Lebanon president gives plans to U.N.:

UNITED NATIONS (AP) — President Amin Gemayel, on the eve of meeting with U.S. President Ronald Reagan yesterday, hailed U.S. efforts to rid his country of the foreign armies that have turned Lebanon into “an arena for terror and violence.”

Addressing the General Assembly, Gemayel also denounced “the immediate and unconditional withdrawal of all non-Lebanese foreign forces from Lebanon.”

The Lebanese president called on the 150-nation body “to help Lebanon regain its real independence and rebuild its economy.”

U.S. Ambassador Jeanette J. Kirkpatrick and her seven-member delegation joined in the sustained applause that greeted Gemayel’s demand. Syrian and Israeli envoys, whose countries have deployed armies in Lebanon, sat passively.

Ascertaining there could not be Middle East peace without a stable Lebanon, Gemayel said “We appeal all positive steps taken by our friends in the international community on behalf of a united and sovereign Lebanon — steps such as the United States’ initiative on Lebanon — which we shall expect to the fullest.”

Gemayel was addressing the Security Council later yesterday to ask to extend the mandate of the 7,000-man U.N. peacekeeping force in southern Lebanon, since the force was overruled by Israeli troops in the June 6 invasion, the council has received Gemayel’s request.

Gemayel, who has given the latest mandate expires midnight tonight, told the Security Council that the force would withdraw if any resolution passed that would “immediately and permanently” rescind or limit an Algerian-sponsored resolution that had been adopted June 26.

Gemayel had earlier told the assembly that “there could not be any peace on the East Coast of this continent today. The lives of our children and grandchildren will depend on the outcome of this conflict in the Middle East.”

...Israel compromise proposed

The compromise would amend the international Telecommunications Union to the United Nations, which issued its report on the issue after the International Telecommunications Union would be closed. A non-aligned ambassador said the outcome hinged on the large contingent of black African countries.

Algeria’s delegate said the agency has a precedent for the move against South Africa because of its apartheid policy of racial segregation.

“Israel, like South Africa, should have no place in our union,” he said.

An American delegate said that many states considered illegal the moves against South Africa and Portugal, who also were excluded nine years ago. Under the Portuguese, attacked for “colonial” policies, regained membership following the 1975 independence of Angola and Mozambique.

In proposing the compromise, Britain said it hoped to defuse a “time bomb” that could wreck the conference and cause irreparable damage to the U.N. It said other countries would seriously resist “the value of continued membership.”

The compromise would amend the Algerian resolution to express alarm over the grave Middle East situation resulting from Israel’s invasion of Lebanon. It removes references to “wronging Israel.”

The compromise was co-sponsored by Australia, Belgium, Canada, Denmark, Ireland, Norway, and Italy.

Glee Club tour includes a spot on "Today Show"

The “Today Show” appearance is definitely one of the highlights of the tour, according to Glee Club President Brian Victor.

It has not been decided which selections the group will sing on the “Today Show” appearance. But Victor said that the “Notre Dame Victory” definitely will be included.

The final contact for scheduling the “Today Show” appearance was

About 40 Holy Cross residents were ap­prehended by Notre Dame Security last night, after they had started a small fire in a first floor bathroom. As part of Holy Cross Hall's annual "Self-Proclaimed Viking Night," the students entered the dining hall, broke open a locked arm of the fire alarm, and hid in the kitchen, eating without utensils, while chanting traditional Viking slogans. According to a student coordinator of the dining hall, "The food was getting cold, so we started to trip on it, and eventually began to throw it." Both exit doors were locked while security personnel regained the lock and took aid and ID's. The students must report to Dean of Students Jim Roemer regarding the incident. — The Observer

Two South Bend juveniles were taken into cus­ tody for an alleged burglarly at Notre Dame apartments this morning, according to South Bend Police Captain Ed Friend. We have not learned the identity of the two young men involved, however, the two-day escape from the back seat of the police car. Friend said that police located the two males, and that an investigation is in the process. A Notre Dame student who witnessed the incident said when he saw "two guys start climbing up a balcony" leading to a second-floor apartment. A resident of the apartment talked to police later that someone had tried to break into the apartment. The Notre Dame student said he had noticed the same two males walking around the apartment grounds a few minutes before the incident, and decided to notify police or apartment security. — The Observer

