Relations improved

US-Soviet arms talks continue

New York Times

WASHINGTON, Feb. 9—President Nixon told Congress today that the United States and the Soviet Union were in accord on the main elements, if not the details, of a first phase agreement on the limitation of strategic arms. He said such an agreement could halt the mushrooming arms race without damaging either side's security.

But Nixon also warned that if the Russians continued their stepped-up missile deployment and threatened the current balance of power, he would not hesitate to increase spending on American strategic forces.

The major attention in the president's foreign policy report, his third "State of the World" message, was focused on United States relations with Russia and China. But the document also covered virtually every aspect of international affairs.

a civilized discourse

Looking ahead to his trip to Peking later this month, Nixon said he wanted "a civilized discourse" with Chinese leaders on how to replace estrangement with a mutually beneficial dialogue.

With the Soviet Union he was more specific, stressing the ambiguity in United States-Soviet relations and the uncertainty here over Moscow's intentions in the world.

Nixon said there were "serious grounds" for believing that "a fundamental improvement in the U.S.-Soviet relationship may be possible." But he said that it was "unclear" whether there had been a permanent change in Soviet policy "or only a passing phase concerned more with tactics than with a fundamental commitment to a stable international system."

creative connection

In his forthcoming meeting with Soviet leaders in May, Nixon said he hoped for "concrete arrangements of a legal" which would "include an understanding on avoiding an inflation of the situation in the Middle East, a curbing of big power rivalry in such areas as South Asia, and disarmament of measures to further reduce tension in Europe."

Summing up the "watershed year" that had just passed, Nixon said that the United States, despite sharp problems with Japan and its western European allies, had achieved "a more balanced alliance" with its friends. The forthcoming summit meetings to Peking and Moscow he said were evidence of "a more creative connection" with America's adversaries.

A sense of achievement pervaded the document, and this attitude was understood in Nixon's brief radio address to the nation this morning on the foreign policy message.

He said in the radio address that various "breakthroughs toward peace" took place last year because his administration had consistently "stopped reacting on the basis of yesterday's habits and started acting to deal with the realities of today and opportunities of tomorrow."

Nixon said that his current eight-point pace plan was "The most generous peace offer in the history of warfare."

The report's discussion of the status of the 27-month-old strategic arms limitations talks was closely linked to the current balance of power in the world, and the determined Soviet effort to accelerate its deployment of land-based and submarine-based missiles.

After noting that the Soviet Union, "in virtually every category of strategic offensive and defensive weapons" had improved its forces, Nixon said the United States was "approaching a crucial turning point in our strategic arms programs."

He said that the Russians were currently understanding either "major improvements in the deployment of a totally new missile system," and he added that two new or greatly modified land-based intercontinental ballistic missile systems were being developed.

comprehensive limitation

With this as a background, Nixon noted that "a consensus is developing on certain essential element" of a strategic arms agreement.

He said both sides agreed that there should be a comprehensive limitation on the number of antiballistic missile defensive systems. Deployments of ABM's should neither provide a defense for the entire continent nor threaten the strategic balance, he said.

The President said an agreement on an ABM limitation had not yet been reached because the existing Soviet defense network of 46 missile-launchers surrounds Moscow while the current American safeguard program is geared to protect offensive missiles in less populated areas.

formalized treaty

The Americans have proposed an asymmetrical formula by which the Russians could have 100 missiles for Moscow's defense, while the United States would have more for ICBM protection.

But Nixon said that the two sides had agreed that once an accord was reached on details, the ABM agreement would be formalized in a treaty that would require formal senator approval.

Caruso charges "little bureaucratic games"

by Michael Baum

Gary Caruso, Co-Ex meal ticket program director, yesterday defended Ed Ellis, Research and Development Commissioner, and the Hall President's Council with engaging in "little bureaucratic games" with his program.

Ellis dismissed Caruso from his position last Tuesday on a "conflicting philosophies" charge. For the remainder of the semester, the BPC will distribute the 166 tickets through the halls.

"It is the feeling of the Hall President's Council that the basic purpose of the program was to create exposure between the two student bodies," explained Ed Motto, BPC chairman.

He and Ellis felt the same clique constantly monopolized the tickets when they were distributed through the Student Union.

Caruso claimed that approximately twenty people used the tickets daily. "That is their right because the tickets are available, but you still have about eighty tickets left."

"Don Mooney (student union social commissioner) even said "Well, I see some of the same faces, but I always see a variety everyday there's somebody different up there,"" the former director commented.

