Devise explosives in Peking;
damages railway station

PEKING (AP) — An explosion that killed nine people and injured 81 in Peking’s central railway station was caused by a device brought in by an unknown person, the Xinhua news agency said yesterday.

The official news agency gave no details about the charge or any hint of a motive. China’s top policeman, Public Security Minister Zhao Gangu, was one of the senior officials who rushed to the scene of the Wednesday blast, it said.

Observers could recall no major cases of urban terrorism being made public since the chaos of the 1966/76 cultural revolution. A bomb exploded at the gate of the Soviet Embassy about five years ago, killing one person, in a case that never was explained.

If the railway station explosion were the work of a terrorist, observers said, it lacked the kind of target that would indicate the motive.

Xinhua said the blast occurred on the station’s second floor near the top of an escalator. The area is a bottleneck with people turning in different directions to shop, wait on head trains or leave.

The railway station was damaged only slightly and trains operated normally, the news agency said. While police cordoned off a wide area in front of the station after the explosion, passengers with tickets continued to come in and go through side doors.

The Xinhua report came 27 hours after the explosion. Earlier, a foreign ministry spokesman said nine people were killed, dozens were wounded, and the case was under investigation.

The explosion was not reported in Peking’s newspapers Thursday.

Xinhua said one man was killed on the spot, five men and three women died later in hospitals and two of the injured were in critical condition.

Travelers who passed through the station reported gouges in the floor and pieces of wood and masonry strewn about.

Early this year, Hu Quamos, president of China’s Academy of Sciences, wrote in a Chinese journalists’ magazine that some young people hated the dictatorship of the proletariat — rule by the working class — so much that they would resort to violence.

But Chinese press reports on youth gangs have been confined to cases of robbery, and ganglands, and recent reports have said a crackdown late last year improved the situation.

There was nothing immediately to link the explosion with simmering political events in China.

The major event is the upcoming trial of the “Gang of Four” radicals and six members of the “Lin Biao clique” on charges of trying to overthrow the government. The latest official word was that the trial likely would start late this month or early next month.

Newspapers have warned of the destabilizing influence left by the Gang of Four, led by Jiang Qing, widow of Chairman Mao Tse-tung, but have said that almost all Chinese hated them.

Lin, once Mao’s chosen successor, reportedly died in a 1971 plane crash while trying to flee after a plot against Mao failed.

In Abscam investigation
Grand Jury indicts NJ senator

NEW YORK (AP) Senator Harrison A. Williams Jr. was indicted yesterday by a federal grand jury on charges he accepted a financial interest in a titanium mining operation and promised to influence military contracts during the FBI’s Abscam undercover investigation.

The four-term New Jersey Democrat was the first U.S. senator and the seventh member of Congress indicted in the Abscam investigation of official corruption. He is only the second U.S. senator in recent history to be indicted while in office.

“T am innocent,” the 60-year-old senator said at a news conference in a senate office building in Washington shortly after the indictment was announced. “I did nothing wrong.”

Williams was charged with accepting an interest in the titanium operation during a meeting with undercover agents at Kennedy International Airport in August 1979. In return, the indictment alleged, the senator agreed to use his influence in securing military contracts for the mining venture.

“T was immediately rejected,” Williams said. “It was not related to the senator, was not related to the senator, was...”

The other named were:
- Alexander Feinberg, a Cherry Hill, New Jersey attorney and close Williams associate; George Katz, a New Jersey and Florida businessman and former Democratic fundraiser in New Jersey; and Angelo Erizcetti, a state senator and mayor of Camden.

Erizcetti was convicted in August with Nip, Michael Myers, D./Pa., in the first Abscam trial.

Henry A. Williams III, a former newspaper publisher not related to the senator, was named as an unindicted co-conspirator.

From the investigations outset, Williams has maintained his innocence.

Candiate scrap for Eastern votes

President Carter and Ronald Reagan, heading for the Election Day finish line, battled Thursday for the big bloc of electoral votes in the industrial states of the East.

Reagan wound up a brief Southern campaign swing with airport rallies in Texarkana, Ark., and New Orleans, hoping to win the votes of what he called "millions of Democrats who are just as dissatisfied with the way things are going as we are."

Homing in on economic issues, which Reagan's pollsters have said are his president's domestic programs a "comedy of errors."

"It's a question of someone who can name 50 parts of an automobile, but he can't drive it," Reagan told the milling throng.

With the election five days away, campaign crowds for the two major candidates were growing.

Carter spoke at a lunchtime rally in New York's midtown garment district, a traditional Democratic stronghold. Two city blocks were filled with cheering partisans, many of them union members, as the president rode in a motorcade between Manhattan skyscrapers adorned with red, white and blue balloons.

In what is expected to be his last personal pitch for New York's 41 electoral votes, Carter recalled his support of federal loan guarantees for New York, and told the milling crowd, "We'll help revitalize New York tomorrow...".

Independent John B. Anderson son attended a rally in Brooklyn and appeared at St. John's University.

In a news conference at St. Francis College in Brooklyn, Anderson said he's afraid Carter would provide offensive missiles and other weapons to Iran in exchange for the 32 American hostages held there.
President Carter has won the endorsement of the Chicago Sun-Times, which says it supports the president's bid for re-election "with reservations, as we did four years ago."

In an editorial published in today's edition, the newspaper said: "Carter's approach to international crises and national security concerns are more realistic and therefore safer than those proposed by (Ronald) Reagan. And we believe Carter's economic prescriptions would stimulate the economy and encourage productivity with less inflation than Reagan's." The newspaper criticized Carter for what it described as his lack of "a clear and consistent vision of America's problems, failure to establish closer working relations with Congress and inability to stir enthusiasm for his programs." But the newspaper praised Carter for taking "some tough steps to control inflation, his approach to the energy crisis, the Egyptian-Israeli peace accord, the Panama Canal treaties, diplomatic relations with China and the Third World and his record of minority appointments, especially to positions in the judiciary."

The newspaper praised Reagan for "a clear and consistent vision of the country's problems" and for "being open to working with congressmen, a subject most consider useless and mundane." But read on for just a second: this is more than just an attempt to portray a friendly, Ottawa-based writer. It's a genuine, fervent, hearty endorsement. The current CIC, the Observer, is not only speaking for all brains; it simply does not speak. Why doesn't it speak? It fails to achieve the attendance required for a quorum. And who is consistently absent? The faculty and administration are the principal benefactors who are supposed to be engaged in dialogue with the students, who are supposed to vote on the very issues that they also have the power to accept or reject. Who gets to be the presiding orator? That's because it is. If this is to be told, Dean of Student James Kresser said, "President VanWinkle, vice president for Student Affairs, bodies have never attended the meetings. They vote on issues which, according to the council's definition, they will review later and either accept or reject on their own."

