Reston kicks off Red Smith lectures

By GRETCHEN PICHLER and MIKE RICCARDELL

"The political reporter may get an argument if he's wrong. The sports writer will get a punch in the nose," said New York Times syndicated columnist James Reston last night in his lecture on the relevance of sports writing to political writing.

Reston spoke in the inaugural Red Smith lectures, an annual series of presentations honoring the reporter considered by many to be one of America's foremost sportswriters until his death earlier this year. "We owe it to ourselves," Notor himself is the only sportswriter to have won a Pulitzer Prize for commentary. Reston spoke, "to push that incredible, incorrigible case of journalism — he is journalism out of control."

Welch then cited four primary causes of abuse: situational stress factors (i.e., unemployment, at risk of arrest and violence), individual capacities (namely, an individual's mental and physical health, intelligence, personality, and previous experiences), and social or institutional variables (especially the availability or lack thereof of day care services, counseling, etc.).

"No single factor causes child abuse," Welch added, "there is usually a combination of factors which precipitate the abuse." Welch stated.

Another interesting observation Welch made during her presentation was that fundamentalist religious groups often encourage abuse through strict adherence to the traditional "spare the rod, spoil the child" philosophy. She substantiated this allegation by explaining that societal attitudes concerning discipline, children, and violence, individual capacities (namely, an individual's mental and physical health, intelligence, personality, and previous experiences), and social or institutional variables (especially the availability or lack thereof of day care services, counseling, etc.) often serve to reinforce the traditional "spare the rod, spoil the child" philosophy.

Welch noted that the fundamentalist religious groups have a history of promoting violent discipline practices, which have had a detrimental impact on the well-being of children in the United States. She also discussed the role of social and cultural factors in shaping children's experiences and outcomes.

"It's the fundamentalist religious groups that have been encouraging these violent discipline practices," Welch said.

Welch concluded her lecture by emphasizing the importance of education and awareness in addressing the issue of violence in child abuse. She called for increased funding for research and prevention programs, as well as for support and advocacy for children who have experienced abuse.

"We need to continue to educate ourselves and our communities about the impact of violence in child abuse," Welch said. "Only through increased understanding and awareness can we work towards creating a safer environment for our children."
A colloquium focusing on "Social Change in Mexico" at Notre Dame last fall has won a national award for creative programming at the meeting of the National University Continuing Education Association in Reno, Nev. The event, directed by Kristine Bergan, dean of continuing education, accepted the award on behalf of the center, the Department of La Vince, and the University Continuing Institute for International Studies. Authors, literary critics and academic scholars participated in the two-part colloquium held last October and November where Mexican writers joined in a discussion of poverty, political distrust and interplay of oligarchic interests.

The colloquium was directed by Dr. Joan Axley of the language department. Father Ernest Barrell of the Kellogg Institute, and James Powell of the Continuing Education Office. — The Observer

Ten percent of the student body was in line at the Athletic and Convocation Center yesterday afternoon.

The Presidential Review highlighted Tri-Military week, a demonstration of power and sense of commitment by the Reserved Forces Training Corps (ROTC) cadets of Notre Dame.

Retired Army Chaplain Father Edmund J. Murray opened the review yesterday with a prayer and after midnight talk according to the organization's chief, "who were requested to remain anonymous.

The ROTC - composed of the cadet, the civilian, a public administration, and approximately twelve committee members - have been examining the possibility of combining a career and a commission in the ROTC, the cadet said.

An ROTC advisory Chair man Mike Perez said the ROTC Com mi ttee is "not really happy" with PATC's endeavors, but added "there's not anything we can do about it." Perez said that the ROTC administration had asked the Cadet Committee not to sponsor the review because it was disequitable.

Despite the "good participation last year," Perez said that "the adm inistration didn't want to have it because it disrupted all the activities of studying on campus.

"People that are trying to study at night are bothered by all the screaming, and it just kept going. There are a lot of people that are trying to sleep at that time too.

The Campus Scream was begun two years ago as part of An Tostal's week long activities. The following year, South Quad joined in; thus the Campus Scream served to usher out Gentle Thursday.