Bess Truman, the childhood sweetheart and closest confidante of President Harry S. Truman, died yesterday at age 97 in Independence. Mo. "The old engine just ran out," said Dr. Wallace Graham, the family physician since the mid-1940s. "We've known for a while that the end was near." The public knew her as Bess, but Truman called her "The Lass," and looked upon her as his personal advisor. Graham said Mrs. Truman died of congestive heart failure at the Truman home in Independence, where she was under constant care. Bessie was buried in the same grave that her husband, who was pronounced dead at 3 a.m. in an emergency room of Research Medical Center in Kansas City, Mo. Social Security’s old-age trust fund will have to borrow $800 billion shortly after Election Day to cover the Nov. 3 check, the Old-age, Survivors and Disability Insurance program has been meeting its obligations and is currently running a $1 billion shortcoming. Steve Kiss, a veteran of World War II, said yesterday. "They can’t afford to have money, so they can’t afford lawyers. Instead they are going to stick their necks out to protest a law that exists. He then contacted other disabled veterans in the area in an effort to organize them. Last Monday the veterans called a press conference to an­ nounce the formation of a group dedicated to changing this law. These men, all patriots, feel let down by their own country. They are urging young men not to register for the draft — even though they support registration — until the law is changed. None of them have much money, so they can’t afford lawyers. Instead they are hoping to touch touch many more people with their message, in the hope that they will join in to make their collective voice heard. Each faces a loss of the meager benefits he already receives from a vanguard V.A.

When asked why he is stepping his neck out to protest a law he feels is wrong, Steve said, "I’m doing it for the young guys, the guys who might some­ day have to go fight some­ where, who don’t realize they are denied their rights if they serve." Steve Marozsan is a veteran of World War II. Due to a recurring back injury he sustained while in the service, he has been unable to work at a full-time job for the past three weeks. He is a veteran of World War II.

The Veteran’s Administration ruled that Steve was only eligible for partial disability benefits. Steve claimed he was eligible for full payment and threatening to sue the V.A. The V.A. laughed at the suggestion of a lawsuit. Steve was placed on the waiting list for 15 years. The Veteran’s Administration is responsible for any veteran to attempt legal action against the V.A.

According to the Constitution, Steve thought everyone with disabilities had a right to a Social Security check. He made this decision last year after reading an article in a newspaper. He learned that the V.A. had a law passed in 1940 indeed did bar veterans from the right of judicial review of V.A. decisions. Steve consulted several lawyers and each one expressed surprise and shock when informed that such a law existed. He then contacted other disabled veterans in the area in an effort to organize them. People who care

Do you care about anything? Besides yourself, those ‘loved ones’ around you that you are supposed to care for, and perhaps your pet dog, what are your convic­ tions? As college students, society expects us to have convictions. What are your convictions on everything. This is the one time in life when we can get away with supporting issues and ideals that run counter to the social norm. Society nods with bemusement when young people support communism, free love, and anarchy. But to sup­ port the status quo, to be normal, is unacceptable. After being labeled as not being normal and being considered brainless (or at least clueless) by society, we now have an opportunity for young people to want to use their newly acknowledged faculties. Protesting society’s norms is healthy for society. On­ ly by questioning the status quo are we able to keep them from becoming stale and unused. When this country wishes to break up the nuclear family and protest the status quo, we are seen as "hippies." America passed and questioned the course it had been pursuing as a country. I like to think that we developed from this period as better people. The college years can be times of idealism as well. As we learn about the world and how it works theoretically, the process of solving a world crisis seems painfully easy. "If we just sit down and talk to the Rus­ sians, we can have world peace." If we can get our defense money to feed the poor! The idealist has got to face the reality. Yet there is nothing wrong with idealism. If we store the future of a better world, we may have to be prepared for the worst, probable, those hopeful ideas will die.

The important thing about having a cause — be it idealistic, political, or humanistic — is that you are willing to face the reality of giving up. Having a cause means understanding that it is not the status quo, a person of independent thought. In the past few weeks I have met several people who have changed their lives with what they thought they feel is right.

After the war, she is not healthy and cannot be doing her job, however, her biggest thrill in life is in doing what volunteer work she can for the Salvation Army. These women’s causes are not lofty, they are not intellectual. They are simply human.

On this campus, we have a number of charitable and service organizations. The work they do is excellent. Yet when one considers what percentage of the total student body is involved, the numbers are dismaying. Most people would agree that the work these groups do is necessary and important, at least in some of the work themselves. This is a shame, because a few hours or dollars a week from all of us would make such a difference to people who need it most.

There are two types of A.I. organizations -- the campus group, which handles general human rights concerns, and the adoption group, which deals specifically with the release of political prisoners. The Notre Dame-Saint Mary's group is unique among college campus groups in that it is an adoption group.

