Toohey wants “amnesty” for draft resisters

by D. Patrick Rock

Director of Campus Ministry Fr. William Toohey released last night a letter he sent to President Nixon yesterday, urging Nixon to grant amnesty to the many men who have been imprisoned or have left the country because of sincere opposition to the draft.

Cites bishops’ plea

Toohey cited a resolution recently passed by the Catholic Bishops of America urging the U.S. Government to “grant amnesty... because of sincere opposition” in support of his proposal. Toohey said that the move was “startling” one on the part of Bishops, and that a quote from Toohey’s “very strong language” in their statement.

“We must acknowledge the agonizing truth that American intervention in Vietnam was a tragic mistake—both internationally and domestically...”, Toohey said in a press release yesterday.

There is a therapeutic measure that can be taken by the government and that is the grant of amnesty to the thousands of our young people who perceived the complexity and hopelessness of the Vietnam "A little letter is no big deal, if our weatherman is right, we'll be getting rain tonight. If the fifties, I would say For these reports, we'll not care As long as the snow isn't there And I'd finish this crazy line But my thoughts are fixed on Turkey time..."

Toohey expressed appointment over the political implication of such a move. "The granting of amnesty to resisters and defectors must not be allowed to become merely one more calculated political issue designed to capture the vote of the eighteen-year-olds...," he said in the press release. The gesture should be only a long overdue step toward regaining balance in a culture where the perpetrators of acts like the My Lai massacres..."

Toohey expressed hope that a good number of students would write independently of any drive.
Library cramped: 2 building plans

Law school additions: no verdict

by Maria Gallagher

Notre Dame law students have been lobbying for about four years for more modern facilities to replace the cramped and antiquated law building which is more than 100 years old, but their case seems to have received scant attention from the administration so far. According to Tim Hartzer, a third-year law student and president of N.D.'s Student Bar Association, tentative plans for a new Law Center complex have been in existence since he came to Notre Dame and a number of ideas have been exposed, but as yet no concrete action has been taken to either add to the present building, or to initiate construction of the proposed complex.

Hartzer said he personally feels that the present building is "grossly inadequate," noting in particular the library seating space and the volume capacity of the library, which is about half of what it should be, for the nearly 500 students who use it. He also called the proposed complex plans "unrealistic," but added that promises were made and people were led to believe that its construction would begin in the not too distant future. The 1973 Dome, in its Law School section, features a picture of a scale model of "Notre Dame's new Law Center (which) will be ready to accommodate them (the students) by 1975." The Dome went on to the the predicted fact that the Law School planned to double its enrollment within five years. If that be the case, the present inadequacies of the existing building will be increased fivefold.

Dean Thomas Shaffer of the Law School fully agreed with the students' contention that more space is necessary, but conceded that financing is a formidable obstacle. "Within two years a decision will have to be made one way or another to expand the present building, or to build a new one altogether," Shaffer said. Other possibilities previously suggested were to move to an already existing building on campus, or, as Fr. Burtchaell hinted last year, to create a graduate social science complex at St. Mary's upon completion of the merger. However, the financing problem remains. "The Law Center drive has already raised enough money for addition, but not enough for a new building," Shaffer said.

"Some concrete proposals are presently under review, and although there is limited space for expansion, there is some room for it toward the east by the engineering building. A remodeling would approximately double the size of the place," he speculated.

Hartzer, however, said that a new building might prove a better investment in the long run, since the Law School will probably continue to expand. "If no further financing is in sight by June 1, the two million dollars already available will have to be spent toward an addition. The "cosmetic changes" made over the summer have made the building more livable, but as far back as Dean O'Meara the building was being labeled inadequate, and conditions will probably continue to be so until a new one is erected.

Everybody says the Law Building is inadequate but nobody is doing anything about it.

Washington, Nov. 16—The U.S. Commission on Civil Rights today accused the Nixon administration of failing to enforce adequately civil rights laws and regulations.

For the third time in a year, the investigatory and advisory body used particularly strong language to blast the administration's enforcement effort. The White House itself fared better than any other agency included in the commission's investigation, but the best the White House could get was a "lesser than adequate" performance rating on a chart in which the agencies were rated either poor, marginal, adequate and good.

Not one of the 29 agencies received a rating of adequate. The Office of Management and Budget, which is under the White House, got the highest rating, just below the adequate level.

A White House spokesman said there would be no comment on the report since the President only received it on Monday. The commission reported that it would have found some progress within certain agencies, mainly the establishment of machinery to begin enforcement.

