Marks first year for female dormers

Class of ’76 sets full quotas

by Anthony Abowd

The Notre Dame class of 1976 today will reach its full enrollment of over 1600 students, including ND’s first female freshmen. Programs for their orientation began today and continue throughout the weekend.

“We shall stand ready to assist you in every way possible, and we sincerely invite you to use our services freely throughout the year.” writes Emil T. Hofman, dean of the Freshman Year of Studies. in his first newsletter which freshmen receive today.

Freshman Year of Studies, the college of record for ND freshmen, has adopted several new proposals in its handling of orientation, scheduling, counseling and problem solving.

“Any freshman with difficulty this weekend can take care of it at registration Tuesday at St. Joseph Center. If it is a serious problem, counselors are available Sunday or Monday at the Freshman Year of Studies office,” explains Dean Hofman. Freshman Year offices are just behind the Administration Building.

cased situation

Notre Dame’s first female freshmen compose less than one tenth of the total freshman enrollment this year. The 125 female freshmen join about 270 other female transfers as Notre Dame’s first women undergrads.

Most of the women live in Bonn and Walsh Halls although the total figure reflects some off-campus women, some at St. Mary’s College and some in the Sophomore Year Abroad program. The two on-campus residence halls have been renovated from the male dormitories they have served as since their construction.

Freshman Year has established a special committee of consultants of junior girls to help the special orientation problems of the new women undergrads.

Orientation formally begins at 7:30 tonight with the official welcome for freshmen and their parents in the Athletic and Convocation Center (ACC). But all freshmen have already taken a battery of exams for guidance and advance placement. All have received their first semester schedules in advance of registration.

“This is a tremendous improvement over past years,” Dean Hofman said. “We are way ahead of things at this point.”

summer testing

1,100 freshmen took the freshman examination package over the summer. The remainder were examined yesterday. The survey has three sections: Subject Matter Achievement Test, Psychological Survey and Student Activities Report.

“The overall objective of this package is to provide the best program and the best counseling for the individual freshman,” says Dean Hofman.

The section entitled the Subject Matter Achievement Test is intended for counseling purposes. Dean Hofman states these tests will identify students with experience below or above average in certain areas.

“These tests show experience, not potential,” cautions Hofman. “We are striving to get every student to perform up to his potential.”

Students with above average experience are invited to take another test, based on college level courses, which could qualify them for college credit by examination.

“We are still holding College Board Advance Placement Test results,” points out Dr. Peter Grande, assistant dean of the Freshman Year of Studies. “In the College Board Tests, taken during the senior year of high school, a student usually needs a grade of three or four to receive college credit.”

personal survey

A second section of the test package, the Psychological Survey, is an academic and career interest inventory. Its purpose is primarily guidance.

“This includes a very mild personality test. It is not a clinical examination that attempts to identify abnormal behavior. It merely indicates academic attitudes and motivations,” Dr. Grande states.

The final section, the Student Activities Report, is an attempt to find the freshman’s current interest in extra-curricular activities. The Freshman Year office has sent lists, based on this survey, to various university organizations and clubs. The organizations are asked to invite the interested freshmen.

Many services and activities will be available to ND freshmen in the coming semester. Besides counseling services, Dean Hofman plans Friday night cook-outs from September 15 to November

Dean Hofman: “This is a tremendous improvement over past years. We are way ahead of things at this point.”

10. He has also arranged a special program for freshmen parents on Saturday, October 8 the Texas Christian football game.

The Counseling Unit of the Freshman Year office has undergone several personnel changes, including the addition of two women counselors. Karen Hargrow will handle Arts and Letters intents and Paula Duvall will handle Student Workshops as well as counsel for various intents.

“These women are sensitive to the special career interest of women and are prepared to handle them. But they are not exclusively for this purpose. They are well qualified to counsel every freshman in the area of their expertise,” Hofman explains.

Freshman Year of Studies will continue to utilize specially selected ND seniors to do some of the counseling. In addition, one faculty member from each university department will serve as a consultant to the Freshman Year of Studies.