"The Hall President's Council assumed the task of the co-ex tickets at the request of Ed Ellis. We have better things to do than play bureaucratic games" and have no desire to do such," Motto defended.

"Our policy is more aligned to that of Mr. Ellis, who is in charge of it. We were not involved in the dismissal of Mr. Caruso in any way," he added.

Caruso explained his office had originally distributed the co-ex meal tickets through the halls. "I got the tickets when they were available, but you still have about eighty tickets left."

"The statistics: how many people ate, and the average people eating. Out of 166 tickets per day, there were only 57 per day eating over there," he recalled. "This semester," he continued, "with all the tickets at the (continued on page 6)
ND-SMC elections unified

by Peggy Cullinan

St. Mary's Student Assembly unanimously re-passed a proposal eliminating mandatory four candidate tickets in the next Student Body President election. The bill, originally passed Sunday night was re-affirmed at last night's meeting.

Darlene Gallina, SMC-SG public relations director emphasized that the unified election would neutralize the merger issue, not bring it to the foreground.

"There is a misunderstanding that coalition would make merger the big issue. Merger is irrelevant—we still want to work together on many issues," she said.

Kathy Barlow said, "We have the facilities to go ahead on a separate election, if the senate fails to pass the measure today. The Notre Dame student senate must pass the proposal before the joint election can occur.

St. Mary's concern stems from the possibility that a strong ND candidate could leave SMC with a minority SBP.

The assembly also discussed the National Student Lobby, to be held in Washington, March 22-24, and the possibility that a strong ND candidate would make merger the big issue. Merger is neutralized by the unified election system according to Swartz."

Legal age lowered
by Jim McDermott

Boo times may soon be leaving Niles, Mich., if Indiana Gov. Edgar Whitcomb signs into law a bill partially lowering the age of majority to 18. If Whitcomb approves the bill, young Hoosiers will be able to enter into binding legal agreements. The bill also lowers the legal drinking age to 18.

Although Whitcomb reportedly opposes the lower drinking age, Associated Press-Indianapolis speculated last night that the Republican governor will sign the bill. Indiana state legislators would pass the bill over gubernatorial veto, AP reporters believed.

With Senate approval of a similar bill Tuesday that includes a lowered drinking age, it forced the Indiana House into a compromise bill with a 54-40 vote. The bill passed yesterday does not grant full adult rights to those over 18 unlike Michigan's. Criminal sentencing, assistant and education for the handicapped will not be affected by the new legislation.

The selective nature of the new right reportedly caused much opposition to the bills. The areas of drinking and entry into contracts were chosen, Sen. David Rogers noted, because they are "the two chief hallmarks to young people."

Dorm thefts mark week

Dorm thefts dominated the security problems of a relatively quiet week, according to Notre Dame Security Director, Arthur Pears.

Holy Cross was hardest hit over the weekend. Thirty dollars was stolen from an unlocked dorm room Saturday and Vandalas removed two fire extinguishers from the hall. Security stopped a third burglary attempt.

"Outsiders" hiisted fifty dollars from Alumni residents over the weekend, Pears added. No damage was reported.

Batteries were removed from a student's car in the D2 parking lot atop a car that had parking ticket on it. A battery charger was taken from a golf cart parked inside the front door of Morrissey. Also reported stolen were two stereos from a vehicle in the D2 lot.

Mock Convention

There will be a meeting on Thursday, Feb. 10, of all students interested in being campaign managers for the various Democratic candidates at the Mock Convention, April 24-27.

This short meeting will begin at 7 pm in the Fiesta Lounge of LaFortune Student Center.
Vote up the merger!

The Notre Dame Student Senate is meeting tonight. That, in itself, is something of an extraordinary occasion. Meetings of that body, this past academic year, have been infrequent and sporadic. The question the Senate will face tonight is whether or not the Notre Dame Student Government will instantaneously become one. Nor will it mean that divine revelation will visit the administrators of both institutions and point out the way to merger for them.

But joint elections will be a step, a crucial first step. This entire year has gone by without any overt move towards merger, by students. The Notre Dame Student Government has been waiting for official blessing from the administration, while a steady feud has been ablaze between them and the St. Mary's Student Government over various issues.

