Salvadoran soldiers execute 18 peasants

LAS HOJAS, El Salvador (AP) - Washington has accused the Salvadoran government of last Tuesday's primary election - in which Washington upset incumbent Mayor Jane Byrne - was not predictable. "I think the chances of Epton winning are 50-50 at most. I'll go out on a limb," Roos said. He anticipates much discussion of the race, but said he does not expect it to be close. "Even if it is very close, I think the odds of Washington winning are very good," he remarked. When asked how surprised he was that Washington defeated Byrne and Richard M. Daley, Roos replied. "Not very. But that is because I had followed it closely." The most recent polls before the primary showed that, since January, Washington had gained the most in popularity among the candidates, while Byrne's popularity had been slipping. Roos said, "Byrne and Washington both knew that it was between them, in terms of campaign activity and where they were focusing," he said. After a certain point in the campaign, Daley was fairly ignored by the other two candidates, according to Roos. Byrne did attempt to win over some of Daley's supporters, but the fact that the primary was three-way helped Washington win. Roos explained. He also cited three other important reasons for the outcome. The first was that the white vote was split between Byrne and Daley. A second reason was Washington's effectiveness in getting out the black vote in support of his candidacy. The third factor was that Washington "ran a smart campaign, in terms of developing positive images." "He did his homework," Roos said. He was the brightest of the three candidates. The debates helped him substantially. "Both Byrne and Daley had to use the debates to try to patch up defects," he continued. "Daley had to prove that he could walk and chew gum. Byrne had to prove that she could stay calm." According to Roos, an exit poll revealed that among Byrne's supporters, about 12 percent said the debates were a factor in their support. Eight percent of Daley's supporters said the debates influenced them. But 29 percent of Washington's supporters said they were persuaded by the debates. Another important element in the primary was the support of black voters. Daley nearly had a great deal of black support, according to Roos. He received only about three percent of the black vote in the election. "I never faced up to the fact that he was perceived as a racist," Roos commented. "The polls overwhelmingly showed that blacks would not vote for Byrne."

Poets Harrison, Woiwode close Festival

By GRETCHEN PICHLER

English poet Tony Harrison closed the Sophomore Literary Festival Saturday night explaining that the inspiration behind his desire for an education was "the abnormal. While there, they discussed both the position of women in Cuba and the silencing of Liberties." Harrison also read a poem in which he remembered a child he had seen in Brazil, and the resistance shown by suffering children, including his own daughter who suffered injuries in a tuberculosis institution. "What is the taste of joy in a world that knows despair?" he asked, as he closed the presentation with his poem "Komplete for John Keats." "Komplete" is an invitation to Keats to distinguish himself from the immoral, comprehensive but makes the aumam sweet, and he compared the wonderful taste of the stranger fruit to his first experience of love.

Christianity has influenced much of the work of novelist and poet Larry Woiwode, who reads several selections at the Sophomore Literary Festival Friday night. "Woiwode said, because some of his reviewers "were prejudiced by my religion to faith in Christ," his latest novel, "Pushes John" was "well received." He attributed this prejudice to fear of "association with the Moral Majority." The North Dakota read two selections and four poems. He read an article entitled "Guns," written for Esquire magazine. In the article, a man kills an injured deer, but later realizes he was "as excited at putting a deer as moved by compassion." He also read an excerpt from the sequel to his best-known work, "Beyond the Bedroom Wall," which received nominations for the National Book Awards and National Book Critics Circle Award. The piece dealt with a man's coping with his realization that he is no longer capable of living an active, physical life. In addition, Woiwode read "Lambourn," a poem about mourning over death; "June, 1982," a pantoum sonnet which ties together the story of North Dakota planning season and the Falklands War; "After Joel," which demonstrated his belief that "science doesn't really discover anything new." He also read "Crystals from North Dakota," a poem dedicated to his brother. Woiwode noted that when he was growing up, he wanted to attend Notre Dame. Instead he went to the University of Illinois. Awards he has received include the William Faulkner Foundation Award for Best First Novel in 1969, and the inclusion of two short stories in Red American Short Stories. Woiwode was the host of a workshop on Saturday.

ND professor predicts Democratic victory

Notre Dame assistant professor of government and avid political campaign watcher John Roos predicts a win for DemocratRep. Dan Rostenkowski in his re-election bid. Roos has been a smart campaign, in terms of developing positive images. "He did his homework," Roos said. He was the brightest of the three candidates. The debates helped him substantially. The Old Fieldhouse will be torn down in the next few weeks, giving the 47-year-old gymnasium the building will begin tomorrow and raising of the exterior on March 12. Richard Kohn from South Bend will be the work. Parts of the building, which was the home of basketball games, track, as well as softball pep rallies, go back to the first gymnasium, constructed in 1898 and destroyed by fire two years later. The building occupied the block between the main and South buildings in 1969, when the Athletic and Convocation Center absorbed its athletic function. Angry Polish farmers are trying to resurrect Rural Solidarity under the shelter of the Roman Catholic church. "We are not going to be the "little monkeys,"" says one priest. "But we are going to restore our human dignity." Eighty of the farmers met in a secluded hilltop religious cloister near Krakow last week to discuss their problems and the future of their outlawed union. Although Solidarity has been disbanded, it still thrives in the countryside, says a priest. "It's one farmer said at the opening of the seminar, which ran from Wednesday to Friday. The farmers allowed an Associated Press reporter to attend the first session on condition that neither the participants nor the exact location be identified by name. Rural Solidarity, country cousin of the independent union that started in Poland in 1980 and 1981, claimed 20,000 members and 1 million and 2 million members before it was disbanded with the declaration of martial law in December 1981 and later outlawed under a law that bans regional or nationwide unions. - The Associated Press

Kenneth Ballard was walking along the river when "I saw this huge looking deal and I said, 'That's big.' I just knew something was going on there. It looked like a whale, but I didn't know what it was." He said it weighed 76 pounds. His measurements showed the bone to be about a yard long and ranging from 18 to 30 inches thick. Ballard called the curatorial staff at the University of Oklahoma and was told the bone might be from a mastodon, an extinct animal that is hairy, elephant-like and extinct. Museum staff said they will pick up the bone Wednesday. Meanwhile, Ballard, 47, who found the bone along the North Canadian River under 4 inches of water, said he was keeping the grey-green bone bone in a water-filled garbage can. The part that sticks out of the can is draped with a wet towel to keep it wet until they can get to it. He said he will let the bone run down there. - AP

Meeting the City

The smell that leaked into the box as it travelled down the freeway was strong enough to stir their sleeping friend from Iowa.

