SLC acts on student manual revision

Parties and alcohol in dorm primary focus

by Fred Gray
Staff Reporter

The Student Life Council yesterday suspended usual procedure in order to quickly and efficiently handle the revision of the student manual and, in particular, the rule on parties involving alcohol in the dormitories.

Father Theodore Leiseneger opened the first meeting of the Council. His remarks were aimed at encouraging the Council in their efforts as an organization set up to draw together students, faculty, and administration officials. He told the SLC he was grateful to them for making a commitment towards making the University a better community.

Mr. Faccenda explained the evolution of this law, and cited the need for revision by telling the council that parties in the dormitories had been considered by many to be the center of social life on campus.

He then listed the three types of gatherings that would be acceptable under his first draft of the revision.

The first is a gathering of a few people in a room, quiet enough to be unnoticed by someone passing by in the hall.

The second is a large ball event, held somewhere in the hall so that others trying to study would not be disturbed.

The third is a large campus event, held in a public place such as the barn on Bulla Road, the large building behind Holy Cross Hall, or the LaFortune student center. Student would bring their own alcoholic beverages to these, but the use of alcohol would be "secondary to their personal interaction."

The guidelines to the revision state: "We must challenge one another to find more creative ways of socializing." Various activities were suggested by Mr. Faccenda as examples of creative socializing, such as swimming or playing parties on the lake.

"We don't want brawls," he said. "Mature use of alcohol in the tradition of this campus will be capitalized." He then pointed out that using alumni weekends as examples was not what he had in mind.

Pro. John Stone headed one of two main arguments on the revision as stated in the draft. He said that the crucial issues centered on imposed reality, and that the council should question the legislation of morality in this situation.

Edward Rahill added to this by saying: "A student should have a say in his own life. We cannot force an individual to accept another's standards."

The other argument was based on the fact that the revision takes a low view of gatherings in dorms, even though they are considered by many to be the centers of social life on campus.

The guidelines to the revision state:

- "We can't continue to have rules that we are not living up to," said Faccenda. "We have to say what we mean and do what we say."

"The second it's a large ball event, held somewhere in the hall so that others trying to study would not be disturbed."

The third is a large campus event, held in a public place such as the barn on Bulla Road, the large building behind Holy Cross Hall, or the LaFortune student center. The Student Affairs office has taken a new stand on alcohol. By the existing rules no student may buy or sell alcoholic beverages on campus. Also, the use of alcohol is confined to the private rooms and prohibited in any public place on campus.

Tax reforms threaten ND endowments

by Terry Keene
Staff Reporter

Notre Dame is in danger of losing much of its financial endowment if tax reform proposals currently being considered by Congress become law. James W. Frick, vice president for public relations and development, warns that Congress may be overzealous in closing loopholes by restricting tax deductions for charitable contributions.

"I don't know of very many people against tax reform," Frick observed. "But we may get into the situation of throwing the baby out with the bath water."

The House Ways and Means Committee is in the process of writing a new tax reform law. There is some sentiment in Congress that tax deductions for donations to charities should be restricted. These tax deductions enable many potential donors to Notre Dame to make contributions.

Frick opposes proposals to close the charitable donations loophole for two reasons. First, if these proposals became law, donations to the university would be severely curtailed. Second, Frick believes that such measures would restrict an individual's freedom to help his fellow man.

"These proposals would take away from my right to help my fellow man the way I see fit," said Frick. Congress originally granted that right when it made charitable contributions deductible to society.

Frick pointed out that three particular measures are being considered in limiting charitable contributions. The first mechanism is putting a floor on deductions. Under this proposal an individual's total amount of charitable donations would have to be above a certain percentage of his gross income to qualify for a deduction.

The second mechanism would restrict the deductibility of donations in appreciated securities. An individual could only deduct a certain percentage of the appreciated value of the donated stocks and securities.

The third mechanism would restrict the percentage of the estate that can be willed to a charitable institution. Some states, notably New York, already have such a limitation.