"Actual performance in the resolution of problems, not progress in the development of mechanisms alone, is the realistic yardstick by which the government's civil rights effort should be measured," the report said.

"It is no consolation to the black farmer who continues to receive assistance from the extension service on a racially separate and unequal basis that the Department of Agriculture is making progress. It is no source of satisfaction to the Mexican-American of Puerto Rican job seeker turned down by a government contractor that the Office of Federal Contract Compliance is gradually improving." (page 8)

At a news conference this afternoon, the Rev. Theodore M. Hesburgh, Chairman of the commission, added: "No one can get greatly excited about progress that is made after he is dead."

The report released today follows two previous studies of federal enforcement by the commission. In October, 1970, the commission charged that there had been a "major breakdown" in enforcement because the federal government had virtually abdicated its responsibility. And in a report seven months later, last May, the commission noted some progress, but also found substantial regression in civil rights activity in some agencies.

Commission officials denied that there was a split in the position of the commissioners and the staff. Father Hesburgh's statement was more moderate than the language of the report. Asked about this, he said the commission would stick to the statement. However, John Buggs, acting staff director, said the commission fully endorsed the report, "otherwise, they would not have released it."

In rating the performance of agencies for today's report, the commission based its conclusions on the progress made on its recommendations of last year. Thus, in overall effort in specific categories, there was marked improvement in only three areas, policy making.

It took about two months for the comprehensive St. Mary's hall autonomy bill to work its way from the drafting board to the Student Affairs Council. It took all of ten minutes for Acting SMC President Sister Alma Peter to kill the bill with a slash of her pen.

The soulful liberal who serves as Acting President did have the courtesy to forward a number of schoolmarmish reasons for her veto. She did say that she had talked to some of the parents and that they had discouraged her, she never did get around to explaining why the parents of a group of legal adults had any influence on her decision. She did say she had talked to some of the Trustees and that they discouraged her, she never explained why she had to sound out Trustees for her decision in light of the fact that they would eventually pass judgement on the bill anyway. Finally, she ventured her own opinion - that the halls weren't "ready" for such a move, whatever the hell that means.

She missed the whole point of course. It's not her right-or the University's-to decide lifestyles for grown women-but let it pass. Trying to talk sense with obdurate administrators is a little like trying to restore the dead - occasionally you get a rise out of them, but generally it's just rigor mortis. The fact that she's only Acting President and due for a swift retirement when the merger comes can provide some small solace when she realizes what an incredibly bad actor she really is.

The question SMC student leaders will have to ponder over the next couple of days is what course of action they might take in response to the veto. SMC's Kathy Barlow, in our front-page story, went over some of them. What SMC cannot do is precisely what ND has done - wait for a more reasonable judgement next year. For SMC, Hall autonomy exists neither de jure nor de facto. People actually suffer for the stupidity of their administrators.

The other courses range from a resubmission - which would presumably guarantee the same result - to wide scale and far ranging violations - which would probably result in mass execution or whatever they use to deal with sinners at St. Mary's. The most promising course - and it's not a very promising course - is to ignore Sr. Alma's veto and take the thing to the Board of Trustees. They may not approve it, in which case we're back to where we are now. But if it's given an impressive defense - a defense as impressive as the one Barkett, Rodriguez, and Weaver gave before the stolid ND Trustees - it might sway enough people to actually carry the bill. Of all the alternative courses Barlow mentioned in her commentary, this is the only one that might give St. Mary's hall autonomy - this year. Or, alternately, it might soften the Trustees up for concessions in other areas, as it surely did here.

In any event, it can't hurt.

A Bastion of White Male Chauvinism

John Abowd

There are over one hundred twenty-five men here. They have come from all over the country this Saturday to attend an afternoon as the South Bend. There is not a black face among them; there is not a brown face among them; there is not a woman among them. (There are, of course, women operating the only typewriters in the place-the western union tele-type machines.)

I have only been in one press box in my life, Notre Dame's, and I barely got there there twice (neither time as a reporter) but I would be very surprised if the situation is much different around the country. Behavior itself is naive to argue it was a little taste of the real world- but let it pass. Perhaps these assumptions were wrong. Perhaps, these assumptions were wrong. If man was not free when he chose to be prejudiced, that he had achieved the freedom to which the subjugated people aspired. That, finally, even if the discriminator refused to surrender his prejudiced beliefs, his attitudes could be circumvented and revised. Perhaps he is no more responsible for his own attitudes (and the prejudice is conditioned), then we are depriving him of only happiness or supposed happiness. Perhaps he is no more responsible for his own attitudes (and the prejudice is conditioned), then we are depriving him of only happiness or supposed happiness.

