New SB cabinet set

Newly elected Student Body President Pat McLaughlin announced the completion of the long-awaited list of Student Government cabinet positions yesterday afternoon. Heading the list were seven Commissioner positions: Junior Management major Bob Howl as Off-Campus Commissioner; Bill Ambrose, an Economics major, re-appointed for his second year as Ombudsman; Junior Government major Ray Gopp as Campus Life Commissioner; Junior American Studies major Brian McGinty, as Judicial Commissioner (with Junior can work well with those under them," stated McLaughlin.

When asked about the large number of SBP and SBVP candidates placed on the cabinet staff, McLaughlin said, "Everyone before the election agreed that all the candidates were good, all were talented and had a lot to offer. Just because we won doesn't mean that any of these other candidates should not be part of Student Government someday." McLaughlin indicated that each of the commissioners will have a staff under them which he would run pretty much by himself. In the cases of the Campus Life Commission and the Administrative Commission, these may be as large as 75 people each, he said.

Management major Ed Rahill assisting as Legal Adviser; Junior Psychology major Melaneice Marshall, as Human Assemblies Commissioner; Junior Finance major Jim Ambrose as Academic Commissioner; and Junior Accounting major Mike Schaus as Treasurer.

McLaughlin commented after the announcement of the Cabinet selections that the positions had been filled on the basis of who he thought could best do each job. "The commissioners appointed are people I know well, and know I can depend on to get a job done. They all are hard workers, are not afraid to ask questions or make criticisms and they want to have a clean environment, we have to pay a price." He added that the oil companies were willing to pay the price and many steps are being taken in order to protect the environment.

Continuing his presentation, Longmire next touched upon the importance of public education. He said, "We believe that a much more judicious use of our energy is essential." Backing up this statement, Longmire noted that this year heavy oil use had dropped 25 per cent from what was expected. He added the attention, however, by saying, "The real question is if we are going to find a permanent solution as the crisis continues."

Longmire closed his lecture with the statement, "We have a problem that represents a serious challenge. It requires thought, sacrifice, and most importantly, and informed electorate."[

by Fred Graver

Health Service survey to be taken this week

The University Health Services will distribute 1200 surveys among the student body this week in an effort to help the staff determine student attitudes toward the Infirmary and the extent of use of the services provided by the Infirmary. A copy of the survey was included in the Health Services Report, presented on March 27 to the Student Affairs Committee and the Board of Trustees by the staff of the Student’s Infirmary of the University.

The survey centers on student evaluations of the Infirmary, an estimate of the student’s necessary medical attention, and the type of medical attention usually sought by the student. Also included in the report was a list of services being performed and developed in the Infirmary. These services are: a) treatment of persons with minor complaints or injuries, if they are eligible; b) providing referrals to other physicians, including specialists; c) study of incidences, prevalence and severity of certain types of illness; d) training of an adequate preventive medical program.

Eight improvements in the Infirmary during the current school year were cited in the report. Among them are the addition of a part-time physician, Dr. Robert Thompson, the establishment of regular staff meetings, and a new system of purchasing all food from the Notre Dame commissary.

Plans for the near future cited in the report center around the relocation of the clinic rooms. This will be done, without an outlay of money, for two reasons: 1) the need for confidentiality, and 2) the improvement of the Infirmary by the construction of a special area for patients needing allergy shots.

A copy of the Health Information letter given to students and staff members was part of the report. This contained a short description of the Infirmary and its aims, a summary of the process which each student encounters when visiting the Infirmary, a list of emergency procedures, and information on charges and insurance practices.

A special portion of the report, dealing with current priorities and objectives of the Infirmary, was prepared by the Hospital Administration, Sister Miriam Dolores, CSC. This section of the report raises three questions about the future of the Infirmary:

1) How important is the Infirmary to the University life?
2) How effective is the service or facilities to the health of the student body?
3) How does it relate to any other enterprises on the campus?

In answering these questions, Sr. Miriam Dolores considered the attitudes toward the Infirmary by the administration, staff, and student body. She noted that the services offered by the Infirmary, the cost of providing the services, and the evaluation of the Infirmary by the College Health Association, in which Notre Dame previously held membership, are the key issues.