"What the...?" he asked as he pulled himself from what had been a good 20 minutes of innocent sleep.

"Gary," one friend answered.

But Gary had showed that morning, the Iowan said, in a display of wit that caught his friends by surprise.

"Gary, Indians you said," Oh, the Iowan said, "I guess I've never seen heavy industries before."

And with another excursion to Chicago. They were simply six freshmen — wide-eyed and squat in the quick - "you can't take Africa out of a man," Toure said to his leg mates, who had filled several bus loads of freshmen who agreed. The buses held them on Michigan Avenue, and someone told them the world's largest record store was up that way. After walking about a block, three decided to check out some of the big-name recording stores because, after all, the records are the same anywhere; clothes aren't.

The world's largest record store turned out to be so large, but the other three freshmen bought albums anyway. As they left the store and asked each other what is go to, an elevated train zipped by. The three looked at each other and decided a quick trip on the "L" train would expose Chicago better than walking around the Michigan Avenue area.

They climbed the stairs to board the next train, and the ticket lady behind the booth wanted to know where they were going. "We just want to see the city," one friend said, and the conductor would go around the city in a big circle like the circle highway back home.

The three looked at each other next to each other. There were only two other people on the train, and one black man stood up just as the next stop was. He was wearing a hat, not, and climbed as he walked toward the three. One student reached quickly to remove the green Notre Dame cap from his head just in case the man was a DePaul fan, although his dress didn't suggest it. The man grew up.

The doors shut, and the three swallowed. They had reached out to shake the city's hand, they called each other later, and the city had given up their feet. They would hang their "L" train ticket on their dorm room door the next day, circling the Lake Dan Ryan station and writing, "Where we almost met our Maker.

They met up with their other three friends back on Michigan Avenue. The Iowan, who had gone shopping, declared, "Isn't Michigan Avenue great?" All said it was.

Program improves care for elderly

By CHUCK BULL
Staff Reporter

"A way of keeping the flame lit." That's the way John Santos, director of the Gerontological Education, Research and Services (GERAS) program at Notre Dame describes his efforts to improve physical care for the elderly in the face of declining government support of social programs.

Santos is co-director of the Action Committee, a group of selected experts on mental and health care of the elderly, formed to study and implement recommendations from the 1981 White House Conference on Aging (WHGCA).

In spite of its influence, the committee will look at ways of implementing its directives, encouraging the emphasis of legislative actions necessary to meet the special needs of the elderly. Santos expects this type of citizen involvement to alleviate the problems caused by declining government support of important health care and social programs for the elderly.

The Action Committee is studying WHGCA recommendations because "after the WHGCA this time, no money was set aside to follow up," Santos said. "It was a small committee," he remarked, "but it has access to a lot of information."

The Action Committee was organized and is supported through grant money from the Retirement Research Foundation (RRF). Santos is a member of the Board of Trustees of the RRF.

Although Santos said the Action Committee's funding ($100,000 each year for four years) is likely to anticipate it will be adequate. "You'd be surprised what you can get done," said Santos, whose goal is "to get a loud bang for the buck."

As the director of GERAS, Santos has had extensive experience in identifying and taking care of the needs of the elderly. The elderly are "scared to death," he says, in the face of possible cuts in Social Security and other economic problems. They suffer from a wide range of physical disabilities. These disabilities are "nothing completely unique, but there are more of them," he said.

because they were Daley supporters, but he never got beyond that. Roos gave a description of Washington's opponent, Bernard Epsten. "He is a Republican businessman who served in the state legislature for several years. He is not a very strong campaigner. He's a bit and has a beard -- doesn't have a very good "TV face," he commented.

Though he said Washington's chances of winning are excellent, Roos pointed out that the race will be a challenging one for the congressman.

"Washington must use his campaign over the next six weeks to establish a base for his governance," he said. "I think he has got some real opportunities. But he has some real problems, too. Racism will be a factor. He will be scrutinized much more closely than if he were white."

"If he pulls it off, he is going to be a very powerful and effective politician," Roos remarked.

The elderly person is distressed by "exit events," such as the losing of spouse, job, role, interest or even appetite. "In the face of superabundance of exit events, people become helpless, hopeless and depressed," Santos said.

Although "the elderly do not have significantly more crime directed against them than younger groups," according to Santos, they are much more fearful of it.

All of these factors increase the level of stress in an elderly person's life, which serves to intensify already serious problems. Not surprisingly, the elderly "commit five to six times more suicide attempts, according to Santos, and suffer from other symptoms as well."

The GERAS program at Notre Dame is designed to address these problems through educational, research and training programs. Santos stressed the need for proper training of both volunteers and professionals who deal with the elderly.

"There is a great deal of naivete on the part of the President (Reagan) and others that you can just turn volunteers loose, and they will know what to do," he said.

To encourage and facilitate the type of training necessary for proper care of the elderly, Santos, with Gary Van denbos, edited an American Psychological Association book entitled Psychology and the Older Adult: Challenges for Training in the 1980s. This book has been distributed nationally to organizations which provide training and supervision of those working with the elderly.

At Notre Dame, Santos noted that students have the opportunity to work with older persons within a framework of "help, preparation and guidance" as part of the Student Advocates and Volunteers for the Elderly (SAVE) program. Santos is "absolutely delighted with the kind of track record Notre Dame students have" established through their participation in SAVE.

Although the numerous problems of elderly life, Santos emphasizes that "a lot of old people are happy. He sees this as evidence that the programs and SAVE activities can succeed in helping those having trouble dealing with the difficulties of old age. Careful study of the health and mental problems of the elderly is essential," Santos says, because there are "no simple solutions to a complicated problem."
Queen's California tour continues

PALM SPRINGS, Calif. (AP) — Queen Elizabeth II and Prince Philip attended church in San Diego yesterday and then flew to Palm Springs, arriving in a steady downpour for their second stop on their 10-day tour.