Although Frick admits that tax abuses must be corrected, he defends such controversial loopholes as the oil depletion allowance. He objects most strongly to those contributions that benefit the donor directly. He believes that such donations should not be deductible.

Frick, who helped advise the Congress about the 1969 Tax Reform Bill, is confident that the nation's lawmakers will not intentionally damage charitable institutions.

"The Congress is interested in equitable collection of tax income. I am convinced of their sincerity that it is not their intent to hurt philanthropy," said Frick.

A few minor incidents occurred on campus this weekend, reported Arthur Pear, security director. A stereo-econ tape player with speakers and three tapes, all valued at $97, were taken from a car in the D-J parking lot. A blanket and gear shift knob were also reported missing from a car in the C-3 parking lot. A $200 bicycle was stolen from a car in the car barn. A $100 radio tape player with speakers was stolen from a car in the D-6 parking lot. Two gates at the Notre Dame main entrance were damaged, Pear said. A wallet containing a student ID and credit cards and car keys were reported lost. Pear also noted some damage to an auto antenna.

Brown lectures on Christology

by Zevon Hildinski Staff Reporter

Father Raymond E. Brown, renowned biblical scholar, speaking here Sunday night on the modern history of Christology, said that "our relationship to God is defined and stigmated by our relation to Jesus" and that "we define our religion in terms of the Christological question." He surveyed the different reactions toward Christology during the 19th century, the period of most extensive research on this subject.

His speech, "Who do men say that I am?", focused on the evolution of modern Christology from Bousset's work in 1931 to current Christological writings. Brown broke the different approaches in this period into five groups: simple-liberalism, scholarly liberalism, existentialism, scholarly conservatism, and simple conservatism.

Simple liberalism states that only important aspect of Jesus' life was his moral teaching. Simple conservatism, the opposite extreme, states that Jesus' life is currently portrayed in the Gospels, according to Brown, those two positions are the least scholarly but are held by 16 per cent of the people.

Thus, he was not concerned with these two but only with the remaining three.

Scholarly liberalism was the first position elaborated on by Brown. Bousset held in this Christology and said that the church had divinized Jesus so that people would listen to his teachings. Bousset proved, according to Brown, that some of the terms used by the church to describe Jesus had never actually been used in Jesus' time, thus destroying the church's credibility factor.
Macheca discusses party ban
by Pat Haith Staff Reporter

John Macheca, Dean of Students, aid last week in a taped interview with WIND that the present ban on hall parties and use of alcohol results from a consensus decision that there could be no chance for progress if we "do not start from where we are" in enforcing presently existing laws.

At the same time he said that the central staff does believe that there is room for improvement if it is done by due process. Macheca foresaw no major difficulty in enforcing the present rule.

The central staff spent the summer in a series of discussions that blended different viewpoints to form a consensus on what policy in this and other matters should be, according to Macheca. "It was an evolutionary process that worked toward unanimity," he said.

Besides the members of the central staff, ten rectors, some of the R.A.'s, and an ad hoc group of students who were available on campus, also took part in the formulation of policy. Macheca agreed that these groups were not fully representative of the university community but pointed out that members of the community could make their position known to the Student Life Council.

While Macheca admitted that the new rules would be a step backward for some dorms he said that they would create a consistent university-wide stance that would liberate policy in some other dorms.

He favors the "reasonable use of alcohol" but is worried about its abuse and hopes that the end result of the current difficulties and proposals will be an improvement in the quality of life in the dorms.

"I hope the new rules will promote creativity and imagination on the part of the halls in serving the needs of the residents," he commented.

Macheca has not noted any serious opposition in enforcing the rules on the part of rectors, assistant rectors, and resident assistants. He "realizes" that some students, R.A.'s and rectors will find it within themselves to go along with this rule," he concluded.

The SLC got off to an uncharacteristic start Monday. The suspension of the rules labors only to bring it down and opened the meeting up so that the talk could get to the heart of the matter—the revision of the student manual and the “parties rule.”

