Illinois election still undecided

CHICAGO (AP) — Democratic challenger Adlai E. Stevenson pulled within 171 votes of Republican Gov. James R. Thompson yesterday with more than 3.5 million ballots counted and thousands still out in a race headed toward one of the closest finishes in Illinois history.

The incumbent's margin — less than five thousandths of one percent — held after a nearly complete official tally of returns from the Democratic stronghold of Chicago.

But it appeared that even after the last votes were tabulated, the nation's only undecided race for governor might remain just that until the State Board of Elections certifies the vote Nov. 22.

Returns had yet to be received from 15 precincts in the city, where five ballot boxes were turned in empty and 10 more were reported missing, officials said. They estimated that 5,000 potential votes were involved. It was not certain when those totals would be available.

Results also were not expected until the morning for 106 suburbs.

Cook County precincts, the county clerk's office said. The clerk would give no estimate of the number of ballots from those areas. Thompson had generally run ahead in the suburbs, but it was not known exactly what areas the missing precincts covered.

Rick Janscak, a spokesman for Stevenson, said the challenger was not backing off a declaration of victory made late Wednesday night by his campaign's campaign chairman, James Oks.

"I see nothing that would cause me to waver from that," he said yesterday. "All the numbers seem to be pointing in Stevenson as a winner."

The mood was more guarded at Thompson headquarters, which would not predict the outcome of the race.

"We're not going to say anything until we have a good idea of what's going on," said David Fields, a Thompson spokesman. "We're just going to be mum for awhile. We're not talking to anybody."

David Gilbert, Thompson's press secretary, had said late Wednesday night he expected the governor would win an unprecedented third term by 10,100 to 15,000 votes.

With about 99 percent of the state precincts reporting unofficial returns, or 11,521 of the state's 11,642 polling places, Thompson had 1,793,862 votes to Stevenson's 1,786,461.

New parietals trial period begins Monday

By TONI RUTHERFORD

Weekday parietals are "a really positive influence in terms of programs and activities at Saint Mary's," according to Sister Karol Jacikowski, director of residence life and housing.

Sunday, Nov. 7 is the beginning of the trial period for the new Saint Mary's parietals hours, which will be in effect until May. It is a six-week trial period for Saint Mary's to implement Sunday and weekday parietals. Weekend hours will remain the same, but the hours from 5 p.m. to 10 p.m. will be added from Sunday through Thursday. Jacikowski felt that weekday parietals will prove less of a problem than weekend parietals.

Students will work the desk to receive the visitors' IDs until an evaluation of weekday traffic is made, probably at the end of the semester. If the traffic is expected, the ID's may be handled at the front desk. If it is heavier, students can expect about double the hours they now work.

Given the way students live during the week, I don't anticipate much socializing," said Jacikowski. She feels that the benefits of the new parietals will be the likelihood of... See SMC, page 4

Career Development stresses interests

By RENÉ FOY

Pursuing subjects of interest was emphasized last night at the Career Development lecture as the best way to choose a major. A liberal arts education was encouraged because it allows students to try several different fields.

Sharon McKernan, who graduated from Saint Mary's in 1975 with a government degree and now works for Merrill Lynch in Washington D.C. as a stockbroker, spoke to stuents last night on career development.

She stressed that students should pursue subjects of interest because, as she explained, "too many people focus on one narrow road. The purpose of college is to broaden your knowledge. Once college is over, there is less time and it is more difficult to spend time finding a field of interest."

She also advised students should apply for summer jobs in their field of interest while still in school. She also emphasized extracurricular activities and internships as ways of finding career goals.

McKernan explained to the students how she started as an English major, traveled on the humanities program with Notre Dame, switched majors to his try, and finally in her senior year decided to major in real estate.

Throughout her lecture she stressed having confidence in one's abilities and not becoming discouraged about job prospects for one's major. As she said, "Your first job is usually out of your field of study." In her office, there are 52 account executives, and out of these, there were few liberal arts majors.

McKernan offered some advice on finding a job after college. "Job hun-tering after college is tough and you must be persistent." She said it would be beneficial to talk to people working in an area of interest and then she suggested interviewing just for the experience of interviewing. It took McKernan three to four weeks of pavement pounding every day before landing her job at Merrill Lynch. Even then, she started as a sales representative and worked her way up. "There is nothing wrong with starting at the bottom," she says, "as long as it's not a dead end."

The important thing she emphasized were not to get dis-} couraged and to take risks.

Roemer appeals for halt

By RYAN VER BERKMOES

Two letters from Dean of Students James Roemer urging area retailers and distributors to limit their deliveries of alcohol to students have been obtained by the Observer.

In the letters, mailed in October, Roemer requested that the businesses stop the delivery of kegs to off-campus private residences. He referred to an Indiana state law limiting the sale of kegs to one per address. Roemer also cited the problems caused by large student parties for police and residents as reasons for the policy.

Deliveries of all alcohol products to campus locations are also banned. However, Roemer said that exceptions for licensed University facilities and approved events such as the Senior Picnic would be allowed.