The 50-year-old queen, wearing a lavender suit and matching beret, stepped from the gleaming Boeing 747 and preceded Prince Philip down the ramp into a waiting limousine. Escorting a California Highway Patrol vehicle and four motorcycles, they headed for the Walter Anderson estate in Rancho Mirage, eight miles to the southeast.

The royal couple, who arrived in San Diego on Saturday aboard the 5,760-ton yacht Britannia, were to finish their day in Los Angeles at a gala dinner with movie moguls and Hollywood royalty.

Several hours could be heard from a group of 21 protesters among a crowd of 200 to 300 people waiting the arrival from behind a fence waiting to see the queen Saturday morning as she arrived in a steady rain.

WASHINGTON (AP) — Citing their bashed-size state budgets, a bipartisan coalition of governors yesterday moved toward asking President Reagan and Congress to consider tax increases and defense cuts to reduce federal deficits described as "ruinous to our economy."

A draft budget resolution urging this stand from the White House was opposed to the White House was opposed to the granting of the ... planning for the board's annual state of the state budget. The governors' proposal set a goal of bringing the deficit down to no more than $90 billion by 1988. Matheson said that the Congress Budget Office projects a $267 billion deficit for that year.

The resolution recommends six budget guidelines. They are:

• Accepting the recommendations of the bipartisan commission on Social Security for dealing with the system's financial problems.

• Restoring increases on federal grants to state and local governments to 75 percent of the rate of inflation. The grants cover such programs as aid to business, veterans, health care and environmental regulation. This segment represented a retreat from an earlier plan to cut off federal assistance altogether, regardless of the inflation rate.

• Providing "almost full funding" for such programs as aid for dependent children, food stamps, Medicaid, child nutrition, guaranteed student loans, farm price supports, general revenue sharing and unemployment assistance programs.

• Retaining the growth in entitlement programs that are not based on individual need.

• Limiting the growth in defense spending to between 4 percent and 6 percent over the next two years and an overall rate of between 5 percent and 5 percent over the 1984-88 period. Real growth in the proposed fiscal 1984 budget has a target of about 10 percent and the administration had projected long-term growth at about 7 percent.

• Without citing specific taxes, calling for increases sufficient to offset the remaining portion of the deficit.

Democratic governors, who now outnumber Republicans 34-16, have called for capping the third year of Reagan's tax cut program. They also want to eliminate indexing, which adjusts an individual's income taxes for inflation.

The governors' proposal set a goal of bringing the deficit down to no more than $90 billion by 1988. Matheson said that the Congress Budget Office projects a $267 billion deficit for that year.
Nationalewide farewell

M*A*S*H series ends tonight

In Laramies and armories, fraternity houses and blood banks, Americans coast to coast are dressing up in Army fatigues to bid a final farewell to Stethes, Hot Lips and the whole beloved gang of TV's "M*A*S*H." "Hawkeye" will be poured from a still at the Nugget Casino in Virginia during tonight's broadcast of the final show from the environs of the 40th"mobile Army Surgical Hospital. A Providence, R.I. radio station will broadcast a half-hour program of various hosts to about 1000 winners of a "M*A*S*H" trivia contest. And Hawkeye, Klinger and Hot Lips look alike contests and waterways in surgical masks are on tap at dozens of saloons where the 2-hour season finale on CBS is expected to draw to full houses.

At Fordham University in New York City, students are throwing a farewell bash in dormitory Suite E-6—the room occupied by Alan Alda, "M*A*S*H" Hawkeye, when he was a student there 27 years ago.

Power struggle

Civilians killed in Zimbabwe

BULAWAYO, Zimbabwe (AP) — Prime Minister Robert Mugabe's troops are alleged to have killed as many as 1,000 civilians in the last few weeks in the tribal lands that form the country's opposition leader Joshua Nkomo's stronghold.

The government denies the claim, which is vastly exaggerated, but is under mounting pressure from foreign journalists as well as domestic human rights groups to allow an independent investigation of the situation in Matabeleland.

Villagers who have fled the area say the home of a prominent Ndebele tribe, has told foreign journalists harrowing tales of mass rape, looting and torture by the troops, most of them members of the dominant Shona tribe.

The refugees say the atrocities were committed by North Korean-trained soldiers of the 5,000-strong ZANLA Fifth Brigade — a special force raised by Mugabe to battle rebels and guard against invasion from white-rural South Africa.

Some reporters have quoted unidentified sources, ranging from relief agency workers to civil servants, as putting the death toll as high as 3,000. Other sources say the figure is much lower, about 1,200.

But Information Director Justin Ncube, who escorted local journalists on a three-day tour of the strife-torn western province last week, told The Associated Press yesterday: "We have people lined up around the block," said Packo, whose restaurant was written into "M*A*S*H" episodes five times.

Packo's also is shipping 500 hot dogs, five gallons of pickles and pep- pernips, place mats and coasters to a Holiday Inn in Louisville, Ky. for another "M*A*S*H" bash.

A basketball tournament game between Army and Manhattan College was rescheduled to tomorrow night because of the "M*A*S*H" episode.

Obviously, said Fatt, "the Army did not want to start its war (with Manhattan College) until we concluded ours."
SOMOPENnORE PARENTS WEEKEND

At Saint Mary's

SMC sophomores entertain parents

By DAVID SARPHIE
Assistant News Editor

Saint Mary’s sophomores entertained their parents Friday night at a talent show entitled “If They Could See Us Now!” as part of the College’s annual Sophomore Parents Weekend.

Produced and directed by Kathleen Desmond and Marie Van Feltz, the show highlighted the musical, dance, and comedy talents of many members of the class.

The show opened with a dancing song and dance routine entitled “Consider Yourself at Home.” A comedy-song medley, “People Should Send Candy Till These Halls Could Talk” followed.

Next, Maureen Weagher exhibited her dance skills in a Spanish dance from the Tchaikovsky’s Nutcracker Suite. The pace slowed slightly with a rendition of Dan Fogelberg’s acoustic “To The Morning” with Carolin Corran, Mary Beth Hochs on guitar, and Julie Thurman as accompanist.