Cries of "boo-boo-boola-boola" and "Yell for your life," as suggested by PATC advertising, "express our university's love for Notre Dame," the cadet said. This is only a scream. We advocate no violence, no nudity, no profanity, please.

Perez said, "I don't understand why they felt they had to go off and do this on their own. Maybe they thought that there should be a scream, but taking the matter in their own hands I don't think was the way to do it.

"I wish they would have come to us and asked why we weren't waiting," Perez added. "We could have given them the reasons why.

The PATC cadar described the event as a "baby sitter type" position. "I think it's pretty sad," said Perez.

Perez conceded that he "can see why they (PATC) would want to keep it going. There is a lot of sense to it. But we have to respect everybody.

Women in Workplace

Marriage/career skills are necessary

By HELEN LUCITAS

Balancing marriage and work could become harmful without proper skills, says a local hospital executive.

Dr. Fritz, Associate Vice President of Memorial Hospital, spoke about the complications of combining marriage and a career for the final lecture of the "Women in the Workplace" series in Spiget Lounge at Saint Mary's College.

"There are a lot of paths, both professional and personal, once you make a commitment to a career," said Fritz. "You have to make decisions as to how you will spend your time.

Fritz began by listing the pl ications in her own life from both a career and a committ ter's marriage. She stated that "love does not conquer all" and that "life gets complicated when you get involved with a career."

Fritz explained that working skills can be illustrated in a hierarchy. She said that the skills can be divided into three levels - personal, middle managerial, and top managerial skills.

To attain personal skills, Fritz said that "the foundation of one's life is in developing a healthy life style."

"One should have a personal value system, and third, one should have a personal support system. Fritz also said that it is important to develop a knowledge of the organization. "An organization doesn't open doors for you. You have to do work on yourself and find out what is going on.

On the middle managerial level, Fritz stressed that one should develop effective communication skills and that it is important to develop a style and appearance that sets oneself apart from the others.

"Women need to stop being cute and learn to say things positively and constructively.

Fritz explained that on the top managerial level, developing personal skills is most important because one must maintain the ability to think ambitiously, well-instructed politi cal skills, and the motivation to work with the extra mile.

In all cases, Fritz emphasized that women must learn to take risks and not be afraid of failure.
Disposal remains crucial problem

WASHINGTON (AP) - There was once talk of shooting it into space or burying it under a polar ice cap. While those notions have been discarded, the problem of what to do with nuclear wastes that will remain lethal for thousands of years is a long way from being solved.

Since the dawn of the atomic age four decades ago, the waste has piled up from construction of nuclear weapons and the generation of electricity at civil power plants. Congress, after 25 years of debate, passed a bill last December that sets up a schedule for completing the first burial site for civilian wastes by 1998.

While that gives the government 15 years to find and build the site, past history indicates that all that time and more may be needed.

The problem gained new urgency yesterday when the Supreme Court ruled that states can prevent nuclear power plants until the federal government devises a safe method of disposing of the wastes. At least 12 other states have some type of restriction on plant construction.

Even before the decision, the Reagan administration was pushing ahead on an accelerated schedule to meet the requirements of the waste bill to demonstrate its commitment to solving the problem.

While the law requires the president to pick the sites for detailed studies by Jan. 1, 1985, Department of Energy officials say they expect to have the three candidates picked by the end of this year. Then they will begin detailed "site characterization" work leading to the selection of one site for the waste dump by the president in March 1987.

Two of the three sites - in Washington and Nevada - have already been picked. Three in Mississippi, Louisiana and Utah are in the running for the third site. All four of these sites feature underground salt formations. The department plans to pick one primary salt formation for study with a back-up in case problems are found.

The selection of candidate sites has stirred self-proclaimed "Abuse"

Five hundred people turned out for hearings in Nevada last month to protest the selection of the Nevada test site and Gov. Richard Bryan promised to veto a high-level dump in his state.

Cabinet members

WASHINGTON (AP) — Two ranking Cabinet members put the MX hard-sell in Congress yesterday, saying it is essential to deploy the new missile because "the weaker we are the more bold and obnoxious" becomes the Soviet Union.

But a trio of Democrats made clear they were not buying the wares of Defense Secretary Caspar W. Weinberger and Secretary of State George Shultz.