Now how have the Board of Trustees helped out? That's a fairly simple matter. Always interested in education, the Board has decided to teach the Student Government about evasion in realpolitik. The Board's goal is to teach the students that government is an illusion, an image maintained in the face of the electorate, while real decisions are made by the unelected folks with real power.

Now it hardly needs to be pointed out that this solution tallies the peaks of absurdity, particularly to men and women who run the solution-oriented corporations of America. How can these people, with a straight face, actually propose that a student senate be created for the purpose of forwarding legislation to the very organization the senate's formulation seeks to eliminate?

And in order to achieve this educational goal, the Board in its wisdom has devised a strategy that encompasses compromise, another layer of beureacracy, and the appearance of progress through bluff. These are valuable real world illustrations.

Their solution to the problems that exist in Student Government is a highly imaginative approach, the kind of thinking that has made America great. The idea is this: form a student senate, keep the CIC, have the Senate delegate debate proposals, and if they pass send them on to the CIC to be debated and voted on. Brilliant. Jane Cahill Pfeiffer, one of the five professors executive with NBC, suggested that one does not simply eliminate an organization that hasn't worked, but rather seek to improve the one in existence. I'd like to see her try to explain this logic to Fred Silverman or NBC board members. Or perhaps she knows what she's doing and which would explain why she is no longer with the company.

What would NBC do if they had a hopelessly ineffective, organization? They would waste no time in correcting the problem. It's much the same strategy Riehle used when he started looking for solutions to a student government problem which has existed since the CIC began proposing votes.

But it won't be that easy, not now. And for that we can thank the Board of Trustees. They have provided Mr. Riehle with a lesson in how the art of compromise can result in the ridiculous. They have provided him with a governmental setup whose bulk and indeterminate can be matched only by the federal beureacracy. And they have taught him that it is far more important to give the appearance of progress than to actually progress. We thank them for these treats.

The Political Masquerade

Since tricks and treats are two items one cannot associate with both Halloween and politics, it is appropriate we examine matters political on this mystical day. But let's not talk national political questions, one marriage for which I'll no longer answer my door. Today we shall examine student politics, a subject most consider useless and mundane.

But read on for just a second: this is more than just an attempt to portray a friendly, Ottawa-based writer. It's a genuine, fervent, hearty endorsement. The current CIC, the Observer, is not only speaking for all brains; it simply does not speak. Why doesn't it speak? It fails to achieve the attendance required for a quorum. Snite gallery to open soon

Workmen are putting the finishing touches on Notre Dame's Snite Museum of Art in preparation for its November 9 (1 to 5 p.m.) opening. The building, valued at $3.7 million, houses most of the University's 12,000-piece collection. The collection, which has doubled in size since 1973, enables visitors to trace the development of Western art. The opening exhibit contains works by masters such as Chapel, Picasso, Renoir, Rodin, van Gogh, Remington and Russell. Parking for the open house is available free in the stadium lot north of campus.

English Department shows Shakespeare classics on film

by Mary Fran Callahan
Senior Staff Reporter

The English Department is sponsoring the showing of two Shakespearean film classics—Hamlet and Othello—starting this Sunday. Laurence Olivier stars in the title roles of each film and also directed the productions.

"It's interesting to see Olivier over the years as he is younger, doing Hamlet and then older, doing Othello," James Robinson, professor of English who teaches a course on Shakespeare, commented.

Right to Life sponsors Jog-A-Thon

The Notre Dame-Saint Mary's Right to Life group will sponsor the third annual Jog-A-Thon in the fieldhouse area of the Athletic and Convocation Center from 1:30 to 5 p.m. Sunday (Nov. 2). The event is open to all friends of the organization and proceeds will be used to fight abortion.

Sponsors are asked to pledge a cash gift for every lap that competitors complete. Participants may sign up in the Tom Dooley Room of LaFortune Student Center, and by calling 1157 or 8127.
'Jam' features Bluegrass bands

by Diane Mazurek

Five talented bluegrass bands will appear tomorrow night in the Country Rock Jam, sponsored by Student Union. Vassar Clements, veteran of the Grand Ole Opry who calls Nashville home, is bound to be one of the highlights of the evening. Vassar coaxes from his 400 year old Italian fiddle some of the most authentic Country Swing Notre Dame is likely to hear. While on tour, Clements collected an impressive accumulation of rave reviews.

The quality of performers Clements has played with further indicates this musician's talent. The Allman Brothers, Charlie Daniels, Jimmy Buffet, The Marshall Tucker Band Linda Ronstadt are only a few of those with whom Clements has recorded.

Jam performer John Hall came to Notre Dame at the age of 16 on a physics scholarship after skipping his senior year of high school. One year later, Hall returned to the East and strummed his guitar around Washington D.C., eventually forming a small band.

Another year later, he was in New York and beginning to play off-Broadway. In 1969 he was introduced to Janice Joplin for whom he and his wife wrote the song "Half Moon", which Joplin immortalized. Since then, he's joined various bands and written for performers one time for Orleans. With them he recorded "Dance With Me," which hit the top ten in the summer of '74. More recently, he's played on almost all of Ronnie Rain't's LP's including the production of "Take'm my Time." He also has recorded with Little Fear and Jackson Browne. Hot off the press is his latest with John Sebastian. Hall is a studio regular with Carly Simon. Also alumni of ND are Rich Precioso and Kevin Quigley. Last spring, they left South Bend to settle in the Denver area. Precioso worked as a street musician in the Bay area of San Francisco. Shortly, Quigley and professional bassist Claude Arthur join him. We're excited to be back at ND. The Nazx crowds were a lot of fun and we'll happy to see some old friends this week!" Quigley commented.

Two other groups, Hearsfield and Radio Flyers are also expected to bring good music to those assembled in Stepan center.

Because there will only be 500 folding chairs, spectators should bring blankets and pillows. Although there is no restriction on beverages, glass bottles are prohibited.