Endorsement of the policies was left up to the businesses. However, Roemer asked for replies and comments from the letter's recipients.

In addition to King's Cellar and Locks Liquor World, the letters were sent to three local beer distributors. United Beverages, Sunnyside Beverages, and Michigan Beverages.

Neither Roemer nor representatives for the businesses could be reached for comments.

Student Body President Lloyd Burke said, "This isn't prohibition. The safety of the students is (Roemer's) main concern. I think he's trying to deal with a problem that's a very delicate situation."

After releasing the contents of the letters, Off-Campus Commissioner Bill Colleran said he was "surprised at how far they went."

Just my imagination?

Bruce Oakley
Systems Manager

I was starting to explain how things aren’t always what they seem, but I found myself sitting in a Washington, D.C., nightcap with a group of friends, my sister, and a wonderful young lady my family had arranged for me to meet.

Thinking that such arrangements only work out in dreams, I found myself more and more enchanted as time passed and most of the company dispersed into the background. I know the days must have changed because I remember seeing missiles and planetary orbs at the Smithsonian Air and Space Museum, and trying to make sense of the mad spokes of the capital city’s traffic.

Enchantment does not allow for the realization of time’s passage.

New Jersey, however, has a way of breaking any truce, and I was jostled from my happiness by a wrong turn down 9th Street. I touched down at the Jersey Central Parkway. Not wishing to be stranded in the Jersey Central Parkway, I implemented the two ghostly figures with me to direct me out of that haze.

We must have averted a catastrophe. Because we were in the Meadowlands for the battle between a Catholic school and a military academy the next afternoon. I remember watching gold clash with gold in the gleaming sunshine of a beer-cloudy day.

The two ghosts who had accompanied me were finally gone. Alone at last, I made a mad dash from my car to my apartment. I wanted to call a phone number that stuck in my mind to find out if any of what happened was real.

A voice from what might have been a vision answered, and I was overjoyed that my imagination had not entirely taken control.

And yet I was frightened at the implications for my future and my sanity. I had returned from a world of glorious dreams and terrible nightmares — a world many of my friends casually believe is more real than that in which they struggle.
WASHINGTON (AP) — In the clear light of a post-election day, Reagan administration officials now concede the government faces a tidal wave of red ink that could crest somewhere between $150 billion and $200 billion in fiscal 1984.

Though hush to discuss it before Tuesday’s walk-in, these officials, still requesting anonymity, admitted the government faces a clear light of a post-election day, considerable increases and modest defense cuts going to Congress, as he remains unclear.

The president has until mid-January to send Congress his budget plan. Progress has been delayed by a White House decision to postpone work on politically sensitive cuts until after the election.

An unexpectedly strong economic recovery would help, because expansion automatically produces higher revenues and less social-welfare spending. For each one percentage point drop in the unemployment rate, now 10.1 percent, the deficit is narrowed by $25 billion to $30 billion.

The fiscal 1983 budget plan, which emphasized domestic spending, has forced him to accept higher taxes and cuts in his record military budget in exchange for non-defense spending reductions. Even if Stockman could put a smaller deficit on paper relying solely on domestic cuts, the president remains unlikely to get the budget through the new Congress.

The 97th Congress rejected Reagan’s 1985 budget plan, which emphasized domestic spending, and forced him to accept higher taxes and cuts in his record military budget in exchange for non-defense spending reductions. Even with that, the red ink for fiscal 1983 may hit $150 billion, $35 billion more than the record established in fiscal 1982, which ended a month ago. With Democrats holding their own in the GOP-controlled Senate and picking up 24 to 26 seats in the House, “the prospect of solving the budget problem with non-defense spending cuts has worsened,” one administration official said yesterday.

Moreover, the deficit problem extends beyond 1984. Without major policy changes, administration officials see chronic deficits in future years, even if the economy improves, because expected government-revenue increases consistently fall short of expected government spending.

WNDU building
Social services get new center

By SCOTT HARDEK
News Staff

The former WNDU building will be ready by January to house students involved with the Center for Experiential Learning and Volunteer Services. This is the timetable for the renovation of the former television studio building, hopes Father Don O’Neill, director of the Center for Experiential Learning.

In the new building, both services will fall under the title of The Center for Social Concerns, although the individual programs of each organization will continue as before. O’Neill hopes that interactions between faculty, students, and alumni concerning social issues and concerns can be increased and improved by bringing the two very closely related organizations together.

The renovation was formally proposed to the officers of the University in October, 1980, in reply to a suggestion made by Father Theodore Heubner. The renovation was approved in April this year and was begun in August. The cost of the basic renovation is approximately $280,000, which includes changes in the ventilation system and the addition of a south entrance. The figure does not include the cost of furnishing the building.

A major asset of the new facility will be a large classroom with a capacity of 125 students which can be used for lectures and films followed by discussion in the same room or in a comfortable atmosphere of a nearby lounge. A small student lounge, located in the LaFortune Student Center, will fall under the jurisdiction of Father John Van Wolfer.

