Burtchaell meets with campus media

by Jim Holzinger
Observer News Editor

Notre Dame's newly appointed University Provost, Reverend James T. Burtchaell, C.S.C., and the new Vice-President for Student Affairs held a conference yesterday afternoon, for the representatives of the campus media. Observer, Scholastic, and WSNF editors attended the 90-minute conference along with members of Notre Dame's Office of Public Information.

The talk covered a wide range of topics, including the reorganization of the controversial "Princeton Plan" to close the university for a time in October to allow student participation in political elections. Burtchaell gave his reflections on his new position as provost, talked of student unrest, the non-violence program, ROTC, the disciplinary code, the position of athletes on campus, and coeducation.

Burtchaell said that it was his feeling that the primary concern of the university should be study. He said that he did not favor passage of the referendum and questioned the wisdom of breaking up the school year to have a short term involvement in public affairs.

While Burtchaell admitted the possibility of scheduling the break, he said that the time would be difficult to schedule and that the period noted that difficulty would arise with students in the co-exchange program if Notre Dame cancelled all classes and St Marys did not.

When questioned about an alternative to the break, Burtchaell suggested that students might prepare literature on the qualitative priorities of the candidates. He pointed out that he would be in keeping with the academic pursuits of the university.

Burtchaell talked of what he termed the deterioration of the notion of the public good on campus, citing an increase in the numbers of thefts from campus rooms, increase in the incidents of cheating and the behavior of fans in the stands at football games.

Looking to the future, Burtchaell said he hoped for the day that erecting building would end at Notre Dame, and that the donations now going for building could some day build an endowment for higher faculty salaries and for holding tuition changes stable.

Burtchaell said that study should be a joy, and hoped for the elimination of tension and campus unrest.

Speaking on coeducation, Father Burtchaell said that Notre Dame and St. Mary's cannot be operationally co-ed in two to three years that Notre Dame should proceed with coordination until its decision is reached.

"There are so many years that mesh already we should either all or none," said Burtchaell. Burtchaell also admitted the importance of the selection of St. Mary's College president in Notre Dame's coeducational plans.

Burtchaell and Burtchaell were questioned on campus unrest and the fifteen minute rule. The provost, however, did not say flatly, however, that the causes of student tension were not rooted here. He said that the turmoil seen in students is an attitude that is inevitable with the situation outside the university and that the university cannot be held responsible for the actual causes.

Burtchaell agreed that the causes of student unrest were beyond the university's sphere of influence and noted a "rising mood of anger and impatience."

SLC commences with code delay

The Student Life Council postponed action yesterday on a message which the Student Body Vice-President termed "selfout" to the Student Body. The bill was an amendment to the Student Judicial Code which would have granted the Dean of Students the right to appeal decisions of the hearing boards.

Mark Winters, Student Body Vice-President said that he and SBP Dave Krashna were solidly in favor of the code as it stood. He said that the present code has not been written in a spirit which displayed trust in the Student Body. To add to the proposed amendment, he said, would change the spirit.

The code, presently drafted was approved by the Student Life Council last spring. The Student Judicial Code Code, rejected the code over the summer break, decided the code was not enough legal safeguards for the university. The code provides a student who is found guilty with the opportunity to appeal. It does not provide the Dean of Students with the same opportunity should he feel that the verdict in a case was in error.

The Trustee's rejection forced the Council to consider the code again since they must approve it before it can go into effect. Proposals of the Council finally go into effect if they are approved by the University President. The President, of course, has the option to forward measures directly to the Trustees of Notre Dame's coeducational plans.

The amendment would allow the Dean of Students to appeal decisions under any of the following circumstances: 1) If there has been misinterpretation of the rule or regulation by the hearing body. 2) If there was a verbal objection on the part of the hearing body. 3) If one member of the judicial board who decided the case certified that the decision was totally unreasonable in the circumstances. Action on the amendment was postponed to the next meeting to allow new members of the Council the opportunity to review the code which was passed by last year's group.

Yesterday's meeting was the first for the new members of the Council who is a tri-partite board of students, faculty, and administration. The Student Council has been granted power by the Board of Trustees to review the university's coeducational plans.

