Pope assails government

VATICAN CITY (AP) — Pope John Paul II, his voice booming with emotion, yesterday claimed the pope Rome's central synagogue, which received the leader of the murderers termination of Jews in World War II. John Paul declared, raising his voice.

The pope said the Polish Parliament’s hanging Friday of Solidarity - which was the only independent labor union in the Soviet bloc - violated "the fundamental rights of man and society." The union had been suspended when martial law was declared Dec. 13.

One of these men, Dr. John Pastore, talked about his experience in a "courage and determination" Club yesterday afternoon, after Pastore, who graduated from Notre Dame in 1963, is a member of the Board of the Directors of the International Physicians for Prevention of Nuclear War.

The group of Americans and Soviet physicians, including Dr. Eugene Chazov, Leonid Brezhnev's personal physician, discussed "in a non-political way the medical dangers of a nuclear war."

According to Pastore, it is not only the physical casualties which a nuclear war devastating but also the psychological wounds which affect the human organism.

The pope also recalled the other people Saturday.

"There's something basically different about a nuclear weapon and a conventional weapon," he said. "In a nuclear war, the devastation is only beginning after a bomb explodes.

Pastore pointed out.

Because of the great damage a nuclear bomb creates, Pastore and other prelates were among those who urged the United Nations to pass a resolution to make nuclear war illegal.

WASHINGTON (AP) — Notre Dame President Theodore Hesburgh says the nuclear peace movement may reunite religious and scientists in a struggle for the sake of the globe.

Hesburgh was interviewed on cable News Network's "Newsmaker Sunday," he said he has been working with religious and scientific leaders from around the world, including the Soviet Union, China and other Iron Curtain countries, to seek an end to the nuclear arms race. "I think we're going to see a lot more of what is generally called civil disobedience and we're going to see people going to jail to protest nuclear arms, he said.

But myself, I try to take a different attack... what I've been trying to do is... to get these two segments that really haven't been together since Galileo, and bring them together on this moral issue which is probably the greatest moral issue that mankind or womankind has faced since the beginning of time.

He called it "the ability to reverse creation, the ability to not destroy what God created but what all of us created civilization and culture and art and music and science and all the political institutions... everything, to wipe it out."

Galileo was the 17th Century Italian astronomer forced by the Catholic Church in 1633 to retract his belief that the earth moves around the sun.

Hesburgh, 68, who has presided over Notre Dame for three decades, recently helped enlist 200 military veterans to sign a letter to Presi­dant Reagan urging him to move on arms control talks with the Soviets. "I find (Reagan) moving some, what is that direction at the moment, he said.

I think the president is in a position to take great leadership on this and he would make a great name in history if he was the one that moved toward the abolition of nuclear weapons.

Swedish air force

Warplanes search for submarine

HERGA NAVAL BASE, Sweden (AP) — Air force warplanes joined yesterday in a suspected Soviet-bloc submarine said to be trapped in Horn Bay.

Officials said no new contact had been made with the mysterious ves­sel. Two air force Viggens planes took to the skies over the 30,500 sq. meters of water yesterday. It was the first time the planes had flown in the operation.

Reporters saw one plane rounding over Horn Bay, where a sub is believed to be trapped, and the other flew closer to the site where a second submarine is said to be lurking.

It was the first time the air force searched for a sub in Sweden since the search began after an alleged submarine’s periscope was first spotted. An army official said he assumed the air force planes were taking pictures.

Officials said Saturday that a Soviet helicopter was believed to be from a Warsaw Pact country, but Swedish officials, adding to the mystery, have refused to publicly speculate on its nationality and merely refer to it as a "foreign" ves­sel and a "probable submarine.

"We're trying to avoid that implication by trying to take a light note, he would make a great name in history if he was the one that moved toward the abolition of nuclear weapons."

Hesburgh writes two segments

I think the president is in a position to take great leadership on this and he would make a great name in history if he was the one that moved toward the abolition of nuclear weapons.

Ask about Reagan's recent charge that the U.S. peace move­ment was being manipulated by outside forces, Hesburgh said, "There's always the sense that this movement is being manipulated by the Russians and that's why I've tried to avoid that implication by avoiding the Russians.

"We're talking about doing it across the world, we're talking about the absolute verification in every case. We're not talking unusual interest in social issues, although he added, "In some ways I would wish they'd get a little more excited about the great issues that face us in the world."