Iraniens boycott Parliment

[AP] Boycotting deputies forced postponement of the long awaited open debate on the U.S. hostages in the Iranian Parliament yesterday, creating new doubts and uncertainties on the fate of the captives. Another session was set for Sunday.

President Carter, asked by reporters in New York whether the hostages would be home by election day Nov. 4, said: "I have no way of knowing. The American people understand what the situation is ... It's an unpredictable thing." Speaker of the Majlis, or Parliament, Hashemi Rafsanjani, said the United States was supporting Iranians.

Reagan advisor Allen withdraws from presidential campaign staff

By Donald M. Ruddle
AP Political Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — Richard V. Allen, long regarded as Ronald Reagan's choice for White House national security adviser, stepped aside yesterday from the Reagan campaign staff as a result of conflict of interest allegations dating to his service in the Nixon administration.

Edwin Meese, Reagan campaign chief of staff, issued a statement saying Allen has "withdrawn for the remaining days of the campaign to remove this matter as a possible issue in the campaign."

Meese also said "it is clear that any allegation or implication of improper conduct is untrue. Mr. Allen continues to have the full confidence of Ronald Reagan and the campaign organization."

Left unclear was whether Allen would be restored to his position in the White House. As a result of conflict of interest running for national security adviser, Allen has until his abrupt withdrawal from the campaign, Allen was Reagan's principal foreign policy and defense adviser and was regarded as the likely successor to Zbigniew Brzezinski in a Reagan White House.

One of his clients is Nissan Motor Co. Ltd., the maker of Datsun automobiles. According to the Journal, Allen received a retainer of $100,000 a year from the Japanese firm, a figure the newspaper said Allen refused to confirm.

The Journal article said that while on the White House staff, Allen helped a Japanese business association obtain information about U.S. import/export policies.

Allen, 44, now is a Washington consultant specializing in international economic matters.

The contention that a majority of U.S. presidents come from humble, "ordinary" backgrounds was rejected by Distinguished Professor Edward Pessen Thursday night in a speech at the Galvin Auditorium.

Pessen, a Guggenheim Fellow and current chairman of the history department at the City University of New York, cited many examples from the lives of the 38 presidents. He contrasted the economic status of these leaders to the social structure of the "led."

When he researched social mobility, Pessen's interest in the presidents' upbringing was sparked. In an attempt to discover how these men had risen in the social circles, he found few coordinated statistics to compare their economic backgrounds with the economic status of the population in general. Thus, Pessen decided to design his own study and the results were, as he put it, "quite astonishing."

Pessen found that whereas only one percent of the American population has, at any one time, been of the upper economic class, a surprising 44 percent of U.S. Presidents have been of that strata. Much of this wealth has been inherited from prosperous parents. Abraham Lincoln, for example, is usually depicted in folklore as being from a poor peasant family. Through his research, however, Pessen learned otherwise. He described Lincoln's father as belonging to the top 15 percent of the Indiana landowners. Other presidents have been even more fortunate; Pessen termed the father of John Quincy Adams as the richest man in America. Likewise, Theodore Roosevelt was raised in the luxuriant Hyde Park section of New York City.

Pessen described only six of the presidents as being of modest backgrounds. Indeed, several of these men were able to improve their economic status through what he called "prosperous marriages."

Pessen admitted that his findings might be of dubious significance when contrasted to the actual performances of each man in office. Yet he noted that his study might aid future research on the presidency.

Editor's Note: This is the second part of a two-part series highlighting the Capernaum volunteer program. Last summer, professors and students traveled to Israel to participate in an archeological dig. Today, reporter Tom Amonton takes readers to the dig site.

A typical day began at 5:30 a.m. when the group drove to the site and ate a light snack of tea, jam, and bread before digging. Work was stopped at 9 a.m. for a full breakfast of eggs, bread, and cheese. Digging continued until noon, then it was stopped because of the intense heat.

After lunch the pottery and other articles found during the digging were "read" under the shade of the trees. Here the volunteers learned how to associate pieces of pottery with time periods in order to build a story of past centuries.

Swimming in the nearby Sea of Galilee quickly became a popular afternoon activity. Around 2 p.m. the group returned to their hotel where the volunteers were free to do as they liked.

The first task was to clear the area which measured 70 square meters. Lacey Twinning, a (SMC) student who participated in the program, explained, "We had to literally hand remove the rocks from the field. It was the hardest work I've ever done." Susan Riley, another (SMC) participant echoed Twinning's sentiments saying, "It took a while to adjust to the physical labor, but the directors anticipated this. So they slowed the pace for the first week to give us time to adjust."

Constant heat called for another adjustment. Participants had to wear protective clothing at all times and drink fluids every 15-30 minutes. Gloves and boots served to guard against insect bites (i.e. scorpions) and other injuries.

After the rocks were cleared, the grass had to be raked for facilitation digging. One or two persons were assigned to a square plot. These squares, marked off with string, became the sole responsibility of the participants, who conducted their own digging and were required to keep their squares clean.

A preliminary report of the archeological expedition, written by Vasileios Tseferis and Harold Weiss, stated: "On the surface, not more than five cm below the present surface, were found the remains of the latest buildings. Even though their preservation was poor, some units and rooms were successfully traced. Enough was uncovered to give us ideas of the social life of the village in the eighth and ninth centuries C.E. (622-740)." Weiss pointed out that the site at Capernaum continued uninterrupted at least up to the ninth century C.E. ("This is important because it has been previously thought that the site had been abandoned in the 7th century.") "... allowed us to reconstruct large living units with three or four rooms, stone pavements, and well-constructed beaten earthen floors," the report said.

This past season the Arab stratum was unearthed, and toward the end of the dig, Byzantine buildings were discovered. Thus, the time period for this next season's expedition will start around the sixth or seventh century.

"I think the hardest adjustment for the participants was to come to terms with removing the heavy blocks and seeing their daily tasks in terms of scientific methodology," Weiss declared. "New problems arose each day the volunteers were consistent learning. We taught them basic archeological steps but the volunteers had to expand their knowledge by working with the daily problems, the new evidence, reference," he added.

All the participants claim to have acquired at least some basic skills in roughly estimating time periods of uncovered artifacts. Almost all confess to saving some of the duplicate pieces of pottery and glass as momentos of their archeological expedition. The important artifacts are kept by the Israeli Department of Antiquities as permanent evidence for the reconstruction of a more complete picture of early Christian history.