The Council has twenty-four members: 8 faculty, 8 students, and 8 administrators.

Origin of Non-Violence is traced

by Dave Lueeners
Observer Associate Editor

The development of the program for the Study and Practice of the Non-Violent Resolution of Human Conflict since its inception in the spring of 1969 has been as difficult and unpredictable as the subject matter it is intended to investigate. When the non-violence program was formed, due to the strong support of Father Hesburgh and a large group of student leaders, its structures, purposes, and academic content were left largely undefined. What the program lacked in structure and definition was compensated for three hundred of whom took to give a brief history of the program met with the Arts and Letters College Council to the program be largely autonomous, but the program's existence, was at stake when the non-violence program was to be a program to be hired? Secondly, if the non-violence program was considered that the program had not interpreted as almost a fatal blow to the program. If a department head was unwilling to support the non-violence program, or if he did not wish to hire a man that had been involved in radical politics, then the program could not hire that man.

Mario Corradi is a case in point. Corradi, an Italian who had taught philosophy at Notre Dame during the 1969-1970 school year, had an active interest in Agnew. He was also a popular teacher, achieving the second highest course (continued on page 7)

Cotton Bowl Funds questioned

Charging that funds for the Minority Students Program, in excess of $100,000, had been misused by the University to pay expenses incurred at the Cotton Bowl, Student Body President Dave Krashna said yesterday that he is seriously questions the University's refusal to allow him access to their records. Krashna stated that during this summer he requested that Father Joyce allow him to view the records of the University's Cotton Bowl Expenses. Father Joyce, he alleged, said that this was not in his power and that Krashna could contact someone else. Krashna then wrote a letter to Father Hesburgh requesting that they meet to examine the University's books. Krashna said that he received an unequivocal no from Father Hesburgh who reportedly explained that as far as he knew this was not a practice of any other university and that it would not be one of his Krause had consulted Edward Krause, University Athletic Director, about the matter and that Krause, although very cooperative, could not explain why that 100 extra people from Notre Dame went to the Cotton Bowl, that all living expenses for the football players were absorbed, or that certain students were given stipends from the Cotton Bowl money.

Many players did not want to go to the Bowl game at first but were suggested they go purely on the basis that they would be able to enter the program they agreed to it. Krashna said, "I don't know if it has been done yet, but I would like to sincerely thank those players who committed themselves to play in the Cotton Bowl game for the purpose of financially aiding the Minority Students."

Agnew continues campaigning

Agnew praised the Nixon administration's "radical liberal" posturing about the Senate, saying that "But the old firehorses are long gone. Today's breed of radical liberal posturing about the Senate is about as closely related to a Harry Truman as a Jonathan Swift is to a William Shakespeare." Agnew accused liberal congressional Democrats of "Ultra-liberalism today translates into a whimpering isolationism in foreign policy, a mulish obstructionism in domestic policy, and a pernicious pussetting on the critical issue of law and order." Egan elected chairman

The Council elected William R. Egan at its chairman for the coming year. Egan is an associate professor of management and has one year's experience as a council member.

Egan defeated student representative Chris Ottowen for the post by an eleven to six vote.

SBVP Mark Wining was elected Vice-Chairman.

Recently appointed University Provost Reverent James Burtchall addressed the Council on the direction that he felt it should take this year. Burtchall who sat on the Council last year stated that Council members should spend time discussing the important problems that face Notre Dame.

He felt that the discussion might do as much toward improving the university as any measure the council could pass. He urged the Council to look into the causes for the lack of concern student seem to have for the actions of others in the hall. He pointed out that saving and debts were left in many halls by students who had renovated their rooms during the last week. He questioned why this was just left in the halls and why students didn't remove it. He also pointed out other instances where students displayed a lack of regard for the actions of others in the hall.

The International Students Organization sponsored an orientation program for the new foreign students-graduate and undergraduate on Friday the 4th of September. The orientation was the first of its kind in the history of Notre Dame and was designed aside from normal university orientation.

The I.S.O. felt that there was a great need for such an orientation since the foreign students were undergoing a transition not only to a new academic system but to a new environment and a new culture.