"The academic community presents a unique environment. The health needs of this community can best be met by a comprehensive program in which health professionals from all of the major disciplines work together in a team setting."

A letter from the mother of a student treated in the Infirmary last year was attached to the report. She extended her thanks to all of the staff at the Infirmary for their prompt and effective treatment of her son. In reference to this letter, the final paragraph of the report reads:

"The Infirmary is a Student Health Service. Being of service to someone in need must be pleasing to God as it is so pleasing to Christ. The letter speaks for itself. If the staff of the Infirmary has been able to save but one life, the tribulation is worth-while."
Wednesday and Thursday

Wake ticket sale to be held

A second batch of Irish Wake tickets will go on sale Wednesday, April 3 and Thursday, April 4 between 5:00 and 6:30 pm in the North, South and SMC dining halls. The price for the function is set at $4.

Wake officials announced that there will be a "special" for off-campus students only. On Wednesday, April 3 between 2:00 and 1:00 pm there will be a limited amount of tickets available for off-campus students.

Each student must present an ND or an SMC I.D. at the time of purchase and there will be a limit of one ticket per person.

Wally Gasior, An Tostail Coor­di­na­tor, announced that Kevin O'Neill's oldies will be the second set during the breaks between the rock sounds of Windjammer. Gasior also apologized for the limited amount of tickets for the Wake and explained saying, "This is the only way we could get the Wake approved."

Commenting on the successes of the Wake, Gasior said, "We are pleased that the student's expec­ta­tions are running high for the Wake and we are working hard to make it a success." Gasior then added, "We hope all of the students will enjoy themselves."

If the Wake's 400 tickets are sold out on Wednesday, there will be no sales on Thursday. Gasior also emphasized that there will be no ticket sales at the door and only male-female couples will be allowed to enter.

Don Nixon to testify in case

NEW YORK (UPI) — Presi­dent Nixon's brother F. Donald Nixon Sr. will testify in the Mitchell-Stans trial this week—the first time a member of the Nixon family has appeared under oath in connection with any of the allegations against Nixon administration officials.

Donald Nixon was called as a prosecution witness and will appear before the government rests its conspiracy case against former cabinet mem­bers John N. Mitchell and Maurice R. Stans this week.

There's no easy way for Charlie Nelson to become Dr. Nelson.

But there is a way to make it somewhat easier. Our way, the Armed Forces Health Pro­fes­sion­als Scholarship Program. It won't soften the demands of one ticket per person...but it may free you from those financial problems which, un­under­stand­ably, can pull a crimp in your concentration.

If you qualify, our scholarship program will cover the costs of your medical education. More, you'll receive a good monthly allowance all through your schooling.

But what happens after you graduate? Then, as a health care officer in the military branch of your choice you enter a professional environment that is challenging, stimulating and satisfying.

And if you've read this far, you may be interested in the details. Just send in the coupon and we'll supply them.

Lally predicts crackdown against streakers

by Pat Flynn

Staff Reporter

"If the streaking craze continues much longer on campus, students will force myself and other administrators to take action," ventured Father Terrence Lally this week in an interview with the Observer.

Lally continued, "The students must see that some persons and communities take this type of thing quite seriously. Already we have had complaints from other students, who consider this type of behavior boorish and infantile, and who are offended by it. We have also had complaints from other persons connected with the University who are also offended by it."

"Before semester break, one streaker apparently wounded by his streak walked by a group visiting their friends, and the group was very badly offended by the action," added Lally.

Lally pointed out that Indiana laws, including those which have become effective July 1, 1973, includes indecent exposure in a public place or in any place where there are other persons offended or annoyed thereby. The guidelines on University life (Notre Dame regulations) states that any serious disturbance of the University community infringing on the rights and well being of others is strictly prohibited. "To leave streaking go on as if unnoticed is to ask us (Student Affairs) to ignore both of these laws," he argued.

Lally also indicated that other institutions have reacted very strictly against streaking. At Yale, they have placed on probation all streakers caught or identified. In Ireland, they have dealt very toughly with streakers placing them in jail.

"From the beginning all of us in this office have been uncomfortable about the whole thing. We hoped that it would just be a temporary college prank and would blow away as quickly as it began. But now it seems to have become more extensive," Lally reflected.