It's too bad that nothing got done this year. It's too bad, because the Barkett administration obviously has no sense of the history of Notre Dame. They don't realize that the only way reform or change comes to Du Lac is for students to push the administration. Time has run out on John Barkett and his cohorts. Time has not yet run out for the rest of the students of this university. The Student Senate can redeem a Barkett campaign pledge tonight. It can bring merger between the two schools a bit closer. We think the Senate should vote to have candidates run together in a bloc, and show the two administrations how it's done, cause they obviously don't know.

Booze and other stuff

So now the age for legal boozing is, or rather shortly will be, 18 in the late, great State of Indiana. It took the Hoosiers a while to wake up to the fact that 18 year olds were getting shot at in wars and getting convicted of certain heinous crimes and tossed in jail the same as an adult, but they're ahead of most of the country.

Save for the drinking age and contractual arrangements, the rest of the elaborate legal framework that has been evolved to make 21 the magic age will stand. That's unfortunate. It's unfortunate and it's unfair. While 18 year olds are being given a very definite privilege in being allowed to drink, they are being given an unfair advantage over their older brothers and sisters who can both drink and have the full, heavy band of the law fall upon them.

If a person can sign a contract, fight for his country, vote and, shades of heaven above, drink, then he should be willing to take on all the responsibilities that go with being "legal."

Besides, if a bill is pushed, making 18 the "everything" age, maybe they can sneak through a rider legalizing pot—by setting up a smoke screen, of course.

The grand sacrifice for co-education was announced Tuesday. There were no volunteers, no requests for amnesty, just the executioner saying, "You two over there. You volunteer, don't you?" And then the ax fell.

The decision came as a complete surprise to the residents of Badin Hall. They had readily assumed that no one would even consider housing women in what they lovingly call "The Dungeon." And their surprise was the cue to the whole procedure that was carried on in picking the new halls for women.

The most curious fact in the whole decision-making process was that Father Thomas Chambers, the director of student residences, was not notified until 6:00 on Tuesday evening of the decision. Apparently, the man who's job involves an expertise and knowledge of the living conditions on campus was not even consulted about the choice of Badin and Walsh Halls. The final verdict was evidently drawn up by Fathers Hesburgh, Burt, Blatt, and Mr. Stephan. All of them were candidates for co-directly above Chambers in the power structure and they do supercede his authority, yet none of them can talk with more experience about residence halls than can Chambers.

Further curious facts have come to light. The Co-Education Committee headed by Jane Sheehey and Bill Wilka organized a survey of the halls that was to be used in considering co-ed dorms. Out of 20 dorms on campus, Badin and Walsh finished dead last. It seems more than likely this survey wasn't consulted.

The reputations of the two halls are another source of interesting insight. They have been regarded throughout the year as campus problem halls. Walsh has always been THE party hall at Notre Dame and its drunken weekends have not been uncommon. This most likely was the source of a great deal of personal pain for Mr. Stephan.

Bardin's reputation, on the other hand, was at the other end of the scale. It was by no means a party hall. Badin has always been regarded as a small, quiet, intellectual hall. Last year, Badin had one of the highest collective GPA's on campus. Yet it was a "troublemaker." The spirit of Badin is infectious and it based on developed from a true sense of liberty, freedom, and democratic life found there. The rector of Badin has been under fire for the freedom the men there have. These oddities leave a curious questioning in one's mind.

Finally, the letter announcing the choice of halls offered reasons which, in the minds of the residents of Badin, should rule them out completely. In the letter, signed by Father Blattman, it says that both halls "allow for appropriate security for young women, both have adequate physical facilities, and both have room available for social and recreational purposes." The hall is fortunate enough to have a TV lounge that is packed if 4 or 7 people decide to watch the program.

The administrators claim that necessary renovations for the halls will be obtained at a reasonable cost. Badin, built originally as a temporary structure, still resembles one. The halls of the university are inadequate for men, ias it is, the residents generally sink many hours and much money into the rooms each year to make them livable; let alone for girls who won't be able to do their own work on them. The necessary renovations of lavatory facilities, security precautions, study areas, and recreational facilities could run the Administration more than they assume.

But Imhoff, Badin president, has talked many a time before the HPC budget committees attempting to obtain from them money to renovate and supply needed study facilities for Badin. But he never could get enough money to supply the necessary quality facilities.

It seems apparent that the choice of Badin is an off one and quite a surprise. Imhoff termed the selection "an illogical one". The hall residents, greatly upset,OUt, greatly upset, could not understand how the reasons the university gave applied to Badin.