Hesburgh defended today's col­leges students against charges they are interested only in jobs. "They have been somewhat injected by their elders insisting that they learn something and get a job the day they graduate," he said. "During tough times that's understandable."

Supported the students talks to are deeply concerned about social issues, although he added, "In some ways I would wish they'd get a little more excited about the great issues that face us in the world."

Hesburgh, whom former Presi­dent Nixon fired as chairman of the U.S. Civil Rights Commission in 1972, said he viewed the current administration's handling of civil rights as similar to the way the nation moved in the 1960s.

A light note, asked about the striking National Football League.

The 4-year-old brother of a toddler killed at Rome's main synagogue battled for his life yesterday as police searched for five "professional commandos" who cut down 16 other people in the grenade and submarine gun attack. Police said they are looking for five men, probably of Middle Eastern origin, and that they suspect Black June or another Palestinian terrorist group may be behind the attack. Four-year-old Gadriel Tache, who had been described in an Associated Press dispatch as a boy who was killed in the explosion that followed the attack Saturday, was shot in the head and chest. He was reported to be in critical condition at Rome's San Camillo hospital. Doc­ tors continued to struggle to save his right arm. Gadriel's 2-year-old brother Stefano was hit by shrapnel and died shortly after. Officials added three other boys to the wounded toll yesterday, bringing the total to 75.

Solidarity calls for strike

WARSAW, Poland (AP) — Responding swiftly to the outlawing of their independent union, Solidarity’s fugitive leaders yesterday called for a four-hour, nationwide strike on Nov. 10.

"As every enterprise, and at every department, a clandestine committee preparing the protest on Nov. 10 should be organized," said the statement dated Oct. 9 and signed by four of the underground union’s leaders.

"The course of the protest will decide the further strategy of the unions."

The statement called for the strike on the second anniversary of Solidarity’s registration by a Warsaw court.

Noying that Poland’s parliament, the Sejm, Friday banned Polish unions and imposed severe limits on any new unions, it said: "Solidarity exists and will exist, no matter if someone likes it or not."

That phrase was taken from a speech by Solidarity’s founder-leader Lech Walesa, who along with more than 600 other union leaders has been interned since martial law was imposed Dec. 13 and suspended the independent union.

"We appeal to all working people, no matter to which unions they belong for a massive nationwide protest against lawlessness and poverty."

Earlier yesterday, Roman Catholic Primate Jozef Glemp accused martial law of "embittering the nation" and several Warsaw priests urged calm as other signs of protest emerged against the outlawing of Solidarity.

Nine senior Solidarity leaders interned in Warsaw’s Budzka prison sent a letter condemning the ban and urging workers to boycott new unions. There were unconfirmed reports that Solidarity’s underground leadership may consider calling a nationwide strike.

In a sermon viewed here as moderate, although sharper than earlier public statements, Glemp said: "There are some many examples of trampling of man, of disrespect for man’s dignity. We wish we could free our country from such evil."

"We learned about the delegitimization of Solidarity as a trade union with real pain," he said, citing the "bitterness of recent days. But we know that what is just, what is ideal and what is good cannot perish."

The Sejm, or Parliament, Friday banned Polish unions and imposed severe limits on any new unions.

Glemp addressed more than 10,000 people who converged at the Polish parliament yesterday to honor the Rev. Maximilian Kolbe, a Franciscan friar who was canonized by Pope John Paul II at the Vatican yesterday as the 17th Polish saint in history.

Kolbe died on Aug. 14, 1941 in the Auschwitz death camp from an injection of sodium thiopental, two weeks after he volunteered to take the place of a Polish sergent in a starvation bunker.

hoopla, no great party, no splendid hand shakes with executives, only a sigh of relief. He is just of the psychological gambling, playing and one upmanship characteristic of so many of our large companies. Now he stands at a crossroads. He is unable to put on his old hat of corporate leadership and he is not content to sit back, accept employee, community or social security. He is, in a sense, choosing a new career, an avenue by which to finally do what he wants. And he is optimistic.

Because of this turn of events, my father and I now share more than ever. We see each other as participants in the same process: we know that the near future brings with it the challenges and headaches inherent in any occupation. And with this new outlook comes the all-too-familiar realization that, as we become older, my father has become smarter.

