace.

Lowenstein drew a five minute standing ovation at the end of his talk.
Faculty Senate calls for general meeting

by Greg Pughorodsky

In a special session last night, the Faculty Senate met and decided on the course of action they would follow concerning the strike situation facing the University.

The major proposals passed by the Senate called for the entire faculty to meet in a general assembly for one o'clock this afternoon. The Senate also urged that all members of the faculty "set aside business as usual to participate in all activities and discussions in item 6 and 7."

After considerable debate the group also voted to recommend that "the faculty as a whole support Father Hesburgh's statement of May 4."

Professor Massey, Chairman of the Student Life Council, addressed the meeting in its early stages, and attempted to explain the statement issued by the SLC Monday which resulted in the suspension of yesterday's classes. He thanked SUR President, Dave Krausha, for back off from his initial decision of an indefinite strike in favor of a two day period of personal thought.

The Executive Coordinator of the Student Government, Chuck Ryan, followed and said that the action taking place on campus was a spontaneous one. He continued that at present it was "a 'quasi-conference'- with no direction."

Ryan cited the faculty as the logical group to supply this leadership.

Quoting from a personal conversation with a faculty member in the day Ryan said that Father Hesburgh felt that he had done all that he could and that he now hoped that the situation would take on new aspects. The first was that the hall would make a move to draw the atmosphere to a more individual conversation which took place this morning.

The second point was that the faculty, as a part of the Notre Dame community, become involved in the educational experience. Professor William Storkey was the first to propose the general meeting. He asked the members of the Senate to realize the "duty of creation" experienced by many of the students because of the happenings of the past couple of days, and to realize the undesirable alternative possible if their conflicts and questions are not met.

Professor Storkey went on to say that he felt that Father Hesburgh had made his stand and was waiting for support and direction.

The debate which followed the proposals was rather lengthy. Some expressed the wonder as to whether the meeting could be arranged effectively on such short notice. Others doubted the merit of the results of such a general meeting. The proposal was passed by a 24-14 vote. After an amendment to the effect that a committee would be formed, which, besides deciding on the details of commitment, time, and place, would also structure a rigid format in order to derive maximum benefit from the meeting.

Members of the Senate were split on the matter of recommending support for Father Hesburgh's statement. Besides those who disagreed with its context many, though stating that they felt much on the same line as Father Hesburgh, contested his right as president of the university to state it. The proposal was finally passed by a 22-15 margin with three abstentions.

The meeting had a stormy conclusion when Professor John Williams of the History Department, passed out a proposal that the Senate "to suspend classes until ROTC be abolished on the campus of the University of Notre Dame."

The motion though though received no other support and its validity was questioned on the basis that the ROTC had been settled by the Faculty Senate last year.

Nixon: troops out of Cambodia in 7 weeks

WASHINGTON (UPI) President Nixon countered severe criticism yesterday with assurances to key members of Congress that U.S. troops would leave Cambodia within a matter of weeks and that withdrawals from South Vietnam would continue on schedule.

In other statements here and at the United Nations, the administration sought to ease fears that the Cambodian operation was a widening of the Southeast Asian conflict by saying it was "restricted in extent, purpose and time."

A two hour White House breakfast meeting with members of the Senate and House Armed Services Committees left Nixon's hawks and supporters more convinced than ever that his Supreme Court nominee was militarily correct, but not all doubt was dispelled.

"It was dreamland," said Rep. Lucian Nedzi, D. Mich. "It was pretty hard to equate such statements as we will not get bogged down in a war in Cambodia with the invasion of Cambodia."

The session was followed by a late afternoon Presidential meeting with members of the House Foreign Affairs Committee and the Senate Foreign Relations Committee, whose chairman, Sen. J. William Fulbright, D. Ark., expressed the Cambodian operation as unconstitutional and a presidency's interpretation of Congress' war making powers.

Lowenstein: "There is no reason for anybody from this country to die in Vietnam anymore."

leadership," McCarthy pointed out that at Notre Dame there is "a long history of running a church in the just war theory of the Church."

Secondly, the sanctuary would possess a good legal base. McCarthy said, because of what is viewed by many as the unconstitutionality of the present CFC law. The religious basis of conscientious objection has been judged by many legal experts to be in violation of the First Amendment, which forbids the establishment of religion. McCarthy said.

The sanctuary would have a greater impact of "moral suasion" because the members of this community are respected by the students. McCarthy said.

In the question period, McCarthy answered all questions about the practical difficulties of a sanctuary. He indicated that a certain rearrangement of financial priorities would be necessary. Mark Winings, Student Body Vice-president, mentioned that the student government budget would be used for what the students want.