Character helps Poles
Fight for freedom continues

By TOM MOYLE
News Staff

The Poles will continue their struggle for a free society, even though it is unlikely that they will attain it, said Rett R. Ludwikowski, a Polish professor living in the United States. Last night in his talk on the origins of the Solidarity labor union before a nearly-full Galvin Life Science Auditorium.

Ludwikowski cited four components of the Polish character to support this thesis. First, he said that Poles are romantics, that they have a "readiness to sacrifice for some very important human values — fatherland, family, religion — even when there is no logical reason to do so." The ruling Communist Party tries to say that this nature is a myth, even as they try to exploit that romanticism for their own goals.

The Poles also are individuals.

Ludwikowski said, who "love to speak, discuss, quarrel," and are strongly attached to freedom of discussion. The policies of communism run counter to this, as they promote one idea and permit the discussion of no others.

"Poles," Ludwikowski said, "are left feeling that the lack of democracy in Poland is the biggest lack in the country." He cited the history of democracy in Poland, which stretches in some form back to the sixteenth century. In one of many anecdotes, Ludwikowski noted that the difference between Western democracies and Eastern democracies is that although some Western politicians are less competent than their Eastern counterparts, their opinions are balanced by others. Meanwhile, in the East, the incompetent politicians are the ones making the decisions.

Ludwikowski also noted that this type of companion quickly ended his lecturing in Poland.

Finally, Ludwikowski said that Poles are even more strongly attached to Catholicism. When the Pope visited Poland in 1980, the people realized that they were united in their feelings, and this led to the forming of Solidarity in August of that year.

Ludwikowski said that the dissolution of Solidarity proved that the government will not compromise, and noted, "Intervention is inconvenient for Moscow, but Moscow will not choose to lose Poland."

Ludwikowski expressed his belief that the government's "ability to manipulate social attitudes is lost forever. The people have no confidence in any party member. He is just another member of the Polish army who will be the ones who must make the decisions."

Ludwikowski cautioned that "the mistake of Solidarity leaders was in miscalculating economic importance with military importance." The United States must also recognize that at least in military matters, the Communists remain strong.

Ludwikowski was disappointed in the response of the West to the imposition of martial law, saying that the American bankers hoped that their debts would be paid and did not care about the struggle of the people. He said that Americans and Poles have a common enemy in communism.

Ludwikowski said that although he is for peace, "we must realize who is benefiting from detente." While he understands the Reagan Administration's rationale in continuing to sell grain to the Soviets while embarking the natural gas pipeline, he says that the Soviets would be forced to spend even more money if they were forced to produce their own grain.

Lecture praises deregulation

By JOHN BRESLIN
News Staff

The current national trend of deregulation in business was discussed in a lecture last night in the Library Auditorium entitled "The Financial Service Industry and the Throes of Change" by the chairman and chief executive officer of Merrill Lynch and Co., Inc.

Roger R. Birk, also director of the New York Stock Exchange and self-described as a "rugged individualist capitalist," praised deregulation, since it promotes "great things like competition and low costs."

But he realizes, however, that total deregulation is an impossibility. "If you totally deregulate interest rates, the banking industry would lose $30 billion a year. Since the banks only make $20 billion a year, we would have a problem."

The decline of American domination on the international scene worries Birk. Japanese banks have gained prestige internationally through intense studies of the failures and limitations of the American banking system. "If you don't think they (the Japanese) can compete, talk to the guys in Detroit," Birk quipped.

Birk does not worry about the currently reduced banking and securities scene, since "out of confusion comes opportunity." He refused, however, to predict specific future economic highs and lows ever since a Chinese friend revealed to him, "He who lives by the crystal ball soon will eat broken glass."

Networks provide mediocre coverage of election

Friday, November 5, 1982 — page 8

This is the age of television, right? So how come none of the networks could provide accurate, easy-to-watch election night coverage?''

ABC, CBS, and NBC have had enough

practice at tallying votes and reporting results. You'd think they'd have gotten it right by now. But that certainly didn't seem to be the case Tuesday night.

There were some highlights, to be sure. CBS unveiled maps that were unquestionably the most sophisticated and informative electronic graphics ever used by a network news department. And while there was considerable flash, there was little of the often accompanying trash.

CBS graphics showed viewers — in no uncertain terms — just what was happening, and where. The maps that elevated and changed the colors of states that voted either Republican or Democratic were — to say the least — amazing.

But there were, by far, more lowlights over the course of the evening. Here is just a sample:

1) A person has a malicious or defensive reason to be a critic which is generally a self-interest.

2) A person respects or loves what he criticizes and wants to see it do better which helps to shape society and people so that new ideas can replace the old.

As a result, many praise Notre Dame, while others criticize. When someone criticizes the actions of Notre Dame, we are served and respected. And people are quick to jump on this person and call him a malcontent or suggest that he go elsewhere.

Criticism of Notre Dame is essential to maintaining and enhancing its position as one of the great universities of this nation. We must examine, evaluate, and give our opinions to help Notre Dame be the best interest of all concerned. The truth might hurt, but facts like bricks and form barriers to understanding and achievement.