Notre Dame matches-up with Middies

by Gary Graezy
Sports Writer

Now matter how improbable, things continue falling into place for this Notre Dame football team. Inexperience and injuries have been offset by the surprising depth of enthusiasm that has been brewing on this team since the earliest days of spring practice.

As a result, Notre Dame, one of six unbeaten teams in the nation with a 6-0 mark, enters tomorrow afternoon’s game (11:30 p.m. EST) against talented Navy as the third-ranked team in the nation, enjoying its best start since the 1973 national championship season.

The contest will be played on the aerodurf at Giants Stadium in East Rutherford, NJ before a capacity crowd of 76,800.

The story for the Irish continues to center on the offense Dan Devine and his staff have patched together to the tune of 383 yards per outing. Freshman quarterback Bas Kiell gets better each week (11-20 passing for 132 yards and an 80-yard TD run last Saturday vs. Arizona) and the tailback slot, to be occupied again by senior Jim Stone, continues to produce 100-yard games.

Stone’s 109-yard effort against Arizona was his third consecutive game over the century mark, continuing the pace established by injured sophomore sensation Phil Carter over the first three weeks of the season. A fourth 100-yard game against the Middies tomorrow would give Stone an Irish record he now shares at three with Carter, Neil Worden, Marcy Schwartz, and George Gipp.

The crucial factor, however, in building the offense that is making people forget Vegas Ferguson, has been the offensive line, as coach Devine would readily admit.

“I didn’t say it’s a complete surprise,” he said. “But we’re very pleased with the way our young offensive line has come along. With three starters graduated (from 1979) and Tim Huffman out early with a broken foot, we didn’t have much experience. But people like Mike Shiner, Bobby Burger, and Phil Poddarac really do a job for us even when we’ve had these injuries.”

All-America center John Scully, who goes up another exceptional lineman in Middle noseguard Terry Haney Saturday, offered, “At the beginning of the year, I knew we (the offensive line) would play with enthusiasm, but I wasn’t sure we’d do it. But I was.”

The one worry for offensive line coach Brian Boulac has not been the talent, rather the rash of holding penalties incurred in recent weeks by the front five.

“The number of holding penalties is disturbing,” he said, “So we’ve been concentrating on that. With a ball control offense like ours, a major penalty is like losing momentum just a drive.”

As for the Irish defense, has been stone-walling it of late, preventing no touchdowns the last two weeks and allowing no scores on the ground in 12 quarters of football. Arizona gained a mere 166 yards last Saturday, with a second half limited to 39 yards and three first downs.

“We’ve just been coming together as a unit,” said free safety Tom Gibbons. “We found out last spring that this team plays together well and even a few injuries (i.e. tackle Don Kidd and defensive back Dave Deviren, Tom DeSiato and Steve Cichy) we’ve held up.

Dame, after sandwiching coaching stints, we have had our problems with ECAC. The Irish Extra Friday, going to lay the blame for the penalties most schools, and the averages are Sports Writer and won't play as holding. That call can be made on line, assistant coach Bill Meyers is not dwelling on it.

"I've The Irish offensive line coach is not holding, I've got great material to work with and I don't think that it will carry over to this week," he says. "Navvay always has great personnel. They play a very physical, disciplined ballgame. We are well aware of their capabilities, but I am sure that we'll be ready for them by game time."

"Officially, 'I'm not going to work with centers and guards. Brian Boulic has a lot of administrative responsibilities as offensive coordinator, so our roles tend to overlap on the practice field. Consequently, I spend time with all of the linemen."

Meyers stresses that the Navy game is all that, is on his mind this week, just as Georgia Tech will be his prime concern starting Sunday. Because of this, Meyers says, Dan Devine's resignation, and the fact of his assistant coaches, he mentally put aside. "There are two sayings that I live by: one of them is the adage that there are only two kinds of coaches, those who have been fired, and those who are waiting to be fired."

"It is just a part of coaching that you have to accept. Like my other sayings, dictates, always keep a suitcase packed. Meyers is going nowhere, but he has to accept. Like my other sayings, he just might be wishing he could move out of Cincinnati, so he went to Moeller high school, right? "I went to St. Xavier, and in my four years there we never came close to beating Moeller," he laughs.

"Come up watching Notre Dame football and dreamed of someday playing here, you think. "I was never a big Notre Dame fan," he insist, "I really never thought I'd be here until they recruited me." His's a member of probably the most unheralded group of players on the field, so an offensive lineman like himself would jump at the chance to acquire a little publicity, wouldn't he? "A lineman doesn't get a lot of press, but just knowing that the backs have a 100-yard day is uplifting," says the senior. "Peer recognition is more important than public recognition."

There is something different about Nick Vehr. A difference that impresses you the moment you meet him. But maybe that's because Vehr has worked just as hard on his character as he has on his football talents. "One of my biggest concerns when I came to college was not to be stereotyped as an athlete," Vehr says with conviction. "I've tried to concentrate on developing myself more as a person than as a player. It would seem he has succeeded at both. The 6'4, 236 pounder has been a capable backup to junior Dean Mastick, logging an immense amount of playing time for a non-starter. He has seen action in every game the past two seasons, and with Mastick sidelined by a sprained ankle this fall, Vehr has been thrust into the role of a starter. Remember, "Nick's been a key performer for us the last three years," notes offensive line coach Brian Boulic. "He's started a number of games for us since his sophomore year. We've never been afraid to use him."

Vehr's blocking ability has been a big asset to the Irish offensive attack this season, though the big receiver has also bunted in four passes for 62 yards, including a catch at the one-yard line last week that set up Notre Dame's first touchdown against Arizona.

"Everyone says I'm the blocking tight end and Deats the receiving tight end, but over the past two years Deats's gotten to be a better blocker and I feel I've improved as a receiver." Vehr's efforts have not gone unnoticed by his mentors.

"With Deats out it's an extra burden on Nick, and he's played exceptionally well," Boulic offered. "His blocking has been outstanding and he's been catching the ball well. Nick's an integral part of this offense."

About the only black spot in what's otherwise been a bright season for the Irish is the lack of defensive tackle Don Kidd, Vehr's roommate for the past four years.

"Since Don and I began rooming together, our parents have become best friends," he says with an aproving grin. "They cornered me up (to the) all the games together, and our moms call each other up and talk football for hours."

Kidd, who underwent surgery on his knee this week, is now an inspiration to his friend. "He really worked hard all summer and now he can't play. It's added incentive for me to make a success of the season."}

Nick Vehr replaces Dean Mastick at tight end while Dave Conden will step in for an injured Tony Hunter at wide receiver.