And I, am at that fork, deciding what I want to do when I pass from the world of college. This respite has given me opportunities and experiences, which my presence here commits me to cramming the men, who have already come into focus, into a meaning which he already knows so much more fully than I could ever hope.

I do not impose anything on or expect anything from my natural parents. One can rationalize that the adoptee is interested in discovering the "gift of parents," but that is not really true. As a "gift," it does not need to be repaid, and how would you go about repaying anyway? The best analogy is to an anonymous gift, which you accept even though you do not know who gave it. And what good will the information be to the adoptee, if he cannot or will not likely be brought to see that their parents will be thrilled to see their child after all these years.

It should be clear that the adoptee should not impose himself on or expect anything from his natural family, which is not to say that we should not be expected to try to get to know if the knew who they were. Why not? If the motive behind wanting to know the identity of one's natural parents is curiosity, which is perhaps the only ethical motive, then the arguments is reduced to nothing. Even if you do not consider the rights of the parents, it is hard to see what value the knowledge would have. The quest very low. And the natural parents would have been better than the foster parents, very few parents who are able and willing to raise a child would give it up, and very few parents who are unable or unwilling to raise a child would adopt an "anonymous gift," if they knew who it was. Why not impose on or expect anything from your natural parents, if they were not content to sit back and collect the protection of anonymity?

The most persuasive argument of the adoptee is that they have the "right" to know who their natural parents are. That's very fine, but this supposed right does not hold up very well under questioning. Everyone has a "right" to know if they? Their natural parents do not have any rights or responsibilities to the child they gave up. So their parents don't "owe" them anything -- certainly not an "explanation" of why they didn't keep their child. Neither does the adoptee owe anything to his/her parents. One can rationalize that the adoptee is interested in discovering the "gift of parents," but that is not really true. And what good will the information be to the adoptee, if he cannot or will not likely be brought to see that their parents will be thrilled to see their child after all these years.

Opening of adoption records: needless pain

Among the many "social rights" issues being debated in and out of the courts is the open record of adoption. If the courts decide in favor of the adoptees, they would be able to find out who their natural parents were, if they so choose. If they do not choose, or if their parents decide not to tell them, they? Their natural parents do not have any rights or responsibilities to the child they gave up. So their parents don't "owe" them anything -- certainly not an "explanation" of why they didn't keep their child. Neither does the adoptee owe anything to his/her parents. Collaboration nonreflective of artistic unity

work, "On Reflection" that came to gether last Sunday at the Snite Museum of Art represents no great art revolution. It does pose some interesting questions for those of us interested in art.

The first of these questions, as my editor discovered, is who does one get to evaluate such a work; the dance critic, the art critic, the theatre critic or the music critic? The average viewer has the same dilemma in evaluation when it is in possible to classify the experience. The second question asks about the unity of the work. Since there are no generally accepted rules and all of the elements in a collaborative piece are presented as a single unit, does the piece come across as having a single coherent meaning? Along these lines, were all of the artists involved working from the same concept? Finally, are all of the elements of the piece equally well realized?

The second question, that of unity, is by far the more important, because any viewer, critic or otherwise, is not equally well versed in every discipline, nor should the artist expect him to be in order for the work to succeed. As far as the unity of "On Reflection" is concerned, I felt that the even presented a single theme with subtle variations. Two dancers—one male, one female, one black, one white, and two musicians—one cel lo, one flute, one high, one low, performed in a black room like sculpture with shapes and forms in which the dancer related to. The work seemed to be about the age old yang-yin theme: relationships between opposites. The intricacies of movement between Wendy Taucher and Tommy Gomez, the dancers, seemed to tell the story of an intense relationship, including the mutual understanding, the exploration of self and all of each other that are carried out in the confines of the small black rooms of our lives. The cells and the flute seemed to reiterate the relating of the dancers. In the end, the women leave the space only to reappear in the door way to look out, as if they do when the man receives his sidewalk and freedom (he gazes upwards at the sky in the final) the women's opposit e and reflection, cannot completely get across the inter pretation, you say. An eloquent statement on the part of the artists, you exclaim. It would have been, except that my interpretation is not what the artists intended. Instead, the piece was meant to portray a search for permanence within a transparent environment. This difference in interpretation and meaning brings up that much debated question of whether it is important that the audience receive the artist's meaning or whether it is enough that the audience receive any meaning. If it is important that the audience receive the artist's intended meaning, then "On Reflection" fails for several reasons, all of which the director, Kenneth McCarthy, does.