One freshman problem that is not covered by the Freshman Year of Studies is the current housing situation. “I certainly hope all freshmen are satisfactorily housed on campus,” Hofman says. He refers all student residence inquiries to Fr. James Rieth, who as Dean of Students is in charge of all student residences this year.

Varsity openings on debate squad

The Notre Dame Debate Council has openings this year for freshmen who are interested in debate and who are willing to debate. (1) freshmen will be primarily on the varsity unit at a very early stage of the year. Most freshmen in the past have had little difficulty in maintaining a high scholastic standing while participating in debate. (2) limited scholarship monies will be available to freshmen who demonstrate need and a willingness to debate. (3) more extensive scholarship aid is offered to active members of the varsity unit at a very early stage of the year. Most freshmen in the past have had little difficulty in maintaining a high scholastic standing while participating in debate. (4) although debate requires much time and effort, freshmen will be primarily on the varsity unit at a very early stage of the year. Most freshmen in the past have had little difficulty in maintaining a high scholastic standing while participating in debate. (5) more extensive scholarship aid is offered to active members of the varsity unit at a very early stage of the year. Most freshmen in the past have had little difficulty in maintaining a high scholastic standing while participating in debate.

Frosh bed squeeze

by Mike O'Hare
Observer Staff Writer

Among the several problems that incoming freshmen will encounter this year is a shortage of beds on campus. Consequently, the class of '76 will find itself living in hall lounges, basements, and study rooms. Study lounges in Flanner, the basement of Farley and the guest lounges of Cavanaugh and Zahm are some of the places where this year's freshmen will be housed.

Fr. James Riehle, dean of students and in charge of student housing, explained that only 50 students are living in cramped housing, not taking into consideration the basements and lounges. He described crowded housing as three room suites that usually house four freshmen which will now contain six freshmen, and two room suites that normally hold three freshmen which this year house four freshmen.

Fr. Riehle stated that the three room suites with six freshmen and the two room suites containing four freshmen will receive top priority in being relocated as empty beds are discovered on campus. Students living in study lounges in Flanner, Cavanaugh and Zahm are next on the priority list of relocation. Fr. Riehle stated that the crowded housing situation would not affect upperclassmen.

Begun in June

Dr. Robert Ackerman, vice-president of student activities, traced the housing problem back to this past June when the University discovered that it would have 350 more freshmen than it had beds. The problem of finding beds for 350 freshmen resulted in the University exploring several alternatives, such as housing students at the LaSalle Hotel, St. Mary's College, Moreau Seminary and even mobile homes. However each of these possibilities were rejected for various reasons.

At this point the University sent postcards to upperclassmen concerning the housing squeeze. Upperclassmen were asked if they were returning to the University, if they would like to live off-campus, or if they would agree to let a freshman live temporarily in their room.

More than 6000 students responded to the questionnaire, with 1,000 stating that they would be willing to accept a freshman as a roommate. However, according to Dr. Ackerman, the University felt that the questionnaire was misunderstood by many students and that the results were misleading. It was then decided to go through the residence halls on campus to determine where the incoming freshmen could be housed. The result was the conversion of lounges and basements into freshman housing.

Two Points of Dilemma

Dr. Ackerman expressed what he considered to be two important points concerning the housing dilemma. He pointed out that, at a time when most universities are having trouble getting students to live on campus, Notre Dame is experiencing an opposite trend. "I think this says something about community life here at Notre Dame."

Dr. Ackerman also emphasized that the overcrowding is not a direct result of coeducation. It is rather because of the decreased number of upperclassmen wishing to live off-campus. Although the overcrowding is hopefully temporary for less than a year, Dr. Ackerman expects complaints from students and parents. However, he sees the unfortunate overcrowding situation as a "test of the community spirit at Notre Dame."
St. Mary's incorporates nine lay persons, six flexible, and may now grow to up to forty members. President Henry speculated that it would ultimately reach that limit, but only over "a long period of time." For the first time, faculty and students have each been allotted one representative with full privileges. The student representative appointed by Dr. Henry is Jean Seymour, a beacon for the college separate management of St. Joe Bank and get a handsome checkbook with the ND monogram emblazoned in gold on the cover. Notre Dame hails first women as undergrads

by Jerry Latus
Observer News Editor

More than 300 women will register Tuesday, September 5, opening a new era of undergraduate education at the University of Notre Dame. The 300+ women will include 125 first year students and SMC former administration program who are residing at participating in the Sophomore women.