But the fact remains that the men of Badin are resigned to moving out. Their only real hope is that the burden of this sacrifice for co-education does not solely remain on the shoulders of Badin and Walsh Halls. It seems reasonable that the other halls on campus should share in the sacrifice. The best way this could be effected would be to clear out sections in many halls for the disposed residents of Badin and Walsh thus allowing them to move intact with their friends.

It's a regrettable situation, but one that must be done. Badin residents seem to feel that this is the case. But in all fairness the burden of this sacrifice must not be left squarely on the shoulders of the men of Badin and Walsh.
In the Nation: The Same Old Story

This is not entirely due to presidential power; let it be hurriedly realized that the disclosure of how thoroughly absorbed television has become the presidency. The president plays the pipe; like the children of Hamelin, the mesmerized networks follow him into–where? Television is exceedingly presidential. It is at its best with bolder intentions. The American people, however, at an interval of years, presumably a few–when satellite transmission is not pulsing out of China with the pageant diplomacy, like a Tudor King on a royal pageant, the president is at his best. Presidents, of course, need television as much as television needs presidents. Television makes the politician's dreams come true–with it, he can seize the voter who turns the knob. Imagine him and his gravity, the way the muscle bundles with patriotic determination that he can hold the jaw when he is really on his mettle, and all this right in the voter's living room, or bedroom, or cellair.

The Press–a necessary evil, as it is now occasionally called–declines in importance to presidents, as the common interest of presidency and television continues to sharpen. It seems unlikely, despite the occasional Agnewian assault on the columnists and publications of the wicked East, that anyone in the White House can care much about what goes on any more in print. National triumph nowadays goes to the man who can dominate the illuminated box.}

Letters to the Editor

Observer: No Harry? Walter? No John? No...?

Editor:

Your January 31 edition quoted St. John's University administrator Edward Henry as stating that he would be considering becoming president of St. Mary's College only if "it follows the growing movement all over America toward liberal arts colleges and small liberal arts colleges, opening for them the job market." The implication of this statement is that the Liberal Movement as a whole is that women can find happiness by working. (Assumedly men have already done so.) Uo to now, I had thought that every college student in the country expected that a college is education and not job training. It would be nice if our system were structured so that every job was an aesthetic experience, but the mind–industry complex doesn't work that way.

My wife, a college graduate, currently sits around and does nothing. I would not protest in the streets so I might trade places with her. In fact, I will go to work much as in order to give her the option (not mandatory) of retraining. I think that if their college "training" does them much good in terms of doing their jobs, if one is looking to the colleges for job training, I would expect he or she look elsewhere.

In addition, think it is a reflection on the quality of the St. Mary's administration and the faculty they hire, and the students they accept) that they consider as a priority, a candidate a man who thinks that the athletic ability is a necessary for survival, not an aesthetic luxury. I think the situation demands a man to work to live, not live to work.

Another point is that I would challenge the notion that liberal arts colleges train people for job openings. For what job in the nation is not an "opening" major being trained? Although most college all colleges and liberal arts colleges in order to pursue happier activities (by "activities", I don't mean making and watching sports operas). If any woman (or man) thinks that she or he can find fulfillment by working in the American "job market" as Dr. Henry implies, she can be confident that where they buy and sell cattle?, I feel that the president's promise to provide employment is a necessity for survival, not an aesthetic luxury. I think the situation demands a man to work to live, not live to work.

University of Notre Dame, one of the nation's most prestigious institutions, has been consistently ranked among the top universities in the nation. However, the university's reputation for providing a quality education and fostering a strong sense of community has been called into question. Critics argue that Notre Dame has become too focused on athletics and commercialism, and that its mission has been compromised by its close ties to the corporate world. The university's long history of Success, as well as its commitment to social responsibility and community service, has been threatened by these concerns.

Even voters who do read, seem not believe much they see in print. For the present China trip the White House, nevertheless, allotted half the transportation space to "writing press." In the future we can probably anticipate that the percentage allotted to television will become progressively larger until the presidency becomes increasingly presidential in its focus and the television becomes increasingly telegraphic and theatrical.

In the printed page, than to despair? Probably not. It has been suggested that a possible reorganization of society which might result from the marriage of presidency and television. There will remain, after all, other parts of government requiring public attention–Congress, Court, Legislature, City Hall, Police Station.

There will almost surely remain a minority who need to know what these institutions are up to. But there will also be, as a result of televising the presidency, a new minority who need to know much more about the administration.

In time we might anticipate a great division–two nations living as the that they, living by television, would choose presidents; the other, still literate, would make most of the important decisions which determine how a country is actually run.