When my co-worker Chris Needles, the sports editor, covered the play of the Notre Dame football team or the coaching strategy of Gerry Faust, Notre Dame's football coach, the opinions were in the best interest of all concerned. The truth might hurt, but facts like bricks and form barriers to understanding and achievement.

Panther QB is still struggling, but his team still tops the polls

By CHRIS NEEDLES
Sports Editor

PITTSBURGH — It was five years ago — September 10, 1977 — to be exact — that Notre Dame and Pitt last met at Pitt Stadium here. The day the Irish won on a lucky break. That lucky break, of course, was to Panther quarterback Matt Cavanaugh’s wrist, courtesy of a Willie Fry sack. Fry, Ross Brownewt and Co. took it from there, pacing the Irish to a 19-0 victory in the first step up the ladder toward a national championship.

Tomorrow, Notre Dame and Pitt resume their heated rivalry for the first time since 1978. But the circumstances are, oh, so different.

On the surface, it’s be just another in a never-ending series of battles between the Irish and No. 1, another chapter in the annals of ND football lore. But for one man, there may be even more at stake.

Although his team currently stands at 5-1, Irish Coach Gerry Faust is at a crossroads. An upset tomorrow will propel Notre Dame back to No. 1, another chapter in the annals of ND football lore. But for one man, there may be even more at stake.

While Dan Marino, who modestly calls himself the best thrower in the country. Said Duerson, "Dan tends to talk too much. I think the way you play this game is by performance and not by opening up your mouth. I think I play a little bit harder when I go against guys like that. They’re all a team of talkers so you’ll see a lot of leather popping.”

Marino has a fine array of receivers at his disposal. Split end Julius Hawkins and flanker Dwight Collins both are threats and are often joined on pass routes by three other receivers. Five receivers will force the Irish to play man to man coverage. Duerson is not worried. "We’ve been working a lot on our man coverage so we can play the receivers a lot tighter. The one disadvantage in sending out five receivers is that it doesn’t leave Marino many people to support him by blocking." Pitt will have their hands full with a stingy Irish defense that is ranked fifth overall in the nation. Pitt’s game plan, if effective, could turn the game into a rout early. “I think that they’re going to try to establish some kind of short passing attack too much or how little, might chase away all of the fans. But a loss, especially an embarrassing one, might chase away all of the critics that have hounded his slumping team. Remember that just two short weeks ago, Notre Dame traveled to the Pacific Northwest and just barely beat perennial bottom Ten favorite Oregon. Now, the Irish must go on the road to face the best.

After Washington’s loss to Stanford last week, Pitt is the consensus No. 1 team in the country. But, strangely enough, Panther fans are not satisfied despite their team’s 70-0 record and lofty position in the rankings. The target of the fans’ wrath has been none other than supposed all-everything quarterback Dan Marino, who has heard enough boos this year to last a lifetime.

Duerson sets records for interceptions and returns

Coach Gerry Faust called Dave Duerson his “blue chip blue chip” back in September before this roller-coaster Notre Dame football season started. The statement took many Notre Dame fans by surprise at the time, but now, weeks later, with the leaves and the rest of the defense will be of vital importance.

Against Michigan it was Duerson who ended the dramatics with a game-saving, last-second interception. Last Saturday against Navy, he picked off three passes and returned them for 56 total yards. In between these two games, Duerson has been nothing short of sensational in his pass coverage and all around defense. In the weeks ahead, riflemen like Pitt’s Dan Marino and Penn State’s Todd Blackledge will fill the Notre Dame secondary with their bullets, and the play of Duerson and the rest of the defense will be of vital importance.

Should they falter, Faust might be out of town at sundown. For now however, it is one game at a time. This week the opponent is the No. 1-ranked Panthers of Pittsburgh. Pittsburgh is loaded with talent. That talent is most obvious in Pitt’s passing attack.

The Panthers are quarterbacked by Irsh Dan Marino, who modestly calls himself the best thrower in the country. Said Duerson, "Dan tends to talk too much. I think the way you play this game is by performance and not by opening up your mouth. I think I play a little bit harder when I go against guys like that. They’re all a team of talkers so you’ll see a lot of leather popping.”

Marino has a fine array of receivers at his disposal. Split end Julius Hawkins and flanker Dwight Collins both are threats and are often joined on pass routes by three other receivers. Five receivers will force the Irish to play man to man coverage. Duerson is not worried. "We’ve been working a lot on our man coverage so we can play the receivers a lot tighter. The one disadvantage in sending out five receivers is that it doesn’t leave Marino many people to support him by blocking.”

Pitt will have their hands full with a stingy Irish defense that is ranked fifth overall in the nation. Pitt’s game plan, if effective, could turn the game into a rout early. “I think that they’re going to try to establish some kind of short passing attack too much or how little, might chase away all of the fans. But a loss, especially an embarrassing one, might chase away all of the critics that have hounded his slumping team. Remember that just two short weeks ago, Notre Dame traveled to the Pacific Northwest and just barely beat perennial bottom Ten favorite Oregon. Now, the Irish must go on the road to face the best.

