SBP, SLC elections today

by David Kamiski
Staff Reporters

Today, the preliminary election for SBP and the final election for SLC seats are being held. The top two positions in each race will advance to the final on Monday, March 1. No write-ins or blank ballots will be tabulated.

Some students may have already voted but for those who have not, The Observer offers a capsule summary of each SBC race.

Villarosa-Zimsky

Steve Villarosa and Bill Zimsky called for united student action in their campaign for SBP: "There is one place in this university where the students are treated like adults," Villarosa said.

The candidates proposed an off-campus food co-op. They urged the students in the halls to take more interest in their own life. They also criticized the Administration for not being sensitive toward students.

Villarosa and Zimsky were hampered in early campaigning when signs announcing their appearance in Fisher and Sorin Halls were torn down prior to their arrival.

Capp-Ericksen

Ray Capp and Greg Ericksen ran what they called a "serious campaign." The major platform proposals dealt with increased service to the off-campus student and the controversial winter sports center in Stepan Center.

The candidates supported the formation of six off-campus commissions where students would freely aid in gathering information on student housing. They also proposed a rent co-op and an off-campus shuttle service.

Several candidates charged that for various reasons the Stepan sports center guaranteed by Capp and Ericksen was unfair. However, The Observer checked Tuesday and discovered that many of the objections were unfounded (see story below).

McLaughlin-Flanagan

Pat McLaughlin and Frank Flanagan made dealing with the administration the main thrust of their campaign. They said they didn't want to make a lot of campaign promises they wouldn't be sure they could keep until they were in office.

McLaughlin and Flanagan called for a revision of the judicial code. They criticized Fr. Hesburgh's ability to review any judicial case regardless of the results of prior judicial action.

Capp-Erickson

Reviation of the SLC code was the main thrust of the Winicazyk-Famula ticket. Their major platform goals are not realistic for this campus in the '70s, their platform stated. "Instead of begging Macheca for a party, the students could sign a contract for the rector and be held accountable for any damages," the platform offered.

The two also seek to clarify specific penalties. "If a student knows his rights, he has a better chance and knows how to respond," said Winicazyk.

Late SLC Endorsement

The Grace Hall Council endorsed section-leader Denis Sullivan, for the SLC seat in the fourth district, favorite of Sullivan's position. Sullivan and Chae. Wilson, complained of the move in light of the Tuesday night primary election of the candidates.

Capp-Erickson cleared of charges

by Al Rutherford
Staff Reporter

Investigation yesterday afternoon revealed that many of the charges levied by other candidates against a proposal by the Ray Capp-Greg Ericksen ticket were proven to be false.

Central in the controversy is a Capp-Erickson proposal to establish basketball courts in Stepan Center, a program which Capp had campaigned "in only a minor part" of their campaign.

Ed Rehill, reported Tuesday, Sunday night that he had talked to the chairman of the Architecture and Engineering Department and the cost would be in excess of $4,400.

According to Ambrose Richardson, chairman of the Architecture Department, the only price quoted was a figure off the top of his (Richardson's) head. "One of my students asked about the problem involved in changing Stepan to basketball courts, " Richardson said.

He continued, "I told the student that it would be a consultant and that it would cost a couple of dollars per foot. From this they derived $4,000. I had no idea that it was political issue." In his appearance at the Morrisey forum Sunday night, SBP candidate Pat McLaughlin had stated that the University Conservation Commission had been investigating the possibility of closing down Stepan Center during the winter months to conserve heat and electricity.

When Father James Flanagan, president of student affairs and chairman of the Conservation Committee, was contacted by the Observer, he replied, "The idea of shutting down Stepan Center during the winter months has never come up during the meetings."

Pat McLaughlin contacted the Observer Monday night and informed them that he planned to present a formal apology to Ray Capp at the Walsh forum.

"We are sorry that we misinterpreted what the Student Affairs Office had told us," McLaughlin stated. "Our order of facts stood for themselves."

"Father David Schlaber, Director of Student Activities explained the Stepan Basketball proposal in this way:"

"Back in early February, Ray Capp and Greg Ericksen came to me with the idea of using Stepan Center, when it was available, as basketball courts. The whole proposition was simply to install baskets in several places on the cement floor. The idea was a good one and it was brought before the Student Affairs Central Staff where it was OK'd."

