Among the largest manufacturer of infant formula in the World, Nestle: Company, is the first of a two-part series examining the use of infant formula in Third World countries. Inadequate levels of hygiene make the salt preparation and storage of infant formula nearly impossible. The bottle itself becomes an incubator for the microorganisms in the water. The contamination of water and formula makes bottle-fed infants more prone to infection.

Many mothers can read the instructions printed on the formula's package, and, as a result, the formula is often improperly made and can result in death due to dehydration.

According to a study of bottle-fed babies in Peru published in the Journal of Child Health, April 1979, malnutrition is 5-4 times higher than average among these infants. The 1979 bulletin of the World Health Organization reported that the mortality rate of bottle-fed infants in Chile was three times higher than the average. UNICEF and the US House of Representatives in House Joint Resolution 287 estimated that the use of infant formula accounts for up to one million deaths per year. Many mothers are too busy to figure out the right way to prepare the formula.

Another problem with infant formulas is that they lack the immunity which are contained in breastmilk and which are crucial in protecting the infant against disease in the early stages of development. Breastfeeding also plays an important role in establishing a bond between mother and child. Breastfeeding also helps improve education, helping to provide for the students' future studies and future work in the field.

Q&A

Kathy Murphy

Q: As a candidate for Student Body President what are your primary goals for representing the needs of students?

A: We would like to improve and develop several things that have been started by the previous administrations, particularly reorganizing the parent system, improving social space, increasing student awareness of social justice concerns, and improving communications between students, faculty, and administration.

We would like to increase student awareness and participation in services outside the community such as Urban Plunge and Loggin Center. We would also like to improve communications especially in academic areas. We want to keep up and improve communications with faculty and administration to alleviate the distance students often feel from the campus. We will offer more student, faculty, and administration activities to unify the community.

Curriculum changes are currently being made. For example, there are plans to emphasize the study of environmental business management. We would like to let students know that faculty is planning to get their input. Communications has to do with student attitudes and getting students to be part of what is going on.

Actual work experience is the key to the "up from the floor" trend in business management. Anecdotally, business authority Harold Levesley in a lecture last night at the College of the Professionals in American History report series, the presentation dealt with the changing role of business management in the United States.

Levesley, a renowned author and history department chairman at Vierra College, is a member of the State University Faculty. He is the director of the International Food Research Center.

The World Health Organization and the European Economic Community, however, have raised a number of objections to the use of infant formulas in Third World countries. Inadequate levels of hygiene make the salt preparation and storage of infant formula nearly impossible. The bottle itself becomes an incubator for the microorganisms in the water. The contamination of water and formula makes bottle-fed infants more prone to infection.

Pope John Paul II declared yesterday that human rights must be respected in his Polish homeland and chastised major powers that worry too much about inflation and arms than poverty in the Third World. In remarks to Polish to Ambassador Vidal Jurasz and 200 other Poles gathered on the lawn of the Vatican embassy in Lagos, Nigeria the pontiff repeatedly said that the “rights of in­dividuals and nations must be respected.” The pope took a break yesterday from the series of open-air masses and greetings to crowds that marked his first four days in Africa. “In Rome and outside Rome, I have intensely lived through the particularly difficult events which have affected my country, in particular the most recent one,” he said, referring to the Dec. 15 martial law crackdown in Poland. “I have addressed this issue to state authorities in Poland, as well as to the leaders of other countries - that the rights of nations must be respected. This is a heritage of many years. We did not learn this from the United Nations declarations after World War II. We learned this centuries ago.” - AP

Lech Walesa believes he will be freed from detention by Monday after the Christmas christening of his daughter, and he will shave off a new full beard when finally released, Solidarity’s chaplain said yesterday. “Given that date for the christening, he believes he will be free soon and for good,” the Rev. Henryk Jankowski said in an inter­view with The Associated Press following a three-hour meeting with Walesa. Jankowski said Walesa’s seventh child, a daughter born Jan. 27, was named Maria Viktoria at Walesa’s wish and that she will be christened in his hometown. “I hope you will later decide that you do not say why Walesa believes he will be freed but said Walesa was still “enthusiastic” despite being held since Dec. 15 when martial law was imposed and Solidarity suspended. — AP