"I think that as this phenomenon of streaking continues, and becomes more widespread at colleges all over, we are forced as a community to take a look at it," he continued from a more ethical standpoint. "Is it just a fun event or is it a kind of 'monkey see monkey do' thing in which social pressure is exerted on certain students to continue this type of behavior?"

Lally concluded the interview with a lighter note: "If the students want to continue this type of 'monkey see monkey do' behavior into September, I hope they have bodies good enough to stand the test."

If it does continue until then, I hope the guys move some weights and the girls move some of the weight around, because from what I've seen so far they don't."

CollegeMaster

Year after year, semester after semester, the CollegeMaster from Fidelity Union Life has been the most accepted, most popular plan on campuses all over America. Find out why.

Bank Your Blood

Successful blood drives have recently become a custom on the Notre Dame campus. This semester's version will premiere tomorrow and run through Friday. The students, faculty, and administration members who donate an hour or so of their time and a pint of their blood are the stars of the show. It's a benefit performance for all donors and volunteers, and the benefits are for all of us.

This semester the three day drive has three different acts. On Wednesday, donors will have the chance to help two Chicago children who suffer from hemophilia. In addition, donors will receive Red Cross blood benefits for six months.

On Thursday, the Fort Wayne Red Cross chapter will collect blood for Red Cross supplies and donors will receive blood benefits for one year. And on Friday, as on the other days, donors will be driven to the South Bend hospital blood bank, where they can contribute to the Notre Dame Fund, which provides blood for any member of the ND community who needs it.

So the script is finished, and although the plot is familiar, it is still an excellent production. This blood drive deserves the strong support of the ND-SMC community. Once again, let's make sure the reviews are favorable.

The Images of Notre Dame

Where do you go to school? Notre Dame. Oh yeah? Great place to be from!

Ain't it the truth... with Number One and Knute Rockne and Golden Dome and religion and the won star studded and many more and more. But, approaching this glorious monster one is urged to caution... the distinctive public image of Notre Dame generates a real problem. Image is the business that makes its object accessible to the public mind centered around three things (in this order): athletics, the Catholic Church, and academic excellence. How do these specific images directly affect the Notre Dame students? LESS THAN ONE WOULD THINK. The athletic teams create a nice diversion, but do they really affect Notre Dame life? Not in any deep sense. The more they do, the less it says for the quality of Notre Dame life. How fulfilling is the role of spectator? It's as common as the quality of Chicago's professional athletic teams gives any indication of what it's like to live there. Similarly, Notre Dame's Catholicity exerts no real influence over the way life is lived here. Besides the Catholic background of most students and the rectors in each hall, what does it mean that Notre Dame is Catholic? Pr. Enghour in The Wall Street Journal that deals with Notre Dame within the boundaries of the student comes to this school called Notre Dame, with its mission of moral and academic excellence. How do these images result in the natural demand to deliver the goods.

So the student comes to this school called Notre Dame, with its glamarous public image, and he finds its not so special after all because the Notre Dame image is not based in student experience, in the life that is lived here. Then an article appears like the one in The Wall Street Journal that deals with Notre Dame within the boundaries of the student comes to this school called Notre Dame, with its mission of moral and academic excellence. How do these images result in the natural demand to deliver the goods. "Here I am Golden Dome Lay it on me!" So we come here and expect Notre Dame to provide its glory and thus we sit back and wait and wait and wait.

There is an amazing undercurrent of sadness and loneliness here, but people stay on resigning to wait for what Notre Dame will give them. It won't happen. If you want a change in the student come to this school called Notre Dame, with its mission of moral and academic excellence. It's not going to happen. If you want a change in the student come to this school called Notre Dame, with its mission of moral and academic excellence. It's not going to happen.

It can change. If the students who live here and know what it's really like get the message out to future Domers that Notre Dame doesn't give you anything, that you have to make it good for yourself, then it will begin to change. That special image the public harbors will leave you colder than the South Bend winters. Anything you get will take effort. There's a tremendous opportunity to make this place Golden yet, but it hasn't been tried. Tell them that.

