ND cuts workers while Teamsters petition

by Mike Ridenour

Notre Dame plans to permanently lay off 21 groundskeepers effective Nov. 1. The action comes while the groundskeepers are in the process of seeking unionization by Teamsters Local 364.

The University revealed its plans in a letter filed this past week with the National Labor Relations Board (NLRB). A hearing had been set for this Wednesday by the NLRB concerning a petition by the Teamsters for a representation election (no election for the employees so as to determine if they wanted to be represented by a labor union).

However, a Notre Dame petition asked that the Teamsters' petition be dropped. The reasoning was that after Nov. 1, there would be no employees for the Teamsters to represent.

A Notre Dame official, who asked to remain anonymous, said there was no connection between the layoffs and the groundskeepers' attempt to unionize. "The University has had this in process for months," the official said.

"All along the University figured on making the switch to an outside firm that could do the work with automation," the source explained. "The outside firm," he said, "could do the work a hell of a lot more efficiently."

Mike Lawrence, assistant business representative of Teamsters Union Local 364, disputes the fact that an outside firm was contracted.

"It could be a decoy, since by the time we file an unfair labor practice charge plus the long process that would take, the groundskeepers would be gone because of the Nov. 1 date," he asserted.

Cromwell Management Corp. would be the firm contracted to do the groundskeeping work, according to the petition filed by Notre Dame. "That's news to me," said a surprised Christopher Murphy, president of Cromwell Management Corp. "I've got to believe that's a mistake," Murphy continued, "we have submitted a bid but there is no number of companies who bid on it."

If Cromwell receives the contract, Murphy said there was a chance some of the laid off workers would be hired. But, "I don't know the people, and we might not have to hire right away."

Lawrence commented, "I don't know of any other university which would do a shoddy thing like this. It's hypocritical for a Catholic institution such as Notre Dame to, in principle, support rights of workers to organize, but refuse that right to their own employees."

Lawrence referred to a recent meeting of U.S. Catholic bishops on Sept. 15th. "They (the bishops) affirmed that in keeping with longtime Church teachings supporting labor rights, Church employees are entitled to organize and bargain collectively."

Although acknowledging the workers rights to organize, Tom Bull, director of Personnel, responded, "We'd like to think that we do a hell of a good place of work and that union presence isn't necessary."

The meeting with Bull was scheduled for Sept. 2, but "was delayed for some reason or another to Sept. 15," Lawrence said.

The University refused to recognize the Teamsters' petition. The Teamsters Local notified the NLRB and they set up a hearing for Oct. 12 in South Bend.

On Oct. 5, a Dismissal of Petition filed by a Chicago law firm representing Notre Dame, Seyfarth, Shaw, Fairweather & Geraldson, was sent to the Teamsters Local 364. It said "effective November 1, all groundskeeping functions performed by the groundskeepers presently employed by the Employer (Notre Dame) will be contracted out to Cromwell Management Corp."

The petition continued that "based on its decision to contract all groundskeeping functions, no where the Board had made resumption of groundskeeping operations by its own employees in the near or foreseeable future."

The Oct. 12 hearing has not been cancelled. The representation election will be held at the hearing and arguments will be heard concerning the layoffs and the unionization attempt. The meeting will be held in the County Building at 10 a.m. and is open to the public.

Commissioners 'happy' with final SU budget

by Jack Pizzolato

Student Union (SU) Commissioners are "happy" with the final version of the SU budget, according to SU Director Tom Grup, despite an overall cut of a more than $6,900. The new budget, which totals $59,972, represents an increase of approximately 15 percent above last year's budget.

The Student Union originally submitted a request for $66,972 to the student government's Board of Commissioners. The Board, which held its annual budget hearings last week, chopped that figure by $6,952. Grup said that the cuts would not hamper Student Union operations, observing that the final budget was "close to what we wanted." The Commissioners also wrote out a set of recommendations for the Student Union which they have not yet released.

American women breaking molds

by Jake Morrissey
Staff Reporter

After centuries of being economically, American women are slowly breaking out the molds and standing on their own. In a lecture entitled "The Future of Housewives," last Friday, University of Maryland economist Barbara Bergmann outlined her "hopes and views" on the economic status of women.

"The most offensive part of my day," she told a group of about 30 faculty members and students, "is when I'm driving to work and I see black women getting off of the bus and going into the suburban homes of their employers." "I'm against people being assigned roles according to their race and sex," she declared.

In her fifty-minute discussion, Bergmann cited four categories which she believes describes American economic family life. "There is the lady of leisure, the hotel model," and two others she subdivided into the "paternal model, the egalitarian model the Swedish model and the Russian model." Bergmann told the audience that "the lady of leisure is a wife who does no paid work, and is married to a rich man who can afford lots of servants."