Meyers lines Irish grade by Skip DeJurkis Sports Writer

"It's the least of my worries right now."

While everyone else on campus may be wondering, and worrying, about all the holding penalties that have been called against Notre Dame's offensive line, assistant coach Bill Meyers is dwelling on it.

"I hope the players aren't esterified," he says. "All want to do is concentrate on hitting. If they start to worry about holding calls, they'll become distracted, and won't play as well."

The Irish offensive line coach is not going to let the blame for the penalties on anyone. He says it is a combination of problems.

"Sure we have been caught for holding. That call can be made on almost every play of every football game ever played. We run more plays than most schools, and the averages are bound to catch up with us. The call is the referee's to make. Not one Big Ten ref has flagged us for holding, but we have had our problems with ECAC and SEC officials."

Meyers is in his second year at Notre Dame, after sandwiching coaching assignments at California Berkeley around a stay at Santa Clara. He was a lineman himself, holding down a starting position on the Stanford Rose Bowl teams of 1970 and 1971.

"We've got great material to work with here. There is no doubt in my mind that John Scully and Tim Huffman should be All-Americans. But this whole squad has talent."

"I was pleased with their play up until the fourth quarter of the Arizona game. We lost a bit of aggressiveness toward the end of that game, but I don't think that it will carry through this week."

It had better not. Navy has the number four defense in the country, a statistic that is well noted by Meyers. "Their win over Washington was no fluke. Navy always has great personnel. They play a very physical, disciplined ballgame. We are well aware of their capabilities, but I am sure that we'll be ready for them by game time."

"Officially, 'I'm not going to work with centers and guards. Brian Boulic has a lot of administrative responsibilities as offensive coordinator, so our roles tend to overlap on the practice field. Consequently, I spend time with all of the linemen."

It's not just about the football—It's about the fans who fuels the passion and the spirit of Notre Dame. The gridiron heroes may change over the years, but the fans remain constant. Their support and enthusiasm have become an integral part of the Notre Dame football tradition.

The fans are more than just spectators; they are a testament to the university's storied history. For decades, the die-hard Irish faithful have stood for nine and a half minutes, cheering and chanting, creating an atmosphere that is unmatched in college sports.

The fans are a source of pride and inspiration for the players on the field. Their unwavering support has helped shape the Notre Dame football program into one of the best in the nation. The fans have been a constant source of motivation for the players, encouraging them to give their all in every game.

The fans have also been a source of inspiration for the Notre Dame football team. The team is proud to represent their fans, and the players are dedicated to giving their best每一game, every season, and in every practice.

The fans have played a critical role in the success of the Notre Dame football program. Their support has helped create a winning culture and has contributed to the team's success on and off the field. The patients' heartwarming and inspiring stories have become a part of the Notre Dame football legacy.

In summary, the Notre Dame fans are a testament to the university's storied history. They are a source of pride and inspiration for the players, and their unwavering support has played a critical role in the success of the Notre Dame football program. The fans' dedication and enthusiasm continue to be a source of inspiration for every member of the Notre Dame football team.
Don't vote?
then don't complain

College students today are characterized in the public mind by both their apathy and lethargy. Students are no longer interested in many of the social and political concerns which dominated American campuses in the Sixties and early Seventies. Instead, the popular theory goes, students are "into their books" and have found a new seriousness of purpose towards their future careers.

In this editorial, we will not be presented with reams of statistics illustrating what percentage of registered Americans vote and of that number which actually go to the polls. Neither will you be reminded that most nations regard the American citizen who does not vote as a very inferior person. The following is a true story. Some of the names have been changed to protect the politically innocent.

One week ago today, an absentee ballot from the state of Pennsylvania arrived in my mailbox. I had dreaded its arrival.

I have not been satisfied with the presidency of Jimmy Carter. I think his foreign policy, influenced by the erratic, wild-eyed advice of Zbigniew Brzezinski, has been a disaster. Under his administration inflation has run rampant, unemployment has continued to be troublesome, and productivity has reached a new low. His conduct during the recent campaign has been deplorable; first he hid behind the hostages, then he refused to debate John Anderson placing political expediency above the good of the country. He has not only contributed to, but possibly guided impetus to the much-publicized hostage crisis. And let us not forget the message power of a vote. You will find yourself voting for President Carter's successor, who, unless he is of a different party, will do better and you will live in the country he dominates American campuses in the Sixties and early Seventies. What you said. "Concupiscence diminishes the richness of the perennial attraction of persons for interpersonal communion."

Lust and marriage...

WASHINGTON—I think I have a problem. Pope John Paul II has just offered a new, sweeping definition of adultery, he said, "Adultery is in your heart is not only when you look with concupiscence (strong sexual desire) at a woman who is not your wife, but also if you look in the same manner at your wife. The husband should not use his wife, or her femininity to fulfill his instinctive desire," the Pope said.

The election that I had hoped would never come is now suddenly and unavoidably upon us, and it is time to select one of the more crucial presidents of the last thirty years. With the current era of disorientation paralyzing the country in several areas, the next president is going to have a large stake in determining the scope, vision, and future of the country. This campaign has meandered along without any candidate taking a firm lead, or even any firm contenders taking shape. So now it is four days before the election and it is still too close to call. There has been enough joking (and whining) about the men that we have to choose from. There has been an enormous amount of lying by factions on every side. All of that did not really accomplish anything, and as Mr. Reagan is fond of saying, the time is now. It is time to face up to the issues.

The choice essentially comes down to two men, Ronald Reagan and Jimmy Carter. At the risk of incurring the wrath of the National Unity Campaign, the Libertarians, the Citizens' Party, and the various Communist and Socialist aggregations, any other vote is essentially sidestepping the issue. I am very much for change, and I think the ramifications of this election will inspire some, but I need to think that this election is much too important to encourage protest votes. Carter versus Reagan is not much of a choice, but if it is the only choice we have. I am not the blind liberal that I am sometimes accused of being, but I have to admit that the possibility of a Reagan presidency scares me to death. In the reaction against Carter and the disaffection with his programs, we can't throw ourselves into a something that could be much worse.