To begin with, the topic of the search for permanence is not equally feasible for all media. For instance, it is very difficult to dance such an abstract concept. Because the choreographer cannot work from this specific concept, she must extrapolate and find a concept, several generations removed, which she can portray. Thus the artists are not working from the same concept.

The other problem with unity in "On Reflection" is that, in a multi media work, all elements must be equally well executed. Though all of the arts are technically competent, excellence of execution includes the idea of suitability for purpose. The space posed several problems for choreography, music and video. To be truly resolved. Because of the set and its location, the dancers were often invisible to the audience or it was difficult for a dancer to express meaning without being visible for a dancer to express meaning invisibly. Aside from the difference of my interpretation and the intended meaning, and the technical problems of the performance, the event was enjoyable. It represented a welcome sign of idea exchange in this departmental field. It offered a refreshing insight into the possibilities of an all media performance with multimedia. Although the performance was enjoyable, it is not scheduled to be repeated, Moira Johnson's sculptural space will be on display at the Snite Museum until the 24th of October. Your left foot score of 24 for Johnson's score are 26 display the St abortion, Madonna, etc.}

My hero, Cap'n Crunch

T here had never been so many requests.
Lines were forming, stretching out the doors, and out into the quad.
Cap'n Crunch was in the dining halls.
I took back almost everything I've ever said about the dining halls, SAGA, and the Notre Dame Food Service.
I now know that my chak whitebills (I happen to be in line for more instant eggs).
I walked up with orange juice, two milk, and then glanced at the cereal table.
And there, among the Sugar Snapacks, Product 19, and Cocoa Krispess, I saw him.
My hero.
Standing against a backdrop of red (I signaling the blood from battles against other breakfast cereals) in his uniform of blue, that gleam in his eye.
"Oh Captain! my Captain! Our fearful trip is done!"
(Walt Whitman — "The Ship of State")
Quickly I threw a tray over the table, locked over a half asleep blonde woman and headed for my breakfast. I saw out the corner of my eye two other people going for my juice.
I moved quickly.
I heard a monstrosity of man and spam away to the left, a PhilCater, dodging two girls carrying Tapi (a breakfast) food) with a quick jockey to the left, and a checker down my right to my night. A checker was carrying a cup of coffee and a small, 50 cents, pound of sugar, all in one hand I just put my head down and pulled right through him.
But when my partner went down, rolling the second, they made a matched pair.

I had bought time for myself, but only a few seconds.
Without any hesitation, I leaped up on a grey folding chair; I heard the steel crook, but before that could give way, I leapt.
I blew.
And blew.
Over still hungover party animals and dormers readying themselves for a day at the library. Over people talking and people moaning softly. Over instant eggs, burnt toast, spicy sausage, half empty glasses of orange juice.
It was a marvelous feeling, the wind in my face, no thing but eating. I heard the ceiling as the Cap'n kicks people below wondering what the heck I'm doing. The feeling of our God was so strong.
There's a certain piece of mind one achieves while flying like watching Kung Fu for 37 straight hours. You feel totally in control of your destiny and your hopes and dreams become attainable, life becomes joyous as all of God's creatures become infused in His own Glory.
I started my descent.
I could see the rectangular plastic case that held my Cap'n. Quaker Oats was enroled to blue, that smily with his even sillier hat next to it, also in blue. The front side of the cap, which the people are used to take out my claim for a sugar filled breakfast, became larger by the second.
For a minute, it looked like the Cap'n himself was looking at me — no, with me hurrying to, to get that last mile of his delicious cereal, I now sure that those golden nuggets of sugar made their new home in a true coc-coc — a lover, someone who would respect him the next morning.
It came closer, and closer, and closer.
I couldn't smell his face.
I swooped down and grabbed that plastic box and both of us slid across the table, knocking over those other cereals to the floor, bang, bang, bang, like a machine gun, but I didn't care at all — I had my Cap'n Crunch.
I reached up and swiped a bowl from a woman standing where the Frosted Flakes had been, opened up the box, and saw.

I thought this was the end of the road.
I thought this couldn't possibly be a moment of hope.

But within ten feet of my marooned Cap'n.
It was fourth down and twenty and time was running out quick.
I grabbed a tray off the table next to me and hurled it at the Cap'n. My flying program took the first one by surprise, and he wound down like a wounded pup.
The second guy saw my maneuver and ducked quickly. But when his partner went down, rolling block under the second, they made a matched pair.