As it stands now, Faccenda has the SLC over barrel. If they agree with his new regulations, there is no problem. But, and the treure of the meeting suggests this, if the SLC does not take too high an interest in the central staff’s revisions, there’s a problem.

Three Alternatives

The SLC has three alternatives. First, they can pass the new rules simply to push the “no party” regulations off the books. But in the process, they would be indicating their agreement with the central staff. But indicators point out that this is not the mood of the body. Their second alternative is not to pass the regulations. But this is highly unlikely and is the situation where Faccenda holds the greatest political strength. If the SLC rejects the regulations, they will be acquiescing to the regulations now in effect. What this means is that they would be unaccommodating—the policy that offers no alternatives for student parties. This path sounds unattractive to the administration members who realized that these changes have to stay within the proposal of this order, it would more than likely fall flat on deaf ears as many SLC proposals of the past have. Further, if they consider revisions, these changes have to stay within the boundaries that the Indiana alcohol statute enforces. The university obviously accepts responsibility for students that are drinking on their premises with apparent university approval and are injured or injure someone else even after they leave the scene.

Finally, if they decide to revise the statutes, the “no party” regulations now in effect will remain in effect until the revision is completed.

Result is Clear

So, the result seems pretty clear. The SLC doesn’t have much of a choice. Of the three alternatives presented them, only one seems acceptable, but it must be acceptable with some things in mind. By and large, it should be the hall’s responsibility to decide what is good for its residents within the statutes set down by the university. Thus, if a hall feels that it would not be unacceptable for “separation parties” to expand out into the hallways, considering of course that the party has the OK and is participated in by all the members of the section and that the noise level is not unbearable.

It is clear that the university cannot distinctly prohibit parties that are larger than room size and they realize that students require the outlet that parties supply either through some form of section party or a designated party spot in the hallhalls outlet can be fulfilled. Years ago, we learned that you cannot legislate against drunkenness in the Prohibition. Likewise, you cannot expect the new regulations to prevent drunkenness. It is going to exist even if you shut off the section party outlet. What results instead students either a) getting drunk by themselves in a non-social atmosphere or b) driving to Michigan to drink and endangering themselves and the others on the road.

The SLC’s Assignment

The SLC is facing a tough assignment. They will vote for the revision of the student manual, but they must make it very clear that with their votes go a pledge that the social necessities of the students not be ignored.

Over A Barrel

Last Point:
Allende: Fall of the Pragmatic Idealist

"What the bourgeoisie, therefore, produces, above all, is its own grave-diggers."

Communist M. S.-Just

Allende! A heroic figure, a faith in the worker of Marx but a martyr's end. So may read the epitaph of the bold experimenter in political philosophy.

"The national leader, Allende, scolded at the prophecies of the violent manifestations and the pragmatism that characterized that style of Castaneda. Rather than seeking his proletarian revolution by force as those men insisted, Allende grasped the leadership of a major nation by peaceful, democratic means." Art so the eulogies will sprawl forth. But history will reveal a different man, apart from recording his soon to be found sanctity, history will remember Salvador Allende González as both a pragmatist and an idealist.

The political situation of late 1969 would only accommodate a democratic transition in government. First of all, the Chilian army was competent and devoted to the democracy. Secondly, Chile had just finished its most productive six years under the leadership of retiring President Frei. As such the general populace possessed an excellent confidence in the government. Plainly summarized, no one was in the mood for the "grave digging" Marxist revolution called for in the manifesto.

In addition to the impossibility of a revolution, Allende recognized the fact that the Chilian political scene only offered one opportunity for the easiest off all ascensions to the Presidency — via election. Because of Frei's inability to commit himself to his coalition, Allende's opponent's power had dissipated drastically. Thus, Allende never had to make a choice between violence and non-violence, but from this pragmatic perspective sprung the blasphemy laden with economic idealism which would eventually lead to the South American President's demise.