The hotel model, conversely, is a situation "where everyone does the economic equivalent of a hotel," by eating in restaurants, sending laundry out to be cleaned and housekeeping services. "I have to tell you that that's the model I'm living and it's great," she joked.

The patriarchal model, Bergmann continued, is a family whose life is organized around the husband, "as boss or head of the family." The egalitarian model, where a young bride expects joining decision-making and her contributions to the family are worth something, is desirable, she noted, but cautioned that this frequently does not occur and slips into the patriarchal model.

Leaving child care and housework to both husband and wife was classified by Bergmann as "the Swedish model." "When a child is born in Sweden, both the man and woman are allowed leave from their jobs," she said. The Russian model has a high orientation toward jobs, but "men do little or no housework—it's a dog's life."

Bergmann concluded her remarks by forecasting that "in the future, more and more women from all economic classes will move into the hotel model."

The Maryland economist was brought to the University through the Economics department.

Cheating causes abolition of honor codes

by Kevin Walsh
Senior Staff Reporter

Excessive amounts of cheating and plagiarism by students in American universities has led to the abolishment of many academic honor codes.

"Everyone has given up on the bedrock principle of an honor code that students take their own responsibility to not cheat," according to a University of Delaware (Greenville) official.

Robert Waldman, Dean of the College of Science, states that cheating and plagiarism are a result of students being unable to obtain high grades and gain acceptance to graduate school.

Dr. Richard Kessee, associate dean of Northwestern University's medical school, agrees with Waldman's belief that "cheating is engendered in a system where people are competing at work, but receive no reward."

Honor codes, which schools established to prevent academic dishonesty, have faltered. In 1964, the Notre Dame Honor Code went into effect after it was approved by a student referendum.

The code was based on an honor concept, which stated, "As a Notre Dame student, I pledge honesty in all my academic work and will not tolerate dishonesty in my fellow students." A student was in violation of the honor code if the student submitted academic work that was not the result of his own honest thought and effort.

However, this honor system, based on student self-reporting and self-monitoring, was disbanded in 1969 when it was realized that the code was unlikely to have any effect as a license for cheating and plagiarism.

A letter to the Notre Dame community, the 40 member council stated that students were no longer committed to academic honesty and didn't consider the honesty of others to be their concern. "We no longer want the burden of enforcing a concept which is ignored by the student body," the council said.

Similarly, Johns Hopkins University abolished their honor code in 1979, and the honor code has been under serious question at West Point, where later that same year 130 cadets were implicated in a cheating scandal.

In the Notre Dame honor committee, Notre Dame has placed the responsibility of ensuring academic honesty with each department. This, according to Assistant Professor of English, has resulted in some confusion, for professors have directed their power differently.

Dr. Daugherty said that cheating is not common in the English Department's courses, for most of their tests are essay in form rather than short answer. Daugherty, however, did cite plagiarism as a concern of the department.

"Plagiarism takes several forms. Verbatim copying of a passage without proper footnotes is the most obvious method. Daugherty states that students who do this take a big risk, for professors read a great deal, thus having familiarity with most sources that a student could use.

Ideas derived from a source which a student paraphrases but does not give credit for is also plagiarism. Daugherty, though, remarked, 'I won't go after a student unless such a form of plagiarism appears to be deliberate. Normally this is just a slip and is dealt with, as with a teaching problem.'

Less obvious forms of plagiarism are those, Daugherty said, that have taken from notes in another class and any type of use of a paper done previously for another professor. "Professors may have actually helped write the papers," said Daugherty. "Professors may have provided helpful background in class notes or constructive criticism on grades.

One has committed plagiarism if these aids are not acknowledged in footnotes. Daugherty did admit that there is a fine line between what is legal and illegal. I do not want the burden of enforcing and the budgets of the intelligence. "The letter marks the beginning of the Campaign's national effort to stop the danger of unregulated CIA activity. In a meeting with the Ombudsman and disclosing CIA presence, members of the campaign are calling on campus members to consider issues of the American intelligence community.

"This university will probably follow Harvard's example and adopt formal guidelines governing university policy toward CIA work on college campuses. This work is being done through regular university channels and will be further stated. The Faculty Senate at the University has also asked to initiate action to establish such guidelines. Student governments have also been alerted and encouraged to lobby in support of stricter CIA controls.

Notre Dame Student Body President Dave Bender states I am definitely in favor of the University drawing up such guidelines. It is very important for the university to make clear its position.

A Notre Dame student who collapsed in his dormitory on Oct. 1 was diagnosed by St. Joseph Hospital physicians as having "probable viral encephalitis," although informed sources were quick to report that the diagnosis was "by no means definite.