Yes, I am deeply opposed to Reagan. But I will stay away from the "Bodine for Bono" jokes, the jibe at his age, and intellectual screeches about appraising fascism. I will do this even though I think that those three concerns should be enough to terrorize anyone from running for president, but they are not necessary right now, and it is much, much too late anyway. I will just concentrate on Reagan the man. Does anyone really know him, or what he really has in mind for the country? Have we been lulled to sleep by his favorable media image, the reports that he is just a harmless old man who means well? Until the church can be angry with the President, we don't know what we might be getting, and although it may be late, I have several questions of my own.

While Reagan was governor of California he did a reasonably good job, in some areas an outstanding job, but to paraphrase an old statement...the state should not subsidize intellectual curiosity. He constantly baited students during the antiwar years, and generally exhibited belligerent behavior toward the academic environment. Then he turned around and signed bills enabling the university budget. Moore illustrates the point of this campaign: Ronald Reagan was a short time ago, is not only drifting right, it is racing. As a result of this trend, many liberals are running scared, they desire to see liberal ties adamantly. Their new slogan is; "It would be nice to be humane but we have to be realistic." With the most likely candidates running for the presidency, people are concerned about the effects of inflation on their purchasing power; the Reagan administration will no purchasing power then become a secondary issue.

Ronald Reagan would solve our economic anxieties by the Kemp-Roth tax cuts, but cut spending. The next time we get into federal spending programs. This thus proposed budget is very little for the poor and middle class families but a lot for the upper income groups. The theory is that this would increase inventories and stop producers producing jobs for the lower income groups. This used to be called the "trickle down" theory, now it is called, "a dynamic program for revitalizing the economy." Cutting federal social programs may help balance the budget, but despite the contradiction, with Reagans proposal for massive increases in military spending, this is highly unlikely, but it ignores the question of whether the social benefits from these programs might just outweigh the benefits of a balanced budget. The idea that one party or the other would abandon their beliefs in an effort to be re-elected, Frank Church becoming a Carter campaign hostage, the liberal party in New Haven does not support the Carter campaign and endorses Anderson. Gene McCanhy endorses Reagan. Jimi Hendrix endorses Reagan. "I will vote for Reagan on the right to be a conservative, I don't know what's my problem?"

Never mind that the abuses of big business are at least as harmful as the shortcomings of big government. Forget the cost of the Vietnam War and OPEC oil. Forget the poor. They threaten to wear us all down with their misery, insisting on the mental tranquility of majority. The new right prolutes there are no poor people in America. It appears...sorry to say, that most liberals would be happy to believe this rather than fight. They have seen what happened to Ted Kennedy's campaign on "instant concern" and it is not only drifting right, it is racing. The new right rejoices that the last liberal is being vanquished.

The last way things look. This is not the way they have to be. The soul of liberalism, which says that the average person can and must help people achieve equal opportunity and individual dignity, is not intact. Liberals must devise new ways to achieve their ideals, less radical philosophies, "or as my friend Mary Rice puts it, be replaced by tiring old, conservative ideas.

...Lust

Through such a reduction, the other person becomes the mere object for satisfying a sexual need and touches the slippery "fitness for personal life." In other words, if you really want to have a good marriage, lust has to go. I have never had any problem with adultery per se, but I do with concupiscence. I guess some people are born with concupiscence and some people are not.

I have never addressed this before to anyone, but I have concupiscence for my wife. Not just a little, but a lot. I can't look at her without having this insatiable urge to do something about it. I know it diminishes the richness of our marriage, and can cause great problems in our interpersonal relations, but I can't help myself. I have tried taking cold showers, and reading the Congressional Record, but nothing seems to help. What makes it worse is that she has concupiscence, too.

So what's my problem?

John Paul II. And don't ask me to go into the sordid details.
There's an old broken-down mansion atop a lonely dark hill near Washington D.C. Every election year, around Halloween, strange things happen there—frightening and unnatural things. Oh, I didn't believe all those myths about ghosts or strange events about supernatural occurrences in that old house. But I do now.

One cold day, I walked through the rusty gate, past the naked trees and up to the door of the house. As I knocked, bats flew in and out of the belfry. Anguished moaning and dia­bolical laughter ran out as I entered. Inside, I heard a voice not unlike that of Rod Serling.

There is a fifth dimension beyond that which is known to man... It is a dimension as vast as space and as timeless as infinity. It is the middle ground between light and shadow, between science and superstition, and it lies between the pit of man's fears and the summit of his knowledge. It is an area known as the Twilight Zone of the 1980 Election.

Reluctantly, I wandered through the dark hallway to the mansion. The eyes of the campaign posters on the walls followed me as I walked. Ghuls popped up everywhere, wanting to shake my hand, pull a button on my lapel and slap a sticker on my bumper. Some even wanted to kiss my baby.

Finally at the top of the stairs, I reached the first room. A mixture of wonderful movie stars and college cheers emanated from behind the door. Within, there sat an angry bespectacled man with great white hair who gloomed about inflation, conserva­tion and the League of Women Voters. On the floor next to him was a Trail Mix bag containing two Life Savers, a Tootsie-Roll and a note promising Federal matching funds. On his other side stood some­body named Pos. I was a reader of a group of students in a chorus of "On Wisconsin." I turned out the door.

After a frantic search I found myself before a door with a big gold star with the name "Bush" on it. Curious, though frightened, I en­tered. On the far right of the room, a hundred men in white suits with men's actions, especially when insid­ing the intricate patterns of relationships of men and women surfaces. A beguiled man with a black hat, the Lentil, stood in front of a TV screen.

James Joyce explores the innermost of relationships of men and women. "It is not easy being a woman, perhaps it is more difficult trying to understand them-from both sides of the coin," the women are said to have special insight which enhances their sensitivity. But that offers no explanation for women's actions, especially when trying to understand their relationships. It is a wonder of words, and superficial expressions. Gee, golly.

LETTERS TO A LONELY GOD

Argumentum Ad Deum

Oh, Lord, the year is dying; the ground is beginning to be covered with leaves, and I am powerless to hold back the winter. Sometimes I wonder if I prayed on my knees — if all the world, turning holy, prayed on its knees — if You could be convinced to maintain the glory of the season until the danger of winter has passed, so that when the leaves have all left the trees, the earth could move swiftly into the sweet burgeonings of April? Naturally not, of course, because we couldn’t have a springtime without a winter, or could we? I mean You, being Omniscient and All, could make the arrangements, couldn’t you, if all the world prayed on its knees, and turned holy, and really needed to have one year without a winter?

