R.A.'s draft letter for more security

by Jim Greaser
Staff Reporter

Eighty-seven Notre Dame resident Assistants have called for action against increasing crime on campus in an open letter released yesterday to the letter (name) community. The open letter, supported by 42 percent of the University's R.A.'s, is a plea for mutual cooperation in facing and solving this problem.

The text of the letter, according to Jim Cavanaugh, the Pangborn RA and second in residence halls, except for the last two years.

The letter calls for a "more visible" security force without arming them. It also calls for better lighting on the campus. "Money should be no object to a school of our stature.

student co-operation

The letter stresses the need for student cooperation in many areas including "adoption of a preventive attitude toward our policies."

"Questioning suspicious persons who enter residence halls, watching for signs of resident need for security by students, a generally more responsible attitude must be taken if we expect the Administration to cooperate with us."

The letter also suggests that certain actions be taken on the hall level, such as locking all doors except for main entrances after 7:00 p.m. "Cavanaugh said that "it is not the nature of the University to have the doors locked all the time," but added that the proposed plan would have a "detriment affect" because of the inability to enter or leave the hall during a meeting or scene.

R.A. response

Cavanaugh said that of the 90 R.A.'s that were asked to sign the letter, only eight refused. The main objection to the letter was that it was "too soft" and the security police. "Cavanaugh felt, however, that "if the letter was critical, it would show it was written on a first name basis."

Most R.A. response was very favorable. An RA in Sorin Hall, a member of Cavanaugh's staff, said, "if I were the residence director, "That's where you've got it." He also hoped that students would take action and "do it on their own.

Helen Gallagher, an RA in Walsh, said that the letter "made a good point in that it is unrealistic to expect security to handle anything and everything. Cooperation is needed."

- "There must be some sort of caution about throwing the halls," Gallagher said, without turning the halls into an armed camp. "We need help from all parts of the campus to provide the property and safety of the residents and hospitality and curitize."

Gallagher praised halls with card-lock access to the building. She also noted the advantage of the phone system used in Walsh whereby if someone wants to visit someone in the hall he must first phone the resident's room.

"Residents must take the responsibility for going down to the card locks and guests. The feeling here is that this can be done without any "extraordinary inconvenience or inconvenience.""

Cavanaugh Hall RA Harry Haverkos said of the letter that "I don't expect it that it will do too much for us, but the lack of lack of team work is the reason for this letter. He added that if anything can come down mainly to the students."

Grace Hall RA Pat Weber said that there are a number of steps that students can take and that is being taken down mainly to students. He added that if anything can come down mainly to the students."

He also feels that any improvements will require mutual activity on the part of students and staff.

"Both sides must open their eyes."

The Hall Presidents' Council endorsed the letter at its weekly meeting Tuesday night.

Priorities Committee: 4 task forces finish work

by Greg Rosinski
Staff Reporter

The four task forces of the Committee on University Priorities have completed a separate report which will be released prior to the completion of the committee's entire report.

The task force studying the campus plant and facilities, chaired by James Duschek, Associate Professor of Aerospace and Mechanical Engineering, has written its report. The other three have not completed reports.

Fr. James T. Burtchaell, chairman of the Committee, has said that the report should be as before Christmas, but released that members were also busy with other duties.

The Committee as a whole will not complete a report before next spring. Fr. Burtchaell said that the committee might work more efficiently during the summer when the members would not be occupied with other tasks.

The four task forces will prepare reports to be presented to the Board of Trustees at its meeting in January.

The weight these recommendations will carry "will depend somewhat on how they are made in the next stages," Fr. Burtchaell said.

Prof. William L. Keesey, associate professor of theatre and philosophy, the group chairman in charge of the information gathering task force, has held meetings every other week. "I think it will be a good start," Fr. Burtchaell, who hopes that it will be written in a month.

The academic disciplines task force is reviewing all the University's departments and fields. Using representative members from all areas of the campus, this group will outline current studies at Notre Dame.

This force will view such problems as the allocation of resources and the appropriateness of fields of study. The enrollment task force would be most concerned over the increasing number of courses which have occurred on campus in the past two years. They are releasing this interim report to the Administration and Students of this University as a plea for mutual cooperation in facing and solving this problem.

"Students must first phone the room. The phone system used in Walsh whereby if we are caught on campus-these are just a few recent examples that can be taken. Increasing the size of our security force, more patrolling on the campus (i.e., a more visible security force), better lighting on campus-these are just a few measures which, while not drastic, would contribute to a more secure and pleasant environment on our campus. Money should perhaps be expected in a situation so serious."