"By no means definite," Dr. Ryan Matherly, resident physician at St. Joseph's Hospital, reported the admission of the student at the hospital's intensive care unit. "He was drowsy and quite out of it," said Dr. Matherly. "We didn't know what was wrong."

The student was given a spinal tap which "showed an increase in the number of white blood cells in the spinal fluid," according to Matherly. "Since there was a possibility of viral encephalitis, we had to report it," he said.

Matherly cited various reasons for the elevated white blood cell count. "It could be a number of things. Only one third of these cases are diagnosable," he said. "One type is encephalitis.

Referring to his patient, the doctor stated, "He really didn't have any symptoms of viral encephalitis, except for the drowsiness and weakness."

Viral encephalitis might result in death. "Those are the cases you usually hear about," the doctor said. "If he had viral encephalitis, we'd be able to see it on them," the doctor said.

Matherly assured that viral encephalitis, a disease which is transmitted to humans by infected mosquitoes, is "definitely not contagious" and that there is "no worry for an outbreak."

Affirming Matherly's statements was Dr. George Craig, professor of biology at Notre Dame and the director of the department's Vector Biological Laboratory. "I am in daily contact with a representative of the St. Joseph County Health Department," said Dr. Craig. "They've reported nothing to me concerning this case."

"If viral encephalitis had existed... I'd now be actively involved in tracking down the sources," said Craig, who is the technical director of the St. Joseph Mosquito Abatement Program. He also is a consultant on vector diseases (those carried and transmitted by insects) to over 50 organizations, including the World Health Organization and the U.S. Public Health Service.

Craig said the chances of the student having viral encephalitis are less than "99 to one."

Craig added that the mosquito season is over, "usually with the first frost," limiting the chances of the disease. "The peak of the season is around Labor Day," he said.

"In fact, cases of viral encephalitis are very rare in St. Joseph County," said Craig. He reported that during the epidemic of 1975, in which there were 2000 cases nationwide and 350 in Indiana (the second highest number in the country), there was only one case in St. Joseph County.

"The greatest activity in Indiana is in the southern third of the state," Craig said. "And we've had only one human case there this year."

Returning this weekend from a conference of the National Committee of Disease Center, Craig reported that the viral encephalitis rate currently is "very low," and that there is "no activity in Michigan and northern Ohio, Indiana, and Illinois."

Craig explained that "encephalitis" literally means "brain inflammation," and can occur in many diseases, "even measles."

"I'm not a medical authority," said Craig, "but I would be skeptical of this particular case being one of viral encephalitis."

"If it was, we'd be seeing more cases reported," agreed Matherly. "We'd probably never know what the student had."

Dance tickets must be validated

The Social Commission Homecoming Committee is asking any students who plan to use homecoming dance tickets purchased in ticket packages to bring the dance tickets to the Student Union ticket office today, tomorrow, or Wednesday between 12 and 4 p.m. to have them validated.

This is being done so that it can be determined how many additional dance tickets can be sold to students and alumni, as there is limited seating capacity in the ACC Concours, where the dance will be held.
In a column in The Observer, Mr. David Cwik attacked tolerance of homosexuality as dangerous. He said: "If homosexuality leads not to freedom, but instead to decadence, why should we not control its influence?" He recommended that we censor any positive statements or information on the gays of Notre Dame from the pages of The Observer. Mr. Cwik called homosexuality 'unnatural' and said the power to choose a homosexual life style was not real freedom.

First, as one who has studied the theology and psychology of homosexuality, I think it is humerus to imply that homosexuals really "choose" their sexual identity. It would be hard to say anyone "chooses" his or her sex identity in fact. Parents, had or inadequate living conditions (emotional as well as financial), and even the outlook of society in general, create the atmosphere which make homosexuality possible. People, in fact, "become" homosexuals as a matter of "fate" (that is, differences in their background pile up until it becomes difficult, if not impossible, to desire heterosexual love). People may say they "choose" homosexuality, but that may really mean they have resigned themselves to who and what they read and what they teach. They have embraced their desires, realizing that they can only truly be happy and fulfilled as homosexuals.

This is very conservative psychology, because the American Psychiatric Association, more than five years ago, decided against calling homosexuality a mental disturbance. It could be said that homosexuals are just persons who grew up in different psychological neighborhoods. To call homosexuality a sickness might be calling things like "a Catholic background" a sickness. I know, Catholic background may be real sickness.

Second, Mr. Cwik said that homosexuality was not to be tolerated because it was not true freedom. I think, in a strong sense, sexuality has nothing to do with freedom of choice. One can talk about being "captivated" by that well-endowed little girl who doesn't wear a bra, just as easily as a girl or a homosexual might dream of the muscular boy who likes to wear his shirt unbuttoned, etc. In fact, since women can be gay, the girl might also like the little girl without that bra. Growing to accept another, different, individual personality, may not be the exclusive profession of heterosexual love. Homosexual love could make you grow, and change, to become a more complete, integrated, and tolerant individual.