Supporters acclaimed Allende's throw new light of peaceful Marxism. South Americans communists announced end to Castro terrorism and the beginning of democratic Marxism. No longer would the Red flag be a symbol of terror and blood, but a banner of democratic liberty and freedom of choice.

Despite their promise, the legend spinners' rhetoric was not enough to bolster the swooning Chilean economy. Allende's idealistically swift nationalization, without real compensation of foreign investments in copper, triggered telecommunication and transportation, lacked a "keep up" sign along the Chilian borders. The consequences of Chile's rash nationalizations woke up the American business world. Immediately, Chile lost the services of skilled foreign technologies. President Allende's life line had been ruptured. Meanwhile, even Chilian investment prominently learned Chile was no place for development.

As a direct result of this obvious pernicious economic state, Chile's credit became nonexistent. Without credit, without investmen, with decreasing production and clay wage and living standards, Chile's Marxist economic revolution was gasping for air, critically wounded.

Strikes ensued. Small truck drivers, ostentatiously angered by threats of nationalization and an inability to obtain parts for their vehicles refused to drive. Allende, the pacifist, threatened armed action, but deadlines passed without the drivers capitulation. Meanwhile, the besieged Chilean vehicles were being hounded to the point of being able to obtain parts. The drivers, ostensibly angered by threats of nationalization and an inability to obtain parts for their vehicles refused to drive. Allende, the pacifist, threatened armed action, but deadlines passed without the drivers capitulation. Meanwhile, the besieged Chilean vehicles were being hounded to the point of being able to obtain parts. Allende grasped the leadership of a major nation by peaceful, democratic means.

"It has fallen to almost a lamentable position. Chile will undoubtedly be a communist revolution spring laden with economic idealism which would eventually lead to the South American President's demise.

Chile is today's tragedy. From the rich state left by the Frei years, she has fallen to almost an untenable position. Chile will undoubtedly experience a long and hard struggle, but with the army in firm opposition the left wing will probably be subdued.

Since Chile possesses an honored tradition of democratic government, the return to a democratic civil government should occur as soon as possible. Economic rebuilding will undoubtedly be the major priority of any future government. If the new government assumes a more moderate attitude towards nationalization and if a leader of Edwards Frei proportions surfaces, Chile will recuperate from her nightmarish moments. Chile's inability to find a successor to unify his country, because of Frei's inability to commit himself to his coalition, Allende's opponent's power had dissipated drastically. Thus, Allende never had to make a choice between violence and non-violence, but from this pragmatic perspective sprung the blasphemy laden with economic idealism which would eventually lead to the South American President's demise.

But now a new question hangs in abeyance. Now that Allende has apparently failed, what, ever happened to Castro's guerrillas? A question answered.

If Marx were alive today, he would laugh and then cry at what he would call Allende's folly. After his death, the Chilian President missed the basic tenet of his philosophy. "Men's souls are made of their money," Marx would have told Allende. You can only take a man's money by ending him because he won't part with it any other way. Allende, you were not practical enough. You must not have remembered Stalin, Lenin and Mao.

Thank God, you were not as practical as they, Mr. Allende.
ND security devises trial anti-theft program

by Jane Thornton
Staff Reporter
Operation Holdups, a new anti-theft measure devised by the security office, will be activated on Holy Cross Hall as a pilot. According to John Macheca, Dean of Students and Director of Security, the program will begin when the hall government recruits a sufficient number of student volunteers.

Diamond point pens will be used to etch personal property with the owner's Social Security number as volunteers move from door to door on a half-to-ball schedule this semester. Stickers placed on the door stating that the occupants have participated in the project are hoped to deter would-be thieves. The Social Security number will aid police in recovering recovered property to the owner.

Defining his administrative security role, Macheca stated, "Basically, I am concerned with the needs of the community, all members of the community, concerning their safety and the security of their property." The security office as such often gets the job that no one else wants to do. Security is basically a police organization. The big thing is that they shouldn't be distasteful jobs just because other people don't want to do them."