The task force on research related to instruction is in "an information gathering body," according to one of its members, associate professor of economics, Kenneth Jamesson.

This group is investigating the relationship of research and instruction, to find how the academic disciplines and the student works and its impact on the latter.

Its main mode of investigation has been weekly meetings with personnel involved in these fields. The computing center and the library have been involved because of their combination of research and instructional activities.

Jamesson sees a vital role for the data group unearths, "Priority decisions have been made in community decisions. In that case, the type of information the task forces are gathering will be useful in making decisions."
NICKERSON DEFENDS BLACK HOUSE PROPOSAL

By Bob Johnson
Staff Reporter

In an impromptu interview last night, Mike Nickerson defended the black position regarding the Black House proposal. Nickerson claimed that his column, published in yesterday's Observer was unfair, incorrect, and possibly slanderous to the proposal.

Nickerson noted that some evidence regarding the formation of a Black House was presented at the SLC meeting. Nickerson said that it was impossible to say everything in an hour and a half. He argued that more time was needed to discuss the proposal with officials, that it isn't something that should be jumped into without consideration. Nickerson also feels that the availability of funds is not a problem, and as far as he could see, the expenditure would not be similar to the white community.

Nickerson said that the Black House would serve as a social outlet for the blacks of the community. He does not mean that the House would be strictly a "party" house, but rather a place in which to establish an academic and social community relation of Notre Dame and South Bend could be constructed.

Nickerson feels that the charge of there being no social facilities for blacks is fair. Because the columnist had not taken these ideas into account. He stated that the facilities on campus are not exclusively white, but, with the majority of them, they have become white centered.

Nickerson dismissed some paragraphs as "strictly academic and political center," and stated that it wasn't the blacks' fault that other students haven't used it. Simply, the whites haven't taken advantage of the facility.

Nickerson contended that at no time would the House serve as a center to improve relations. The House would be a place to relax tension on the white community that was due to the presence of black people. "This is the last thing that you want a party in some other half after the rubbishes and other things that have taken place!" Nickerson asked. He felt that the blacks would only want the house to serve as a social outlet.

Principally, he said, the Black House would serve as a community-centered house, involving the blacks of Notre Dame and South Bend. Nickerson felt that Notre Dame wasn't about to move, and South Bend isn't about to move. We would like to get involved with the South Bend community.

This involvement would include a day-care center, a tutoring center, and a counseling center for young blacks in the community. Nickerson also said that the blacks would rather be "an extension of Notre Dame." He took pride in being from Notre Dame, and said that the Black House would help alleviate the tension surrounding the lack of blacks within the South Bend community.

Nickerson emphasized that a freshmen orientation would be initiated to help introduce freshmen into the Notre Dame community. The House could also serve as a counseling service for Notre Dame and South Bend blacks.

Nickerson stressed the need for block counselors, especially at Notre Dame, saying that there aren't enough black counselors on campus to cope with the problems of blacks. He feels that many problems are hidden because the blacks are afraid of the lack of black counselors, and tendency of blacks to talk to whites. Nickerson also discussed the use of the house to accommodate black visitors, citing the lack of rooms available to black visitors on campus and parietal rules as reasons.

In trying to establish the House, Nickerson added that the House would not be entirely funded by the University. He stated that since the House would be of service to both the Notre Dame and South Bend communities, it should be more or less a permanent fixture. It's important for the House and the University to buy the building, and that all other expenses would be incurred by the black community. When asked about security precautions, Nickerson replied that if such questions would have to be ironed out.

Concluding, Nickerson asked that the blacks be given some chance to show their interest in the problems of Notre Dame and South Bend so that they may be helped toward the establishment of a Black House, and Notre Dame.

Baranowski elected HPC head

by Mike Kulczycki
Staff Reporter

Fred Baranowski, chairman of the Hall Presidents Council, promises to be a strong voice for the housing issue as the most important one facing the freshmen in his newly-elected position. He hopes to work closely with Dr. Philip Facenda's Committee on reconciling displaced students from Parley and Brenn-Philps.

Baranowski feels the halls should be consulted through the HPC, or at least asked for their opinions. He recognizes the power of the faculty committee to the HPC, but hopes at least for a voice in making the policies. He acknowledged that forcing people off-campus was "a real pain in the neck," with problems of relocating Parley and Brenn-Philps residents fulfilling the freshmen allotments. If Baranowski is elected, it will be the first time a member of Facenda's committee, Baranowski pointed out that the HPC never knew the possibility of asking students to assist each hall.