After the comedy skit, “Hard Knocked Life,” Moira Finnegan and Janne Amselum performed a Mozart clarinet sonata to utter perfection.

A touch of Frank Sinatra lightened the pace as fire girls sang Kander’s “New York, New York.” Next, Christine Vock displayed her soprano voice, singing Mozart’s “Una Donna a Quindici Anni” from Cosi Fan Tutte.

Mary Scheiber displayed her talents as a ballerina in a routine she called “A Touch of Classic.” Lee Ann Franks followed, playing Marcel Grandjany’s harp solo “Barcarolle.”

A comedy interlude followed, with several girls playing “Matchmaker” for the other young women. Kathleen Lach next sang the Bellafonte, Greene, Reynold’s immortal “Turn Around.” Julie Thurman then displayed her talents as both a composer and pianist with her original, “Fan-Yang.” Laura Halland helped out on flute.

Seniors

By MIKE KRISKO
Campaign Campus Reporter

Class unity through better communication and more events is the key issue facing voters in tomorrow's senior class elections.

There are three tickets running for the soon-to-be seniors' last election:

• Tom Burke, president; Tommy Murphy, vice president; Tim Ryan, secretary, and Gina Giumarra, treasurer.

• William Dawahare, president, Tina Persson, vice president; Mark Manley, secretary; Mark Buschman, treasurer.

• Pat Brogioli, president, vice president; Pat Barry, secretary; Bill Kirk, treasurer.

Tom Burke's platform stresses getting a diversified crowd involved in class activities. "Participation with the least time is successful," he said.

We asked about the student who doesn't want to go to an event Burke replied.

"We would like to create a class atmosphere at every event that will appeal to all seniors. Some of the ticket's ideas include more happy hours, and tailgates, a Senior Talent Show, a lecture series, class Masses, a Day at the Dunes, sports tournaments, more reconocion of the hard work students are doing, and more emphasis on the important of job opportunities after college."

John voters are the people who let us know what we want to do to appeal to everyone, it's necessary to offer a wide range of activities that these students at one time or another will want to go to.

"I'll go to a couple of events, see people that they know, meet more people, and from there I think more students will want to go to more events."

Dawahare said it's important to support the volunteer programs. "Many seniors are involved in Volunteer Services, and we hope to encourage more students to work with the Center for Social Concerns to bring the campus and the South Bend community together," he said.

The Junior Class Secretary stressed the importance of Greater Student Life. "We have an office in Lafayette where one of the class officers will be everyday. Students would be able to obtain more information about the social programs, voice opinions or just ask questions.

Romano's ticket has new ideas, such as a Senior Class exchange with other Midwestern colleges, a Senior Night to make more opportunities available after the normal senior year, special events in Chicago as an alternative to "The Senior Formal.""

Junior Class

Increased communication and participation in class activities are the main issues that the Junior Class Officers are promoting in their campaign.

There are three tickets in the race:

• Vince Hockett, president, Laura Sizelove, vice president, Ken Wighton, treasurer, and John Kowitz, secretary.

• Mike Schmidt, president, Robin Israel, vice president, Jim Fink, treasurer, and Sylvia Piccin, secretary.

The Deckter ticket, nicknamed "the Middle," is modeled for key academic, administrative, monetary, and social life. "The platform includes better communication, part of the ticket's ideas include more happy hours, and tailgates, and a Senior Talent Show, a lecture series, class Masses, a Day at the Dunes, sports tournaments, more recognition of the hard work students are doing, and more emphasis on the important of job opportunities after college."

Fresenius are strange. They've been here almost a whole school year now, and they still walk as strange as they first got here. It must be part of being a freshman.

Admittedly, most of my knowledge of freshmen is limited to my acquaintance with the Stallion dorm, but I have found that even those from other dorms and quads are equally strange. They are a strange lot, even the girls. Freshmen are always the same. They all want to be different. They all want to make freshmen mistakes, like trying the breaded pork sandwich in the dining hall, or running into the door that doesn't open.

I made the mistake of trying the breaded pork sandwich the Saturday.

In Fort Wayne on Friday night, the Oak Ridge Boys gave a powerful demonstration of the attributes that have made them one of country music's best acts.

The Boys brought their electrifying stage show to the Fort Wayne Coliseum as part of a four-day Mid-West swing that took them on a stop in the Atlantic and Convocation Center in Saturday.

The award-winning Oak Ridge Band provided driving instrumental backup all night long, as rocking the crowd with a new song of its own. Plans are in the works now for The Oak Ridge Band in a show with the Fort Wayne Orchestra.

But any review of an Oak Ridge Boys concert is limited in scope only the music and the crowd. The keys to the success of The Oak Ridge Boys are their infectious enthusiasm and their ability to bring four distinct personalities into an appealing-on-stage harmony, in spirit as well as sound.

William Lee Golden, who looks and lives like a mountain man, touched the audience with his rendition of the popular, "God for Kids." Deep feeling pours out in "Italian Stallion" image on stage, impressed the audience straight through to the last note of the song, "You Should Be Dancing." And, Allen, president of all the Oak Ridge Band ventures, showed the style and grace that are implied in the words "live music," and just love people.

And their audiences respond to that. The Fort Wayne crowd went it... to a near frenzy, again rushing the stage, as The Boys concluded with two of their most popular hits, "Elvira" and "Bobbie Sue." But the biggest hit of the night may have been the title cut from the new album, also were well received. The new album, like the group's first, should be a smash hit.

The group has several business ventures doing well now, including a radio station in Terre Haute, IN, and a music publishing company in Nashville to go along with their solid business in records and souvenirs. Stetson is a part owner of several minor league baseball teams. Gold en lives in a refurnished 18th century home on a historic estate he calls "Golden Era." But the four haven't let success spoil them. Golden, for example, has traced the history of his estate to the days when Indian villages occupied the land. With The Oak Ridge Boys since 1964 (longer than any other member of the quartet), Golden is often asked to speak about the experience.

The show is composed an entirely original score, which though ap­\color{red}parently not entirely accurate, well set the mood of the times. Kathleen McRae's choreography is striking, and while at times the performances of the dancers could be a little too perfect, it still was quite impressive, the dancing near the end of the show, when the participants wheel in an exaggerated slow motion, is finely designed and ex­ecuted.