Also prepared the way for the women to live in the residence halls. Sr. Miriam: The most important person who has to worry about coeducation is the observer. All of this work was done by the former hall director of Holy Cross Hall (SMC).

Sr. Miriam has been named Assistant to the Provost. She will serve as assistant rector of Walsh Hall. From Lowell, Mass. and Joanne Szafran. Ms. Cekanski viewed the situation in much the same way.

"It will make the University more humanly mature. It's always been seen as a rah-rah, football school and now it's getting with it. It's a very special thing," she continued.

The Administration noted that a "wait and see" attitude would have to prevail in regards to many of the possible conflicts. If a new gynecologist should become a necessary campus facility then one would be provided.

FROM ESSLINGER'S: Proudly Serving the Notre Dame Community

Sanita Roberts, a member of the Advisary Committee on Coeducation, will be on the Administration. She will serve on Mr. Miriam's staff.

Fr. William Toshiba, director of campus ministry, hopes that coeducation will "do much to humanize the place." He noted that "it will contribute to the goal that I think is crucial, that Notre Dame can offer 4 years of human growth."

Fr. Burtschall said that coeducation will "provide more day to day companionship for men and women students. Friendships will be more frequent, more realistic, and more humanized."

Ms. Cekanski viewed the situation in much the same light. She "will make the University more humanly mature. It's always been seen as a rah-rah, football school and now it's getting with it. It's more of a realistic living situation," she continued. "An all male institution is totally unrealizable."

Follows Recommendations

The changes the University made followed closely the recommendations submitted by the Advisory Committee on Coeducation last May. The committee was a mixture of students, teachers, faculty, and administrators and their report has served as a guide to the Provost reported that each administrative office made followed closely the recommendations submitted by the committee's report on their own. But he also will serve as the assistant rector of Walsh Hall. Sr. Susan Bennett has been named to the post as assistant rector of Baslin Hall.

A Pleasurable Addition

Administrators expressed great pleasure with the addition of women to Notre Dame. Dr. Robert Ackerman, director of student activities, claimed that "the purpose of Notre Dame is to educate and educate becomes part of that purpose."

By the time you read this, if you have not already been welcomed to death, the saturation point is not far away. Even as freshmen, though, you have already encountered your first taste of the problems of the University community. This taste may be bitter, indeed if you are one of the 350 freshmen living in the hastily prepared housing—resurrected hall lounges and converted study rooms—designed to accommodate the freshmen caught in the on-campus bed shortage.

The knee-jerk response to a problem as critical as seemingly overcrowded dormitories is to scream—loudly. Unfortunately, this word will not correct the problem nor insure that it will never happen again. The bed shortage is, more than anything else, a product of changing University priorities that is long overdue.

For the Record

Even though the process of laying blame is not very productive in this case, it is necessary to clear the air and eliminate many mistaken notions about the source of the error. First, the problem did not originate in the admissions office. The problem was due to the unpredictable conditions of the first year in education that freshmen planned to enroll as of September 1. The admissions target was 1625. Now comes the hitch. The past year and how the displaced students to stay on-campus. Chambers held to his promise. None of these students were forced to move off-campus. As a result the on-campus housing was seriously overdrawn. In the middle of the summer the newly reorganized Office of the Vice-President of Student Affairs faced its first crisis.

Running Notre Dame

Before any concrete suggestion can be made, a fundamental understanding of the generic qualities of the University is necessary. Bureaucracy is a loaded word. Everyone realizes, however, that bureaucracy itself is not harmful. Rather, the only way to run any large institution is by means of an efficient bureaucracy. Disagreements, then, should center around the goals of the bureaucracy, not the fact of its existence.