Junta President Jose Napoleon Duarte has urged Sal­vadorans, beleaguered by a bloody civil war between leftists and rightists, to unite against “an external threat.” In a televised address Monday night, Duarte also conceded leftist guerrillas “have in certain cases attacked considerably” in recent days. He said they had more help from outside the country in their effort to overthrow his U.S. supported civilian military regime. “I again make a call on my countrymen without distinction to unite against the external threat,” Duarte said. Duarte did not specify the source of the threat. But his junta and the Reagan administration have claimed repeatedly that Cuba is funneling arms and aid through Nicaragua to the guerril­las. Both Nicaragua and Cuba deny official knowledge of any such activity. A military source said Monday night that a five-day army sweep against guerrillas in southeastern El Salvador ended success­fully with at least 90 guerrillas killed and not a single government casualty. — AP

The judge in Wayne B. Williams murder trial in Atlanta ruled yesterday that defense lawyers will not be allowed to question the governor, former mayor and other officials about alleged politi­cal pressure to prosecute the defendant. Meanwhile, a freelance photographer testified that two prosecution witnesses may have mistaken him for Williams at the scene where a black teen-ager was found slain. The witness acknowledged he looks nothing like Willi­ams but said, “We’re both black and we’re both photographers.” Superior Court Judge Clarence Cooper quashed defense subpoenas for Gov. George Busbee, former Mayor Maynard Jackson, former state Attorney General Arthur Bolton, Georgia Bureau of Investiga­tion Director Phil Peters and Busbee’s chief legal aide, Charlie Daniels. The quashing had been sought by attorneys for those named. — AP

Q: Do you feel the lack of an opposing ticket indicates students' disinterest in student government?
A: After talking with several juniors I think a lot of it has to do with time constraints. They said they want their senior year for themselves. Several juniors who are class officers or on committees now have decided to stay with what they are doing by being more constructive for themselves and the college.

We are disappointed that we are running unopposed but it is important to let students know we are enthusiastic by going out and getting their vote. Being SIB as a junior would allow me to channel all my efforts strictly towards the needs of the college rather than personal plans for the future.

I don't think there is student apathy. I think it has to do with student awareness. We want students to know what is going on but it is up to the individual. Bringing everyone together as a whole will be a challenge, but we would like to make sure everyone has the opportunity to get involved. For anyone who we missed while campaigning we have an open forum on Wednesday at 5:30 p.m. in Holy Cross Parlor.

Scholar explores role of women

By Cindy Cooliron
Staff Reporter

Exploring how the images of women in the Apocalypse have affected women today and how they might be interpreted. New Testament scholar Adela Yarbro Collins spoke last night at Saint Mary's Carroll Hall.

Ms. Collins stated that one of the first things we notice in the Book of Revelation is "that women as actual historical beings are invisible with the exception of Jezebel." In reconstituting the actual Jezebel, it seems she was a prophetess "who took a position of ascension to pagan culture differently from the writer of the Apocalypse."

By addressing her with the name of Jezebel, the author of Revelation chooses a particular way of disagreeing with her.

Given that Jezebel in the Apocalypse is the only woman mentioned and she is presented with the image of barbarity, that signifies that "a woman in the position of leadership is committing barbarity," stated Ms. Collins.

Reflecting on the significance of the group of the 144,000 people mentioned in Revelation who have reached salvation, Ms. Collins stated that "they are a specific number who sing a song that no one else has learned. Presumably they follow the Lamb to his death and seem to be the martyrs." According to Collins, the Book of Revelation seems to be suggesting that "to be Christian you must be celibate and a martyr."

A variety of images are used for Jesus Christ, especially as the Lamb because we expect this to be the image of sacrifice and vulnerability. "In other chapters we get the image of the Lamb as a ram or of Jesus Christ as a warrior which makes the traditional masculine image of power the image of salvation," Collins said.