All in all, Marathon '83 is a most enjoyable show, which shown through its minor faults and opening night quarry Friday to provide a fascinating and thoughtprovoking evening. The show will continue Thursday, Friday and Saturday nights. It begins at 8 p.m. and tickets are available for $2.50 for students, faculty and senior citizens, and $3 for all others.

When Hesburgh speaks, should Notre Dame?

In the Feb. 24 issue of The New York Times, a group known as the Religious Appeal purchased two full-page advertisements. The group urged the president and Congress "to resolve the budget crisis" by implementing a fiscal policy which the group outlined in its ad.

Paul McGinn
Roper Review

Over 300 men and women, including former public officials, lawyers, corporate executives, and educators signed the ad which stated: "The Nation cannot afford to leave the budget to politics as usual. It is time to set aside differences of party, region and ideology. We appeal to you, our leaders, to display true leadership in the spirit of national unity, to resolve the current crisis. Only if you do so can the balance of the century yet be a time of prosperity and growth of new jobs and higher standards of living. Only if it is can we leave future generations with a richer and stronger America.”

Among the distinguished signers is Reverend Theodore Hesburgh, president of the University of Notre Dame.

The appeal calls for a $1.75 billion cut in the 1985 deficit including a $400 billion decrease from a "one-year freeze in the growth of benefit levels of cash payments flowing from the large social insurance programs," and a federal tax increase of $60 billion for fiscal year 1985.

But the appeal not only calls for an amended fiscal policy. The text of the appeal also includes a section on the restructuring of defense funding, "The defense budget increases now planned should be moderated so as to save about $25 billion in fiscal year 1984. This would still provide for a major and sustained defense buildup, an overall increase in real terms between 1981 and 1985 of about 7 percent and an increase in hardware purchases of about 11 percent per annum. It would encourage more explicit planning for that buildup, and lead to wider, sustained public support for a strong defense posture."

Hesburgh is joined by such educators as W. Graham Clayson of Stanford, Donald G. Gere of MIT, and Stephen Graubard of Brown; however, the committee also includes Robert S. McNamara, secretary of Defense during the height of the Vietnam War, John C. Bierwirth of the larger Corporation and Ronald N. Frey of the Bell & Howell Corporation. Grumman and Bell & Howell hold major defense contracts.

While an almost microscopic disclaimer for the Supporters of the Hesburgh Appeal appeased the Budget Crisis reads, "Typically, the organization's names are used for identification purposes only," the man who has championed the cause of nuclear disarmament issues an appeal which calls for an 11 percent increase in weapons purchase and "sustained public support for a strong defense posture.”

Where is the threat of the "Vienna Accords" which stated: "It is imperative to reduce disarm and to increase hope and confidence through a succession of steps to curb the development, testing, production, and deployment of nuclear weapons systems, and to achieve stabilizing agreements on substantially lower levels, with the ultimate hope of their complete elimination.”

Regardles of the disclaimer divesting Hesburgh of any ties to the University of Notre Dame, the 2 million readers of The New York Times as well as most of the students and the faculty of Notre Dame, see Hesburgh and the University as inseparable entities. When Hesburgh speaks, so does Notre Dame. But somehow, the students and faculty of Notre Dame were neither consulted nor advised of this latest Hesburgh move. As always, the name of the University was attached "of identification purposes only.”

Mark Zappas was notorious for "rewriting" blues standards, some of which are copyrighted, their biggest hit; "Whole Lotta Shakin' Going On.”

"Finally, in one as equally absurd as the Selig Records case, the publishers of the hymn "Abba, Father" are considering suing Vangelos, a Greek who little heard the song, because they claimed he copied the melody and used it in his Academy Award-winning theme music from "Chariots of Fire.”

Over the past couple of days I have heard the pertinent sections of Selig's song, and indeed similarities exist — some very striking ones. In most parts of the song, the Brothers Gibb heard "Let It End" — that is, of course, if they did — was answered. I feel the jury made a mistake. The Selig appeals are appealing, and justifiably, if justice prevails, the original ruling will be overturned.

Copyright infringement suit: "Let It End"

The Bee Gees have to do with a struggling songwriter from a small Chicago suburb named Ronald Selle. The group's story is all too much. Last Wednesday, an obscure man named Ronald Selle found himself on the winning end of a copyright infringement suit. The question: did Barry, Maurice, and Robin Gibb steal some melody lines from Selle's "Let It End" and use them in the biggest hit of their career, "How Deep Is Your Love?"

Tim Neely
My Turn

The precedent in this case was the 1976 suit filed by Bright Tunes, publisher of the 1965 hit, "How Much Is That Doggie in the Window?" against singer George Harrison, late of the Beatles. They claimed that Harrison's biggest hit, "My Sweet Lord," infringed on their copyright, and were found correct. Those two songs are strikingly similar in melody, and as "It's So Fine" was a massive hit that Harrison likely heard, put into the recesses of his mind, and then unac­tionally recited when he wanted a tune for "My Sweet Lord," their case was not implausible. The court before him was a sympathetic one to cases involving a melody of a tune of $567,000 settlement. (Harrington got the last laugh out of it by writing a song which "doesn't infringe on anyone's copyright" and "has nothing frightful about it.")

But one question remains in my mind: how did the Bee Gees ever hear Bright Tunes' song in 1978 while doing yardwork, under the guise of inquiring after the song's origin? They never played on the radio, never even pressed copies was any form of the tune. The Grumman Song Tape was dismissed by the jury as being outside of copyright protection. The Bee Gees write 99 percent of their own songs since 1965 before those soundtracks, and even then, all those songs were remakes. They don't need to listen to anything — or someone — to be able to do their own. If they did - is answered, I feel the jury made a mistake. The Selig appeals are appealing, and justifiably, if justice prevails, the original ruling will be overturned.

Church's role in Nicaragua

In a region crippled by oppression and poverty, the Nicaraguan experience suggests to some a new alternative for Central America, largely because of the unparalleled extent of Church participation in societal change.

Ellen Hawley
Guest Columnist

Christians seek to further define their place in modern society, many look toward Nicaragua as a model of the critical role which the Church must play in the struggle of the poor. Although sometimes the Church's involvement in the revolution process, many Christians believe that any authentic attempt to live the Gospels necessitates taking part in the development of a more just society.