After Washington’s loss to Stanford last week, Pitt is the consensus No. 1 team in the country. But, strangely enough, Panther fans are not satisfied despite their team’s 70-0 record and lofty position in the rankings. The target of the fans’ wrath has been none other than supposed all-everything quarterback Dan Marino, who has heard enough boos this year to last a lifetime.
PITTSBURGH — As Pitt’s new offensive line coach, Joe Moore drooled every time he looked down the line. It was the spring of 1980 and the Panthers were on the verge of having what many still consider their most talented team ever.

Nowhere was there more talent than in Moore’s line, which included future NFL starters Jason Grimm and Mark May. But it wasn’t the men in the offensive line who attracted so much of Moore’s attention that spring. It was someone in the defensive line. It was a second-string somebody in the defensive line.

Everytime Moore looked at the players opposite his own, he did not see starters Jerry Boyarsky, Bill Neill or Greg Meisner. He saw sophomore Jimbo Covert.

Joe Moore wanted Jimbo Covert in his line, and he finally told head coach Jackie Sherrill so.

“I said, ‘what the hell, he’s not playing over there. Let me look at him,’” says Moore, who now shares the titles of assistant head coach and offensive line coach under Foge Fazio. “I said to Jimbo, ‘Take a half hour and I’ll let you know how good you’ll be.’

“After five minutes I said, ‘You stay with us and you’ll be an All-American.’ It didn’t take long.

Hardly, Covert started at left tackle that season. By the next year, he was first-team All-American. Today, he could probably be called the best lineman in the country.

Just don’t use the word probably around Joe Moore.

“Up to this point as a senior, he’s the best tackle I ever had at Pitt,” says the coach who helped him as a junior.

Like Fralic, Williams was also a consensus All-American in high school. Being named by the Native American in high school. Being named by the AP, he’s the only kid I’ve seen who can adjust in a game to things we pick out later in the films. Other guys just stick to what they’re taught, no matter what.”

No one said he was the best All-American空前绝后的 Diallo.

A Covert operation

Pitt linemen came on fast to grab All-America honors

By LOUIE SOMOGY Sports Writer

Pro-scouts attending tomorrow’s clash between Notre Dame and Pittsburgh will find a veritable gold-mine of talent when surveying the prospects for next April’s draft.

Marron, Dawkins, Fralic, and Pelusi are just some of the names on the Panther roster that are expected to go high in the early rounds of the draft. The Irish counter with their own excellent senior group for the draft which includes the names Hunter, Zavagnin, Duerson and Thayer.

Although the talents in all these senior athletes are immense, the two most eminent performers on the field tomorrow may be the two sophomore offensive tackles that start for their teams — Pittsburgh’s Bill Fralic and Notre Dame’s Larry Williams.

The fact that both are starters in the offensive line — usually a senior dominated position — for major college teams is an astonishing feat itself.

“First of all pass blocking in most high schools isn’t taught that much because the rules are radically different there,” explains Notre Dame offensive line coach Jim Huggins.

“It takes a long time for an offensive lineman then to learn how to effectively use his hands and arms in college.

“There are also obviously the factors of strength and maturity that are needed in the line. They don’t come in that strong here the first year, and they don’t attain the necessary strength except after a few years of weight training and a good diet.”

The talents of Fralic and Williams, however, have never really been in doubt.

The 6-5, 270-pound Fralic may very well be one of the most awesome forces in college football today. At a 17-year old high school senior two years ago he was able to bench press over 500 pounds. Twenty-four year old Larry Motzart and 21-year old Tom Thayer bench 485 and 550 pounds respectively to hold top honors for the Irish.

Yet Fralic also possesses first-rate speed and agility for an offensive lineman. He has run a 4.9 40-yard dash, and had was the Pennsylvania high-school state runner-up in wrestling. Such abilities led him to be named the 1980 National “Male Athlete of the Year” by Dial (an award won by Herschel Walker the year before), and to be cited by Parade magazine as being the top recruit for 1980 (an award bestowed to Walker in 1980 and to SMU’s Eric Dickerson in 1981).”

He proved the worthwhileness of the award that year as he stepped right in as a starter for Pitt in his very first game — the first freshman to do so for the Panthers since Tony Dorsett in 1975. In addition, he was brought in by the Panther defense for goal line situations.

“I don’t think I’ve ever seen a freshman as good as Fralic,” praised his then head-coach Jackie Sherrill. “If he improves like everyone else, we may not ever see another player like that.”

Indeed, the current sophomore, who was an Honorable Mention All-American last year by the AP, has continued his improvement and maturity so much, it has left his offensive coordinator, Joe Moore, in absolute awe.

“I don’t say anything to him but ‘good job,’” says Moore. “He’s the only kid I’ve seen who can adjust in a game to things we pick out later in the films. Other guys just stick to what they’re taught, no matter what.”