The critical difference is that instead of considering attitudes and belief systems as a result of the environment (which reinforce the disease then we can eliminate the problem ), we consider separately on individual attitudes to which the subjugated people aspired. The critical difference is that instead of considering attitudes and belief systems as a result of the environment (which reinforce the disease then we can eliminate the problem ), we consider separately on individual attitudes to which the subjugated people aspired. Perhaps we can break the vicious cycle. That's the Pandora's box because such a belief has staggering possibilities if used by people to perpetuate the disease rather than destroy it. But, if the approach works it will not matter whether we think man can hold a free belief or not.
The 1972 Mardi Gras Notre Dame Charities Raffle gets into full swing this week when the raffle jackets are distributed campus wide. Many people often wonder where the money goes each year—well, here is an opportunity to find out.

a mutual experience
CILA was Notre Dame's biggest winner last year when it received a $2800 allocation from the Mardi Gras Charity Chest. This money is used in support of the sumsmensual work of many of our students who travel to Indian reservation, poor Appalachian communities as far away as Mexico and Haiti. A mutual educational and human experience is lived by both the natives and our students during the summer.

council for the retarded - giving to others' lives
"To bring a smile to a retarded child is a heart-warming experience for anyone." This appeared adequate enough to donate $2000 to the Council for the Mentally Retarded. Many of our students give up valuable "sleeping" time on Saturday mornings to work with the children at Logan Center.

Activities including swimming, music, arts, and crafts, and bowling are just a few of the programs our students join in on to give a spark of meaning to the lives of the Logan Children.

study help - wonders & concern
The neighborhood Study Help Program involves some 100 underprivileged South Bend children and the concern of several hundred Notre Dame and St. Mary's students. Sometimes only a little personal interest into the life of a child can do wonders— which seems to say enough for this community project. The Charity Chest donation of $2150 was only a small portion of the program budget and our only regret was that we couldn't help them a little more.

manasa - caring for our brothers & sisters
MANASA is a student interest group which concerns itself not only with the retarded children at Northern Indiana Children's Hospital but also with those who have become afflicted with mental disease. Trips are made by those involved to the Deafy State Mental Hospital. MANASA received a contribution of $750 from N.D. Charities last year.

sr. marita's - giving them a chance
Sister M. Marita's Day School attempts to give some of the South Bend underprivileged a fighting chance in this world by giving them a more personalized academic training. Often times these students are labeled by the public school systems as 'slow'. Sr. Marita shows what a little interest can do. Sister received $600 from the Charity Chest.

if everybody would just help a little
The above groups received the major donations from the Charity Chest last year. Others that received an allocation include the Student Inmate Education Program, Bengal Mission Bouts, Non Violence Program, Couriila Inc., People's Pantry, Notre Dame Credit Union for Account of 'Prison Teachers', and the Student Drug Information Center.

When added up the allocations by the Charity Chest amounts to $20,000. Some a small sum - our potential is so great! If each person on campus sold one book--well, you add it up. A small but universal effort by our community will make Mardi Gras '72 a success for everyone. Please help this year.

du lac: where your father would have gone
The following is reprinted from the October 22nd issue of the "Marian-news", a student publication of Marian High School in Birmingham, Michigan. The author is an associate editor of the newspaper and visited our campus several weekends back. Her observations may be taken as many grains of salt as you wish—being based primarily upon surface impressions instead of, say, person-to-person dialogue. However, it is hoped that they will offer some insight into how other folk's view this place.

Nestled on a study campus outside South Bend, Indiana, is the social phenomenon knows to college catalogues and incoming freshmen as Notre Dame. Recently I visited this university that time has seemingly forgotten, and for the purpose of educating the public, and completing this week's journalism assignment, my observations are recorded below.

Notre Dame looks like somewhere where your father and favorite uncle went to school. Ivy covered halls and shaded sidewalks are reminiscent of another time and place. An important dome cathedral casts a giant shadow across the university. It is in this shadow that thousands of young men (and women, from nearby St. Mary's) are being trained for life.

A study of student bulletin boards reinforces a first impression of strict conservatism. One board advertised a Saturday night bridge game at Grace Towers, an offer to sell two tickets to the football game, and a reminder to talk to your hall representative about some overture that had been held. No demonstrations being organized. (No Black Panthers.) Just pigskin and bridge games!

While I don't support an overthrow of the system, there is a great deal to be said for an institution than encompasses a variety of opinions and life styles. A good part of an education is learning to cope with our faults. Open your beliefs. If nobody rocks the boat, you'll never learn to swim.