Hotel reservations in the course of the past few weeks is making everyone give these two words any serious contemplation.
Chris Fraser

The Bible tells us that Mary and Joseph were forced to stay in a man ger because they hadn't set aside a deposit for a hotel room.

I think that was how the story went, but this is merely the exception that proves the rule. The fact is that mankind's philosophers, theologians, writers, and politicians, along with nearly everyone else, could care less about hotel reservations. The reason for this, I believe, is obvious. None of these people ever cared about their parents or their parents' room in South Bend during a foot ball weekend.

I have — and the experience has initiated some personal reactions to hotel reservations (no perception, no reception of events) that even Freud could not have anticipated.
It all began last spring when my parents told me that they had decided to make a trip to Notre Dame for the Miami football game. Naturally, I was excluded to secure some local accommodations for their two night visit. I assumed the duty confidently (after all the weekend was six months away) and proceeded to call South Bend, where my parents had stayed once before. I was informed by the nasal-voiced clerk that reservations were only given out by written request. So I scrambled up a short note on a piece of torn notebook paper, dropped it into the mouth of the hotel on the park for getting it all took was of so early.

I called again about a month later. I got a card in the mail from Ramada South Bend telling me to make my reservations were all filled that weekend.
Still naive in my knowledge of the diffic-ties that lie ahead, I asked my parents that there were a lot of hotels in South Bend and that, of course, I would take care of it. Well, you know how those sort of things work, I finally got around to calling places in the middle of August, I began to discover some of the negative effects hotel reservations could have on my life.
We're overbooked ten rooms.
I was brusquely informed by the clerk that I had now given up on South Bend and was concentrating my efforts on Elkhart or Niles. To my utter amazement, there was still no room at the Ramada.
Once again, I was at the mercy of the Yellow Pages, line by line, dialing, calling, each and every place. I was certain there was a conspiracy against me.
Thus, I was more than a little surprised when a place called the Shad-rock Motel in Elkhart actually gave me reservations. Not one to tempt fate, I journeyed down the roll trail, through the streets of Elkhart, across some ominous railroad tracks, and finally pulled into the door parking lot. It had the Shankmoor Motel some fifty minutes later. I don't want to say this place was sleazy, but my friend Chris, who had chauffeured me on this perilous trip, remarked that they must have charged by the hour and that mine were certainly the first reservations they ever had.
It is an indisputable fact that I finally got a room at Quality Inn in South Bend the next day of the game. How did I do so? Well, in a last ditch effort, I just pretended that I was my father and made up some story about my delinquent son who was supposed to call for reservations months now. Who knows? I believe that story like that might have happened, I've made reservations for almost every family in South Bend and Junior Parent's game this fall.

The various purple, blue, red, orange, and white rectangular metal bars were the result of an art project by senior art student Angie Michelutti. According to Jim Parallel, SMC Art Department Chairman, the students were doing research on both space itself and the concept of form and space as types of sculpture.
Thus, "a series of objects may be placed by color and arrangement to create a depth of field." The purpose of this project was to create types of art both "the artist and the viewer could participate in," commented Parallel. The students selected the size and the kinds of material they would use to create their outdoor sculptures with the intention of creating such sculptures that could be termed a "happening," according to Parallel, rather than merely an observable object. One of the four projects created by the class, Michelutti's consisted of 25 in 30 variously-colored rectangular bars, sized 12 to 20 inches, banded into the ground at different heights and arranged on the field in front of the Art Building at SMC.
The angles, according to Michelutti did not matter, but certainly could have been "the positions of a person," as the objects were varied from 90 degree angles for the white ones to a laying-down position for the darker ones. The crux of her particular project was to create a "sculpture" (as the viewer can interpret space in a different way), commented Michelutti. "An ordinary field can become a site for art objects." The objects were removed from the lawn on Wednesday, September 29, for security reasons, but will soon be on display again inside the Moreau Art Building for those who missed the opportunity, but would still like to view Michelutti's sculpture. The other three outdoor sculpture projects yielded perplexed expressions and surprised looks from SMC students during their dates of display. These projects included a tree wrapping, an outdoor room, and a light sculpture. The "wrapped trees" created an environment in which the viewer could "become enclosed," according to Parallel. The "light-sculptures" consisted of a group of lights arranged in the trees by the students. When turned on at night, they created a stunning display of artistic arrangement. The "outdoor room" was an at tempt to create a room which the viewer would feel a part of, within an urban setting. The students brought in huge sticks to create the "room," weaving dead limbs together to create the structure's exterest.