Group No. 45 has two current adoption cases. One involves a Soviet engineer who was convicted of disseminating anti-Soviet propaganda, according to freshman John Dardis, the coordinator of the group.

"He has already served an eight-year prison term and is now in the middle of a five-year exile," Dardis stated.

Freshman Bob Cox is the coordinator of the Soviet campaign. He and others working on the case are writing letters to officials in the Soviet Union, including the ones who assign work at the prison.

"We are trying to make things better for him," Cox said. "For example, we are trying to get him a job that is related to his profession."

Cox thinks the letter campaign can help ease the situation for the prisoner because it makes the Soviet officials aware that he is being monitored. He is due to be released in a year or two, Cox continued.

"We are afraid that he might not be released on time," he remarked.

"We have received information from London indicating he might not be released when he is supposed to be."

Cox keeps informed of the situation through correspondence from A.I. researchers in the Soviet Union and from the family and friends of the prisoner.

The other case that Notre Dame-Saint Mary's A.I. is working on concerns a Syrian lawyer who was arrested for taking part in a protest, Dardis explained.

"His case is so sketchy that it has been transferred from an adoption case to an investigation case," he said.

Junior Tony Musci, campaign coordinator for the Syrian case, said the mystery in this case is the location of the prisoner. "We have had no response from the Syrian authorities, and neither has our co-group in Italy, which is also working on the case," said Musci. "We have heard rumors that he had a trial and that he did receive a jail sentence."

The Notre Dame A.I. will continue to write letters on his behalf, Musci said.

All A.I. adoptions are arranged through the International Secretariat (I.S.) in London. The I.S. is a network of researchers and investigators that receives news of the prisoner, usually from the family, Dardis said. Then they verify the information with an objective source before they take the case, he continued.

Faculty Senate dismay falsely reported

In Wednesday's article "Faculty Office Building brings complaints," Vaughan McKim, chairman of the Faculty Senate, erroneously was said to have denied that the e-estate was not consulted concerning the design of the new building. The article should have stated that the senate was dismayed over the lack of communication between the designer of the building and the Arts and Letters faculty. As a result, the Senate drafted a letter expressing its concern and sent it to Father Hesburgh. The Observer regrets this error.

Wall Street Update

The stock market surged upward to its highest level in almost a year and a half yesterday as falling interest rates helped revive Wall Street's two-month-old rally. Numerous blue-chip and growth stocks racked up dramatic gains amid evidence that the market's top names were attracting buyers at almost any price. Volume on the New York Stock Exchange, which has topped 100 million shares no less than 13 times since mid-August, fell well short of that mark in this session. — AP

Economic Update

Eli Lilly and Co. has announced that third quarter sales were up more than 845 million over the same period in 1981 but net income was down 5.5 million. The Indianapolis-based company reported yesterday that third quarter sales were $670.9 million, compared with $623.8 million for the same period in 1981. Net income for the quarter totaled $83.5 million, down from $87 million the previous year. The decline was due, in part, to the withdrawal of Oraflex from the market, company officials said, adding that the one-time effect of the withdrawal amounted to 20 cents a share. The controversial arthritis drug was removed from the market earlier this year after reports linked it to deaths in the United States and Great Britain. Earnings per share during the third quarter were $1.10, four cents less than the same period last year, the report showed. — AP

Nine states including four with double-digit jobless rates, no longer can provide the unemployed with an additional 13 weeks of government benefits, the Labor Department said yesterday. The agency said these states had failed to meet criteria spelled out in federal law for continuing participation in the joint federal-state program of extended unemployment compensation benefits — which provide 13 weeks on top of the basic 26-week payment period for qualified individuals. — AP

Apple donates computers to ND

By VIC SCIULLI
Assistant News Editor

The Apple Computer Corporation has donated approximately 50-80 Apple II and Apple III computer systems to the Notre Dame Department of Engineering. The systems are on display at the World's Fair in Knoxville, Tennessee.

The computer systems will be used to support the work of Dr. Albert E. Miller, associate professor of Metallurgical Engineering, in developing computer software for use in engineering disciplines. The idea of the project is to develop a "smart" video disc with random access memory.

The gift of computers is a result of a proposal Miller submitted to the National Science Foundation. Dr. Miller, Apple Corporation, and several other organizations, to put the Freshman Engineering Concepts course on video disc. The goal of the concept would be to provide computer assisted instruction in a laboratory.

The computers will be able to provide further explanations of classroom materials so that a student can study any of the fundamentals of a process. The computers will also permit the application of engineering concepts in a form that the students can visualize, like the optimization of a system.