"The problem will be solved if people who are involved in the hall would cooperate," he said. Baranowski is in favor of the students making decisions about which hall they want to live in. "The HPC should be used as an instrument to iron out financial worries, as opposed to being used to reinstate Observer?"

-He is in the position of always asking Student Government for money.

The $12.00 subscription fee from at least 3,000 students, bringing the total number of subscriptions to over 65,000, was recently paid to the Student Business Office. The Observer said that unless all of the students paid their subscription fees, circulation could not be renewed.

The Observer is now missing on the SMC campus, indicated Brean. She said many students had thought that the SMC was going to pay the fee at Notre Dame, rather than SMC. A criminal who wouldn't be "plucked" by the police, she said, students want the paper to keep.

Fr. Toohey feels the amnesty must be general and unconditional. The HPC, with whom he will discuss it, must be told: "We have to make an effort to correct the wounds suffered by those in exile and prison. If they return from Viet Nam with benefits, what about conscientious objectors who have also contributed to the country by perhaps bringing a quicker end to the war?"

"This is all part of a pattern. Amnesty, abortion and the bombing are all a part of the syndrome of the cheapening of life," Fr. Toohey declared.

In an amnesty case, Americans must recognize that the law didn't single the conscience. We must realize that we act as a nation while acting as a Christian tradition in this context. To toohey felt that America is entering a new stage of its early stages of conscience.

Fr. Toohey has an unrealistic expectation about his letter to the Observer:

"And perhaps the letter will speak to others so they will say that it is in a honest sentiment. Perhaps they will say, 'I should write too,'" Fr. Toohey explained.

Fr. Toohey stated that if amnesty is to come, it will take a change of public sentiment especially from parents of Viet Nam veterans. POW families and war veterans.

"I hope that Fr. Hesburgh will take the matter up next year, but I can't see it in the near future," Fr. Toohey said.

Fr. Toohey condemned the Nixon stand on amnesty. In an interview by John Rumbach and Gail Pocus, the President stated: "Your recent press conference comments about amnesty in your recent Press conference were more truly astonishing. You cannot deny the sins of those who, because of conscience, could not involve themselves in a war they considered immoral. One seriously wonders how one reconcile this refusal of forgiveness with the word of Christ."

"And that is how myenity Father will deal with you unless you each forgive your brother from heart" (Matthew 18: 21)."

The matter may much deeper than this of course. In many cases many more than even a question of forgiveness in the first place, there is discipline and strength of conscience, saw the Vietnam war for the evil it was. For the war was a moral evil. After all, they went the ones who were calling the rest of us that it was our judgment that was flawed. At 8:30

Peace.

TOOHEY CONDEMNS NIXON STAND ON AMNESTY

by John Rumbach
Staff Reporter

Fr. William Toohey, director of Campus Ministry, released a letter Wednesday sent to President Nixon condemning the Nixon stand on amnesty. The letter calls on the President to reconsider his position.

"Surely you must realize that there can be no honor in this present situation if we refuse to take account of the concept of reconciliation-and one of those concepts is the conscience of young men who have made decisions supported by the Catholic and Christian traditions," the letter says.

Calling Nixon's comments on amnesty "general and unconditional," Toohey says: "One seriously wonders how you reconcile this refusal of forgiveness with the word of Christ."

A Specialist

The recent release of an open letter by the resident assistants of the University on the problem of security raises a few points that I feel must be made. The shortage of beds has been a while, points that are not, as many students have become, critical of the job security has done so far, but critical of the job done by two other levels in the University; the Administration and the students.

Optimizing

The RA's, in describing various suggestions for improvement in security measures, conclude that "Money should be spent on the school of our stature. True, it shouldn't. But the problem now is not getting more money to Security, something that is fairly improbable and is the budget already set, but using the money Security currently receives. Projects such as the time-clock for visiting cars are good as far as they go, but the events of the past two weeks prove that Security has become more than mere streetcorner traffic cops."

Director Arthur Pears admits that the more ideal security guard is currently out of the question, for Notre Dame is not in a position to hire the benefits of a municipality to its officers. So we must make do with what we have.

And the Other End

The second level of responsibility recognized by the RA's is that of the students' cooperation with the Security Department. They call for a "less critical attitude towards Security," something that will probably take while to come about. But something must be done now, and the best place to start is in the halls themselves.