4th in the country this week in passing efficiency.

"Some people might be disappointed by Dan's statistics this season," says Pitt Coach Searfino. "Foge" Fazio. "I'm sure everyone is going to be very happy with the 30 passes for over 500 yards like one player (Boston College's Doug Flutie) did last weekend."

"I wouldn't want to change anything about this season," says Marino. "We're .70 and moving in the right direction and that's important."

Unlike other years, Pitt's perfect slate has come against rather formidable opposition -- North Carolina, Florida State, Illinois and West Virginia, all nationally ranked sometime this year, have fallen to the Panthers.

So, the 50,000 question is this: Do the Irish have a chance tomorrow? Common sense, and an examination of Notre Dame's performances this season, would indicate none. But considering the tradition factor, the fact that Notre Dame has beaten the No. 1 team so many times over the years, one should not count the Irish out.

A key to Notre Dame's success tomorrow will be the tackle position, whatever is chosen to start. Senior co-captain Phil Carli is listed as the starter, but freshman Allen Pinkett has been more impressive in practices in recent weeks. Pinkett gained 129 yards last week in his initial start against Navy and kept Carrier, who had a splotch history but was more than healthy enough to try, on the bench.

In all, it may all come down, in the end, to Notre Dame's ability to pull everything together and to block out the outside diversions of the past two weeks, and play to their potential.

A lucky break wouldn't hurt either.

Unlike Fralic, though, he worked out less with weights because of his versatile athletic abilities in such finess and agile oriented sports as basketball (in which he was also named MVP for his school), and volleyball.

Thus, when he first stepped onto the practice field at Notre Dame in the fall of 1981 at a veritable 275 pounds, it looked like he would not be just another offensive lineman who would have to toil for his senior year before he would have the strength and maturity to start.

"Something inside of me told me that if I wanted to be able to play sooner, better work real hard," says Williams. "The weight and running programs I was put on helped me get into great shape. Plus I did a lot of good eating over the summer (four square meals and snacks in between)."

Williams and his 6-6 frame returned at 275 pounds this fall, but he was still able to retain his agility. The result was a startling fall performance which enabled him to win the competitive strong-tackle position. Such an impressive performance led Head Offensive Line Coach Carl Belser to state that Williams could potentially become one of Notre Dame's fine lineman in years to come.

"That's pretty flattering," says Williams. "But I'm not going to stop working. People were pumping my ego in high school a lot too, but I had to face reality once I came here. I just want to keep working as hard as I can to keep improving."

Hugueny agrees with Seinert's assessment of Williams. "He has really been mastering our system and wants to make it a big success, too," he says. "I think he can play too, but it all depends on how much he wants to work. It's 50 percent to be willing to put it in."

If Williams and Fratic continue to put out the way they have, it is going to be a pleasant two years of waiting for any pro scout.

When Pitt's offense was getting booted by the defense this fall, Covert was getting off. He did wish he could have introduced the jettison those members of his family who went out for work.

"Football should be fun," says the former high school graduate, compared with Marino, the object of intense media pressure and many of the boos heard in Pitt Stadium this season.

"Danny keeps everything in perspective," says Covert. "Foge" Fazio. "A fifth-year senior who was red- shirted in 1979 after shoulder surgery. 'Hey, I'm getting battle mad and all that. I think he takes it with a grain of salt. I think Danny knows that goes with the territory. When you're labelled a great player and a superstar, glory comes with criticism."

"Glory for Covert would come with the Outland Trophy, which is awarded to the best interior lineman in the country. But he has other ideas about white that word means. Glory, to Covert means Pitt going against the odds, throwing a block to a spring teammate last weekend."

"I try to not really even think about that," he says of the Outland. "There's a lot of hype be- hind that. There's a big reputation behind that. If you were to me how the Outland would be the greatest individual thrill of my life. But I just want to go one more."

"If Bryan Thomas makes a great run, it's to my side of the line, even if no one else among 55,000 in Pitt Stadium knows it, I know Bryan Thomas knows, and I (guard Rob Fada knows, and the rest of the line knows and Fratic knows that I was part of that run. That's enough satisfaction for me."n

It's rare when his teammates aren't satisfied with the results of a Covert block. West Virginia's Donnie Brown can attest to the quality of his run blocking. Statistics speak eloquently about his blocking. In a 72-point shutout, Covert allowed one sack of the quarterback. Last year, he was beaten twice. This year, he's given up one sack.

Fazio noted before the season that "he's the dominant force in our pass protection" and Covert's performance in 1982 has strengthened the head coach's opinion about every area of his block assignments.

"He's having an outstanding year," Fazio says. "His run blocking and pass blocking are outstanding. He's playing much more aggressively. He's got the formula to the pote - he's really driving them into the ground."

Covert doesn't necessarily agree that he's been the primary target of the block assignments.

"I think my leg strength has improved," he says. "I got into the weight room more. A lot of times after I'd drive a guy off he'd, I'd lose my footing. The improved strength has helped me keep my feet and sustain my block."