Miller emphasized that the computers are not there to "circumvent" teaching but rather to introduce students to individual learning through microcomputers. Students will be able to work at their own pace and can spend as much time as is necessary until all the fundamentals of a process are understood.

By the end of the course, Miller said, students will be able to sit down in front of a touch-sensitive disc terminal and "drive an engineering problem" to its completion. Miller's proposed problem was the operation of a model power plant similar to the one at Notre Dame. Students would be able to control the input into the plant (coal) to optimize the output (steam). Students would be able to visualize all the theories involved through graphic representations on the screen.

In addition to the Apple computers, the Engineering Department will also be receiving three fully configured systems from IBM.

Thought has been given as to where the computers will be housed, but a definite place has not been decided.

The additional computers will relieve load on the presently overworked systems in Fitzpatrick Hall. They will be immediately used by the freshmen classes but will not become accessible to other classes until the software for the courses are developed.

Miller and the entire Engineering Department are very pleased about the computer gift, which Dr. Roger Schmitz, Dean of the College of Engineering, believes will launch not only Notre Dame but also the engineering field into a new era of computer instruction.

Acknowledging the homosexual student

Last Monday, an editorial was printed in P.O. Box Q by the Notre Dame-Saint Mary’s gas community. The immature reaction to this piece has been disgusting.

"If I ever meet the queer who put that one in, I'll punch his face in."

"Queeraths make me sick. I'd love to find the kid who put that article in and abuse him."

Army militarizes student aid

With nary a peep from official Washington last week, the Army began offering to U.S. college students a package of extraordinary recruitment incentives tied, for the first time, to student loan debts. Through fiscal 1983, recruiters are authorized to absorb up to 15 percent of the student’s total debts. Through fiscal 1983, recruiters are authorized to absorb up to 15 percent of the student’s total debts. This new program, of course, is only an attempt to attract the well-qualified volunteers to fill the skill gaps.

Approximately 10 percent of the U.S. is homosexual. It would be unrealistic to think that in a community of over 18,000 students, no gay students exist. It is hard for me to imagine what it would be like to be a homosexual on such a homogeneous Roman Catholic campus. Notre Dame-Saint Mary’s and many other Catholic institutions consider homosexuality.

Homosexuality is considered an abnormal activity by most and a sin by many. An organization is needed that will help these students. It is not necessary to force them to identify their friends and foes in the military and to prevent military obligation from becoming a sin.

As a heterosexual, I don’t think I’ll understand why gays are gay. Although I do not hate them, I do feel uncomfortable among them. I can accept homosexuality, but I cannot understand it.

One of the goals of the Notre Dame-Saint Mary’s gay community is to help these students to communicate with other homosexuals and to be converted to heterosexuality. Those who are compelled to threaten and harass the gay community are showing that they feel threatened themselves. It is as if accepting homosexuals is a sign of actual immorality. That should not be true.

"Agree to disagree." Once the harassers realize that they are not being propositioned, but just asked to have an open mind, homosexuals on both campuses will have their lives made a little easier. They deserve it. After all, they are students, too.

Beseiged by off campus crime

Last Wednesday night, I slept with a baseball bat next to my bed. It was not there because I was planning to knock a few around with the housemates when they got in—I was going to use it to cage someone in seeing the inside of my house. I was so scared and paranoid, I did not sleep a wink until one of my housemates returned home from a date.

The following Tuesday at 10 p.m., one of my housemates was startled to hear banging on the side door of the house, one we never use and is in total darkness at night. He went onto the porch to see what was up. Two kids were there fiddling with the door. Just then another housemate came home from the library happened to stroll up and make his presence known. The two kids said they were "looking for somebody" and then promptly ran.

The next night I was home alone. At 1 a.m., I thought nothing of it, having been alone many times in my house last year and thousands of times before that back home. But then, as it got later and later, and the house started to crack and bump (as old houses will), my imagination went to work. Fueled by the previous week's events, I got thinking about every sound in that house and what could it be?

Three times I went downstairs looking for intruders, prompted by some thump. Although a bit of an overreaction, my fears were not completely baseless. Daily, the already long list of houses broken into gets longer. After every weekend, The Observer usually carries a story or two about students being robbed and held at gunpoint during their excursions off campus.

Just the number of crimes involving guns by itself is unsettling. My next door neighbor informed us the other day that almost every nocturnally active teenager in the neighborhood packs some kind of handgun. No wonder off campus people get edgy when crime is mentioned.