Then maybe "The Image Gap" won't have such a devastating effect. Then maybe Notre Dame won't be flooded by the image seduced, the ones with great expectations, who later drown with the sucking of the sucking of the sucking of the sucking of the sucking of... someday may the rains fall gently upon you or your grave and the winds carry you to other places.
If you have been attending the Sewell seminar, you have come to know the warm, humorous personality and delight in literature deeply characterizes her lectures.

Elizabeth Sewell explored "Magic as Poetic Mode" throughout her seminar. She commented, "The central powers are not the unconscious forces of your imagination." Sewell believes people must free themselves from their own Twentieth century universe and start constructing a position in the universe. She believes that with this imagination one can become more fully aware of his relation to and position in the universe.

Elizabeth Sewell investigates the nature of the cosmos in her own poetry. She is like a scientist. Both the poet and the scientist make their discoveries through leaps and bounds. Sewell states: "The life of thinking isn't separate from the life of action."

Sewell's poems take a look at the universe within and the universe without. They strive to see more of the whole of the universe. Her poem, "The Transformations of Love," shows us the unity of man and the universe and the harmony of that union. "Till at your kiss only the cosmos hung And the spiritual moon out of his place Making such consort That the elements cry out in new alignment Resolved up vertical chords Root modulations"

Editor's Note: This is the second in a series of three conversations among members of the Community Ministry Study Group. The subject was sexuality at Notre Dame. The questions were taped and recorded with the tape-recorded session followed. Taking part in the discussion were: Fr. William Toohey, Robert Griffin, Thomas McNally, and Theresa Pitz. McTaggart and St. Jane Pitz.

Griffiths: When you start talking about human sexuality and Notre Dame it always sounds like you are talking about the rules which the University has in this whole area. You find yourself defending the rules, or expected to do so. But that isn't the point. If there is some reason for the rules, then we should be able to read them from sort of some official point of view but because we are people who are concerned with the life of the students who are in our care.

Toohey: Griffith, that reminds me of something you said the other day. It was to the effect that standards of conduct in the area of human sexuality are not given by God arbitrarily because he simply wants to give us commands.

Griffiths: Yes, we have a nifty stereotype of God and just handed him down the Ten Commandments on plates. I suspect that the Commandments represent the will of human society. We are talking about human experience. So, for example, people who are questioning the area of human sexuality will ask, "Is that a sin?" or "Is that a sin?" as though it would be all right to do it if you were talking on a microphone. Well, these things are self-destructive. I see them as a source of conflict and tension. It is a possible source of the relationship is non-existent. Griffiths: I'd like to think that the sexual problem is not so great as the contextual problem—the context of freedom and relationship surrounding the sexual acts themselves. To me, the loneliness that exists between students is the issue on campus. So that the conversation in the dorms can well center around premarital intercourse and escape the fundamental issue which is much more delicate to talk about—a man's relationship with his male friends on campus and with girls, or a woman's relationship with other women and men.

Toohey: I think students want relationships to be genuine and honest, not phony. On the other hand, they don't want this because it hurts to be real to another person, to open up. I think that this is really the only principle that appeals to students. I think that what I'm doing from the most casual perspective the closest to the deepest contact is consistent with the reality of my relationship with the other person.

McTaggart: Yes, that's the issue. What you're talking about is the main thing that is going to exist when one leaves here regardless of what oppressive or unoppressive situation exits at the University.

MeVally: I reject to the use of the word oppressive though I realize you are not saying that the rules in this area are necessarily oppressive. I guess I agree with what all of you have been saying. On the other hand, I don't think there is anything wrong with setting limits. And these limits need not be oppressive though the students may consider them such. Recently I saw a statement on human sexuality which was good in some ways but yet seemed so blunted that any kind of norms just went out the window. Anyone could justify practically anything.

Pitz: This sounds like we're setting up a theory, or philosophy or theology and then questioning ourselves whether this is enough for students or whether we have to go out of the closet at the same time because we're "covered" if we don't agree with our philosophy or theology. That's what is happening right now. We are saying that it's a matter of considering how you relate to other people and how God fits into your life. And then we say, "All right, fine but that leaves such a wide field that it doesn't really say anything. So we set up norms." Which is important, and have their place when we are Griffith said, we need the forms to affect the external order of things.