Saturday night brought the St. Mary's girls out in their dating finery. (Ratio of boys to girls: 6 to 1.) There was a certain quaintness about watching a whole university shuck and dress for something as traditional as a Saturday night date. Over at St. Mary's, girls parade around in a rendezvous state of near undress borrowing panty hose and bunny bows. Fourth floor Holy Cross Hall looked like a scene from that lovely movie "The Trouble with Angels."

The boys move en masse, to call for their girls. Interesting point about their dress: they all look alike. Every boy wears suit coat and bottomed jeans. A Jefferson Airplane "things I didn't see on campus: bell bottomed jeans. A Jefferson Airplane album. Anything by Abbie Hoffman."

I visited this university that time in this shadow that thousands of people pass through--from nearby St. Mary's--sometimes only a little personal interest into the life of a child can make wonders, which seems to say enough for this community project. The Charity Chest donation of $2150 was

$10,000 in Hall Life fund grants awarded

The Student Life Fund Committee announced grants totaling $10,000 to 15 hall governments last night at the Hill Pres. Council Meeting.

Chairman HPC Executive Coordinator Fritz said that three major criteria were used, that the hall had to have a usable study lounge, and usable recreation lounges.

"We stayed close to the priorities in most cases and never considered such things as hall spirit, except in Holy Cross, Fisher, and Stanford, because these halls had exceptionally bad problems. Spirit was bad because the physical facilities are bad," Fisher said.

Fisher released the largest grant of the evening, $3,000, for the large, livability, usable study lounge, and usable recreation lounges.

Holy Cross Hall was given the second highest grant, all $2000, for the new lounge areas, which had $400, and additional $150 for a for the chapel.

Fisher, who had made the largest request, was accused of bad judgment by Mr. HPC.

Fisher said that it was unfair to give them more until other halls had been improved.

Hall television sets were financed in Pangborn, Morrissey, and Sorin. Electric doors were part of Dillon's request.

The Humphrey Amendment, which was passed by a 5.5 to 6 vote, was one of the few adopted today to help their near-bankrupt party. The issue is that funding political campaigns through the tax system is illegal.

Several days of private negotiators have produced a campaign-funding proposal that will apparently be supported by many democrats and some Republican and which stands a good chance of enactment. Those democrats who are supporting the plan want it to be a part of the bill today.

The plan allows for an additional tax on all income, and reduces the tax credits of all $100,000 families at or near poverty levels of income.

To an outsider, the student-athletes have had some really great experiences over four years. I've seen them play in some really big games. Some of them have missed games because of injuries, but they've still had some really great experiences over four years.

Irish move up to 7th in both polls

There was little change in the top ten rankings of the wire service polls this week. Notre Dame moved one spot in both polls to 7th, following Georgia's loss to Auburn. Georgia dropped from 8th in the AP and 10th in the UPI balloting.

Bootheers win

Jafar Moghaddas's two goals in the second half led the Bootheers to a 3-1 victory over the visiting Culinary School in the third round of the Sun Belt Conference men's basketball tournament. The win moves the Bootheers to the championship game against the University of Texas at Austin, which will be played in Little Rock, Arkansas, on March 17.

Washington, November 16–A long pay board meeting broke up today without reaching a decision on whether school teachers should recover the wage increases that hundreds of thousands of them lost during the pay freeze.

An agency spokesman reported cryptically after the session ended that the 13-member board “discussed methods of implementing its policies pertaining to retroactive wage increases.”

No new policies were devised, the spokesman said, but he declined to elaborate and gave no indication of whether the pay board had gone into the freeze question.

The regulations issued by the agency so far would bar recovery unless workers could convince the board that employers had raised prices to pay wage increases, that retroactivity was traditional, or that “severe inequalities” existed.

The five labor representatives on the board, afraid this provision would prevent most workers from recouping the lost money, have opposed the standard since it was first proposed. The agency has been under heavy pressure to liberalize its position on the retroactive issue and it was reported over the weekend that support for such action had gained ground.

The board could allow freezes for school teachers either by ruling that no tax increases designed to pay them for price increases or by interpreting the “severe inequalities” clause to benefit the educators.

It appears that one problem has been that while the five public members of the board are inclined to freeze the teachers a break, they are anxious not to open the door to recoveries by others with frozen raises.

The National Education association said today that a survey of its 1.1-million members suggested that 95 per cent of the nation’s teachers lost pay raises during the freeze that ended Saturday.

The credit and deduction could be taken for contributions to any election or primary for any office, federal, state or local.

The Administration was expected to oppose the whole plan.