"Despite the president's super­salesmanship that is being launched here today, I cannot support the recommendation," said Sen. James Exon, D-Neb. "It simply makes no sense to me."

Sen. Carl Levin, D-Mich., said the administration's plan to put 100 missiles in fixed and vulnerable holes "turns logic on its head."

"It doesn't deter," he said. "It does the opposite."

Sen. Edward M. Kennedy, D-Mass., said that by Weinberger's own tes­timony the so-called window of vul­nerability still exists "and basically these weapons systems would be stin­ging ducks."

Weinberger and Shultz insisted to the Senate Armed Service Commis­sion that the weapons' military value is that it would enable the United States to match the capability of the Soviet Union and its other deter­rent targets with great accuracy.

Politically, they said, it would demonstrate the nation's will and determination to defend itself and its allies.

They also said the signal of strength it would send would en­hance prospects for success in arms control talks with the Soviet Union.

The present Reagan plan calls for placing the 100 new missiles in silos now occupied by aging Minuteman missiles, while beginning work on a smaller, single warhead weapon for deployment in the 1990s.

Weinberger acknowledged that those silos are vulnerable and will remain so until they can be har­dened.

Exon said 85 percent of the pre­vious MX testimony heard by the committee, including by mem­bers of the military joint chiefs of staff and by Weinberger himself, recommends against putting the MX in vulnerable Minuteman sites.

"You're saying let's go back to square one and put the MX in vul­nerable holes," Exon said.

Weinberger replied that the delay caused by the search for a way to deploy the MX permitted the Soviets to build and deploy highly accurate and powerful SS-18 and SS-19 strategic missiles.

He said it is now essential to match that capability quickly.

"The weaker we are the more bold and obnoxious become their (Soviet) policies," he said.

Sen. Dan Quayle, R-Ind., asked what might be gained in the way of successful arms control if the num­ber of warheads on each MX were cut from ten to five.

Secretary Shultz replied, "I suppose we might gain a horse laugh from the Soviet Union."

Other senators voiced support for the new program, which even critics say has a better chance for congres­sional approval than its predeces­sors.

Reagan compromises on budget requests

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Reagan, yielding to rebellious Senate Republicans, offered a 1984 budget compromise yesterday that would provide more money for domestic programs and slightly less for defense than he originally wanted.

The proposal keeps intact Reagan's three-year program of tax cuts. Reagan dispatched three top aides to the Senate to explain the proposal to key Republicans, and Senate GOP leader Howard Baker said he hoped agreement on a tax and spending plan was within reach.

Several participants in the meeting, speaking on the condition that they not be identified, said the biggest stumbling block to an agree­ment was opposition by con­servatives to any tax increases over the next three years.

"The hangup is taxes," said one senator, adding that the moderate Republicans at the session were prepared to "swallow hard" and agree to Reagan's new proposals for spending.

Presidential aides at the session included Chief of Staff James Baker, Counsellor Edwin Meese and Budget Director David Stockman.

Their visit to the Capitol marked the administration's first serious at­tempt to compromise with Senate Republicans who, after rejecting Reagan's original budget, have been arguing for weeks about how to meet the deficit.

These are the elements of Reagan's newly revised proposal, according to documents obtained by The Associated Press:

Defense spending for 1984 would increase 7.5 percent above the 1983 level. Reagan's original 10 percent proposal and the 5 per­cent the committee voted for over five years, military spending would be slightly lower than Reagan originally called for.

Reagan would agree to accept about $1.3 billion more in domestic spending over three years than he originally proposed, but the budget Committee would have to cut $35 billion through 1986 from tentative spending plans already enacted.

The plan assumes enactment of Reagan's proposal for a one-year pay freeze and partial approval for his program to revitalize the Civil Service Retirement program.

INDIANAPOLIS (AP) — Conrail and a group of freight shippers are close to an agreement to restore freight service on a 60-mile stretch of track in southern Indiana, a negotiator for the shippers said yesterday.

"We are very close to having a deal," said Lee McNeely, a negotiator for the shippers. McNeely said in an interview.