Students must begin to realize that to have a security force that is effective implies that a few certain rules must be enforced. The simple pithiness that Security will handle everything without measures that will inconvenience or restrict students must be set aside, and be replaced with a serious determination to join Security in a common fight. An effort must be made.

And that effort must work three ways: on the part of the students, the administration and Security itself. Only then can Notre Dame have real security.

Letter

...on housing

Editor

This letter is mainly addressed to the students who are not listening to the discussion in the past week concerning the move of freshman to off-campus. Primarily because this University has never considered off-campus living but has also done nothing to foster the concept of the "notre dame male who wishes to stay on campus."

Hence the reason that many of the students except as John Abowd stated, "give them back their 50 dollar room deposit for." Now the issue has changed--the University wants these people to move--and the university should be able to do this. We move all, then help us out." In other words, get the directory for them of available housing and space, give them a list of roommates, and by all means, let them know that Notre Dame cares about them. Notre Dame's administration should take a hand in the acquisition of some sort of agreement with landlords so that the rents won't be so exorbitant.

This should and must be done if the administration is forcing these folks off-campus.

Definitely should be promised a bed on campus and so should every male here at Notre Dame if he so desires. The answer that I come up with is one that I think should be considered. The answer to the question is probably too late now but not too late for next year: it is to get a definite confirmation each year by a certain date from every male as to whether he will stay on campus or off campus. This should be done before any senior in high school male is accepted to this University. Why? From the empty beds left by those who will not come when all the other men are relocated, take a count of the empty beds for men. Then this number should be the quota of men to accept for the next year's freshmorn class-if it is the same amount or another, they have "marked" paper currency, usually dollar bills, in order to recognize the money should it ever return to our hands. This "marking" takes various forms, from executing a slight tear over George Washington's eye to printing names, phone numbers, or passwords along the border of the forms. From executing a slight tear over George Washington's eye to printing names, phone numbers, or passwords along the border of the forms. From executing a slight tear over George Washington's eye to printing names, phone numbers, or passwords along the border of the forms. And the dry stones no sound of water...
I will show you fear in a handful of dust...

When lovely woman stoops to folly and Paces about her room again, along, she smooths her hair with automatic hand. And puts a record on the gramophone.

It's them pills I took, to bring it off, she said. The chemist said it would be all right, but I've never been the same...

I know a colleague who teaches at a Catholic school in the East. It has happened several times, he said, that girls came to him, asking for time off from school or the postponement of assignments. Their excuse: they were planning a weekend abortion. What offended him the most was not the ethics or moral choices of women who are free, after all, to make their own decisions; what offended him was the casual mood of the announcement, which seemed to assume that my friend was quite willing to be an accomplice to an act which he considered life-denying and reprehensible.

Abortions, it should be clear, are not events that I am willing to support with enthusiasm, or with mortgages on my modest income. I have known women, married and single, who have made the decision not to carry a child. I regret their decision, but I am not their judge. I have been close enough to the fear that couples face at the news of an unwanted baby, so that I don't want to be anybody's judge. God knows how shabbily I might behave if their circumstances became my own.

My concern in this essay is over the moral and spiritual climate of a country where people are completely relieved, by medication, techniques, and operations, of responsibility for an act that should be performed with the fullest commitment of one's energies. I know that morality operates at a higher level than that of fear over unwanted pregnancies. I don't want to say something that I am not positive is true: that the pill and the permisibility of abortions encourages promiscuity. But I do want to say I fear the events in the lives of people I love when those events sound a lot like the scenes from The Waste Land.

In the Waste Land, nothing grows; everything sickens and dies. The land is under the curse of drought; the rain is needed, but it does not come. As rain is lacking from the life of nature, so grace is absent from the lives of men. All human actions are doomed to frustration and perversion; and sexuality results in sterility and death. In the mountains, the sound of thunder is heard, but still the rain does not come.

In our own day, the poetic images of The Waste Land are becoming our kind of reality. The air and the wind are poisoned, and the rain, when it comes, is full of death. The earth is diseased from chemicals, and the sex act has become our sin.

In our cities, there is the moral sickness of our Forty-second streets whose images are more distorted than anything T.S. Eliot has to offer.

The ultimate sickness is in ourselves, if we live without grace; or if we have programmed our passions to be as automatic as grammophones, and we mutilate our bodies with sterilization, like toothless women talking in a pub.