Macheca cited responsibility regarding some disciplinary problems as being appropriately delegated to the security office, but added that there will be certain rules or functions that will be both campus security and disciplinary as it should be.

Security on campus, personnel-wise, consists of hall monitors, regular foot patroldes, gate office, three mobile units, the security office itself which houses the dispatcher, clerical personnel and facilities, an investigative officer, and the director of security.

The personnel is charged with the physical security of the campus, which includes grounds and buildings, as well as the personal safety of the members of the community. In particular, responsibility for enforcement of traffic and parking regulations, night escort, automotive, bicycle and property registration fall under the duties of the security office.

Who sold the rugs in the Fieldhouse at the beginning of this semester?

After a good deal of effort, it was discovered that the company who was selling fur-diameter, "furs, in the Fieldhouse was the same outfit that was selling rugs. If it's a matter of a rug being defective, it is recommended that you return it to the store with your complaint as well as the firm's name in question.

Toohey plans new activities to broaden campus ministry

by Larry Stanton
Staff Reporter

Fr. William Toohey, Director of Campus Ministry, explained the new activities which the office will coordinate this year.

The Bulla Shed, the barlike building across from the library, will be the center of many Campus Ministry activities. Fr. Toohey describes the Bulla Shed as "an alternative to the screaming scene of the residence halls." He plans a place for meetings just getting together and will have available for individuals or groups to reserve.

Today there will be an open house at the Bulla Shed. Everyone is welcome to see it and learn of some of the activities taking place there.

Four "weekend experiences" at the Old College are also planned for this semester. They will last from Friday evening through Sunday noon and feature some interesting man of the University.

The first will be a weekend with Fr. John Dunne, the second Morton Kelsey and Fr. Maurice Allen, the third Fr. Tim Myerts, and the fourth Fr. James Burkhard.

These weekend will be limited to 25 students each and will be announced well in advance.

The Campus Ministry staff also plans to get as resource personnel for the halls in the areas of drug counseling, liturgy planning, or programs in social consciousness. There are also long-range plans to co-ordinate a major symposium on abortion.

Fr. Schilts, of the off-campus office, is also working with Campus Ministry in hopes that some plans can be made for the off-campus students.

Indian humanities committee slates abortion conference in CCE

National and local authorities will participate in a two-day conference, "Government, the Family, and Abortion," by the Indiana Commission for the Humanities in the University of Notre Dame's Center for Continuing Education September 26-27.

This second program in an ongoing series of in-service education follows six public discussions held in neighborhood centers and churches of South Bend. A final round of discussions is planned during the conference. The conference goal, according to Dr. A. Edward Manier, associate professor of philosophy at Notre Dame, "is an open discussion of the issue. A debate of issues leading to a mature sense of community responsibility on this important issue.

Afternoon and evening conferences will deal with a sociological overview of the meeting's theme, medical and legal backgrounds, and ethical and religious positions. Also under discussion will be the new role of woman, parenthood and the family, and community support for the quality and autonomy of family life.

November 3, is set for Science, Engineering, M.B.A. and Law Meetings each night will start at the Engineering Auditorium at 8 p.m. and are expected to last until 9 p.m.

Placement Manuals will be available at the Placement Nights, and the office will have the registration packet last week. Manuals have been delayed by a printer's strike and a materials shortage, but Willemin expected to have them available.

To serve as a forum for presenting views, the conference will feature the following persons: Karl Willemin, director of the Placement Bureau, Fordham University; Dr. Stanley S. Weil, director of the Social Research Institute, Wellelum, University; Dr. William L. Hedges, professor of history at the University of Chicago, and Dr. William E. McRae, president of the National Association of Catholic Colleges.

To coordinate the conference, the University is also working with the National Social Science Foundation, which will finance the program.