"The task is not an inexpensive one but neither is it $4,000. The basketballs would probably be ordered through the Athletic Department. I haven't really had a chance to look into it but plans are being formulated," he said.

Philip Faccenda, vice-president for student affairs, verified Capp's statements that he had agreed to the proposal and that he had presented the Central Staff. "But as of yet," Faccenda stated, "it still has to pass the University Officers and the Business Affairs Staff."

He continued, "It seems like a good idea but there is nothing concrete about it.

Left unverified were candidate assertions that the proposal would cause insurmountable problems in the building for the university.
UFO expert to speak here

One of the nation's foremost authorities on unidentified flying objects (UFO's), Dr. J. Allen Hynek of Northwestern University, will deliver a public lecture on the phenomena at 7:30 p.m. tonight in the Architecture Auditorium.

Since its founding Hynek has been the official astronomical consultant to the U.S. Air Force's "Project Blue Book," the official clearinghouse for all UFO reports. He also serves as associate director of the Smithsonian Astrophysical Observatory in Cambridge and headed its NASA-sponsored Spurkin Tracking Program.

The chairman of Northwestern's department of astronomy, Hynek is the author of "The UFO Experience: A Scientific Inquiry," a newly published book documenting and analyzing every UFO sighting in the U.S. and abroad. He interviewed the two Mississippi men who last fall reported being taken aboard a UFO by "funny-looking" creatures. Later he said they "undoubtedly had a very real and frightening experience and should not be ridiculed."

The author-professor has organized the Center for UFO studies which will begin the first serious, systematic and scientific investigation of the phenomenon. Air Force and other studies, he says, were carried out with "scientific blinders and preconceived notions." He added that they never looked at the UFO sightings because they think it is "illness."

Hynek's talk is sponsored by the Student Union Activities Commission and is open to the public without charge. Dr. Hynek will answer questions after the lecture in the Grace pit.

Faculty shows mixed reactions to estimated tuition increases

by Katherine Lawrence
Staff Reporter

There were mixed feelings among faculty members yesterday over next year's proposed tuition increases. The increase, as reported in the Observer, is expected to approximately one hundred dollars and will help pay for salary raises, supplies and repair expenses.

Professor Lawrence Bradly, Assistant Archivist with the history department, reacted negatively to the increased tuition in the belief that students are now paying as much or more than they can afford and that high tuition will eventually "price out" the middle class student. Bradly went on to say that the money for pay increases should come from other sources, such as cutbacks in administration expenses.

Professor Thomas Werge of the English department said this statement: The University, like all individuals and institutions, is feeling the economic crunch. But unless rising tuition costs stop at some point, the place and other universities will price themselves beyond the reach of all but the very wealthy. That would be unconscionable and a tragedy.

Dennis Dugan, Chairman and Associate Professor of the economics department, viewed the tuition hike differently in that he approved of the students covering the pay hike, if indeed the money is going to go the faculty. He mentioned some previous tuition increases that never reached the faculty and speculated on whether or not this money would be used as indicated. Professor Dugan said he sympathizes with the students but the faculty salaries are part of the education they're paying for. Another opinion came from Professor Don Linger, Chairman of the Civil Engineering department, who expressed concern over the monetary burden placed on students but voiced confidence in the administration and the administration's handling of funds. He did not feel that the tuition hike would show up substantially in faculty incomes next year. " Notre Dame is not too heavy in people who are paid super salaries and don't do anything. You can't whittle down the administration," he said. Linger also commented that unless the University can come up with a 7-10 per cent cost of living increase it may lose some "awfully good men."

Erratum

In yesterday's article on "SLC Candidates View," John Farrell was misquoted as saying, "A member should be responsible to the students against the Administration, with an eye to the Administration, too. Also only the student body and faculty should have had a vote on the proposed calendar next year."

The quote should have read: "A member should be responsible to the students in confronting the administration, also having a respect for the administration's views. Also the students, faculty, and administration should have had a vote on the proposed calendar."

O-C assistance offered

by William Murphy

Ed Byrne and Stan Cardenas explained the results of their recent off-campus poll of student living conditions last night. According to Byrne, the poll shows that the students feel the University is lacking in consideration for the situation of the o-c student and he asked for a statement of assistance from the HPC in an attempt to make these sentiments known to the Administration.