Briefly, this is how the departments of the University that most directly affect students are run. The Office of the President is small—Fr. Hesburgh. Decisions rarely reach this office unless the choice is between two nearly equal options. This is not meant to imply that Hesburgh is unconcerned with student problems. Simply put, in twenty years as the President of the University Hesburgh has been able to fill the critical decision-making posts, the Vice-presidencies, with men whose judgement he respects.

Ninety percent of the decisions affecting students are made in two offices—The Provost and the Vice-president of Student Affairs. As provost, Fr. James Burtchaell, is the second ranking officer of the University. Although the Provost's biggest responsibilities are in the area of academic affairs, Burtchaell has had a major role in many student life decisions. This may change. During the summer Philip Faccenda, Vice-president and General Counsel, assumed the position of Acting Vice-president of Student Affairs. His first move was to centralize the office and establish more specific areas of responsibility for his assistants. When Fr. Thomas Blank was held the position of Acting Provost, 53 people were responsible directly to him. Only seven people are directly responsible to Faccenda. He plans to use them as his central decision-making staff.

Faccenda's other major change was moving the Student Affairs office to the administration building where it belongs. Now the VP is able to function as something more than a glorified task master.

What to do

Before developing a specific plan, several aspects of the necessary student power must be distinguished. Access is the ability to see the person making the decision. Influence is the ability to steer that decision in a favorable direction. Clout is the power to make a decision stick.

Fact I: Except in the academic area no student has clout in anything but the most trivial decision.

Fact II: Recent changes in the Provost and Student Affairs offices have created a number of middle administrative positions to which students have high access. The most noticeable of these are the Director of Student Activities, Dr. Robert Ackerman, and the Assistant to the Provost, Sr. John Miriam.

Both of these people are new to their posts although Ackerman was the Assistant Dean of Students last year. If the positions work as expected, students should have greatly improved influence in many important decisions.

This is not enough. In order to prevent another housing crisis, students should be placed on the committee which makes the final decision on which dormitory will be converted to a female dorm next year and how the displaced students will be housed. Freshmen who lived in the makeshift housing last year should also be included.

In the final analysis this approach is the most promising. It would give students some clout in crucial student life questions which must be solved in the upcoming year.

The Ghost of Badin

The campus ministry said it well. "It's the real world now...there's always been a crying need for women on campus here..."

Fr. William Toohey, head of the Campus Ministry, also said it succinctly, "It's a fair idea of the real world. Perhaps now we can see the normal and appropriate interchange of men and women."

I think all this sums it up quite well. Notre Dame is finally opening its eyes (and theirs) to the reality of the world around us. "The world that is not the border of Angela Blvd and Juniper Rd is not all similar as some might lead you to believe. It is not the exclusive domain of those males we see around. It is a world of mixture. Men and women, together, competing, loving, touching, arguing, learning. Together! They are not separate, they are part of the same world. And traditional Notre Dame has finally brought itself to see that.

Many say that tradition is dead now that Notre Dame has gone co-ed. They say the University will never be the same. I image that many an old alumni's heart skipped a beat when their hallowed Notre Dame made the announcement.

Well, please think about it. Tradition is a mighty and beautiful thing, it is a quantity around which legends are based. And many legends have been tied to Notre Dame because of its beautiful and remarkable tradition. But if a tradition, as beautiful and wonderful as it is, is lacking or tail off in some way, why should we maintain it in the form that we find it? The tradition of Notre Dame, as great as it is, is really short because the Dome has neglected throughout the years to educate the other half of society. Women complement men and men complement women and together they form one.

Women and men are equals in society, why should they not be equal in education? At Notre Dame?

Think of the traditions of Notre Dame that you have remembered. I lived in Badin Hall now. Two years ago. Now it is a female dorm. Some of the guys who lived around me were excited because one of them lived in the room that Alan Page lived in. (Page is now an All-Pro football player.) George Godtke reportedly drove a motorcycle down one of Badin's halls. Some kind of crazy traditions mean little to never seen before. No Notre Dame hasn't been just any other college because it is Notre Dame. A new Notre Dame with some new traditions added to the old and some openings for comparison to keep company with the ghosts of ages past.