Schlaver limits weekend concession stands

by Kurt Heinz

Food concessions on home football Saturdays, this year, will be affected by stricter enforcement of registration and health guidelines, as well as higher fees. By FR. Dave Schlaver, director of student activities.

The same number of stands will be permitted as last year, but the above facts could cause a drop in the number wanting to operate a stand, he said.

For years, on Saturday mornings before all games, there were a great number of hot dog stands. As alumni and various football fans flocked the campus, there was a stand at every corner of every side looking ready to grab their money. Unfortunately, with the unlimited number, one grabbed much money. In turn, he said, a lot of stands grabbed a little money.

Last year, the University issued a limited number of permits in order to improve the situation. A lottery was held to determine who applied was able to get a stand for two games.

Schlaver indicated that the number of stands around the same as last year’s. With registration still open to any organization until 5 p.m. Tuesday, Schlaver was uncertain as to whether a lottery will be needed.

He indicated a decision will probably be made Wednesday. Any ball or club or organization which has been registered with the University can apply for a permit to run a concession, Tuesday at the Student Affairs office at LaFortune, he said.

Last year a number of fans ran stands without permits”, said Schlaver. “This year, the Security Department will be closing any stand without a permit.

Schlaver said. Even last year, with the restricted number of stands, the profit yield from such a stand was minimal.

The average stand made between $50 and $80, according to study by the Student Affairs Office. This year’s meat price should decrease that amount, Schlaver concluded.

Nonetheless, the concessions remain one of few sources of revenue for most clubs and organizations.

Schlaver limits weekend concession stands

Placement manuals will arrive today

Placement manuals are expected to arrive today and will be distributed at Placement Night in exchange for the greens registration card said R. D. Willemin, director of the Placement Bureau. Placement nights will be held on Tuesday and Wednesday of this week from 7-9 p.m. in the Engineering Auditorium.

Willemin urges seniors to pick up these manuals which contain the schedule of the on-campus job interviews as well as listing the services that the Bureau offers. The recruitment schedule arranges interviews with companies in alphabetical and chronological order, tells where the job is located, and if citizenship is required.

Companies and universities will begin recruiting the week of Oct. 6th. Students must sign up for an interview the preceding week anytime between 8-5 in the Placement Bureau. As this procedure will be followed throughout the year, the observer will print an updated schedule each week of the employers that will recruit the following week.

Employment literature is available at the Placement Bureau and also at an Open House for seniors, graduate students, and faculty which will be held the week of September 26th from 1-3: 4:00 in the Bureau offices.
Ruggers stay unbeaten, demolish Lincoln Park

by John Turcan

Bone crunching action dominated Notre Dame's triumph in the second half of the contest against Lincoln Park Saturday at the Notre Dame football fields. The final score was 36-0.

Notre Dame dominated the opening half with sustained drive in Lincoln Park territory. However, according to Tom Hastings and Jim Kovach each with one try. Although the game appeared to be over the "Robo" Olsten team secretary added that "the game was generally easy; the amount of cheap shots, and biting was normal." Olden emphasized the good hitting and years of experience on the offense as a major advantage to this year's team.

The only inexperience on the team was in the backfield. Olsten noticed that there were some instances of inexperienced running. These games hopefully work out themselves as the season proceeds.

The rugby team has already compiled a 5-1 record for the year. The team defeated the 4th place Windsor Rugby Classic at Windsor, Ontario during the Labor day weekend.

The B team also won, defeating Lincoln Park's B team by a score of 25-0. Both teams were led by Rick Conti with 2 tries, Craig Simon, Paul Collinger, and Joe Nittre each scored one try. The win over Lincoln Park widened each with two conversions.

This Saturday Notre Dame's first team will encounter Western Michigan at the Michigan vs. Notre Dame Stadium.

Blackhawks at Convo Friday

The Chicago Blackhawks have scheduled their first Pre-Season hockey exhibition game at Notre Dame Friday at 7:30 p.m. Chicago is seeking to win the multithreaded backstorm and Pat Stapleton with the 1973-74 Dallas farm team plus several new College and Junior "A" signees. This include 11 former WCHA hockey players plus an impressive list of the 1972-73 Dallas line up.