Byrne pointed out several examples of areas where help from the University would aid the student. Byrne cited the situation of the o-c student who was asked for a statement of assistance from the HPC in an attempt to make these sentiments known to the Administration. Stan Cardenas also announced some money saving ideas drawn from the poll for those who will be living off campus. Cardenas advised students to watch for advertised sales and use as many newspaper coupons as possible. He also pointed out that students can qualify for food stamps, which help save money on food. Using less heat and light, showers at the Rock or ACC and buying meats in quantity were also suggested.

Jim Roe announced that Student Government will begin a program of recycling on April 1st, the proceeds of which will go to Goodwill Industries. Roe said the guidelines for the program weren't established yet except that a great deal of the work in the program would have to be taken on by the individual halls.

Rich O'Connor, the president of Pangborn, announced that Father Burchaell would give an informal lecture Wednesday night in Pangborn at 7:30.

Today — The Vote

The student body of Notre Dame goes to the polls today to elect a new Student Body President and a new group of student representatives to the SLC.

In the past two days, The Observer's Editorial Board has published recommendations for these elected positions. These endorsements reflect the opinions of the members of the editorial board and serve as our recommendations.

The board meets with all of the candidates, in this case the meeting being held all day Sunday. From the meeting, the board then debates what we've heard and what we know of the political situation on campus. From that debate emerges our endorsement.

This year, as in all years past, complaints have arisen about the fact that The Observer even endorses anyone. No complaints arise when The Observer takes sides on issues like the calendar, off campus, and all other news. The election is news like all other news. The fact that The Observer takes the responsibility of reporting the news carries with it the privilege and the obligation of commenting on the news. Our endorsement of candidates is that comment.

This year, The Observer has decided to endorse Ray Capp and Greg Ericksen for president and vice-president of the student body. After investigation yesterday, Capp and Ericksen have withstood the multitude of charges leveled at them Monday during the campaign. With the clearing of the charges comes the reaffirmation of The Observer's stance behind the candidacy of these two men.

This election has distinguished itself from those of the past year's already because of the quality of the field of candidates. But the problem with the campaign this year was that despite the quality field, the issues degenerated into a discussion of basketball courts and frozen food lockers. It was disappointing to see a quality field descend to trivial discussions.

Despite the triviality, there are many, many excellent ideas circulating in this campaign as well as the many good candidates. Whoever wins the election, it would be an absolute shame if the ideas and the personnel are not incorporated into the new administration.

Before any of this incorporation can occur though, someone must be elected. Voting today will be at the noon hour and at dinner time. All on-campus residents can vote in their halls and off-campus students can vote at the q-c office in LaFortune. Make an effort and vote today. It is an important vote and you have a quality group of candidates to pick from. The Observer contends, though, that the quality candidates not-withstanding, Ray Capp and Greg Ericksen are the best of the bunch. Vote today and vote for them.

The University's human sexuality rule is the most ridiculous legal farce since the Tennessee Monkey Trial. Or rather it would be if it were not for the very real harm it has done and probably will do again. The harm arises from the suspension of the Dillon student for breaking a rule which did not exist. The harm ahead is more such suspensions and expulsions for breaking a rule which still does not exist.

If the University insists on resorting to legalisms to protect private morality it should at least make those legalisms clear. But total chaos surrounds the sex rule, making any prosecution under it plainly unjust. On its face it simply says that the University thinks premarital sex is immoral. Nothing prohibits people who disagree with the University from acting on their disagreement. If you reject this simple interpretation, you can choose between at least eleven more, including seven offered by members of the SLC who helped write the rule. Then the only thing clear about the rule is that it is unclear. But students are guaranteed "a clear statement of all actions or behavior that shall be considered a violation of University rules" before they can be prosecuted. Therefore the rule is either simple philosophy or void for vagueness. Either way no prosecution is must.

It is easy enough to end this confusion. The SLC can write a new and clearer rule and Fr. Hesburgh can ratify it. But no rewrite could be retroactive. It could not apply to the Dillon case.

Of course the Dillon student was prosecuted mainly for parietal violations, with the evidence of a violation of the sex rule thrown in to "aggravate" them, according to Dr. Faccenda. But this "aggravation" idea itself is unjust. It is roughly like a prosecutor who does not have the evidence to prove a murder charge prosecuting the man for jaywalking and then loading in what evidence he does have to get the jury to give the defendant life imprisonment for jaywalking.

Further, parietals are broken only by having a "member of the opposite sex" in your room after hours. There is nothing in the rule which expressly implies that any other parietal case brought to the hall judicial board. Instead he was suspended by the University for a supposed violation of a non-existent rule twisted to aggravate a completely different rule.