Soon after the 1979 revolution, Nicaragua's Church leadership took several actions to continue its control of the Church's influence, and to restrict the Church's influence, and to restrict the government's control of the Church. Religious freedom has been publicly and officially guaranteed, and, perhaps most telling, control over the Church's property has been a major factor in the state's interference strongly linked to one figure, Archbishop Obando y Bravo. Outside of his Managua diocese, priests and bishops throughout the country report a positive and constructive relationship with the government.

Today, the precarious economic situation and the constant threat posed by the U.S. military buildup of Honduras are only two of the many factors which combine to create a situation of high tension in Nicaragua. The Church, as an institution of all classes and an integral part of society, is not exempt from the conflict in the political and economic arena. However, any action on the part of the Church takes on an unavoidable political aspect in the minds of the people. The question concerning government interference in matters of Church--state relationship. There have been accusations that the government is now using the Church's influence to undermine Church influence, to restrict the Church's influence, and to raise its influence. At the same time, there are five priests directly involved in the government. Religious Freedom has been publicly and officially guaranteed, and, perhaps most telling, the government's interference is strongly linked to one figure, Archbishop Obando y Bravo. Outside of his Managua diocese, priests and bishops throughout the country report a positive and constructive relationship with the government.

Junior Parents Weekend, I looked at the Junior Parents Directory and their parents smiling, laughing, and running from cocktail dances. The day was so far simply wrought thoughts struck my restless fancy, and somehow I decided to present these thoughts based on an idea I had dreamed of and developed a few political ideas of my own and only that weekend felt courageous enough to confront the folks with my new found liberal outlook. They were here at last, at Notre Dame, on my turf. Finally, I was ready to let them know all about the evils of building nuclear weapons and casually let them know that I had joined a campus-wide nuclear awareness group. At that time I felt that the existing arms race might be escalating and dangerous and wasteful folly. Human sin or error and conflict dramatizes God's great creation, the line of Adam and Eve. Ironically, we were also creators but quite different from God, creators from a frighteningly destructiveness view. I believed wholeheartedly in Thomas Jefferson's words, "We must not use this to tear the destruction of man for the supposed glory of Christ, in, to effect, to crucify Christ over again.

While my father started to worry about alcohol, I decided to be courageous or popularly I don't know, left group, my mother, getting a little nervous, told me that I must understand the difference between physical and moral evil. As recall, Mom said that physical evil is human suffering, pain, and death, and moral evil is the loss of human freedom, presumably to the Russians, offered the greater moral evil. Really worked up now, she declared, "it's ideas like yours that make the world unsafe and pave the way for Naziism and Communism!" Stunned by a heresy agression, I stammered back that perhaps the money to build bombs could be better spent to serve the poor in Appalachia or in our urban areas. "Hopewell," shot back my old man, "our American poor at least can vote, if the country don't like them, and choose their own destinations. Here, people are free to move up. A few stay poor because... well, because they're shiftless."

"Quality of life?"

Dear Editor,

The catch-all "pro-choice" advocate writing in these pages recently, I offer the following comments on the statement.

Q. In the ongoing abortion controversy, what exactly is this "choice" that pro-choice people are exercising? That is, what is the period pro-choice people are concerned about the quality of life facing an offspring that is possibly unwanted, possibly most of the discussion has centered around the quality of life facing an offspring that is possibly unwanted, possibly in the very act of procreation, no

A. In my opinion, the political question is not slavery or war, for instance — there is a moral question there. In more general terms, the issue is to torture and not defend and defense spending recklessly, we morally condemned. Therefore, I believe in the proposition that the best way to reduce the chance of war is to be prepared for it.

Like the "quality of life" argument, the argument in itself is a phoney issue. For example, Jesuits are asked to choose between killing the one or the other. Only one conclusion can be drawn from these observations. Both Rupert is a raving maniac. I know one would not want to ride on the same team bus with him. Moreover, he can be extremely near sighted. I wonder if he got lost in one of the ACC basketballs and never actually saw the game.

Oh well, John, keep trying. You'll get better. You may even get the privilege of playing first team All American — next to Ole Joe's what's his name, of course. William & Mack Paxson vs. who?

Dear Editor:

In the Suppes, couch of the Akron Zips, may be right. Joe Jakubick may be a better player than John Paxson. Let us ask at the facts. Joe Jakubick is not the fastest player in distance than Paxson. It's true. John. How many forty foot jump shots did Paxson against Akron? Jakubick shot at least six of them. I think he even hit one. Look, John, don't be an excuse eater. Quit driving around roads and guarding and putting on pretty moves for Ivys. Shoot from forty feet! Digger wouldn't mind.

Lenten ways

To a world decaying in unbelief, the South Dining Hall's function status as a Catholic cafeteria. Solemn, black-lettered posters steadily warn Catholics that the Fridays of Lent are days of abstinence, at least in that part of the Universal Church represented by the University of Notre Dame. (In the Universal and, presumably, Lukewarm Church, only Ash Wednesday and Good Friday are means, but I am grateful to the bishops who have faultlessly insisted on this means of sparing us the immorality of mankind.) What satisfaction to an American Catholic to know that his Friday fishburger, potato pancakes and beets, as well as a few names unknown not only to Dante but to many cathe besides his parents and that our students are desperately subversive theologians do us services with questions about the cogency of the grageological proposition (not what he can't say, but what you do to it). Better that the South Dining Hall should supplement this program of Catholic Eating in a variety of easy steps. First, on the Fridays of Lent, divide the cafeteria into two sections: Meat-eating and Vegetarian.

Meatless. In the former, our misguided but blameless brothers and sisters, of other or not faith, may eat their meat with or without grace. Here, so said, they will be joined by heartbroken, transfixed, meat-eating Papists, who could be pitied, however, from the devourer Meatless Sec tion with various tokens of the Higher Alts. They are the most elevated, the most cruel, the most honest, the most courageous, because they are the most brave. I am100% against this Hobson's choice and believe that every Catholic student should go through the board of exams and pass with flying colors. I mean, I mean, I mean.