Perhaps Nixon is using the bill (which will allow local broad casters to their hometown team's games) to win the summer election. Incidentally, the Redskins opened up their 1973 season Thursday night will be another Super Bowl contender, that is unless the nation's number-one fan suggests some plays to his coaching partner.

Thursday night will be an outstanding evening for all true Notre Dame fans. Of most importance the 1972 Notre Dame football season kicks under way with Notre Dame Stadium Dillion Ball Pep Rally. It is traditional (at least since I have been here) for the Dillonites to host the first rally of the year, especially when the true game is on the road as was last year's Northwestern contest. This time around however, the Wildcats come here and that means Stepani Center will host another exciting rally, featuring Ara Parseghian.

Notre Dame needs this traditional pep rally at Dillion if for no other reason than to get rid of the real tradition they used to hold when the masses would descend on the Old Fieldhouse.

Notre Dame has lined up an outstanding array of speakers. In addition to tri-captains Dave Capes, Frank Pomarico and Mike Townsend, defensive coaches Joe Yonta and George Kelly, both former Dillionites, will speak. Basketball's miracle worker, Digger Phelps, has also promised to attend the festivities which get underway at 8 p.m. in the courtyard between Dillon and Alumns Halls. The cheerleaders also be on hand to "wake up the ochoes."

So, why don't you take some time out from your rigorous (!) studies, especially you freshman. You're going to be up all night for Emmi anyway. Remember, spirit is the thing, and Dillon's Rally promises to have plenty of it.

The Notre Dame Fanatic Club, which likes to think of itself as the seventh man on the ice, is trying to come up with some unique ideas for the upcoming hockey season. Already it has been suggested that the upcoming game organize the nation's first card section at a hockey game.

If you have any suggestions, Fanatic president Vic Dorr will be happy to pass them along to head coach Lefty Smith. So drop a line to him, care of this page.

A little of everything

This news flash from Washington. In what may go down in history as the most important piece of legislation during the Nixon Administration, President Richard M. Nixon signed a bill Friday that would guarantee the armchair quarterbacks of America a 99-yearold-standby to watch their hometown team's games.

Just think about it. Our President doing something right for a change. Thursday night will be the Chicago Bear home games on television. Boy, is that going to divide the silent majority.

The release said that the bill was signed without fanfare in the presence of President's entire press corps at the White House. His signing will create the toughest competition with television.

The President then left by helicopter for his Camp David retreat for the weekend. Ever since Watergate exploded on front pages across the nation, the President has been going off the beaten path. Perhaps Nixon is using the bill (which will allow local broad casters to their hometown team's games) to win the summer election. Incidentally, the Redskins opened up their 1973 season Thursday night will be another Super Bowl contender, that is unless the nation's number-one fan suggests some plays to his coaching partner.

Lacrosse opens fall season

by George Ecke

Coming off an excellent '71-'72 season, the N.D.'s Lacrosse Club is preparing for a fall practice schedule that includes scrimmages with Purdue, and Chicago and a home-and-away series with the University of Michigan. An encounter with the alumni and at least 2 intra-squad games round out the fall schedule.

Fall practice will fall under the direction of the 2 co-captains for this year's squad, George Carberry and Ted Lichtenberg.

According to coach Rich O'Leary, the fall practice will begin in the near future with a thorough in-season game. O'Leary mentioned that the team will need to work on some of the mixture in the game with the Alumni.

For those interested in going out to practice, the fall practice schedule is as follows:

- Monday, 5:00 - 8:00 p.m.
- Wednesday, 5:00 - 8:00 p.m.
- Friday, 5:00 - 8:00 p.m.

Better hurry if you would like to take part in the upcoming fall season. The season kicks off Thursday night with an alumni game at 7:00 p.m.

"It's going to be a competitive fall season," said O'Leary.