Of course mistakes happen and nothing can be done about this one now, but when the errors were brought to its attention did student affairs act in the future as they have reacted to date they will make a farce out of the potentially excellent rules document. Its statement of commitments will become a vain propaganda blast, its carefully drawn discipline procedures hollow traps, and its proclamation of student rights a campus joke. I doubt that the administration will ever find that it would be like that indefinitely. But for now the message to the student is clear: Beware—no lapse in legalism means "We're never wrong."
THE BENEFIT OF HOPE

_by art ferranti_

The Bob Hope Benefit Special at the ACC Monday night was for the greater part of the audience a unique experience. Subjected to frequent retakes for lost camera shots and technical difficulties, the show last for four and a half hours. Yet their next task was "to get a list of stars that will fit this show and person and also get us a rating on television, which is the combination you want."

"Of course, this presented some rehearsal problems. Hope said that by the time Robert Goulet Drew into South Bend via charter plane Monday morning from the Las Vegas show the fly right back after his stint that night. We turn everything out of the way. These people are all such pros, you know. They know the business so well, they go, and do it, in a hurry."

Juliet Prowse also in an interview Sunday began preparing for the show last week. "We didn't know what to do. Then I sat down with my choreographer Fred Rivera and said, OK, we know, in a studio so let's incorporate maybe an athletic feeling. At first it was to be in the football arena. And then he said, 'Oh no, it won't be this.' Then we decided, 'Well, let's do a little bit of aesthetic type dancing combined.' So that's what we're really doing. It's a dance on parallel bars, and on trampolines, and on floor mats."

Despite her diligent practice on Sunday, Miss Prowse and her two male counterparts dancers Monday night had to re-do the dances after the taped music and vocal fooled up of the way through, re-do it again after a camera missed a shot, and reshoot the finale since the ring that would carry her above the heads of the crowd could not be lowered during the regular dance. She chose this routine because of the way through the show some of the audience became restless, but not a few, including myself, found the methods fascinating. Needless to say, the South African born dancer performed gracefully with speed and agility.

Debbie Reynolds, in an interview Monday afternoon, was very conscious of her television audience. "Bob Brown and his Band of Renown went through their number on a song a number of times because of the '40 million viewers.' Consequently she was left in the spotlight in the lower tenants space that night for five minutes waiting for her entrance. And everything was set up. She did not have to retake either of her two songs.

Both Prowse and Reynolds compared the show to the acts with the Hope show. Prowse said her nightclub work was "completely different. Here people come to see something that they don't always get to see. In nightclub you're working to a drinking audience. Today after midnight, now I'm talking about Vegas in particular, a tremendously good production is put into everyone's act. Used to be a time when you could come out and sing a song and do a dance and that was OK. But now Debbie Reynolds, and myself, and Bob Hope have got a band and a group of all of us that headline Vegas have got to produce in our show--lots of money, dancers and singers. We work every step of the little show. And this is completely different because you're basically, although you're working to a people in the area, working to talk to so many people that I am not concerned about the future of our country at all. In fact, I'm doing a tribute tomorrow night about the students, students generally, you know. The fact that I'm there looking at them in the eyes gives me a good opportunity to do a message which I think the people want and will like because it's optimistic and because I really feel that way. I meet so many young people and I think we're going to hand them a world that's shabby in spots but I think we've done a pretty good job and I think they can take care of it, and it's going to be their responsibility."

Hope's affiliation with South Bend extends way back to his vaudeville days. "I did my first act up here in 1928. And I walked out with a brown derby and a cigar at the Palace and the audience went wild. And nobody knew why. I thought what the hell happened, my float open. And they thought it was Al Smith running for president, wearing a brown derby and a cigar. And this is the only town it happened at. You know I was in Champaign and they didn't scream. At Notre Dame, they went, 'Yea!'"

Hope even appeared at the old Fieldhouse. "And that's what built the Convocation Center he quipped. "I didn't want to be up there before they let me come back in. I didn't want them to blame my act on me." He last appeared in November of 1970 at the ACC but not for TV. Hope admitted that his material has changed with the times for the most part. "The headlines are always funny, like we're talking about Secretariat now being the Truman Capitol of the race horses. And whenever a subject comes up, you get great things about it, you know. And I said on coming here I knew I was near Notre Dame because of the long line of people on their knees praying but I turned out to be an Exxon station."