Snite thank you

Dear Editor,

We are writing to express our appreciation for your excellent coverage of and cooperation with the recent Christos Snite Museum of Art. The layout and design of the features section, as well as that of our advertisements, were quite professionally done. We would also like to thank the students and faculty for their support through their presence at the opening and their continued attendance at the museum. The opening was such a smashing success because of the many who attended. I mean, it is rare that many students sign up for membership in the Friends of the Snite. Student membership benefits are free and ensure that you will be informed of all happenings at the Snite, as well as other benefits. Let's face it, the University will prepare the Lenten menu published from one combined, bureaucrati cally efficient Office of Campus Ministry, Food Preparation, and Public Relations. That way the left hand will always know what the right hand is doing. Isn't that the new Testament says?

A poke at ourselves

Joe has guts, you do not. Okay, you won the UCLA game in LA with pressure-packed last second free throws as a freshman. I'll give you that. Yes, you have won other games with timely shooting, passing, defense, half-handling, rebounding, and conce very easy to take without the help of every years. I shudder when I think what my life would have been like had my parents not come up for that weekend last fall. Hell, I'd still be in the dark.

The OU Tortoise

Two against one didn't seem quite fair, but. a few months later, I started to see the light and understand what they were getting at. Mom and I were talking about things a little more seriously. A year older and wiser, I chuckled everyone. I remember my blushing heart last year. For three years, I walked to Logan Center every Saturday morning and tutored at the nearby juvenile facility on Thursday nights. Now I get "Tankard" at the Marriot on Thursday nights, sleep in on Saturday to watch basketball on TV, and thumb my nose at the old WNDU building everytime I pass. I can't believe they wanted all that time and university funds renovating that dump to try and help the disadvantaged when we'll probably all be blown to smithereens in a few more years. I shudder when I think what my life would have been like had my parents not come up for that weekend last fall. Hell, I'll still be in the dark.
Bengal Bouts finish with a flurry

By ED KONRADY
Sports Writer

The NBC network cameras didn't make it to the event, but it was strictly the event of the weekend. In the most exciting finishes in the 54 years of the Bengal Bouts entertained an enthusiastic crowd at the ACC last night.

Only three of the nine title fights were decided by unanimous decision, with three fights stopped by the referee, two decided in a split decision, and the climax of the night, the super heavyweight bout, was decided by knockout.

The bout started with the 155 pound match junior Mike Dandurand winning in a split decision against sophomore Don McClain in an exciting opener. McClain used his quickness well against his southpaw opponent, but before he could take advantage of Danurand's low right hand, the sophomore tured and was out punched.

In the second fight, freshman Edmond Kelly won the 140 pound title using an effective right lead against sophomore Pat Serge. The smaller Kelly fought well in the clinches and scored with many head shots over the dropped hands of Serge.

Both men stayed on the offensive during the fight, with Kelly's crouching style giving a small target to Serge. The fight was close, with a split decision going to Kelly.

Fighting in an unorthodox style, senior Paul Derba used an ultra-aggressive style and a variety of hooks to score an unanimous decision against junior Joe Beary. Derba's hooks scored consistently throughout the fight, with Beary always moving forward.

The Aaron Pryor-style of the senior confused Beary, as the junior could not get a solid punch near the swinging buzzaw.

In one of the cleaner fought fights, senior Steve Stercza scored a technical knockout at 1:59 of the second round against classmate Dave Odland. Stercza moved very well side to side and pumped Od­ land with jabs.

In the second round, Stercza landed a hard right to the head that sent Odland staggering, earning him a standing eight count. Odland came back with another vicious right, ending the fight.

The brawl of the day began in the 155 pound title fight with senior Greg Leyzinski winning an unanimous decision against classmate Dave Roberts. Combinations flew back and forth between the fighters with solid shots being shied off by both fighters.

In the later rounds, Leyzinski dominated Roberts with his superior strength. Roberts receiving two standing eight counts, the latter courtesy of a hard right by Leyzinski.

One of the most entertaining fights was in the 155 pound class, as powerful Angelo Perino stopped Pat Casuch at 1:28 of the first round. The fight started with Casuch throwing a flurry of hooks against the sophomore. Perino the champ then threw a solid left that shook Casuch and then a crushing right which broke the nose of the freshman and ended the fight.

In the third unanimous decision of the session, sophomore Dave Pickos defeated senior Doug Matlauer after suffering a shoulder injury during the fight. Pickos won the decision, continued on after the incident and finished up Matlauer with jab-induced bloody nose.

The heavyweight division championship was the quickest fight of the night, as junior Mike Crz TKO'd graduate student John Iglar at 4 3 of the first round. Crz knocked down Iglar with a solid right, earning him a standing eight count. A few seconds later, Crz landed another crunchning right which stunned Iglar and ended the fight.

In the superheavweights, graduate student Andy Panelli knocked out junior Larry Andreini at 1:13 of the second round. Panelli continually backed up the junior, landing hard rights to the head and sharp lefts to the body. Andreini struggled with so many head shots, combinations, but could not avoid Panelli's charging, aggressive style. With Panelli finishing the fight with a hard right to the head.

The heavyweight champion that started the tournament, only Perino (165) retained his title. Serge (140) lost in the finals, McEarin (155) lost in the finals, Andreini (150), and Panelli (165) lost in the finals, and Mark LeBlanc (super heavyweight) lost in the semifinals.

The money made by the 56th annual Bengal Bouts will be sent to the Holy Cross Missions in Bangladesh. This represents the efforts of many young men who have participated in this year's Notre Dame boxing club.

IRISH ITEMS — Lynn Ebbern and Jenny Klakow did not dress for either game of this weekend’s games....

Both should begin practicing this week. While they should dress for next week’s games, a decision on their playing status will be made later this week.... This weekend’s wins were for Notre Dame, its first at home this year. In addition, the DePaul win was the Irish women’s first after two defeats to the Lady Demons.

I never thought the game was a work of art,” Smith said. “It was poorly played by both clubs. Everything for us was slow.”

Saturday was a completely different story. Notre Dame put up an impressive 4-4 record and a 3-0 win over Bowling Green to set the stage for the Irish hockey team. The team responded by exchanging hugs and kind words. The Flames shouted to show their support for the team. And the Irish fans were enough to hold off the Demons’ last minute rally.