The worst is also possible, of course. This is that Congressmen and Judges and Governors and Mayors and Copag will all give up when they see that nothing but a presidential campaign is left. And then we will really have problems; when the President flies away.

Recruitment policy blasted

by Bob Long

A MDCR Recruitment Committee member has sent a letter to the Notre Dame Admissions Office, blasting minority recruitment and scholarship funding policies. Miss DeFinna Landeros, in a letter to Director John Goldbeck, claimed that "...minority enrollment has had to depend on football team is invited to a post-season bowl and wins, then and only then, would there be funds available for minority scholarships." In an interview Tuesday, Miss Landeros stated, "We have talked to Father Burtchaell and the Administrator of Admissions, we have done everything possible to sensitize them to our problem. They have been totally indifferent to it."

"Judging from the whole attitude of those in control of school monies and the priorities that they set out to fulfill—minority enrollment not being one of them—the new funding source for minority scholarships, if found, will probably not deviate too much from the previous one—that has, minorities having to depend on scholarships for their higher education," Miss Landeros added.

She contended that the small number of Chicano students (approximately 35) indicated that Notre Dame has not seriously committed itself to minority enrollment. In her letter, she suggested that "if 50 percent of the new students coming to Notre Dame are financially assisted, a number of slots be set aside for the different minorities and that these slots be filled."

"This would mean that Notre Dame or any other University with this type of policy will not necessarily only get the cream of the crop of the minorities, but also, that which follows the cream of the crop."

"Adding that if 325 females are admitted to Notre Dame in the fall of 1972 and 150 of them receive financial aid, "then at least one-fourth (37) of these women ought to be minority women who will be financially assisted."

She maintains that Spanish speaking students, meaning Chicano and Puerto-Ricanos born or residing in the US, are, for the most part, living in just as deprived conditions, as the blacks, and not worse, and "should not be second on minority recruitment as is the case at Notre Dame at the present time."

Mr. Lugo Rocha, Director of El Centro, a government-funded agency that works among Chicano students, agreed with Miss Landeros. "It is very discouraging to a student that his chance of being considered for the outcome of a football game," he said.

He cited one of the problems which alienates Chicanos in their native Spanish. "When I was in school, we were punished for speaking Spanish during recess period," he said.

He claimed that primary and secondary schools very seldom hire bilingual counselors, who can communicate with Chicano students and their parents. This is responsible for the high number of "pushouts", those who leave school not because of any intellectual deficiency, he said.

HPC takes over co-ex tickets

Student Union, around the third day there were about 92 people eating over the weekend. (Under the central distribution system, the average number of tickets used was 71.)

Caruso's policy of distributing all areas, including the Student Union Office ended when Ellis confiscated the tickets last third day there were about 92 people eating over the weekend. (Under the central distribution system, the average number of tickets used was 71.)

"Ed's main contention, is he told me to run the program, but to cooperate with the Hall President, which I have and Ellis said, 'Well, I've taken it in average use.'

"Now he's turned it over to the Hall Presidents but he never informed me of this before," Caruso mused. "He didn't take all the tickets figures into consideration, even though he had count of them, and I was a little perturbed at his unprofessional and unethical methods, how he dealt with the situation."

The dismissed director felt ticket distribution through the halls entailed little inequity formerly avoided with one central office on a first serve basis. "Over 200 students who live off campus have real cards," said Caruso. "They have no way of receiving them at least when were over at the Student Union some of the tickets could be made available to these people."

"Gary's statistics are correct," Ellis replied. "They are due to the old method of distribution. In order to achieve the primary goal of student exposure, and the second goal of volume, we have adjusted the method and I expect the volume to increase as a result."
Steady "Goose" is going good

by Vic Deier

Several weeks ago, a sign appeared on the back wall of Huddle Snack Bar. Obviously posted by a discouraged basketball fan, it offered a ticket for sale.

The sign was an immediate response, but hardly the response that was expected. "You'll be sorry," scribbled someone with a more optimistic outlook, "where the Goose led American."

"The Goose," of course, is Gary Novak, one of Notre Dame's sophomore forwards. And while he won't be achieving All-American status anytime in the near future, he has taken big steps this season towards becoming a top-rate college ball player.

The 6'7 Novak has started every one of the Irish basketball team's 18 games this season, and he leads Digger Phelps' squad in both scoring (19.2 avg.) and rebounding (10.1 avg.). And Novak's performances have been steady all season long--despite the fact that he was recruited by John Dee to play a part in the double stack offense--but he was recruited by the new system that Digger Phelps brought from Fordham.