Dave Krausha, Mark Winings, Professor McCarthy, and Reverend Maurice Amen met with Father Hesburgh at 10:00 last night to discuss the sanctuary proposal. "If we can create a sanctuary here, it will have to come as a result of mostly student initiative," said one student.

McCarthy especially condemned the means of the Vietnam War, claiming that the deaths of over one million Vietnamese citizens attest to the fact that the United States is engaged in "the large scale destruction of civilian populations," which Vatican II explicitly condemned. McCarthy suggested that those people that are presently considered criminals are state caused not the area criminals- that President Nixon and the propagators of the war are the real criminals.

McCarthy expressed fear that today's march on downtown South Bend would become violent due to "mob psychology."

McCarthy warned of the possibility that certain actions on the part of the police or students during the march could provoke a catalyst for mass violence.

Irish get back at State, finally

by Jim Donaldson

Bill Orga's tenth inning single brought home Chuck Horan from second base with the winning run as the Fighting Irish baseball team upset Michigan State State 8-4 yesterday afternoon at Czert Field. The Irish, unbeaten in seven home games, upped their season record to 8-11 by coming out on top in the see-saw battle that had the lead change hands three times.

The first two Irish batters were out in the tenth frame before Horan got things rolling by hitting a soft line single to right field. Horan took a wide turn at first and when the MSU right fielder attempted to make a play on Chuck the ball sailed over the State first baseman's head and allowed Horan to move to second base. The Spartans then gave Phil Krill an intentional pass in order that the left-handed Orga would have to bat against the Spartans left-handed relief hurler Bob Clancy. Orga responded to the challenge by rapping a sharp line single between first and second. A strong peg from Ron Pruitt almost nailed Horan at the plate in getting on the scoreboard, but a wild pitch by Pruitt brought Horan home to left and the second Irish run of the inning came home on a wild pitch by Spartan starter Dave Bewley.

The Spartans upped their lead to 4-2 by notching a single run in the top of the seventh. A leadoff single by Rich Vary, an Irish error, and Rich Vary's single accounted for the tally.

The Irish closed the gap to 4-3 in the third frame, picking up a run on a walk to Rich and a sacrifice fly by Pruitt.

Notre Dame flexed its muscles at the plate in the fourth stanza, clapping back-to-back homers after two were out and taking a 6-4 lead. Keenan lined a two out single and crossed the plate ahead of Rich Laucke after the Irish center fielder drilled his third homerun of the season, a 330 foot shot to right. Horan gave the Spartans no time to recover, following Laucke's round trip by belting a four bagger of his own, well over the fence in right center, 355 feet away.

The Spartans began to ship away at the two-run Irish advantage in their next trip to the plate, notching a solo run in the top of the fifth on singles by Vary and Bob Ellis and a sacrifice fly by Pruitt.

Michigan State regained the lead by tallying two runs in the top of the seventh. Three straight singles by Vary, Ellis and Pruitt before any batters were retired plated one run and a wild pitch by Schmitz brought in the second Spartan run and put them on top 7-6.

The Irish bounced right back however, regaining the lead with a pair of tallies in the half of the seventh. The Irish are in action this afternoon, traveling to Hillsdale College and returning home Thursday to entertain the University of Detroit in a 3 p.m. contest.

NEW YORK (UPI) - The New York Knicks gazed at Willis Reed, their fallen leader and MVP, lying there on the floor trying to blink back the pain and obviously finished for the night, maybe even for the whole works, and they came to a rather natural conclusion.

They figured they were all done. That's right, kaput.

They gave up.

Maybe that doesn't quite square with Monday's final score at Madison Square Garden when they eventually came from far back to wallop the Los Angeles Lakers, 107-100, and go ahead, three games to two for the NBA title in one of the most exciting basketball contests of the past ten years, but the only possible explanation for what the Knicks did is maybe they forgot they gave up.

The Knicks weren't the only ones who felt it was goodbye ballgame after Reed came up with that severe muscle cramp in his right hip late in the first quarter.

There wasn't a soul in the sellout crowd of 19,500 who'd give you an inflated nickel for the Knicks chances at that time, especially since they were down ten points already, weren't shooting particularly well and oth Wilt Chamberlain and Jerry West looked as if they had come to a rather natural conclusion.

But Reed out, the Lakers changed their tactics and tried to get the ball in to Chamberlain, but they forgot to keep running and in the end that is what beat them.

Stallworth was particularly devastating in the final twelve points for the night. But he did an even bigger job guarding Chamberlain, holding the Laker center scoreless in the final quarter.

Stallworth did his job and did it well. Everything the Lakers did in that final quarter went haywire. They scored only 18 points.

"We just fell apart," said Jerry West. "I'm not sure they (the Knicks) could do that again, but they did it. You gotta give 'em credit. We just died."