Conrail is sending an extra crew to the line between Shelbyville and Lawrenceburg by April 6, saying it was no longer profitable to provide service along the route. All freight traffic had been halted along the 60-mile stretch. Service has continued between Indianapolis and Shelbyville, and between the Indiana state capital and Cincinnati.

McNeely said both sides met last Friday and "Conrail gave the shippers a proposal which was changed in a number of areas from what the parties had last talked about, but was something that Conrail indicated they will be willing to sign.

The officers of the shippers group reviewed the proposal and found it acceptable, he said. They have recommended that it be adopted by all of the shippers and a copy of the proposal will be delivered Thursday to Gov. Robert D. Orr, McNeely said.

Under the agreement, McNeely said, Conrail will continue to own the line and will provide rail service to freight shippers on a contract basis "with the hope that it will spur economic development and increased utilization of the line," he said.

If the shippers agree to the proposal, it must be reviewed by the Interstate Commerce Commission, McNeely said.

"We'll be seeking the aid of the governor, the senators and the affected congressmen to get this approval," he said.

Freight could begin moving along the line as soon as the ICC approves the agreement, he said. The shippers are also trying to get Conrail to put in writing its commitment to rehabilitate the line from Beech Grove to Shelbyville and from Thurber to Cincinnati, he said.

"We're doing the abandoned segment, they're doing each end," he said.

The governor's press secretary, William DuBois, said the state spoke with Conrail chairman Stanley Crane on yesterday about the shippers' concerns regarding rehabilitation of each end of the line. According to DuBois, Crane told the governor that Conrail would agree to the provision.

"We're done. It's a tentative agreement," Du Bois said. "It's as final as it can be until it's reduced to writing."

Walesa encourages personal celebrations

GDANSK, Poland (AP) — Lech Walesa declared yesterday that the working class has a right to observe May Day in a working man's way, but cautioned that the holiday may jeopardize the pope's visit to Poland.

"I cannot tell you exactly what tactics he might propose," Walesa said.

The leader of the outlawed Solidarity labor union also said he hoped to meet with Polish-born Pope John Paul II during his scheduled June 16-22 visit.

May 1, the international labor observance, is a major holiday in the Soviet bloc, where it is marked with large, officially sanctioned demonstrations, while the underground is a major public protest against the government. "I am a working man, I will celebrate May Day in a working man's way, but I cannot say exactly how," Walesa said at a news conference at his Gdansk apartment.

Sheboygangle may resume freight service

MOSCOW (AP) — The Soviet government launched a new first in space missions yesterday: sending up three cosmonauts for the first time in nearly 10 years to celebrate its own holiday the way it wants.

Vladimir G. Titov, 36, and space veterans Yuri P. Gagarin, 50, and Alexei A. Leonov, 39, were sent up in a Soyuz T-4 space transport at 7:11 p.m. (8:11 a.m. EST) from the Baikonur space center in central Asia at 1,940 miles southeast of Moscow, the official news agency Tass said.

(Nixon) has the right to (bar the press)," said Reston. "But, that's why he's in private life."

Smith, currently editor of the Times "Washington Talk" page, was skeptical of Nixon's reasoning. "His 'shyness' seems to be something new," he said.

Reagan's decision on running for a second term was another topic of the conference. Smith and Reston, on that matter, preferred to hedge their bets.

"I think that Reagan is in much the same position as (Dwight) Eisenhower was before the 1956 election," said Reston. "If he doesn't run, he'll be told, there's Jesse Helms on the right- and George Bush and Howard Baker in the center, and there will be a titanic battle for the soul of the party — and that would open the door for the Democrats."

"But if you would have asked me three or four months ago, I would have said that he wouldn't run again."

Smith added some insight, saying, "Three White House reporters were discussing the fact that they had each independently reached the conclusion that Reagan would not (run for a second term), when Jim Baker (Reagan's chief of staff) offered to bet each of them $50 that he would.

"But then again, Baker's a rather wealthy man."

The political discussion ranged into the evening's topic, of the effect of sports journalism on the journalistic profession.

Reston made the point that the use of sports terminology in the political realm is a negative force in journalism.

"The reports of 'Who's No. 1' in the arms race or 'Who's the Front Runner' in political races trivializes the complex," he said.