The general reaction to being ripped off or having to live in fear of your physical well-being is one of anger (after the fact has subsided a little). When you're angry, you look for someone to blame. The police and the University are the first two logical targets. Unfortunately, yelling at either of these two groups rarely produces any sort of immediate action.

The South Bend Police Department or Saint Joseph County Sheriff's Office cannot be everywhere at once. The type of crimes that are occurring take only 30 seconds, the perpetrator then disappearing into the friendly darkness of his home turf.

No more bands at off campus nights.

Tuesday, October 19, 1982 — page 7
Cockeysville Md. (AP) — Sources on both sides yesterday negotiated aimed at ending the 28- day old National Football League players strike appear to be crumbling.

There is a growing feeling among the participants this is going nowhere: a union source said the talks entered their seventh day.

And a member of the Management Council, the owners' bargaining unit, said the talks seem to be heading "not toward an agreement."

Both sides met independently with mediators yesterday morning. The talks were recessed at 1 p.m. EDT, with both sides scheduled to sit down face to face later in the day.

The mediator, 73-year-old San Francisco lawyer Sam Kagel said he spent part of the afternoon in Baltimore after being given "hardship leave" by both sides.

Asked to respond to the pressmen's comments offered by both management and union sources, Kagel replied: "I can't account for anything that was said. I have difficulty with my own."

On Sunday, the Associated Press learned, the union was preparing to modify its wage-scale demand in an effort to achieve an agreement. One modification suggested by union sources was the exemption of the supersstars from the scale and allowing them to continue to bargain with the owners on an individual basis.

In another futile effort to sell to the owners the union's demand for a wage scale, union chief Ed Garvey met secretly with Dan Rooney, president of the Pittsburgh Steelers and a member of the owners' executive committee.

At that meeting, the sources said, Rooney reiterated the union's position on the wage scale plan.

Yesterday, Garvey, union presi­dent Gurney Upshaw, Management Council chief Jack Donlan and owners' counsel Sangar Karch met without the presence of mediator Sam Kagel to again discuss the wage scale. Once again, Donlan emphasized the union that under no circumstances would the league accept the wage scale concept.

At the talks with an impasse, Garvey held a secret second meeting with Ted Turner, the head of Turner Broadcasting Sys­tem, an Atlanta-based cable television system which is backruling the union's "Players All- Star season."

Turner is reportedly prepared to discuss a "bottom line. Under it, rosters would be structured along the lines of NFL teams, rather than an all-star format.

The first in a series of 20 proposed all-star games sponsored games was played Sunday in Washington's RFK Stadium to a disappointing crowd. The union said 8,760 tickets were sold to the game in the 50,000-seat stadium, about 7,000 below the break-even point, according to promoters. And of those 8,760, estimates of the actual turnstile count varied from 1,000 to 2,000, with only the promoters, who had hoped for a crowd of 20,000, said they will lose 10,000.

Rick: "Does the story have a surprise ending?"
Lisa: "I don't know the ending yet."
Rick: "Well, go ahead and tell it, maybe one will come to you."

I saw two shows last weekend. One was a love story, in which he hero makes a great sacrifice for the lady he loves. The other was an adventure thriller in which, incredibly, the bad guy wins.

Given the confusion and chaos of the weekend just past, the two shows have blended together in my memory, making them seem to be one and the same. I came away last night, as Bogart and Bergman seemed to have spoken the familiar lines of Casablanca Friday night. Then I sat, perplexed once again, as the Notre Dame football team ran the all-too-familiar plays against St. Louis.

The scene, I guess, could be at the evening, if you observed the action with enough attention. There was no way, given Bogart's respect for marriage, that he could actually go off to America with Lisa. Similarly, there was no way, given Notre Dame's general offense in the second half (after all, the Irish's most reliable yard) that they could actually pull off the victory.

The Irish were marching on Paris, and it was just a matter of time before they caught up with Rick. He was lucky to escape. Opponents were creeping up, coming closer to an open space every minute, and it was just a matter of time before ineptitude caught up with Notre Dame. They were not lucky enough to escape this time.

Time and again, Rick tells people "I stuck my neck out for nobody."

Terry Faust, too, was apparently unable to stick his neck out and take a chance. Time was running out in the half. Notre Dame had three time outs left. Mike Johnson, he of the perfect leg, was called upon to kick another field goal before the intermission.

"What watch?" Faust must have asked.

"Two time outs, two time outs. We must come have the response."

"Two time outs."

Bogart must have marvelled before ordering his team to run on the clock.

I had been on the sidelines. Then, I think I would have said to Faust, "If you don't lead at try to go downfield and get a field goal, you're going to regret it."