Ms. Collins added that the Apocalypse creates a world in which women are placed in two categories. "The first category is Jezebels and harlots or as pure brides. Women who have not been portrayed as complete individuals but as stereotypes of good and bad."

Stating that this image of women "was alienating and destructive for both women and men," Ms. Collins urged the audience to be critical of the text themselves and to see if the way that the text is used is justified.

INFANT FORMULA ADVICE

To the Editor:

Dr. Joseph Villar and Dr. J.M. Belsan in an article entitled "An Analysis of Infant Formulas," in the Sept. 19, 1981 issue of P.H. Lancet, a British Medical Journal, the nutritional status in developing countries is reflected by socioeconomic factors. According to their report, poor mothers in underdeveloped countries were only able to provide 69 percent of the infant's protein requirements at birth, falling to 51 percent at three months of age. An estimated 123 percent of calorie requirements were met at birth, falling to 55 percent at three months.

Advocates of infant formula also point out that many Third World mothers are themselves undernourished. These mothers, they claim, are incapable of providing sufficient nutrition for their children. The World Health Organization believes that only 1 to 3 percent of all these mothers are physically incapable of breastfeeding.

The problems attributed to the safety of infant formula because of water contamination, lack of refrigeration, and overutilization can be applied to all water based foods which make up the traditional infant diet. The problem lies not with the formula itself but with the problem of unsanitary conditions. Removing infant formulas from the market would only women the situation, infant formula advocates claim.

Although infant formula can be used safely under proper environmental conditions, many problems arise when it is used in underdeveloped countries. Some of these difficulties stem from the inadequate levels of hygiene. In infant formula is mixed with polluted water and fed to infants... and often not sterilized; (3) many mothers cannot read the instructions for safe preparation of the formula. Improperly prepared formula can result in, among other effects, death from diarrhea induced dehydration; (4) bottle fed infants in the Third World mean a greater risk of infection due to a lack of immunization, which is transmitted by water and which are crucial in protecting the life of an infant in the early stages of life; (4) infant formula is very expensive in relation to the family income of most Third World nations. This amount inevitably results in the droppings of the infant formulas to lower the supply, this dilution leads to malnutrition.

Ironically, the infant formulas are promoted as being “better” for the neo-wealthy:

Second Scene to produce

Duel of Angels, a tragic comedy written by the French dramatist Jean Giraudoux, is being performed by Doug Murphy, as part of the series of Second Scene Productions on February 19 and 20.

The play is being presented in celebration of the famous French dramatist's 100th birthday.

Mary O'Neil, who plays Lucille in the drama, described it as a "very challenging; a definite 'actor's play'." It deals with people who are extra-ordinary, very French, and given to long, eloquent speeches. The cast is therefore challenged to present the play without letting it lapse into melodrama.

She added that "Giraudoux was a very romantic writer with a certain 'magical' quality of fantasy in his plays. We are trying to evoke this sense here."

The plot revolves around a dramatic conflict developed between the characters Lucile and Paula: Lucile is the innocent; a girl so pure in mind and body that she can 'see evil' in other people in the form of little, slimy creatures on their bodies. Paula is her very opposite; a figure of lust and promiscuity. She tries, in the course of the drama, to seduce Lucile and turn her from her innocent ways. The duel between them flares up when Paula creates a malicious lie, hoping to corrupt Lucile with guile and trickery.

Professor Reginald Bait, who directs the play, summed it up as "an interesting play. It deals with people who are extraordinary, very French, and given to long, eloquent speeches. The cast is therefore challenged to present the play without letting it lapse into melodrama."

He described that "Giraudoux was a very romantic writer with a certain 'magical' quality of fantasy in his plays. We are trying to evoke this sense here."

Second Scene: Productions, he believes them to be a "cruel outgrowth of the regular main stage productions. Second Scene gives everyone involved, from cast to director, a chance to work at something different and exciting to experience and benefit from different styles of drama."