Here one can neither stand nor lie nor sit.
There is not even solitude in the mountains.
But dry sterile thunder without rain.
There is not even solitude in the mountains.
But red sullen faces sneer and snarl.
From doors of mudcracked houses...

Security escort now available for women

Security escort now available for women by Mary Egan Staff Reporter

Small groups of girls walking the campus now can request a Security escort for their protection from Campus Security, according to Security Chief Arthur Smate.

Any group of as few as three people can request a Security escort by calling the Security office (537-3815) beforehand. Peers explained. A man will escort them with "not necessarily with them," but perhaps behind them, just "so that they know he’s there." The security chief said.

Peers said, however, that it was not practical to provide escorts for girls walking alone. "It would be practically impossible to get an escort for every girl," he explained.

Peers said that the policy of providing escorts on request has been in effect since last year. The request for security escorts this year came from Lewis Hall, not Fauder or Walsh, according to Peers.

As it is the service would also be available for men. Peers replied, that if they are afraid to walk across campus.

The service is available at any time and may be escorted to the bell stops, but not to the dormitories.

An escort will also meet women at the parking lot, if they call ahead. Additional staff is added.

Students may request the service at the guardhouse if they are afraid to go out alone.

ND student in auto crash

A two-car accident at the intersection of U.S. 67 and St. Mary’s Road was a near-miss for a Notre Dame student and two South Bend residents to Memorial Hospital in South Bend.

Professor Ralph Landers, a sophomore at Notre Dame and Green Hall Resident, was shaken up but was not seriously injured. He was taken to Memorial Hospital for x-rays, which proved negative, and was released.

Alice Knox, an Indiana University student driving the second car and Bill Shaefer, a junior in the College of Science, were both South Bend residents.

As eyewitnesses to the accident reported that a blue Ed’s parked driving by Knox passed him traveling southeast at approximately 10 miles per hour. Knox said that the road was changed and slammed broadside into the blue Ed’s. Shaefer driving by Landers as he attempted a right turn from St. Mary’s way, and Landers’s car veered from the impact.

The time of the incident was approximately 12:40. Roseland and St. Joseph County police officers were on the scene as well. Firemen. Telephone was cleared and traffic was moving normally again about an hour after the accident.

Waddell talks on Third World by Tom McKeeny Staff Reporter

"The problem facing the Third World is the omnipotence of the West," said Dr. Philip Waddell.

This was the essence of a lecture given last night in Carroll Hall by Dr. Waddell, Chairman of the Anthropology department at Purdue University. Dr. Waddell spoke on the subject of "Third World". Propaganda as Brokers in Interpreting and Changing American Culture.

Dr. Waddell, who did his undergraduate work at the University of Kansas and was in post-graduate programs at both the University of Texas and the University of Arizona, said that the very term "Third World" was transnational and hard to work with. He defined the Third World as one made up of small, developing countries, persons economically, socially or politically denied, who experience a disjuncture with the larger culture.

Americans are generally considered to be in the First, or Western, but Dr. Waddell pointed out that this may not be the case for blacks, women or homosexuals. Such persons live outside the predominant halls of culture.

Dr. Waddell compared the members of the Third World with the Third International.' These half-buried, half-man, half-woman were denied recognition from the Olympic culture. At present, the Third World is extremely willing to make decisions about the cultural differences between itself and its two counterparts. These persons are the "brokers" according to Dr. Waddell, and were to provide the predominant, cultural systems, according to Dr. Waddell.

With the advent of the Third World as broker, the traditional cultures of the East and West may find themselves in reverse roles. They will be subject to the criticisms of this newest cultural force.

Dr. Waddell stated that, until the East and West have dealt with the Third World under the illusion of their own omnipotence, this omnipotence directed Eastern and Western nations into thinking in terms of minorities. The American manifestation of this phenomenon is our country’s history of subjugation and alienation of minority groups.

Dr. Waddell suggested that the friction between the three distinctive cultural worlds might be averted with the formation of a single Third World body that should be better suited for accepting the changes that it might encounter. Dr. Waddell’s lecture was the fourth in the American Cultural World Series at St. Mary’s College.

This particular presentation was sponsored by the American Anthropological Association in connection with its visiting lecturer program.

Food sales show profit gains

by Tom Drape Staff Reporter

The only competition the Huddle encounters on campus besides the pay cafeteria are Hall food sales operations. A recent sampling of these operations shows a growing trend toward a profit sharing percentage base between hall and proprietors as well as little dissatisfaction within the hall.