Griffith: Insofar as this thing can be regulated by rules, it is only the externals that can be regulated. Hopefully, there is a moral climate that can be set up in the dormitory. So if you have a sexual athlete and he's acting contrary to that moral climate, you can say to him: "I'd just as soon not have you living here if this is the way you choose to live. People who are living here are trying to grow up without getting themselves involved in destructive things. So it might be better if you went to a private school." The student should then be able to talk to others about you because of the moral choices he is making.

Toohey: I agree that we don't have to apologize for norms. But we have to talk about it. I think that everyone can appreciate the tremendous range of opinion that exists on the spectrum in anonymous sex where the girl becomes a sex object. In this case sex is simply a form of recreation.

Cheaper than bowling if you get someone who is willing. On the other end of the spectrum is a couple whose relationship is growing, who may be quite close to marriage. By sleeping together they're saying "We're two in one flesh, we're united." But they're not and so what they are doing is not consistent with the reality of their relationship. But it's still more less culpable. or good, well, speaking, from the pick-up kind of thing where the relationship is non-existent.

Stella: I heard a husband and father of seven children say once that he didn't know how to love a book. But I think that everyone can love a book, too. But one thing I do know is that the Church has been communicating is that sex is a "dirty thing" and that's a fact. And that's where we have to be careful.

Sewell: I want to say that the Observers can talk to the University we have to communicate that they are being put there not because sex is a bad thing but because it is so beautiful that it can easily be abused.

Radiance A dutch thunder Light from beneath the sea

We hear it not, beloved: we are that music.

In "Cosmos and Kingdom" we again find the relation of man and the universe and man's attempt to understand that relation.

"Put it this way: there are men on a venture."

"After? one could say they are after cosmos and kingdom."

Where? where else but the living vaults of mind and body?"

Elizabeth Sewell was born in India, moved to Prague, known for B.A., M.A., and Ph.D. degrees from Cambridge University, then moved to America in 1949. Since then she has spent a great deal of time commuting back and forth from England. She says, "When I was living in England I would miss America deeply but when I was in America I didn't miss London, but England. I'm really so English—I just carry it around with me." She became an American citizen this year.

Elizabeth Sewell has published four critical works on philosophy and poetry. She is currently working on a third volume of poetry. She and her husband plan to try her hand at plays. As far as more novels go, Sewell says, "I don't want to work on any more. I find my own life exciting enough."
Students eligible for Food Stamp Program

by Dan Baker

The Food Stamp Program enables low-income households to buy food commodities at full retail prices. Eligible students can quality for this program to complete an application and net monthly income, and same procedure as any other Food Stamp applicant. He should contact the local office in the City-Country Building in South Bend to complete an application form and be interviewed. He should have all the necessary documents stating the household size, and number of household members and income details.

To be eligible, a household, consisting of persons living as one economic unit, must cook their meals in their own homes. To qualify for benefits, home, car, life insurance policies, and income from all sources is required from the parents of any household member. The Food Stamp office is always open for interview, and is required for any particular community; thus a student getting stamps would not be denying the poorer people of South Bend from acquiring the food subsidy benefits.

Do the people who need food stamps know about the program? Actually there is no way of finding out. Caseworkers investigate the stamp recipients, but there is no agency to inform people about the program. Caseworker Randy Rider elaborated, "The people involved in the system, the welfare recipients, they are pretty much aware of it, in fact, they know about as much as we do as to what they can and can't do. I imagine there are a lot of borderline people that would be eligible and do not know about it." The job as caseworker is not easy. Rider has been working at his job since last summer. South Bend has one of the worst unemployment rates in the country, and so the Food Stamp office is always busy. A recent AM General strike aggravated the already crowded conditions in the office. Caseworkers have been physically threatened as well. One time, Rider recalled a man came into the office with a gun. Then asked what you do if this situation like that, he said "You shake!"

Many students at Notre Dame are eligible for Food Stamps. It is merely up to them to learn the qualifications, get the required papers together, and register downtown to enjoy the benefits of the food stamp program.

papers showing where he lives, how many are in the household; how much income they have; and how much they are paying in expenses. Important papers include bank statements, school bills, and lease contracts. The student ID card is necessary to prove that the student has no meal validation at the university dining hall. Food Stamps are received through the mail on a monthly basis. An approved applicant maintains his requirement payment. Thus the monthly payment can prevent waiting in line again at the Food Stamp office.