Changes in new women's dorms

by Jerry Lutkus

Badin and Walsh residence halls underwent extensive renovation over the summer to prepare them for Notre Dame's first women undergraduates.

Fr. James Burtchaell, Provost, estimated in February that renovation would cost $140,000. The total cost of the renovation is yet to be released as work is continuing on both buildings. Badin and Walsh were both equipped with card lock doors so that only the women can gain admittance. Fire alarms have been installed on all fire exits. Other security renovations included floodlights on the outsides of the buildings and new fire escapes.

In the interior of Badin, all of the walls were refinished and painted. Sinks and medicine cabinets were replaced. Wardrobes as well as a chest of drawers have been added to each room.

In Walsh, the sinks were not replaced, but new spigots were added. The interior of the hall was painted. The Advisory Committee on Coaducation recommended that neither of the halls be renovated for the present, since both are available to women students. Badin and Walsh were both residents of Keenan Hall.

Sr. John Henry has indicated strong support for lasting value will be permanent inclusion in the curriculum. Such experimental ideas might consist of a totally new course, credit for internship work, etc. This is in conjunction with President Henry's goal of more progressive education at St. Mary's.

More fees: while the shuffle and the library are still free to SMC students, the Rockne pool will charge a fee this year to SMC women using the facilities. A spokesman for the pool and the University had not yet determined what the cost would be, and it would be sometime next week before it is decided. The ACC ice rink, which was last year charged fifty cents admission to both Notre Dame and St. Mary's students will this year hike the price for SMC students to one dollar, the regular adult rate. The other ACC facilities are open to all Notre Dame men and women, but not to St. Mary's students.

The Board of Regents has appropriated about $25,000 for the renovation of Regina Hall into a student center. Air conditioning has been installed on the first floor; a billiard table and stereo are planned for the basement. Dr. Henry has appointed an ad hoc committee to study the recreation and social needs of the student body, and additional space is being allotted to meet these needs in Holy Cross, LeMieux, and Regina Halls, where kitchen and exercise equipment is being installed. Student government has set aside a fund for hall-initiated projects which will be available on demand.

Frosh orientation booklet is expanded this year

The freshman Orientation Committee has published a new booklet called A Willingness to Experience according to Dan Schipp, coordinator of the committee.

The forty page publication, which cost $600 to publish, was prepared during the summer by Schipp and Dave Caruso, the committee's other coordinator. Both are residents of Keenan Hall.

Academics, social activities and campus organizations are all discussed in the booklet.

"We tried to include practical information and a fair view of what Notre Dame life is really like," Schipp said. He added that, "We also tried to promote some optimism. We didn't want the new student to think he had two strikes against him as soon as he got here."

Schipp and Caruso used three publications as models for their pamphlet. The first was The Notre Dame Manual for Freshmen, a booklet prepared by Don Moneey, a cabinet member of the 1970-71 student government and un successful candidate for Student Body President.

The other two documents were SMC Frosh orientation booklets prepared by students at Princeton and Indiana University. Schipp called the Princeton publication "excellent" and hopes that ND might be able to duplicate this effort.

The coordinators started with some of the basic information in the Mooney booklet, which was used in 1971. They added an extensive section on academics and expanded the treatment of clubs and organizations. Schipp and Caruso would both like to make it a "year long affair." They plan to hold at least one session a week to expand the basic booklet to "cover every facet of the University."

Financial limitations prevented the publication of annual booklets to provide one for each freshman at one book per single, double and three will be distributed on Saturday morning. Rooms assignments will be provided with two copies. Badin and Walsh residents can pick up their copies at the Rector's office. Distribution in the other halls will be handled on a door-to-door basis.