But as for the rest of his jokes playing well, even his bombs Monday night were resurrected by saving ad-lite. Goulet two songs from his night number and performed a quick one-on-one skit with Hope before he jumped from the stage as an exit to the applause and immediately left to return to Las Vegas. His deep voice carried over Brown's accomplishment without drowning it out.

What followed was a fifteen minute break after which Hope as a priest and Juliet Prowse as a nun performed a skit standing in line for tickets to the Hope Show and another wait as Hope wished to re-do part of their song. Prowse having departed to fix her habit. The skit was funny, though, as was that with Ara but that with Pride spooling Euliss Gibbons flopped.

Pride performed a total of four songs assisted by four members of the Grand Old Opry. It was easy to see why Pride took the American Music Awards special award as the best country-western singer. A local singer named Tony Christie, Frank Pomarico, and Miss Indiana each appeared to help fill in the time.Obviously the best skit was with Ara. Ara only rehearsed with Hope and Reynolds Monday afternoon but he did not blow a line. In it he recreated Goober Finnigan (Hope). Most of the time was spent looking at the audience, especially those concerning the name's pronunciation. Incidentally, the two girls in the skit are both from St. Mary's. At any rate, you miss that show, a one hour edited version will air on 16 this Friday at seven-thirty.

John Denver and friends in a rare performance

_by rich donovan_

Rock stars seldom do benefits. But this Monday night four of them and their time and even paying their own expenses to raise money for a most worthy cause. John Denver and his album holds the number three spot in the Billboard Hot 100 this week, will be taking a day off from his cross-country tour to headline the Prison Reform Benefit concert in the Convocation Center. Also headlining will be the Nitty Gritty Dirt Band, who last week dreed at The Cellar Door in Washington, D.C. Chicagoan Steve Goodman readily agreed to perform on the bill when contacted by the show's organizer. More than the music of Denver and Goodman will appear Friday in this page. Rounding out the attractions will be Bill "Oliver" Swfford.

The man who put it all together is George Mische, the Executive Director of the National Coordination Committee for Justice Under Law (NCUL). The NCUL is seeking to initiate programs for prison reform in this country through informed legislation. In particular, they have sponsored an "Alternative" to Prison program whose main goals include training and re-educating. The Proceeds from the concert will go to help fund this program. Both the Student Union and ACC programs for Nashville are supporting the effort and lending their musical talent.

The concert itself is being carefully planned to allow ample time for each artist. John Denver, Mike Stoller, highlight of the event, will be the final band on the bill. The entire band will feature the combined talents of all the musicians in a semi-planned jam session. Provision may be made for some sort of audience participation at that point. Nothing like this has ever been done at Notre Dame, so the impact could be incredible.

One of the headlines will be the Nitty Gritty Dirt Band, which has been around for more than ten years. Their first hit was "Mr. Bojangles," probably the best version of the Jerry Jeff Walker song ever recorded. Since then they've gone through various personnel changes, but produced consistently high quality music. Their latest album was a three record set called "Will the Circle Be Unbroken." It featured some of the finest country musicians in Nashville and is regarded as a classic work.

They are currently working on a new album to be released early in the summer. The Dirt Band in concert is a joy to behold. Their performance centers around skilled fiddle, banjo, and guitar work augmented by a standard rock rhythm section. The music is country-rock at its tightest. Anyone who has seen the group would probably return without hesitation. The fact that they are just part of this Prison Reform Benefit makes it all the more attractive.

Opening the show on Monday will be Bill Swfford, formerly known as Oliver. Swfford became famous with "Good Morning Starshine" and "Jean," but has changed his billing to go along with his more progressive style. Playing concerts and major night clubs around the country, his basic instrumentation of Fred Rivera on bass and Chris Brooks on lead guitar and pedal steel, plus a "second rhythm," has drawn standing-room only crowds. Swfford writes much of his material now, and has recorded an album which will be released in the near future. Those who expect to hear the sweet style they remember from the Ed Sullivan Show will be disappointed. Those who expect a solid, progressive set will be more than pleased.

Tickets are still available at ACC and Student Union Ticket Offices.

(Editors' Note: part of this preview will feature John Denver and Steve Goodman.)
New coffeehouse opens near ND

by Tom Russe
Staff Reporter

A coffeehouse called "Emma's" recently opened on the 800 block of Howard Street in South Bend. Situated directly opposite the parking lot presented "The Library" package store, its storefront facade belies its cozy interior.