"In the case of the limited resources and a desire to experiment, the performances will take place in an open stage arrangement in the lobby of O'Laughlin Auditorium. Seating will be limited on a first-come, first-served basis. Reserved tickets may be obtained by calling 284-4444. The price of admission will be $1.00."

Duel of Angels is a difficult play to perform and a definite idea as being the "conflict between a pure, saintly, ideal sort of person, trying to keep herself and still remain a member of society, and the whole rest of society who won't leave her alone. Society sees her as a threat and despises her because of her very 'saneness.' In other words, the conflict is between purity and licentiousness."

Tari Brown

"How come, Simon?"

"I think next year that I might want to have a little privacy of my own."

"So why tell me?"

"You don't look very busy. Besides, I need someone to help me investigate possible rooms."

"Oh, Okay. Where do we start?"

"I made a list of rooms that I found in the classifieds."

"Great. Do you have a preference for size, location, male or female dorm?"

"I don't have to worry about that."

"Right. Why don't we just go take a look?"

"Let's go."

Simon and I left the office and trekked through the lush to 041 Lyons Annex. There we were greeted by two of the quad's in-habitants, Maura Murphy and Mary Kay McDonald. Gladly offering our request for a tour, Maura led us into the bedrooms. Simon spotted a stuffed toy way up on the ceiling, hanging from the ceiling radiator. We taped a plastic cup to the radiator so that the air could circulate, and the stuffie was soon airborne. It dealt with people who are extraordinary, very French, and given to long, eloquent speeches.

Very interesting, we said. What about noise, Simon asked. Before they got carpet they could hear everything that anyone above them saw, even whispers. The radiators bung a little. Like railroad cars, Mary Kay interjected. When the water pipes are just starting up, they run like a motor for forty-five minutes at a time. Sometimes it sounds like the wall or the radiator will explode; but outside of that, it's very quiet.

Simon didn't look too pleased. Maura noticed, and quickly pointed out the room's many advantages.

We have our own shower at the end of the hall. No huge lines in the morning. You have to keep the outside fan on so that your shampoo doesn't freeze and steam up the bathroom for about fifteen minutes before you use it but other than that, you couldn't ask for more.

"Let's try 228 Cavanaugh. It's a modern artist might have called a painting of this room, Random Blotsches of Color of the Moment. Not being a painter, I would have called it Random Plots of Closets, Paper, Debris, etc., of the Moment, Room, Day, Wash, etc."

At the sight of this mess, I began to fear for Simon. I had become ac-customed to his heartfelt desire for peace and order. This was definitely not within Simon's criteria so I politely hinted to the roommates that we had other rooms to see. They casually said goodbye and we took our exit.

"I'm sorry, Simon. Maybe we should have checked these places out before we started visiting them. If I were you, I would rather live in that empy McDonald's Quarter Pounder container than live in this."

"That's okay. Let's try again."

"Are you sure? They say, 'three strikes and you're out.'"

"Let's try 228 Cavanaugh. It's closer to home."

Off we went to the North Quad. I was hoping that this excursion would be less deterring to Simon if not a little profitable. We were pleasantly surprised to find three and a half roommates, Jim Wasilak, Phil Hayes, and Jenny Johnson, who maintained an orderly and surprisingly tractive room. Unfortunately, my hopes faded with every minute spent there. Outside the room we could hear the hollowing echoes of voices in the stairwell, the metal doors of the waste and laundry chute clacking shut and a strange thumping noise. Upon questioning, they told us that this was the start of the section generally congregate outside their wall and rhythmically tap their fingers on the platter.

Simon had started to do a bit of closer inspection and came upon someumps on the wall by the baseboards. One of the roommates explained that they had wanted a place to romp and experiment with the walls. They had chipped it away and repainted it but it was growing back. It grew there because the bathroom was right next door. That fact was obvious by the visible presence of the fan and clouded glass directly outside their window.

There's a bit of noise but that's about all. Except in the warm weather. When it gets warm, all the windows get opened up and they, somehow, frequently, have to institute met-hods to prevent their room from smelling like the bathroom.