St. Mary's volleyball rolls over Tri-State U.

The Saint Mary's Volleyball team boosted their record Friday night to 6-3-1 with a victory over Tri-State University. The Cardinals came out with Trojans in three easy games to take the match.

Rita Schubert, Saint Mary's "serving specialist" provided eight points in the Bellies game route of the Trojans by a score of 15-2. The second game was taken in similar fashion, with Mary Greven and senior captain Peg Pietchel each scoring four points to win the game 15-7. The final game, however, was truly a team effort, with all players contributing in the 15-12 hard game win.

"Despite the weak competition, we remained sharp all evening and played well as a team," commented Assistant Coach Mary Greven.

Ann Visco played exceptionally well as our middle setter and spiker, as well as our opposite hitter during the victory," Klebba added.

Sophomore Ann Boutron was another standout, winning several points as she exploded for nine completed sets and five points in the final game.

Pielisch the emotional leader of this squad, made up largely of freshmen and sophomores who show much potential. She said the successful completion of their schedule this season, and in seasons to come.

The Cardinals will host 28th ranked Lincoln College at 7:30 p.m. Saturday night against Goshen College and Saint Francis College tomorrow night at 8 p.m. in the Angela Athletic Facility.
Irish demolish TMI in JV football game

Notre Dame's JV football team upped its record to 2-0 with a 64-25 plastering of the Tennessee Military Institute yesterday on Cartier Field. After trailing by scores of 1-0 and 17-14 in the first quarter the Irish offense exploded for 37 second-quarter points to take control of the contest.

Putting on the offensive show that ran up 484 yards of total offense were Quarterbacks Todd Lezon (6-9-116 yards) and Kevin Smith (5-8-109 yards), each throwing for a single touchdown. Their prime targets on the day were Bumper Schiro (5-85 yards-1 TD), and Brian Behmer (2-66 yards-1 TD). Smith also caught one pass for 35 yards.

The running game was also in high gear with Lester Flemmons rushing for 111 yards on 15 carries, including a long gainer of 64 yards and two touchdowns. Dan Damuck was next carrying 8 times for 38 yards and two touchdowns.

Hal Von Wy1 and Chris Stone shared the kicking duties for the Irish with neither missing a scoring opportunity. No Notre Dame kicker has missed an extra point or a field goal this year.

The JV team is scheduled for two more home games this year - an October 24th meeting with Illinois, and a Halloween game with Cincinnati.

Memo to Miami

Never underestimate tradition

Going into Saturday's ND-Miami game, I was unsure just how the whole thing was going to turn out — that is, until I got hold of a copy of Friday's Miami Hurricane, the Miami student newspaper.

I knew that Miami had a tough defense, a coach with pro experience and a substitute quarterback who, although not quite as good as his predecessor, had a lot of talent in his own right.

What I didn't know was that Miami, its coaches, its players and its students had an incredibly cocky attitude.

But as I read through Friday's Hurricane, I knew that Notre Dame was going to win.

Here are some excerpts from that edition:

"There is a hunching suspicion that you have not really arrived until you can invade South Bend and beat the damned Gipper." Miami has never done that. Tomorrow they will get the chance to do just that. They will." — Jean Claude de la France, Sports Editor.

"You're not acres away from their stadium, so their traditions, the damned Gipper or anything like that." — Kim Heiton, Miami assistant coach.

"There is a degree of confidence on this Hurricane team that will make them come out and chase the ghosts ... ." — Our buddy Jean Claude, again.

That was Miami's attitude entering Saturday's game — forget the tradition and the "damned Gipper." We're going to win.

Instead, the Irish won the game, 16-14, on a last-minute field goal by Mike Johnston, and thereby continued from page 12 it was the team in tackles this season in all games. Larry Moriarty are both expected to return.

The defense also came through when it counted the most. After its fourth down stop in the second quarter, the Notre Dame offense was able to move the ball with authority, almost at will, at crucial points in the fourth quarter.

It was almost as if there were a 12-man man on the field for Notre Dame.