Speakers on the occasion included Mr. Baba Zerah, Mrs. R. Rembold and Enrico Martinez who spoke on "Academic Adjustment", "International Hospitality", and "Social Life" respectively.

The highlights of the program were a two hour tour of South Bend conducted by the South Bend Chamber of Commerce and a picnic dinner by St. Mary's Lake.

The I.S.O. is planning a formal welcome for the students in the form of a party to take place sometime this month.

Summer NSA convention held

By Kurt Heinz

Notre Dame's National Student Association (NSA) Co-Director, Steve Novak, attended the NSA convention at McCallister College in St. Paul, Minnesota, this summer including a black light room. The bar is jets when they were hijacked, aboard the planes. Most of those in the hotel and those in the hotel and those in the hotel.

Novak felt the most important action the Convention took was to reaffirm its earlier commitment to pay fifty thousand dollars on the National Association of Black Students (NABS). Last year, when it was discovered that NSA civil rights funds had been misappropriated, a group of Black delegates formed NABS to deal with the problems of Black Students unions, and the crises.

The NSA agreed to give fifty thousand dollars to the group, but to date only sixteen thousand has been paid. It would take only one hundred dollars per school to fulfill the commitment.

Novak feels that contributing to that amount is necessary to "maintain the credibility of the NSA and to keep the organization on its feet." He explained: "If this debt is not paid, by the schools, the national office will have to pay it, and thus lose their effectiveness in dealing with other problems."

There was wide debate over what the NSA policy should be concerning the war. The debate centered around the NSA participation in the planned May 1 non-violent shutdown of Washington, D.C. Novak reported that it was finally decided that each college would engage in anti-war activities, such as teach-ins and political campaigning, under the Nixon Administration to change its policy. According to Novak, if in the spring it is apparent that Nixon is not responding to the other channels, the NSA will join in the planning of May 1 demonstration.

The convention also established a priority for this year of the creation of a woman's desk to deal specifically with the problems of women. The desk will deal with such problems as women admission discrimination, job discrimination, birth control, and abortion.

Sometimes you have to

Last springtime, during the national uproar over the Cambodian situation, a young campus pacifist named Michael urged me to preach the peace message in the churches of South Bend. "Tell it like it is," he said, and I could see myself dramatically poised in the midst of the noisy ghetto, armed with syllogisms from Joan Baez and the Sermon on the Mount, ushering in the apocalyptic moment when every Bingo game in town would be converted to a love-in, and every Slovene in the city would pound his chest like a stiletto into a peace medal.

But it is not wise to be tempted by the impossible dream, especially the impossible dreams of young men named Michael, I said, "Forget it." I would have forgotten it except that the day I said, "Forget it," there was a certain shade of disappointment in those young pacifist eyes.

So this summer, in a quiet parish of the Bronx, in one of the last of the Irish enclaves of old New York, I delivered the homily for the injured idealism of all the young Michaelis on this campus—a homily on peace. Beginning with metaphysics, I contrasted the beauty of the eternal relationships of love existing in the heart of God with the heterodox syllogisms from Joan Baez and the Sermon on the Mount, ushering in the apocalyptic moment when every Bingo game in town would be converted to a love-in, and every Slovene in the city would pound his chest like a stiletto into a peace medal.

But I am sorry to report that the last of the Irish enclaves of the City of New York was not ready for the preaching of the gospel of peace. I began that Sunday as a pastoral figure about whom little was known than that he was one of Our Lady's chaplains at Notre Dame. Riding on the coattails of Rockne and the Mother of God, I was treated with the deference due to a man to whom Stilwell and Parrensanx, it was supposed, came for confession and plenary indulgences. After fifteen minutes in that pulpit, I was lucky not to be deported to the East Village as a peace-freak sometime before the second collection.

The rectory gardener stomped out in rage, as though going in search of a policeman. The president of the Holy Name Society got into a flat fight with an usher for demanding equal time at the podium. A little old lady announced she owned a bottle of Lourdes water from the Grotto, which she would promptly turn over to Jews. That evening, the Legion of Mary of the parish passed a resolution stripping me of the privileges of the presbytery, scissors, and so forth, or so it was rumored among the altar boys.