I was a little queasy about this room but even more so when Simon ran to the me and exclaimed that he had found a fuzzy creature living under the beds. I tried to settle him down by telling him that they just were just dust bunnies but Simon was not convinced.

We thanked the three roommates and turned to leave.

"Where to, Simon?"

"Maybe I can persuade a very kind alumnus to create a facility for me to live in."

"I don't know, why not."

"I think someone had better have a talk with someone, though. Those were the worst rooms on campus."

"Yeh, I think you're right."

No telltale surprises for ‘Tale of the Tapes’

I can now be revealed that since 1962 I have been secretly taping more than 50,000 telephone calls and conversations that took place in my principal place of business, the Square Office, so called because of its shape.

Three conversations have been indexed by librarians and excerpts are being made available to the public. Historians, of course, will be able to read the full text of these conversations, which are considered to be an important new source of information about the great progress of determinators in the United States.

Excerpts of some of the most interesting tapes follow here:

Me: Hello there (indistinguishable) I certainly hope so. Did you bring the (indistinguishable)?

Other: Yes I think Wangan... Friday by the latest

Me: Have you bratled the wingle with Mingkone?

Other: Nonon, Nonon and that fool (indistinguishable)

Me: Good. Well see that you have that.

Other: Give my regards to (indistinguishable)

Me: To who?

Other: To whom. (indistinguishable)

Me: Yes, thanks.

Finally I think that all this that it's difficult to anticipate how history will interpret these conversations in the light of what has happened since Yalta and Camp David.

The basic question one asked oneself is these: will these conversations have any profound effect on our long term relations with China and second, did my wife realize, at the time, that I was having these conversations without her knowledge?

The second excerpt is considered by some to be, if anything, even more revealing.

Me: Hello Woman's voice: If you get a chance. Me: Yes woman: It will? Not if I can help it, it won't. Me: OK, if I get a chance.

Andy Rooney

Woman: (uninterrupting) You wouldn't dare say that if (indistinguishable) I was around.

Me: What ever happened to (indistinguishable) anywhere?

Third Voice: Howard Hunt certainly never did woman: No I can't help it.

Me: What else? Lamb chops, broccoli and what else?

Woman: Yes, alright. Fine. Thank you.

Third voice: And Howard Hunt, too. Me: See you soon.

Many interpretations have been put on this conversation held in the Square Office. I believe the truth of the matter is that it was the day I had a flat tire in the driveway and took my wife's car without telling her and she was so mad she didn't go to the store for groceries. She called me to do the errands while we were waiting there was a crossed wire.

For several years I've been reading excerpts from recordings made in the Out Office and I can't make heads or tails of them. The most important thing they reveal is how badly writers write dialogue. It doesn't sound anything like the way people really talk to each other because it makes worse.

Complete transcripts of the tapes made in my Square Office are available by writing to Tapes, Box (indistinguishable).

Writing, playing

Grassey knows both angles

These days, instead of writing stories about the Notre Dame basketball team, Grassey is a member of the team. Grassey, a 6-foot senior from Hackettstown, N.J., vividly recalls the day that Coach Digger Phelps talked to him about playing for the Irish. "It was the day after the Bookstore Basketball Finals last fall," he remembers. "I saw Digger in the Sports Information Office (where Grassey works as a student assistant). He said, 'I'd like to talk to you about playing for us.' I thought he was joking. But when I entered his office later and he explained what he wanted of me, I was shocked. 'Shocked' seems like a mild term for someone who was about to have his dream realized.

"I have dreamed for a long time about being a Notre Dame basketball player," Grassey says. "I tried out for the team each of my three years, but I had resigned myself to the fact that I wasn't going to play. It took a while for me to get over that feeling; it stuck in me."

Grassey was a good basketball player at Huntington High School in New York, but not good enough to play for a Division I school. He was recruited by 46 colleges coming out of high school, but never received a scholarship offer.