Patterson stars

DePaul wins on last second shot

By WILL HARE

Sports Writer

ROSEMONT, Ill. — Metropolis TV announcer Harry Kalas would have said, “You’re watching great indepen­dent basketball.”

With all due respect to Mr. Kalas, yesterday’s DePaul-Notre Dame clash was not great — the teams combined for just 20 of 43 from the floor line — but oh, was it exciting. Perhaps too exciting for the Irish.

In the end, DePaul’s Kenny Patterson hit a solid 17-foot jumper as the buzzer sounded to stave off a furious Notre Dame comeback effort and give the Blue Demons a 95-93 win.

Playing at points with 1:50 to go and 51-41 with 1:18 left, the Irish capitalized on DePaul turns and missed foul shots to earn their way back into the game. John Patson, the slowest and shortest jumper per the tie score at 53 with sever­al ticks remaining. Following a DePaul timeout, the Demons set up their final play.

“The play was set up for Randolph (Demon forward Bernard), but Bill Varner dinged Randolph the ball,” said DePaul coach Ray Meyer, “but the game should never have been close.”

Patterson, who missed two one-and-one free throw opportunities and the back end of another in the final two minutes, broke free from Irish guard Dan Duff and pulled up for the game-winning jumper.

“The play was for me to get the ball and either penetrate or dish it off to Randolph,” said Patterson. “When I broke free, I could have taken it all the way in but I saw there was 3 seconds left, so I pulled up.”

Patterson, winner of the Most Valuable Player Award for CBS-TV, was open to take the layup there had there been a second or two more on the clock.

“I didn’t give that shot anyway at the buzzer,” said Irish coach Digger Phelps. “You have to credit the quickness of Patterson. Let’s face it, the kid makes a great shot.”

While Patterson claimed CBS honors, Patson was the recipient of the Woodell Smith Award as selected by the writers and broad­casters. Patson finished with 19 points on 9-of-18 shooting.

The loss dropped Notre Dame to 16-9 on the campaign and severely damaged their hopes for a NCAA tournament bid. The Irish would have established absolute supremacy among midwestern in­dependents with wins over DePaul and Dayton (March 7).

DePaul’s chances for a tournament bid “went up about two per­cent” according to Meyer, but the Demons now hold a comparable record of 15-9. They still have games with South Carolina, Marquette, and Dayton remaining on the schedule.

The Irish close the season with home games against Seton Hall (March 5), Dayton (March 7), and Northern Iowa (March 10) and must win all three to really realistically have a shot at the NCAA’s. Then, as Digger Phelps said, “We have to wait and see what the selection committee does.”

Whatever the decision, we’ll ac­cept it.

The Irish were deliberate in the first half and controlled the tempo against the much quicker Demons. DePaul played perhaps its best half court offense of the season and took advantage of 50.8 percent shooting by Notre Dame in the opening half. Trailing by four points, the Irish went into the delay game for the final two and one half minutes of the first half. But Duff was called for a blocking foul as he attempted to set a screen for Patson with three seconds to go, and DePaul led at inter­mission 19-15.

In the second half, DePaul saw a seven point lead dwindle to three at 51-48 following a couple of Ken­neth low baskets. But the hometown team continued to doggedly defend and a cunning of fer­fese allowed the Demons to control the tempo and get back in the game.

Both Asburns nailed the Demons’ 1,000th points on this tour­nament trip to the game over the hoop and the contest ended as sophomore center Ruth Kaiser took the ball and fought to keep the handle. The thrilling finish was charac­teristic of a very bizarre game.

The match began oddly enough, with Digger Phelps saying before Notre Dame’s coaching staff was hustled for a delay of game call. The ROSEMONT, Ill. — The Notre Dame women’s basketball team was not able to break a sigh of relief that its NCAA Tournament hopes were in tact after surviving a frantic second half rally by DePaul University to win, 52-50, in the second game of this national women’s/ men’s doubleheader at the Horizon Saturday afternoon.

Though Notre Dame had built a 14-point lead with just 10 minutes remaining in the game, John DePaul had an opportunity to win the game in the last 10 seconds.

“They got to our heads,” said Coach Mary DiStanislao. “You’ve got to give DePaul credit for the come back. They used all their weapons.”

The defensive full-court and a cunning of fer­fese allowed the Demons to control the tempo and get back in the game.

Ruth Asburns nailed the Demons’ 1,000th points on this tour­nament trip to the game over the hoop and the contest ended as sophomore center Ruth Kaiser took the ball and fought to keep the handle.

The thrilling finish was charac­teristic of a very bizarre game.

Regional Academic All-Americans named

Two Notre Dame basketball standouts, senior John Paxson and sophomore Mary Beth Schaeff, have been named to the District Four Academic All­American team.

Chosen in the annualballoting by the College Sports Information Directors of America, both Paxson and Schaeff will now appear on the ballot for the national team to be announced in March.

Paxson earned his position on the district team by achieving the highest GPA over the last two semesters as a marketing major in the College of Business Ad­ministration. He joins Indiana’s Randy Wittman, Marquette’s Larry Manoia, Toledo’s Steven Purdie and Purdue’s Steve Red on the five-man team.

Schaeff was chosen as a physical therapy major in the College of Science. Joining her on the 10-woman team are Ball State’s Karen Bauer and University of Illinois’ Linda Donley, St. John’s Judy Brown, Eastern Illinois’ Nancy Lynn Kasiewicz, Minnesota’s Mary Dressen, Toledo’s Jennifer Wies­ler, Bowling Green’s Chris Turtle and Northwe­stern’s Karen Stack.

Paxson was a first-team national pick on the Academic All-America squad last year.

A ten minute delay preceded the second period as the glass above the clock started to be replaced, but the break could not quell the Irish spirit.

At 2:47 Chipman was clearly breaking away on Blakely. He had the ball to his right hand. Gries­man neatly maneuvered in with con­trol of the puck. At the last minute he breached the Irish and scored his third goal of the season.

The score was 3-0 going into the final period of hockey for Notre Dame. The first ten minutes were an exhibition of sticky, loose hockey. But, at 11:11, Blakely got down to business. He gained control of a loose puck.