I don't think I've become more aggressive. I just think my leg strength has compensated for that in a way.

"He is," says Moore. "Stronger than most pro line- men too."

By this time next year, Covert will be one of them. He's considered a sure-fire first round NFL draft pick. But like the Outland Trophy, a perfect season and a national championship, that for Covert's not ready to look down the road that year.

"There's old cliché football coaches say," he says. "You take one game at a time. That's like you. Only one day at a time. You don't get three weeks at a time."

game. Whether it be the run game or the short pass," said Duerson. "I would like to see them come out and throw the football because the more he puts in the air, the more chance that the defense is not going to try anything new on Saturday. The coaching, which was responsible for five of the six interceptions against Navy, will continue to go for the ball. Duerson had three of those thefts -- giving him 25 tackles this season and 45th in the country this week in passing efficiency.

"Any player in the country who has three or four kids and no job. That's Danny. He's a winner."

Unlike Fratic, though, he worked out less with weights because of his versatile athletic abilities in such finess and agile oriented sports as basketball (in which he was also named MVP for his school), and volleyball.

"I try to not really even think about that," he says of the Outland. "There's a lot of hype behind that. There's a big reputation behind that. If you were to me how the Outland would be the greatest individual thrill of my life. But I just want to go one more."

So far, Marino's stats have been rather meager -- (Blair Kiel's percentage is 56, to show you how deep a percent he is con- cerned with, mediocre - 58 percent on his completions of the six interceptions against Navy. will con- defeat opponents who sit atop the rankings."

He attributes part of his ability to free safety. "I'm a center!elder. I can everyday. Fortunately, she didn’t come in with the idea that she was better than the others.”

“I don’t think it would be right (to come in with a ‘star’ attitude),” agrees Buxton. “I do what I think is right, and eventually others may do it.”

Mary McLaughlin’s important contributions to the team are best summed up by her actions before the Michigan State game early this year.

The Irish were getting ready to go out on the court for their biggest confidence that they needed to win.

“Mary has come here with the attitude of contributing,” adds Vinslager. “She doesn’t have the attitude of being a California star. She’s very humble about coming from a powerhouse. Her winning attitude rubs off on the others.”

Indeed, she is used to winning. Her high school team won two state titles in the state where the best volleyball is played. She was named to the California Federation All-League squad.

“She has all the qualities of a well-trained, well-coached player,” says Anderson. “Her passing technique is out of this world. She came here more polished than anyone else because she’s been playing since third or fourth grade in competitions.”

McLaughlin could have gone to just about any school in the Midwest and heavily favored. But she chose Notre Dame even though it had a losing program and no national recognition as a good volleyball school. This problem no longer exists.

“Notre Dame has such a great reputation,” explains McLaughlin, “and the feeling that I got from it was great that I knew it was the place to go.”

The Irish, of course, are very happy that Buxton and McLaughlin decided to attend the school. The confidence that they give to the other players and the great talent that they possess are major reasons for the team’s convergence on the national level as a force to be reckoned with.

NFL strike reps split; no quick end in sight

NEW YORK (AP) — The chief negotiators for both sides in the National Football League players’ strike conceded yesterday that they are still far apart in their efforts to end the 45-day-old walkout. For the second consecutive day the substantive issues were set aside while negotiations dealt with matters such as meal money, injury grievances and roster sizes. But both sides acknowledged that progress was slow.

“We are significantly apart,” said Jack Donlan, the owners’ chief negotiator.

“There is a big gap between our position and theirs,” said Ed Garvey, executive director of the NFL players Association. “The fundamental issue still remains. The Management Council insists that we waive our right to negotiate wages. We’re not going to do that.”

“The general counsel of the National Labor Relations Board says they are violating the law by insisting on that,” Garvey added, “and therefore there is a tremendous difference between our proposal and theirs.

“Even if we reach agreement on our figures, the average team profit would be very close to what (Commissioner) Pete Rozelle thought was fair, mainly about $35 million,” Garvey said of the two sides’ economic proposals.

“That is absolutely, totally in rect, there is no money to be made by any club under the union’s proposal,” insisted Donlan. “As a matter of fact the clubs will lose money and we are not in business to do that.”

Donlan said the owners would reveal their financial offering for 1982, the first year of their proposed five-year contract, either today or tomorrow. Previously owners have said they are prepared to guarantee $1.313 billion for 1983-86.

The union is seeking a three-year, $1.1-billion pact.

Management spokesman Jim Miller, while refusing to estimate the differences in 1982, said yesterday the sides are $130 million apart in 1983 and $120 million apart in 1984.

Following reports of major concessions by the union, Garvey asked if it was prepared to make any move. Before he could reply, union president Gene Upshaw said: “No!”

Seven weekends of the 16-game regular season have been affected by the strike. NFL officials say two weekends can be salvaged juggling the playoff schedule. The last of the Wild Card round will be salvaged.

Union representative Michael Dubester has projected that the average club will lose more than $2.5 million over the 1982-84 — an average of 10 percent return on revenues under the union’s current proposal.