"I was recruited on the basis of potential, not past performance," Grassey says. "I don't even remember my high school statistics. There isn't much to remember." Grassey considered attending other colleges, including a few Ivy League schools. "I might have been able to play four years at places such as Brown," he says, "but I decided to enroll at Notre Dame because I wanted a good education and a good future. I never had any idea that I'd end up on this team. In fact, I thought my basketball career was over."

Just how did Grassey end up on the squad? "I think it was a matter of being in the right place at the right time," he explains. "Digger needed a big man for practice. I knew him from my contacts with him as a sportswriter. He respected me and knew that I'd give everything I have to the team."

The role of a walk-on is not easy. "I have to work hard at every practice, but don't participate in many games. Grassey knew this when he accepted Phelps' offer.

"There's no whole lot of glory involved," he says. "I basically have to help the team in preparation for the opposing front lines, playing the types of defenses that our opponents play. It's a lot of work, but it's also very satisfying."

Phelps has not been disappointed with Grassey's contribution. "Gary gives 100 percent of all his time," Phelps explains. "Digger needed a big man for practice, I knew him from my contacts with him as a sportswriter. He respected me and knew that I'd give everything I have to the team."

Grassey has some comments about his ability as a basketball player. "I have no pretensions about being a starter or logging a lot of playing time," he says. "But my game has improved tremendously since I joined the team. I try to hold my own, and I don't back down. I know a lot more about the game now than I did when I first arrived. Grassey has been close to Notre Dame athletes since he arrived four years ago. He worked as a student manager during his first semester, being fortunate enough to land a job with the team. He began working at The Observer during his second semester. At the beginning of his junior year, he began working at Notre Dame's Sports Information Department. During his career as a writer and a manager, Grassey met several Notre Dame coaches (including Phelps).

"I'm a very fortunate person," Grassey claims. "I'm blessed able to view the sports scene from a few different perspectives. It's very interesting to know what goes on behind the scenes."

Now that Grassey has seen both sides of the fence, he is able to more fully understand the conflicts that sometimes arise between reporters and sports personalities.

"A sportswriter can be educated to a game over a matter of years," he surmises. "By asking good questions, he can gain a knowledge of what happens behind the scenes. With the writer he has the advantage of being a very fortunate person."

Grassey claims that Grassey's situation is enviable. "It's got a few different perspectives on the situation," he says. "Gary now knows what's it's like to be a reporter, a spectator, and a student athlete."

Now that Grassey is familiar with see GRASSEY page 9

The annual Irish/Fordham game is always a rough and tumble affair. The Irish hold a 10-6 edge in the series, one of the Rams' three wins being a 64-68 win under Head Coach Digger Phelps during his one year tenure in 1970-71. Notre Dame has defeated Fordham eight straight times, their last loss at home being in 72-71 during Phelps' first season under the Dome. The Irish game from the Meadowlands will be televised by ESPN at 9 p.m. Thursday night, as well as 3 a.m. and 4 a.m. on Friday. Jim Simpson and Dick Vitale will handle the announcing chores. The South Carolina game will mark Notre Dame's first and last appearance on CBS TV this winter. Gary Bender and Milky "I Hope Skip Desjardins is at the game" Packer will broadcast the 3 p.m. game.

PRIZE CATCH — When Phelps gained a verbal commitment from Sunshine guard Joe Buchanan Friday, he landed a player who many consider as the leading point guard in the country. Midwest Basketball News rates the 6-2 Buchanan tops among its point guard choices, citing his "Lester肪body, excellent quickness and his ability to run an offense, see the whole court and pass well."

With a catch like that, no one has to talk about "the one that got away."

SOME THINGS JUST HAPPEN...
NBC cancels Irish-Wolverines BBgame

By MICHAEL ORTMAN
Sports Writer

NBC will not televise the March 7 Notre Dame-Michigan basketball game, The Observer learned recently.

The network's scheduled telecast of Notre Dame's season finale in Pontiac, in conjunction with a Michigan game, was dropped through with the payment already contracted, even though there will be two of our best players, both tickets include an additional match time.