"(Sports terminology) sets up false expectations. Sports are played as if on a stage. The purpose is to win, tear down the goalposts, and go home. In the world of conflict between nations, however, sometimes, we dare not win.

"Using statistical terms to interpret the positions of candidates, through things like popularity polls, is fine for a Notre Dame football game, but a bit simplistic for a presidential election."

Reston has served the Times for 41 years as its Washington Bureau chief, its associate editor, and then its executive editor. He was vice president of the New York Times Company for five years. In 1980 he received an honorary doctor of law degree from Notre Dame and will receive another honorary degree from his home in Glasgow, Scotland, this June.

President Reagan has finally admitted publicly for some time—that the United States is directing and financing armed groups of Nicaraguan exiles based in Honduras who are trying to overthrow the leftist Sandinista government in Nicaragua. The president was quick to add, however, that his administration is complying with the Boland amendment, which withholds any aid to any group trying to topple the Nicaraguan government. Yet any number of reliable witnesses, including members of Congress, have charged the administration with taking the laws man-generally acknowledged as overseeing covert activities in the region, Honduran At-bassador John Negroponte, told two visiting legislators recently that the Boland amendment is a "legal nightmare." The Reagan Administration is able to admit their involvement with rightist guerrillas whose objective is to overthrow the law by cleverly claiming to be using the guerrillas to help "leaven" a peacemaking process. The Reagan Administration has been unable to produce one single shred of credible evidence to prove the enormity of the interference in the region. The Boland amendment is a half-hearted attempt to document Nicaraguan subversion, to conceal a "white paper" of full of holes by critics and later disavowed by the State Department.

The missing piece in the argument is solid evidence of Nicaraguan arms shipments to El Salvador. After more than three years of sur-veilliance with sophisticated equipment, initially specialized equipped ships, planes, and highly magnified AWACS radar planes, the Reagan Administration was unable to produce one single shred of credible evidence to prove the enormity of the interference in the region. The Boland amendment is a half-hearted attempt to document Nicaraguan subversion, to conceal a "white paper" of full of holes by critics and later disavowed by the State Department.

The fact of the matter is, of course, that the only country exporting terror in Central America is our own. The infusion of more than $1 million in weapons and equipment to aid a small group who seek to regain the privileges they lost when the Somoza dictatorship was overthrown in 1979 is a prime example. Until the Reagan Administration recognizes that the cause of revolution in Central America is not Soviet Cuban-Nicaraguan trouble-making but the legacy of centuries of poverty and oppression, they will continue to numb the world, including the people of Nicaragua, with an exremely unstable region. The sheer hypocrisy of the Boland amendment shows how protactinating in the brutality of "democratic" governments in El Salvador and Honduras with "olittitarian" governments in Nicaragua, in which not one person has been executed and sincere efforts to improve the lives of all citizens are underway.

Recently, Anthony Lewis wrote in The New York Times: "The most lethal foreign policy choice since Vietnam now confronts this country. Unlike Vietnam, the American public is on notice of what is happening before it is too late. Will our political system work this time to avoid disaster?"

For our sake, as well as for the people of Central America, let us hope so.

U.S. technology giveaway

Dear Editor:
Max Lerner's editorial entitled, "Soviet computers have to steal," (April 13), caught my eye. Mr. Lerner made three primary points: (1) the Soviets do not possess the technological superiority they desire, (2) this technology "can't be bought, borrowed, or begged," so that (3) the Soviets must steal the technology instead.

I agree with Mr. Lerner that the Soviet's technology is limited. He could quite truthfully have been much more strong. In fact, after a massive supply of technology used in the Soviet Union, Antoni Sutton contended that there is no such thing as Soviet technology. Further, Soviet innovation is almost non-existent. Therefore, the Soviets must go outside their country to acquire the technology they desire.

Further, the role of theft and espionage in the Soviet acquisition of foreign technology is undeniable. But it is incorrect to imply that the Soviets can acquire the technology only by spying. It is incorrect to say that high technology "can't be bought, borrowed, or begged."