The monthly cooperation and purchase requirement varies, but a household of one would get up to $24 worth of food stamps. The student must follow the same procedure as any other Food Stamp applicant. He should contact the local office in the City-Country Building in South Bend to complete an application form and be interviewed. He should have all the necessary documents stating the household size, and number of household members and income details.

Mini-course announced

The second sequence of the mini-course program has been announced for tonight. Entitled "Auto-Mechanics," the five-part course will cover all aspects of care and maintenance of an automobile.

Sponsored by the Arts and Letters Student Advisory Council, the mini-course concept was originated by a group of students. At that time it was felt that students desired more flexibility and opportunity in acquiring practical knowledge. Thus the non-credit mini-course was formed. Guy Randles, President of the Student Advisory Council stated that "last year's Auto-Mechanics course was good and I expect the same amount of support this year."
Over 100 quintets expected to enter An Tostal B-Tall Tourney

by Bob Quasnkenbush

Only two days remain in which to register for the upcoming Bookstore Basketball Tournament. Thus far, 18 teams have "accepted tourny bids" but Voince Meconi, tournament coordinator, says "By mid-Tuesday we should have well over 100 quintets entered and raring to go after the championship."

All four of last year's semifinalists (Cardinal Five, Marksmen, Badin Exiles, and the defending champions, the 31 Club) plan to take to the court again this year, according to Meconi. "Both City Bands and the Marksmen are entered for the third year in a row—and that's as long as the tournament has been around," reports Meconi. "But the thing to note," he continued, "is that in both of the past two years these two teams were defeated only by the eventual champions."

To register, call Meconi at 3476 before midnight Tuesday.

Meconi reminds entrants that representatives of each team must pick up schedule and rules sheets at his room, 144 Morrissey, on Wednesday and Thursday after 6 p.m.

"No schedules will be given out over the phone, but you will be emphasized. Although the tourny starts this Friday, April 5, Meconi insists he is planning far ahead for the finals in April 19.

"I've been dickering with Dick Eshberg and Hot Rod Hinesley of WTV about a possible regional TV hook-up for the title game," he declared, "but things are up in the air.

Last year, WSNB carried exclusive radio coverage of the event.

Sign-up books stolen from SMC in protest of policy

According to the student on desk duty, who asked to remain anonymous, the three approached the main desk at about 3:15, asked to use the telephone, and were directed to the public phone in the lobby. The girl then return to watching television until she heard the sound of "books slamming," and looked up in time to see the three take off in a car and the sign-out books missing.

"I didn't see them take the books because I had my back turned to the counter. Then I heard the noise and ran over to the desk, but they were gone, out of a car. They left a bag with a note on it saying 'This is not an April Fool's joke' and that it was a protest of the S.M.C. policy.

The note identified the trio as members of the "Order of the Orr" and warned that it would not be the last of such incidents. It stated in effect that they were "tired of S.M.C. students being treated as automatons." The bag contained the book De Oi by Jerry Rubin. Security was not contacted until about an hour and a half later. The other halls were warned to keep an eye on their sign-out books and remove them to the office.

Holy Cross Hall Director Mary Fran Burt declined to comment on the theft; "until I can piece some more facts together," she was in her room adjoining the office when the theft was discovered.

Security likewise refused to release any information. The identity of the students is not known but it is believed they were Notre Dame students.

The series entitled "The University of Notre Dame's Pre-historical Field School excavations in Marshall County, Indiana," will be presented by Professor James Bellis of the Department of Sociology and Anthropology, Wednesday, 8:00 pm in rm 110, O'Shaugnessy. The slide-lecture presentation will give students an opportunity to view the results of two years of field excavation in Northern Indiana (specifically the Rouch Site) and to register for this year's six week session.

The course is offered for six credit hours and instructs students in the following areas: excavation techniques, field record and note-taking, washing, cataloguing and basic sorting and analysis of artifacts recovered, the use of survey and mapping instruments, and photographic techniques in the field, laboratory, and in the darkroom.

The slide-lecture presentation will give students an opportunity to view the results of two years of field excavation in Northern Indiana (specifically the Rouch Site) and to register for this year's six week session.