Flanner president Mike Malanga, points out, "You’ll find your key hanging over a nickel or so anywhere on campus.

The profit sharing percentage usually found is 40 percent to the hall and 60 percent to the proprietors. Ed’s has a one of remaining halls which does not elect a percentage toward the hall, as it yet. A profit sharing basis is considered by a number of the halls.

The choice of proprietors varies from hall to hall. An almost equal distribution has been appointed and elected proprietors exists with a few cases toward appointed proprietors. A screening system is usually employed through the hall councils. Most halls, according to the proprietors, do not have much problems with applications.

In fact, it’s rare that the site of the most lucrative operation on campus is possibly in a nearby

Council adds four more

The University Academic Council Wednesday voted to add four more elected faculty, bringing its membership to 27 ex-officio administrators, 33 faculty and 7 students.

The action came after rejection of a proposal that membership be reduced to 41 persons and the ratio of elected faculty to ex-officio members be increased from its current 10:1. The division to increase membership means a new total of 70, instead of 43.

To improve communication between the Academic Council and the Faculty Senate, the Council voted to have each College Council designate one of its members elected from the College faculty as an ex-officio member of the Faculty Senate. The Council also gave the Faculty Senate formal access to its agenda by insisting that academic recommendations of the Faculty Senate will be placed on the Council’s agenda after referral to its executive committee.

In other actions, the Council added a new member, appointed by the student body president, to the University Committee of the Freshman Year of Studies.

A new student, appointed by the President, was also given a seat in Board of Controls. The Academic Council also removed the Advisory Committee of the Computing Center, since the Center is no longer an academic institute and does not grant degrees.

Ward: HPC about to realize full potential

by Tom Mirabile
Staff Reporter

Ferris Hall Presidents Council Chairman Mark Ward said today that during his chairmanship of the council, the group has realized potential and that with more support from students it can achieve an even greater force in affairs of student life.

When asked what the Hall Presidents Council had done in the past year, Ward said, "I would like to have helped to initiate some new thoughts in regard to support of student government, that the council would have become the most representative form of student government on campus and that there had been a revision in the use of student activities fee for such students saw more of the money and where it was being spent."

Ward felt that the HPC had come closer to realizing its potential because the presidents on the council were able to see that since the hall is the primary source of social activity at Notre Dame the HPC was the most representative student government available to students.

"Students have become an understandably disinterested in Student Government because its popularity has slipped considerably in the eyes of the students," Ward stated this as being the biggest frustration he had to contend with during his chairmanship.

Ward felt this was true because most of the problems that students have to face, such as drinking, fights, and noise, are centered in the halls. He then went on to say that since most of these problems are centered in the halls, the presidents representing the respective halls were the most logical and best equipped people to deal with the problems.

Ward said, "Most students have a vested interest in solving their hall problems instead of concentrating on problems a single hall may encounter."

Overall Ward felt that his job had been an interesting one but he also questioned the ability of any person being able to accomplish anything as long as the student government bodies remain on campus.

"Notre Dame is basically run through a hall system of government; therefore if the lives of the students are potentially the best form of system currently available to the students," Ward finished by saying that as council chairman he realized this potential and worked more influence under the watchful eye of this organization.

Holl lectures on role of Jesus in the Church

by George Brown
Assistant Staff Reporter

The Catholic Church used Christ as a means to temporal power in the Middle Ages but now identification with "the real Jesus" is the prevailing mode, author Adolf Holl said last night.

Speaking on the phenomenon of temporal and spiritual power, Holl emphasized that de-edification, by which a group came close to understanding its potential, made halls! the prevailing mode.

Also critical to legitimize a link between Christ, the real Jesus out of love and trust, is the belief that the council had the potential to become an even greater force in a religious group's life. There was a need to make the council a part of the school, Holl said. Martin Luther began a movement to see the identification with Christ as a means to temporal and spiritual power.

Ward said that the failures of the HPC outweighed the successes of the group over the last year and that the council's accomplishments could not be as strong as on a solid concrete.

Instead Ward said, "This year the HPC was closest to being a religious group. Hall presidents came together as a discussions group and helped to unify not only the student bodies but also the student government.

He also felt that the HPC got together to focus on the religious problems instead of concentrating on the poorly managed single hall may encounter.

Overall Ward felt that his job allowed to stand on their own two feet with all the priviledges of halls. His image is shown as that of the crucified Christ," he said.