If winter is a necessary season, could we be spared a war? You are the breath of love in the world, making all other loves possible, and I am part of the wickedness; but do we always deserve wars? Wars are carried on by people; but are they inevitable, like seasons?

Do you ever notice, Lord, when faith is foreverlastingly dumb. A faith that has no merit has been proved to be silly to think so. Why should I ever have problems understanding the Lord? Do you, Lord, interrupt wars, or do wars just happen? "She's not very bright," I thought, as the bombs fell on German cities. But You let armies roll on to the ultimate horror that their bombs and planes can achieve. Was a single life spared because we had peace Masses on the quads during Vietnam, or was the war shortened a single day because students burned their draft cards as an act of discipleship to the Teacher who taught them peace?

A simple sign could have told us, Lord: a single peace dove in the cannon's mouth; a night flight of angels over a battlefield, or October unconsumed by its own fire as the bushes burned on ten thousand hills until You blew out their flames as though they were candles identifying the earth as holy ground.

Oh, it is cheesy for me to be giving My Lord advice, as though He were a waiter, and I were a Jewish mother ordering a wedding feast. God runs a quiet show, like a prosperous New England family raised on the Protestant ethic. He’s too private to interrupt a war in any kind of way in which he might seem to be SHOWING OFF. Think of the criticism, think of the bitterness, if Walter Cronkite were to report to the nation: "Almighty God stopped the fighting in Northern Ireland today when a Poor Clare nun from Galway slew Ian Paisley, the Protestant demagogue, with a sling-shot made from the jawbone of an ass."

In the meantime, the fighting continued between Iran and Iraq, and more Russian tanks moved into Afghanistan. At the Suez Canal, bitterness mounted between Egypt and Israel when Prime Minister Begin tweaked the nose of President Sadat. The Pope, briefed in advance by the Blessed Virgin, explained that heaven, in wartime, mostly favors Roman Catholic causes, and the prayers of Jews and Moslems are generally regarded up there as forms of ethnic whining. If believers have problems, the Lord could be easier if they were undisturbed by faith.

Why must I hope that You will raise up dust? Why should I ever expect that You will be busy in graveyards when You were indolent in death camps? "If He’s that much of an influence," I want to declare, "the Congress should investigate him like Billy Carter. I’D LIKE TO TAKE A LOOK AT THE EVIDENCE." Th preacher says to the politician: "There is no evidence. You are making up stories."

The hopelessness that comes as a handmaid to a final despair is full of surprises. You expect a religious experience to come like fire, and it arrives as ice. You want God to hug you with the colors of the season, and His miracle belongs to the indifferent gloom of winter.

Oh, Lord doubt could be easier if it were undisturbed by faith. Why must I hope that You will raise up dust? Why should I ever expect that You will be busy in graveyards when You were indolent in death camps? A cold wind blows dead leaves down the quad. In an hour, or a week, it will snow. I, protesting the universal defeat of life and breath, insist to the Lord: "It cannot end like this."

The leaves, swirling at my feet, invite me to dance. I refuse to be a partner to the dead, dumb things grasp at the merest straw: "Maybe sadness, like beauty, is in the eye of the beholder?"

Some days, I admire the village agnostic as the most honest man in town. I hear the political candidates say: "I’m a born-again Christian. God is my best Friend and my Guide. I walk with Him every step of the way." I look around to see who they’re talking about.

Off-campus athletes are reminded that the deadline for submitting rosters for intramural baseball and hockey is November 4. Those interested in hockey should sign the roster in the Nis-Varnum (Room 140) Office, or call Mike Kennedy at 253-3599. Those interested in baseball should organize their rosters and then contact Off-Campus Sports Commissioner Tom Diasser at 277-8593. November 3 so that fees can be settled and rosters finalized. All athletes are reminded that proof of insurance is required.

Right to Life will sponsor a jog-a-thon on Sunday, November 2 at the Notre Dame Athletic and Convocation Center. Those interested in participating may sign up in LaFortune, the Tom Dooley Center, 256 Alumni, or the Office of Student Development (SMC). The jog-a-thon will be held on the indoor track from 1:30 to 5:00 p.m. For further information call Tim (1157) or Bill (8127).

The Water Polo Club will hold a meeting at the Rock swimming pool tomorrow at 11 a.m. All members are strongly encouraged to attend. Team pictures will be taken and winter training plans discussed. For more information call Mike Corbisero at 8987.

Collegiate volleyball captains that did not attend the meeting on Wednesday must pick up the schedule and rules in the Interhall Office by today. The first round of play begins Sunday, November 2.

School years in Houston, Tex., and their hard work and talent boosted the Irish to a respectable fourth-place finish in the Midwest Conference this fall. The brothers, Dave and Tom, played on a team that some people say is the best in the country. "It was just great for us being on a championship team at the same time," Dave notes.

Dave is a senior majoring in chemical engineering and planning on attending graduate school next year at (where did he go wrong?) the University of Texas. He has always placed academics first and says of his four years at Notre Dame, "They young age and progressed in high school, and, as is not uncommon, they eventually just burned themselves out in the pool. The switch to water polo offered something new, and he has chosen to study pre-med. When speaking about coming to Notre Dame he refers to the tradition, "My father and brother both went to school here so I just saw it as the thing to do. Besides, the academics are very strong here, and I definitely wanted that." Of course, one cannot help but wonder about the relationship between the two brothers of such unusual talent and determination.

Dave comments on this relationship, "We've always spent a lot of time together over the years, and I think it has brought us closer together. It seems that we always get excited at the same time during games." Both began as swimmers at a young age and progressed through high school, and, as is not uncommon, they eventually just burned themselves out in the pool. The switch to water polo offered something new, and he has really outplayed Notre Dame but ended up losing. "With so many young players out-development hadn't been easy. The important thing is that we had matured very fast. Our strongest point now is our offense that we have just put in. We've switched from a five-three front offense to a four-two, and hopefully that will provide the distinct advantage this weekend." We'll be as aggressive as we have been all season. In the past we have had trouble maintaining our composition at times, but I think we're well as a team. That's important since we'll be playing for so much personal pride this weekend.

"Our defense is very good because we've got a lot of the teams that are here and others we've only lost to narrowly. I guess Marion College would be the team to beat. It's important that we spend the time before the meet together so we can play to- gether as a team. We haven't really played a complete game and our defense was very solid this season. It is the culmination of the season and we are different from any other experience that we have had," Smith said. "It is the team's leading scorer.