The course is offered for six credit hours and instructs students in the following areas: excavation techniques, field record and note-taking, washing, cataloguing and basic sorting and analysis of artifacts recovered, the use of survey and mapping instruments, and photographic techniques in the field, laboratory, and in the darkroom.

In 1973 the course was funded by an anonymous, the three approached the main desk at about 9:15, asked to remain anonymous, the three approached the main desk at about 3:15, asked to use the telephone, and were directed to the public phone in the lobby. The girl then return to watching television until she heard the sound of "books slamming," and looked up in time to see the three take off in a car and the sign-out books missing. Security was not contacted until about an hour and a half later. The other halls were warned to keep an eye on their sign-out books and remove them to the offices.

Holy Cross Hall Director Mary Fran Burt declined to comment on the theft; "until I can piece some more facts together," she was in her room adjoining the office when the theft was discovered.

Security likewise refused to release any information. The identity of the students is not known but it is believed they were Notre Dame students.

Over 100 quintets expected to enter An Tostal B-Tall Tourney

Rick Slager—doing double duty on courts, gridiron

by John Finnern

Rick Slager proved no different than other athletes at Notre Dame when he entered as a freshman. He had been cool with decisions to make. Currently, ranks as the number-one saberman Sam Difiglio, also fared especially if you are a tournament like veterans.

"I was somewhat disappointed that we didn't finish higher than we did, but the kids really did a great job. Although inexperienced, they really took the pressure of tournament competition like veterans. This should really make us stronger next year."

"But, of course, once spring practice starts, I don't get to practice tennis as much. Tennis is a thinking game and one of timing. Those things come only in practice. The year, I will be able to only practice on Tuesdays, Thursdays and Saturdays.

"Of course, I miss a lot of away games and one start after practice. But last season, my tennis season ended quickly when I separated my shoulder. But the bubble burst, as they say, with only six matches remaining in the afternoon scrimmage. "I got topped by Kevin Redoubt fell on me," remembers. "It was six weeks before I began to throw again, and I didn't play tennis to the end of June."

"I wasn't fatigued from the tennis matches earlier in the day," continues "On the contrary, tennis helped to loosen me up."

Either way, football and tennis momentarily came to an end for Slager. When he returned last fall to start football practice, although it didn't hinder him, the shoulder certainly did have an effect on Slager's play. "I usually play in a couple of tournaments during the summer," Rick says. "But last summer, I decided to stay at school, and I am glad, for one thing, I did. It helped me in school."

"However, I couldn't find anyone to play with, and this hurt my tennis. I came back too heavy in the fall—close to 200 pounds—and I normally play around 180."

Slager, therefore, saw most of his football action with the Junior varsity, although his statistics weren't quite as impressive as those during his freshman season. Good things have a tendency to follow him.

"So far this season, Slager is 4-1, but the squad is 7-4. The number-one position is the toughest one for any player, but Rick was competitive, if not superb and a little bit unlucky in California."

"The only match I lost badly in California was against Southern California," he reflects. "But the UCLA match the previous day really drained me."

"And I am happy I came. The greatest moment for me here was the Sugar Bowl locker room. I wish everyone could have been Parseghian can control that."

"I didn't think about Notre Dame or football except for that one point. There was something special about last year's team. "It can be the same this year," he finishes. "We have everything it takes and more experience. The only thing to hold us back this year is attitude, and I think Coach Parseghian can control that."

"Rick Slager might not yet be a winner on the tennis court, and he might not be the first-string quarterback. But with his winning attitude, Notre Dame's two sports can only benefit. It is just a matter of time, and in this case is where Rick Slager finds it."

Fellows named All-American

by Joe Wilkowski

Fresenian special Ed Fellows became the first Irish fencing All-American since 1971 when he was named to the All-American team at the Nationals held this weekend in Cleveland. His fifth-place finish in the individual tournament helped the Irish finish 11th in the nation.

Fellows, a native of Oakland, N.J., ended up with a 16-7 record in the round-robin tournament, good enough for a tie for fourth place, but he lost a total of points he ended up fifth. He had a poor start on the first day, losing all his matches and a record against the bottom half of his pool, but he put it all together Saturday when he posted a 5-0 record in the championship round. "I am happy I came. The takes and things come only in practice."