"Presently," commented Joe Schlosser, founder and manager, "we are open Friday and Saturday nights with live folk and classical music. Sunday is reserved for 'reading night,' either poetry or whatever happens to come up."

Hours are from 8 PM to "about 1 AM or so, depending on how many people we have here. We hope to open for one other weekend night in the near future, and eventually seven nights a week," said Schlosser.

There is no cover charge, but a donation of 25 cents is requested for each drink. The house serves hot chocolate, coffee, and several arousal drinks. The house serves "Emma's" - a commercial brand. No alcoholic beverages or drugs of any kind are allowed on the premises.

The manager, a 1973 Notre Dame graduate who presently works part time in South Bend, said he started organizing the coffeehouse last November in order to "fulfill a need which I felt was missing. I thought the community needed a cultural place, a place for people to get together, to listen to music, to perform, to be stimulated. It's a new alternative to the bar scene. It's always been a sort of dream of mine to open a place like this in South Bend. And since I used to work at the old St. Mary's Coffeehouse, when it was located under McLaughlin's, I've had some inexperience in running a coffeehouse."

Despite "Emma's" close proximity to Notre Dame, it's clientele is not exclusively University students. "We get a lot of people in here who are residents of South Bend, people who work here or who've just hung around since they've graduated. There's also a number of students from IUSB. Although we've had some high school students, it seems that most of the crowd is older. We're not trying to solicit anyone's business in particular; this is just the way things have turned out."

Schlosser explained the name "Emma Goldwin was an anarchist of limited fame at the turn of the century, and she's sort of a favorite of mine in history. Secondly, the name is an attempt to get away from the purely masculine names of the neighboring taverns; Louise's, Nickie's, etc."

"I would like to emphasize," continued Schlosser, "that what we're trying to do is fulfill a need. I am not in this business to make a profit, but to provide a service to people in the community and to students who live off-campus. I feel there are many services of this type which need to be done, such as an off-campus food co-op."

The idea of service is evident at the coffeehouse. The core group of about ten people who man the kitchen and run the place are all volunteers, as are the musicians who play there. This coffeehouse is presently the only one of its kind in South Bend, although it follows a tradition of coffeehouses which existed for some years, such as the "Salty Dog" and the basement of "Frankie's" (now "The Library").

Observer Insight

"Emma's" is reserved for "presently," said he started organizing the coffeehouse last November in order to "fulfill a need which I felt was missing. I thought the community needed a cultural place, a place for people to get together, to listen to music, to perform, to be stimulated. It's a new alternative to the bar scene. It's always been a sort of dream of mine to open a place like this in South Bend. And since I used to work at the old St. Mary's Coffeehouse, when it was located under McLaughlin's, I've had some experience in running a coffeehouse."

CARE is an organization that responds to the needs of needy people in Latin America, Africa, and Asia. Its programs deal with emergency situations, such as the drought areas of Niger and the flood areas of Pakistan.

CARE's main objectives are to:
1) supply food to people, with especially children and pregnant and nursing mothers to prevent irreversible brain damage, which would affect future generations.
2) provide much needed medical, clothing, and shelter supplies.
3) educate the people and supply them with tools which will enable them to help themselves with their own resources so that they can lead meaningful lives.

For every dollar donated almost eight dollars of services and commodities are generated to meet the needs of the people. For instance, 10c will provide a meal for 900 hungry children.

Athletic Director Edward W. Krause has announced that Howard Cosell, the nationally­ known sports telecaster, will be the featured speaker at the Notre Dame basketball banquet on Tuesday, March 19.

"We feel very fortunate in being able to get Howard Cosell for this year's banquet to honor the most successful basketball teams we've had here at the University," Krause said.

"Howard Cosell has become the most influential sportscaster in the country. His acute observations and insights make him a leader in the world of sports. The Notre Dame fans will have the opportunity to hear this winning team, commented, "At the University," Krause said.

Coaching Carroll said, "The thinking that says girls aren't quick enough to play person to person. And the offense had a good pattern."" Talking about the league in general, Mike Cameron of the Jockettes, said, "The league was much stronger this year. There were fewer forfeits, and in league structure, was much more organized."""

Mary Clemency, captain of the winning team, commented, "I've talked to some of the girls, and there is an interest in forming a club."