The Belles will not be com­manding a great deal of res­pect in terms of statistics. But if desire is to be the determining factor this weekend in rich­mond, St. Mary's is the pro­hibitive favorite.

unbeatable Monmouth College brought Notre Dame, what Rich Hunter listed called, perhaps the "most humidizing" defeat in Irish annals. The 2-0 loss came on the heels, stemming from the brilliant effort against ninth-ranked Penn State—a game which had worked wonders for Irish soccer credibility.

Hunter could only point his head against the wall. "I really doubt that Monmouth made two consecutive passes the whole game," he said.

The fourth year coach then ruffled off the things he's been telling his teams for years. "Notre Dame cannot be expected to beat teams because of the national name," he said.

"Everytime we go out on that field, the kids know it would make somebody a lot of money if we played Monmouth this season and we made Seton Hall's season.

"It's so disappointing," he added, "because we've thrown away a lot of points this year. I think some people already have studied the game, attempted to recruit without the benefit of scholarships, and tried to kick it around with the soccer powers of the nation.

They have come far on so little, that to end their fourth season—ended with glimmering possibilities of the Indiana, Ohio State, Xavier and Penn State matches—on a devastating note, might not be a realistic attitude.

To make the bumpy, uphill, which lies Indiana Land, St. Louis Land and Penn State Land, the program needs money. The bottom-line, sadly enough, is not the will to win, rather, the means to win.

The team had made its case on the field, but its destiny is in the hands of the athletic department. The achievements of Rich Hunter and his players remains remarkable.

Irish muddle through frustrating season

ROCHESTER, N.Y. — Lefty Smith and the Notre Dame hockey team played through the Goatseas in eight-day schedules this weekend when they travel to Upstate New York for a non-conference series with Clarkson College, a member of the Eastern Collegiate Athletic Conference.

The Irish meet the Gold Knights tonight at the Onondaga County War Memorial in Syracuse, and tomorrow evening at the Rochester Auditorium Coliseum. Following this weekend, Notre Dame will start a week of non-conference action with a single game at Bowling Green Tuesday.

The Irish are tied for third in the Western Collegiate Hockey Association with a 1-1 record and are should show through this weekend. Smith said, "Just how well a conditioned team we will show through this stretch of games."

"We played very poorly against Bowdoin Green Tuesday night. Defensively, we did a bad job of the puck in our own zone and were not aggressive enough. We just have to leave that in the past and play that much harder this weekend."

Clarks, located in Pontiac, N.Y., lost only four players from last year's 21-12-1 team. The Golden Knights were fifth in the ECAC with a 14-7 record and made it to the playoff semifinals before bowing to Dartmouth, 6-4.

Coach Bill O'Flaherty's team was the ECAC's top-scoring club last year with 88 goals. The team has experienced a depth that feels his attack is set despite the four graduation losses, but sees room for improvement on defense.

"We were inconsistent defensively and I feel we gave up more goals than we would have liked," he said. "There is room for improvement in consistency with our goaltending." Junior center Mike Prestidge, last year's ECAC scoring co-champ with 58 points and a first-team all-star, leads the Knights' attack.

For the Irish, junior right wing Jeff Logan and sophomore center Rex O'Fiaherty are tied for top scoring honors with six points each after three games. Irish senior defenseman Scott Cameron has made the trip after hurt his ankle during a thigh collision against Bowling Green Sunday. He's second only to the still-young seniors.

Irish icers to face tough Clarkson

by Armand Kornfeld

SOUTH ORANGE, N.J. — The frustration was alleviated only in part by Notre Dame's unimpressive 2-1 victory over hapless Seton Hall in front of an empty soccer-football field along the outskirts of the Pirate campus.

Despite the win, the single player, and of course, coach Rich Hunter, has been pleased with the performance. History repeated itself for the third consecutive game, barely 12 days after a similar putting against Miami (Ohio) cost the Irish their only prayer for an NCAA playoff bid.

The symptoms: critical lapses in concentration, lack of intensity and the absence of timely goal scoring—were subjects of lockerroom brooding that has become painfully commonplace during the last two seasons. Considering the relative ineptitude of the 1-9 Seton Hall soccer team, the 2-0 score was a moral victory for the outnumbered squad and a depressing "downer" on the emotional roller coaster that haunts the Irish soccer team.

"I don't know what it is anymore," said a frustrated Sami Kahale on the long walk from the field to the Pirate field house. "We just make the same dumb mistakes all the time. There's no way we should play a close game with a team plod on through a four-games-weekend.

Austgens lead club

by Armand Kornfeld

Attention: Notre Dame becomes tradition in many families, it was this tradition that brought the Austgen brothers to Richmond and includes possibly the best football team ever to come from the state. John, Brian, and Tom Austgen are not simply following their father's footsteps, however. They are writing their own scripts, and Notre Dame's water polo club is quite grateful.

The Austgens provided a strong foundation for the club in its first full year of official existence. Both Dave and Tom were all-American choices at one time or another during their high

Give us a break

Two major accomplishments of the CBS show thus far have been to draw an audience with the return of Phylis George and to complete the glorification of Monday night football.

Well, at least Jim "The Greek" Snyder is sometimes accurate — he did pick Gerry Faust to be Notre Dame's next head football coach.

About the only thing the NFL Today staff can do well together is fight. Sunday night Snyder and Musburger had a huge argument in the NBC building with The Greek getting a wave of the fist in the direction of his buddy Brent.

"The cause? Musburger was upset at the amount of time Snyder was given on the show. Perhaps the worst display of broadcasting can be found on ABC's Monday Night Football. The ability of Howard Cosell and "Dandy" Don Meredith barely equals that of a small town pair that comes to mind.

The concept of Monday night games is terrific — but the only way to watch the game and enjoy it is to head for a local tavern, down a few pitchers and just watch the game where the senseless nonsense Cosell and Meredith spout out is inaudible. Perhaps NBC's "best-seat-in-the-house" experiment is a little too extreme. There are several announcers on all these networks that are talented and worth mentioning: Pat Summerall (CBS), Tom Brookshires (CBS), Al Michaels (ABC), Keith Jackson (ABC), Don Cherry (CBS). They are all very good. Notre Dame (John Brodie (NBC) and of course, Jim McKay (ABC). Development and usage of the talent these men and a few capable others possess might make such a drastic move as that to be tried by CBS unnecessary.