There was no great moral lesson to be derived from this episode of the month of August. I will not be listed with the Berrigans as one of the age's implacable foes who are contending for the right to shape society as their wishes. But it does seem, these days, that there is often a shadow of disappointment in somebody's eye, and one must choose constantly between the approach of young pacifists or of little old lady from the Bronx.

That is why some of us prefer not to preach the peace message in the churches of South Bend, or anywhere else. Only sometimes you have to preach that message, if you believe it. Otherwise, they call you the Silent Majority.

Are you kidding?

Vice-President Spiro T. Agnew, the most noted political orator of the Nixon Administration, was in fine fettle in Springfield, Illinois yesterday. Here's a sampler of the words used by the vice-president and his meanings:

-Decrying: to decry is a caveaum and to be troglodytish is to be hermit-like or crude.

-Pussilanimous pussyfooting: to be pusilanimous is to be cowardly or fainthearted.

-Radical: a word of Angew's own coinage which is a contraction of radical liberals and which the vice-president applied to liberal democratic Congressmen.

-Cater-wailing critics: to caterwaul is to make a shrill sound like that of a cat, wall.

Blues mirror a frightening thing

by T. C. Trennor
Observer Features Editor

Blues — until you hear a God Blues — is strange stuff indeed. One seldom sees a blues artist making a public issue out of his personal life. For example, Sue Horse has never, to my knowledge, formulated for peace in Toronto. Nor does Big Joe Thornton bear the baby of Big Joe Williams and call it regreedy God. They seldom have their autobiographies in their back pockets. If they did, it would be pretty strong reading. Mostly about fish and stench and poverty and hunger. Mostly about sixth birthdays spent laying in their own sweat on decaying Southern farms. Mostly about running away again. Mostly about going without a job. Mostly about drinking rotgut alcohol and finding consolation with anyone or anything they can. In short, mostly about all the things that make up the Blues.

Blues singers are, by all accounts, artists. That is to say, they do the great and difficult thing rendered by human hands, i.e., art. They have as every true artist has, perceptions of unlimited variance, and a thousand names for death. A blues artist sees a bird in the sky that for some reason no one else can see. "Hey, man," he says, "look at the bird." But since he is the only one who could possibly see the bird, those around him will smile — real hard — and put down their brandy.

So he sits down and starts to draw a picture. Now, he can’t draw a picture of the bird, since if the people can’t see the bird, they won’t be able to see the picture. Instead, he draws a picture of something that resembles the bird in some content or form or style or whatever. And that’s art.

I rambled and I wandered, rambled all night long.

Lord, I rambled and I wandered, baby all night long.

Yet I woke up this morning. Didn’t know right from wrong.

Blues singers can play to their audience. There’s no law against their audience seeming to have on their ears. There’s no law against their audience seeming to have on their ears. SSO undergoes renovation by Mary Kay Davy

Dane Shahade, General Chairman of SSCO's Student Services Organization said yesterday that with several new programs and the extension of old ones, the SSCO hopes to successfully meet student needs.

evaluations during his year in the philosophy department. While the whole story is not completely known, apparently Mr. Cor­ radi had "personal differences" with members of the department and his contract with the philosophy department was not renewed. Last year Corradi went to Yale on a grant from this university to study Heidegger and non-violence, with the implicit intention that he return to Notre Dame to teach two courses in the non-violence program, one in "Death, care and non-violence" and one entitled "Ahimsa and anger." As a result of the hiring restrictions placed upon the non-violence program, Mr. Corradi was not approved by the philosophy department and could not return to Notre Dame.