All sex, sooner or later, involves what Mr. Cwik called "an urge for perverse self gratification." Young men usually begin their sex lives by attaining puberty and masturbating. Masturbating may be considered perverse, but normal persons have been known to masturbate particularly in adolescence. Freedom, may in fact, bring about, having a range of personal choices, political influence, will power, and free sexual thought and expression when Sex may be just a subset of freedom.

Third, Mr. Cwik said that homosexuality, or the tolerance of homosexuality, could lead to decadence. Decadence, in its largest sense, means a "period of decline." (As much that's what Webster's Col­ legiate says). To say homosexuality and the decline of society are one in the same, becomes false in the eyes of history. The names of homosexual historical figures read like a list of giants: Sappho, a Greek poet whose works are required reading in my high school; Plato (there were so many homosexuals in Plato's school of philos-
Yale dean lectures crowd

by Molly Woolfe

Jaroslav Pelican, dean of Gradu- ate Studies at Yale University, drew a crowd of nearly 300 to Carroll Hall in Madeleva last Tuesday night. His hour-long lecture, sponsored by St. Mary's Homanistic Department, dealt with "The Spirit of Medieval Theology."

Pelican explained that he was not concerned with the development of the medieval church as a "card-carrying medievalist" but rather as a Christian interested in that period's traditions.

He traced the roles of religious classes, the medieval doctrines of the sacraments, and the globe-reaching effects of St. Augustine's writings in the growth of the early Church's philosophies.

"But," he added, "the glue that holds the world together is the goodness of God Himself." A brief question-and-answer session concluded the lecture.

Pelican has been lecturing to college audiences, including St. Mary's and Notre Dame, for the past twenty years. He has numerous papers to his credit, and he recently completed his third volume on medieval theology.

"The Board of Commissioners took our revenue expectations at face value," Gregory commented. "It was easier to lower the risk factor lower than just how much profit any event or activity will make. By lowering its estimated revenue, however, the Student Union was forced to cut a total of $12,586 from the proposed budget.

"We'll just have to do a little more bargaining," Joiner said, referring to the 11 speakers which the Academic Commission hopes to bring on campus this year. He suggested that his commission could co-sponsor guest lectures with the halls or even split transportation fees with other schools in the area.

Joiner added that he submitted a final budget cut from $26,025 to $20,766. Deitchakwski said he was satisfied with the figure, however, indicating that it was still more than any SU social commission had received in the past.

"We're flexible," Dyckhowski stated. "Ideas come up during the year and we can act on them.

Deychakiwsky said he wanted to put a lot of money into the Nazz. It's a high priority," he emphasized. "This is something that goes on throughout the year; it could expand and become a big thing.

He also remarked that by requiring preliminary and final budgets for each event, the Social Committee would have a better idea of what was going on.

Deychakiwsky noted. "It would make it possible to put more money into the Nazz."

One way may be to live within the Augustinian Fraternity. When you come to live participate in our community life for several years before making a final commitment. You observe that as a religious community following the chart of St. Augustine and "that together and with one heart in brotherhood and in spiritual friendship, we seek and worship God and that we labor in the service of the people of God." We serve in colleges, high schools, parishes, foreign missions, campus ministries, retreats, hospitals and multicampus chaplaincies.

KANSAS CITY, Mo. - The Kansas State Wildcats, in their second year under head coach Gene Steratore, took on the Arkansas Razorbacks in the Heartland Conference tournament. The game was a closely contested affair, with both teams exhibiting strong performances.

The Wildcats, led by senior captain Pat Weller, took an early lead in the first period, scoring on a power play. Arkansas responded in the second period, tying the game with a goal from sophomore forward John Sheeran. The third period saw a seesaw battle, with both teams scoring goals to keep the game close.

In the end, Kansas State emerged victorious, winning 3-2. Weller and Sheeran were named co-MVPs of the tournament, with Weller also earning the tournament's Most Valuable Player award. The Wildcats advanced to the championship game, where they will face off against the Iowa State Cyclones.

The game was a thrilling experience for fans, with the crowd cheering on both teams throughout the match. The Wildcats' defense was strong, allowing only two goals in the entire tournament, while their offense was potent, scoring 10 goals in total.

Overall, the Kansas State Wildcats had a strong showing in the Heartland Conference tournament, with a perfect 5-0 record. They move on to the NCAA tournament, where they will face a tough test against the top-seeded University of Michigan. The Wildcats will need to bring their A-game if they hope to advance to the Frozen Four.