Frosh look to varsity as Irish start 85th year

Heavy practice for the Fighting Irish began bright and early Friday after six sessions of light, goalless practice which opened last Tuesday. This is the 85th year that such violence has been wrought upon the campus of Notre Dame, and the second time that freshmen grant-in-aids, according to Padless practice which opened last smart football-wise. There are two can be recognized on the field by Irish began bright and early the campus of Notre Dame, and their white jerseys, are not have competed for a spot on the starter.

Ara Parseghian has found con­ mdividual frosh is varsity material, Frosh football appears to be out and Junior Varsity on its way in, according to Sports Information Director Roger Valdeserri. The development stems from the recent NCAA decision to allow freshmen to tackle, lock and bruise with varsity teams each Saturday, as during the daily practice sessions. While the decision hasn't been made yet, Valdeserri said it will probably be in favor of JV football, noting that the plan is to follow the decision of the Big Ten schools. There will be at least five games, featuring a home and home series with Michigan, and an away game with Tennessee, which might also become a home and home series. Reflecting on the rule change, Valdeserri said, "It's a stupid rule to begin with." He claims the freshman year is a difficult time of adjustment in many ways, especially academically, and "especially here." "To involve them in the varsity program might be a little unfair," he added. However, Valdeserri was "surprised" by a small poll he took among 184 players, who were the first freshmen allowed to don varsity clads and chew some turf. Most of the replies said it was a good experience, which helped them budget their time, placed them in a desirable position of competition and gave them a good deal of incentive to work harder. There were 26 players in 1954 and 18 won monograms. Most said they would do it again, according to Valdeserri.

Unfortunately, according to the information director, the situation may have been biased, because the 184 players were allowed to take summer courses before the season. The result was that they knew the routine, and had a head start on their classes.

Domer in the Olympics

All of the events at the Olympic Games in Munich, Germany are important but the one that many Notre Dame track fans are especially interested in is the 800-meter run, in which former Irish star Nick Wolhuter is competing.

Wolhuter, a 1971 graduate of Notre Dame, captured the Irish track team his senior year and was the NCAA indoor titlist in the 800. The Olympic finals in the 800 are scheduled for Saturday, Sept. 2.
Coed committee recommendations

Recommendations

---Notre Dame should significantly increase the number of qualified women on the faculty and include them in all ad­ministrative ranks.

---The University should try to avoid the dual pitfalls of over­solicitude for women students on one hand, and neglect of their particular problems on the other.

---The committee wants to see this opportunity of making recommendations to women at Notre Dame to remind the community that the problem of coeducation is basically the problem of education.

---The committee regards it imperative that the University take positive steps to insure and promote contact, communication, and cooperation between Notre Dame and St. Mary's women.

---The committee also feels that all programs as well as all of the recommendations, but none expressed confusion as to the final recommendation.

---Akerman expressed frustration when he realized that the situation between St. Mary's and Notre Dame stands. "We've tried to maintain communication on the student affairs level. The co­programs are being looked into again, but the communication is in the student's hands."

---Pr. Shills retains his title of Assistant Vice-President, but will have new responsibilities. Ac­cording to Facenda, Shills will handle "general administrative work" and liaison with other departments, in addition to direct responsibility for the Information and Psychological Services.

Dean of Students Rev. James Flamhagian, C.S.C. retains his old duties and adds those of Student Housing.

Under the new system, Residence Assistants are no longer respon­sible to the Director of Student Housing, but only to their own rectors. The rectors, in turn, are responsible to the Student Affairs Office. The old job of Housing Director is now split between Fr. Rehle and Pr. Flannigan.

Mrs. Jeanne Swartz joins the staff in an official capacity as Assistant to the Vice-President. According to Facenda, the wife of Economics Professor Thomas Swartz has worked for the University in the past. He said the University, in her appointment, was merely recognizing an existing situation.

The old Student Affairs office in LaFortune Student Center is now occupied by Dr. Ackerman and Dillon rector Rev. David Schlaver, C.S.C., newly appointed director of volunteer services. Facenda is operating from his Vice-Presidential and Psychological Services.

Akerman, the only member of the Notre Dame staff with professional training in student affairs ad­ministration, will deal with student activities such as Student Government and Student Union.