While certainly no one would argue that the program of non - violence should be the sponsor of half-baked revolutionaries with no academic competence, it does appear that the ability of the program to hire men that are both academically competent and devoted to non-violent social change is seriously impaired, as the case of Mario Corradi indicates. As the question was asked last spring, does the Army ROTC department submit its faculty requests to the department heads in the Arts and Letters College? No. Faculty in the ROTC units were approved by Father Walsh when he was in charge of academics just as all prospectively faculty had to be approved. It seems only reasonable to hope that in the future the program for nonviolence will be able to hire the men that teach courses within the program itself, while men that offer only one or two courses in the non-violence program, for example in the psychology of aggression, will be onder the control of the psychology department chairman. The funding of the non-violence program originally came from a Gulf Oil Corp. grant of $100,000 that was solicited by Father Hesburgh. The question that will arise in the near future is whether the program will be supported through the University budget or through other grants that are procured by the Administration for the program's use. The first course might arouse the anger of already underfunded department chairmen, while dependence upon the goodwill of outside wealthy benefactors contains its own obvious perils. The interdisciplinary nature of the non-violence program has yet to be fully taken advantage of. It is apparent that conflict resolution is not limited to any one area of study, but contains political, economic, sociological, biological, psychological, theological and philosophical dimen­sions.

The most serious objections to the program arise from the men that believe that the program was last year involved mostly in political propaganda, draft counselling, tactical discus­sions, and other "non-academic" matters. The program, it was said, lacked objectivity, and Carthay and students within the program agreed that the program lacked objectivity, but claimed that no professor can ever be truly objective and for a professor to be truthful and relevant he must take a stand that is based upon a personal commitment. As Dr. Storey of the theology department said last spring, "The men within the nonviolence program tend to be more bumbirs than comfortcers."

But the critics of the program, are not to be ignored. Father Maurice Ammen, the new director of the program who has been in the theology department here, will hopefully be able to improve upon the courses that were began last year while continuing to further the practical work that students within the program involved themselves in last year.

Dr. Basil O'Leary is the other faculty member within the program who was hired through the economics department. O'Leary, a former Christian brother who earned his doctorate in economics from Notre Dame and later headed the economics department at St. Mary's College in Indiana, recently finished serving time as a counselor in a boys correctional institute for his involvement in the Milwaukee 14 draft file burning.

Anthony Denaro, a lawyer from New York who was supposed to teach within the program this year, yesterday called Father Ammen and said that he would not be able to come to Notre Dame this year because of family reasons.

Nevertheless, the non-violence program will offer five introductory seminars, two advanced seminars, two courses on the life and works of Thomas Merton, a course on the psychology of Carl Jung with Dr. Morton Kelsey, and a seminar with Father Daniel Boland from the Counseling Psychology Center. In Monday's Observer, Rick Smith will interview Father Ammen and Dr. O'Leary.

How to tap a keg

(and tie into the best reason in the world to drink beer)

1. Pick up a half-barrel of Buds (good for about 245 12-ounce cups ... with foam) and the tapping equipment on the day of the event, set the beer in a tub of ice to keep it cold.

2. Just before the party begins, tap your beer. First, make sure the beer faucet is closed (you wouldn't want to waste a drop of Beechwood Aged Bud!). Then, insert the faucet-and-pump unit into the upper valve of the keg, give it a quarter turn clockwise, and lock it in place by tightening the lower wing nut.

3. Next, insert the lager tap in the lower valve of the keg and give it a quarter turn. Now, set the keg upright in a

4. You're now ready to draw beer. Pump pressure to the proper point for good draw, usually about 15 lbs. That's all there is to it, but there's no rule against sampling just to make sure everything is perfect. Ahh!! It's no wonder you'll find more taverns with the famous "Bud on Draught" sign than any other!

Barz, Kelly, others back in action

The Wednesday scrimmage for the Notre Dame football team had a few notes of good news for Irish fans. A number of the injured starters returned to action although most of them didn’t perform at full speed.

Most noticeable of the returnees was Bill Barr, the fullback who has been injured since returning to practice a month ago. Barr, playing time was limited and he admitted that he was not yet at 100%. Sophomore Mike Creaney returned for some action at his light, and along with co-captain Tim Kelly at linebacker. Both should be ready for the next Saturday at Northwestern.

Denny McLain needs help.

McLain has received so far and that has been considerable.

The last time Bowe Kuhn, the baseball commissioner, summoned McLain for a hearing was seven months ago when Kuhn’s office 20 floors up from the street.