“We are not asking the clubs to go into hock in order to meet these demands,” Garvey said. “We are still saying that with the enormous television revenues that are coming in this year, they can well afford to pay more to the players and come close to sharing that money on a 50-50 basis.”
NEW YORK (AP) — Commissioner Pete Rozelle said yesterday that he is receiving increasing pressure to enter the National Football League’s stalemated strike negotiations but insisted it would "serve no useful purpose."

"I have just written a letter to Burgess Owens (defensive back for the Los Angeles Raiders), one of the players who have visited me this week," Rozelle said. "He asked me to attend the negotiations as an observer."

"I assured him that I would continue to work with the Management Council and mediator Sam Kagel to overcome the present impasse but that, under the circumstances, my presence would be an intrusion."

The commissioner said that 28 players, in four groups, had visited his office this week while talks were going on at the Summit Hotel four blocks away, the players all wishing to talk about their problems.

"I listened and told them that I would pass their grievances on to the Management Council in the hope that both sides will work toward the goal of settlement," he added.

Not only players but newspaper, radio and TV critics have started beating the drum for a Rozelle presence in the stalemate which already has wiped out seven weekends of games, cost owners and players around $25 million weekly and now threatens the season.

In sports, Rozelle has been hailed as the consummate league executive, bright, enterprising, successful in negotiating the most princely TV contract in history, $2.1 billion for 15 years. The impression is that Rozelle’s genius, if brought into play, could bring an immediate settlement. Such an idea fails to jibe with reality.

"I talked with Ed Garvey (director of the NFL players Association) and Gene Upshaw (NFLPA president) in Washington in September," Rozelle said. "I initiated the meeting."

"Garvey said he would like to get involved. I asked him, 'How do you mean involved?' He said as a representative of the owners — only I told him Jack Donlan (management’s chief negotiator) was speaking for the owners."

"I don’t feel I am commissioner just of the owners. When I helped negotiate that big TV contract, I wasn’t doing it just for the owners. It was for the players and the whole game."

Rozelle said, as a strong advocate of the players’ rights, Garvey wouldn’t accept him as an unbiased observer.

Rozelle said his situation is largely similar to that of Bowie Kuhn, the ousted baseball commissioner who was roundly criticized for not getting involved in the players’ strike last year when baseball parks were darkened for 59 days.

Rozelle recalled that he had been able to exert some favorable influence in labor-management situations in 1970 and again in 1974 and 1975, but under vastly different circumstances.

Media patiently follows strike

NEW YORK (AP) — There's a big city beyond the revolving door. For a while, you need to forget that.

Whether you're in Washington, D.C., or Cockeysville, Md., or midtown Manhattan — or wherever the National Football League strike negotiations slighlty — you love track of what the rest of the world is doing.

The player representatives in attendance experience no such hardships. Almost since they arrived last Sunday, they've been going on field trips.

They've visited NFL commissioner Pete Rozelle's opulent Park Avenue office several times.

They've toured Commissioner Bert Simmons' more spartan office at the United State Football League, across the street from famed Grand Central Terminal.

They're riled on New York City's subway system to the National Labor Relations Board at Federal Plaza, just a brisk walk from City Hall, Chinatown and Little Italy.

And, of course, they've had company.

When the dozes or so players piled onto the Lexington Avenue subway for their visit to the NLRB, so did the usual contingent of cameramen. As one wrote the names of the players he was photographing, he didn't recognize one of them. He asked another photographer. He didn't know, either. None of them did.

So they asked a player. He didn't know, either. None of them did.

The mystery man turned out to be just another big guy who got on the train.

The press and electronic media people here have become a family of sorts. They even have given themselves a name: the National Football League Strike Correspondents and Reporters Association.

Those nomads spend days and nights parroting realities, surveying lobbies, checking elevators, an instanced sort of existence.

When this round of negotiations began, they were preoccupied with finding a personal, valuable, reliable source of information, someone who might reveal a mood, a stance.

The routine is familiar. The participants float rumors by providing deep-background information one day so they can stand in front of a leceme and denounce those same rumors.

... Benning against Northern Michigan, I started to loosen up and had my best game."

Tonight the Irish will try to break out of a three-game losing streak against Western Michigan. "We real­ly don't know a lot about Western Michigan," says Smith. "NCAA rules prevent coaches from acquir­ing opponents; as a result, we try to determine what our opponents will be like by the coach's philosophy and what players he has." Western will really be an un­known quantity because they've got a new coach and we really don't know what his philosophy will be.

He had training under North Dakota, the "we're-cock-en," and at Bowling Green, which is more "freeze, so it will be hard to tell what philosophy he will develop."

"This week we've made a lot of changes," continues Smith. "With three of the four lines changed and with our injuries at defense, we'll be on the shakier side with the injury to Tony Bonadio (shoulder separa­tion), and Sean Regan. Hopefully, Steve Ely will be ready for the game."

John Keating and Tadd Tuomie will hopefully be ready by Monday."