"I'm supposed to replace either Collis (Jones) or Sid (Catlett), and John Shumate would take the spot I didn't. We had replacements for just about everybody. Except Austin (Carrie), of course. You just don't replace someone like that," Novak said.

"We didn't know what to expect when Digger came here last spring," he continued, "because his style of ball is so different. He can't do the same things as last year, because of the tough schedule. Otherwise, we probably would have won a lot of those games we've lost.

"All we can do," he said, "is echoing Digger, "is just go out there, play a lot of good defense, and do the best we can.""

Often this season, mismatches in size have seen to it that Notre Dame's best is not good enough. At 6'7, 190, Novak is the tallest member of ND's starting lineup, and he has felt the size difference as much as anyone.

"I'm about the tallest guy we've got," he said, "and I've been shifted around this year. I played forward at the beginning of the season, but I was low--in the pivot spot--against Marquette."

Novak's attempts to score from in close have brought frequent contact with the likes of UCLA's Bill Walton (6-11) and Marquette's Jim Chones (also 6-11), and Goose knew what he was talking about when he said "we are at an overall height disadvantage.

Against Marquette's number two-rated Warriors, though, Novak was able to ignore the height disadvantage. In what he considers his best personal effort of the season, Novak scored 20 points and grabbed 11 rebounds while working against Chones and 69 Al McNeil.

"I really wanted to win that one," he remembered "I wanted to win more than any game we've played this year--even that I didn't win.

"We'll be in position the next time, the Irish, said--they will get a few in the near future, he has taken big steps this season towards becoming a top-rate college ball player.

The Irish are strongest in the zone, due both to outstanding talent across the line and the number of fences who performed as substitutes. Assistant coach Rick Deladrier has been the catalyst for the players, bringing out the best in each of his fences. Fence clicker Tim Taylor has done double duty this year, fencing at an 85 cent clip with a 13-2 record. Mike Mastrana, the third man for 15-3 record, is perhaps a more complete fencer than the one on offense and defense. Joe Pitts, 6'1, is off to a slow start this year, while David Mulligan, Roy Seitz, and George Fuentes have combined for a 15-7 record.

The starting nine fencers, with a combined record of 111-26, have carried the load well this year. Maybe-as someone with a 13-2 record. Bill would have Charity Chest collect all the concert profits

by Susan Prendergast

If a recent Student Union proposal is approved, profits from Sunday night's Richie Havens concert will go to the Notre Dame Charity Chest Fund with other Mardi Gras profits.

Social Commissioner Don Mooney originated this idea last week when Mardi Gras ticket sales appeared to lag.

Havens presented the idea to Rev. Thomas Blance, Vice-President of Student Affairs. "He didn't really commit himself, but he seemed fairly receptive."

According to Fr. Blance, Executive Vice-President Rev. Edmund Joyce and ACC Managing Director John Plouf will decide the proposal's fate.

"We really hadn't had a chance to get together on this yet, but I presume we will do so shortly."

If the proposal is denied, the concert profits will go to the ACC since the Social Commission has already reached its profit ceiling of $8600 for 1971-72. Howard said.

While admitting that the money does not actually belong to the Student Union, Howard contended that since the rest of the concerts this year will make money, maybe just this once the profits could go for charity."

"Most of the kids participate in Mardi Gras to help the Notre Dame charities. They don't mind paying for the concert because they think their money is going to charity," he added.

Havens said, "We're hoping that it goes in our favor; we have a lot of faith in Fr. Blance."

The meeting of the Notre Dame Student Senate tonight at 7:00 in La Fee tune Student Center will be in the TV Room and not the Auditorium as originally announced.

TMI to speak at Parent's dinner

Rev. Theodore Hesburgh, president of ND, keynote the main event of the 26th Annual Junior Parent-Son Weekend March 5-6 at ND.

In other activities for the weekend parents meet administra tors and faculty at ND. A presentation on campus life is planned. Parents are encouraged to eat meals with their sons in the dining halls.

Activities focus on all aspects of student life at ND. The weekend aims to increase parent exposure to college life. All parents of ND's class of 1973 received invitations by mail.

Hesburgh and Stephen Falucca, junior class president, address parents in St. Peter Spanefield Saturday night. Marriott. Also on Saturday in the reception with university ad mistors. Two hours are set aside for parents to express issues relevant to community living on campus.