When Bowe Kuhn told him then he was suspending him for three months McLain said later he looked down from those 20 stories to the street below and for an instant anyway, considered jumping.

He felt depressed then.

The first weekend of college football is already upon us, thanks to the NCAA committee, who decided that everyone should have an opportunity to play an eleventh game. Thus some outstanding matches which in the past would have occurred otherwise, have been scheduled.

This was a good idea but what the NCAA overlooked was that most schools have now booked the “eleventh game” up to six years in advance. This defeats the purpose of the extra game, but for this season it has cooked up some fine pairings.

One of the first Saturday shapes up:

Stanford over Arkansas: The Razorbacks had two tough opponents last season, they lost to both of them. It will be Jim Plunkett out-passing Bill Montgomery in a “Year of the Quarterback” duel.

Southern California over Alabama: The Bear will find the going tough of he steps that far out the south to pick opponents. The clutch Trojans should win by a pair.

The clutch Trojans should win by a pair.

The men who have come off of injuries with no after effects are Wally Petralski and Bob Neidert. Petralski was a demon on defense as he continually harassed second team quarterbacks throughout the afternoon.

Other news concerning the Notre Dame football team was not so bright. The Michigan State game has been announced as a sellout and because of a Big Ten rule prohibiting televising games (except nationally) there will be no free TV.

However, there is permission granted for closed circuit television. This will be held in the Athletic and Convocation Center and prices will be $2 and $4.

According to Athletic director Edward “Moose” Krause, “Since there will be no other television coverage of the game and since the demand for tickets in this area has been high, the closed telecast will provide football fans in this area an opportunity to see the game.”

Other word from the ticket office says that there are still a limited number of tickets remaining for some of Notre Dame’s home games. There is a chance that a small number of tickets will be made available to students for the Michigan State game via a student trip. Word has not yet been confirmed on this.

In other games it should be Texas A&M over Stanford: The Razorbacks had two tough Mississippi State over Purdue: The Mountaineers have three quarterback prospects: Mike DeMoss Thursday relieved two graduated All-America Mike Phipps and Bob Irvin which is only a better idea of what he is all about.

With his lawyer, Bill Aikens, and his personal representative, Bill Carpenter, in attendance, McLain listened as Kuhn told of new allegations which had been brought to his attention.

These allegations were different from the old ones like being involved in gambling activities and dosing two sportswriters with pills of water. Now McLain was being asked if he felt it necessary to carry a gun.

Denny McLain wrinkled his brow over the “new allegations” and did his best to explain them away. He did his usual job of explaining, which is to say not particularly good.

Denny McLain left the building by way of the back stairs. He has been taking the backstairs more and more lately. Pretty soon there will be even less of those to use. A man can get to feel rather trapped that way.

Kuhn and Aikens went down to the 12th floor for the purpose of reading individual statements to the news media.

One newspaperman had a question. He wanted to know what Dr. Clarence Livingood was doing at the hearing.

“I don’t know,” Aikens said, then bolted from the room.

Dr. Clarence Livingood is chief of dermatology at Ford Hospital in Detroit. The one thing Denny McLain is not suffering from is a skin rash.

PU qb is uncertain

LAFAYETTE, Ind. (UPI) — Purdue football coach Bob DeMoss Thursday revealed two quarterback prospects of signal calling duties and cut to three the number seeking to take over for graduated All-America Mike Phipps.

Mike DeMoss reluctantly informed senior Jeff Jones of Park Ridge, Ill., and sophomore Ted Golembiowski of Brownsville, Pa., that he had decided to go into Saturday’s game scrimmage with these quarterback prospects.

Senior Mike Witt, Louisville.

“Our one thing is ‘I don’t like asking for a favor,’ DeMoss said, “but it’s the team that counts, and we’ve got to limit the number of people we work with at this stage of the game.”

Sports staff

There will be a meeting of The Observer sports staff this afternoon at 4:30 in 211 Zahm Hall. Assignments for the fall will be discussed.

Bill Barz returned to action in Wednesday’s scrimmage. Barz had been injured since practice began in August.