The ghost of George Gipp, perhaps? Nah, you say, it couldn't be.

Well, then, who mysteriously opened up those gaping holes for Phil Carter on the final drive, when none of Miami's linemen? And who helped Miami call that illegal quarterback sneak on third and two when the Irish needed the first down to keep the drive going?

It was as if Major Taylor, with a six-yard TD run, was back.

There was the familiar sight of the Notre Dame football tradition can be magical, mysterious, almost eerie at times. But it is real, not a myth, opponents should accept it as part of the game plan and attack it accordingly.

But it should never be laughed at, sneered at, cursed or just plain overlooked.

And that was Miami's fatal mistake Saturday.

of Riches in the second quarter led to a fumble that was recovered by Mike Golic, in for the injured Griffith, stopped on six plays on its last two possessions. In its last full possession Miami needed only two yards in two plays to pick up the clinching first down. But sophomores Mike run for the injured Griffith, stopped Speddy Neal for no gain. A questionable quarterback sack by Rich on third down gained only one yard as tackle Ed Golic bludgeoned Mark Zavagnin stopped him cold.

"We knew we had to stop them as quickly as possible and get the 'fence off the ball," said Zavagnin. "I was a little surprised, but they didn't have any three down play — but that's something they have to live with, not us." All of which set the mob scene at the end as Johnston booted his 32-yard field goal with just 11 seconds showing on the clock.

When we were marching down the field, I tried not to think about what was going on out there," said Johnston. "I just kept kicking the ball in the net on the sidelines and tried to stay loose."

"Sure I was nervous (when he went in), but when you get into a situation like that you just have to let your mind go blank and concentrate on kicking the ball. I knew it was good when I kicked it — then I went crazy," Johnston, and his teammates, had good reason.

"The Notre Dame football team showed a lot of heart and a lot of character," praised the jubilant Faust. "They came away from a lot of adversity and played a heckuva football game."

As Parseghian would tell anyone, adversity does that for you.

IRISH ITEMS — Kevin Griffith and Larry Moriarty are both expected to be ready for the Arizona game next week. Griffith sustained a knee bruise while Moriarty suffered a sprained ankle. Moriarty is now averaging 6.2 yards a carry after gaining 66 yards on nine carries on Saturday. Mike Larkin and Mark Zavagnin each had nine tackles to lead the Notre Dame defense. Larkin has now led or tied for the team in tackles in this season's four games. "I gained only 57 yards rushing in 31 attempts," said Rich. "I had 12 of 25 for 151 yards and two touchdowns while throwing one interception to Zavagnin.

Irish 'come of age,' beat Miami on late FG

By LOUIE SOMOGYI

Sports Writer

"Adversity elicits talent which under prosperous conditions would have remained dormant,"

— Ara Parseghian

There was perhaps one significant question that still needed answering before the Miami game about the 1982 Notre Dame football team. How would it respond in adverse situations in game conditions?

Quarterback Blair Kiel along with many of his teammates perhaps found the answer in last year's 3-7-1 5-1 tie with Western Michigan on Okt. 8th. Kiel had one or two bad calls but then we had a lot of high balls." He would later add another much the kids have turned this Dame, Hertegen took a cross that we had to keep our composure when we had a good opportunity to score early but then we had lost our composure in the Miami end zone with only 2:58 left in the contest. It was hard to judge a They had one or two chances to score early but then we had a lot of big breaks. But for these few breakdowns, the Irish defense dominated the Cardinals to thoroughly that McCarthy would have needed to set up shop at midfield to see any action at all. "The wind was pretty much a fror," commented Harkenrider on the advantage the Irish enjoyed in the first half. "It was hard to judge a lot of big breaks." The second half gave evidence of this as two months by the Louisville Iringer resulted in further Irish scoring. Minutes after McCarthy made a save at point blank for Notre Dame, Hertegen took a cross that had cleared off the goalie's hands and nudged it into the net for a 3-0 Irish lead. Then, with less than eight minutes to play, Harkenrider scored again with a shot that darted through the keeper's legs — a scene that typified the Cards' day.

"They are a good team," said Huer. "They are in our region so this was a pretty important game as far as our getting as NCAA tournament bid." The Irish will play this Tuesday as they travel to the University of Chicago but Hunter sees Wednesday's clash with Akron as the next major hurdle on the schedule. "That," he said, "will be a big one."