The Soviet bloc is continually acquiring technology from the west. Primarily the West, the United States, the other NATO countries, and the United USSR, technologically inferior, not just by themselves, but even with the consent and supervision of the governments of these countries. Technology is also transferred to a large degree through various government agencies and private companies, and even through educational exchange programs. Soviet scientists come to the United States to study the cur-current technology of accelerated machine tools, for instance, and afterwards return to the Soviet Union, bringing the technology with them.

Overall, we have the dubious distinction of having transferred the technology necessary to prop up ICBMs, guide those same ICBMs to the American targets, and even to design the nuclear warheads that would cause such destruction and death. That's right, we gave it, not all at once, but in bits and pieces. Now we are raping the "benefits" of this trade, supposedly intended to promote peace, friendship, and brotherhood.

In recent years this transfer has contrasted with the U.S. None of the techology transfer would take place. Sutton, in this three volume work Western Technology, Economic Policy, and National Suicide: Military Aid to the Soviet Union, has spent over 1,400 pages on the topic. But let's just get a little taste here.

In the 1950s the United States provided the Soviet Union with the Stalingrad (now Volgograd) Tractor Plant. It was built in the United States, dismantled, shipped, and re-built in Stalingrad. In its day, it was the largest such plant in Europe. We provided a duplicate at Kharkov and a second duplicate at Chelyabinsk. For years, these plants have been part of the major plants producing much of that occurred in the Vietnam War at the very same time that tanks and PT-76

Dear Editor:
"L'il Sibs"
This past weekend over 1,200 brothers and sisters of Notre Dame students came to the campus for L'il Sibs Weekend. The program had been highly successful at Miami of Ohio for a number of years, and proved to be an equally enjoyable experience for all involved this weekend. The success of all events can be credited to the L'il Sibs committee, but specifically to the chairperson of the entire program, Sue Pledger. It is through her hard work and dedication that this past weekend became a reality, and a public thank-you is in order.

Very early in the school year, Sue approached the HPC and Student Senate for their input, and with their blessing began the task of organizing the event. While reassuring many apprehensive rectors and administration officials that there was little cause for concern and worry, she began to plan for approximately 500 kids to visit. In the next few months however the numbers grew, and eventually quadrupled. The original estimate, as brothers and sisters of the UW, New York, and even California decided to come out for a few days.

Although there were a few difficulties with organizing buses and trying to keep all our events running on time, the collective effort was a success. That everyone came off without a hitch and many of you got to see your "little siblings" your home away from home. Thank you for a

Men of mud

Dear Editor:

I was interested to read your article, "Bernardin: Medieval man in a modern age," I have but a single question. The article says: "In Ber-ardin there lies that medieval spark of regio-political politics men of mud, inspired by their faith in God and in each other seek to perfect this imperfect planet. I forgive my ignorance, but whence derives the curious if not bewildering expression, "men of mud"?

Points of Greg Russell and Bob Michels was not enough for Brick Throwers.

The fine defensive job that Brick Throwers did on LS shooter Chris Schneider, holding him to just two shots and no baskets, was wasted in a losing effort.

There were some other tough games, and, while they were not quite as exciting as the Brick Throwers-US contest, they kept the crowds happy.

John Stein, a returnee from last year's team, keyed the second-seeded Everless Jacksonless Five to a 21-17 win over Cash Anberg and the Country Boys and solidified a place in the Elite Eight.

Rich Pasucuzzo led Cash Anberg with six points.

Sixth-seeded Macri's Preferred Stock topped Mercury Morris Chose Coke Over Pepsi, 21-19 in a game with many free throws.

Law student Don Strumillo was near perfect for Macri's, connecting on nine of 10 shots. Joe Sweeney also added six for the winners.

Tim Andree continued to be the driving force of his team, third-seeded Bad to the Bone, as it rolled over B.O. and the Bouncing Balls, 21-12, yesterday. Andree teamed with Scott Zetek to grab 21 rebounds, seven more than the entire B.O. team, and that was probably the difference in the game.

Fourth seed John Shoe and the Sneakers beat WEBB's Encore by a 21-17 margin. The Sneakers' big story was not the 21-of-42 shooting of John Shoe but rather the miserly 9-of-91 shooting of WEBB's.

The key to the John Shoe win was its ability to hold WEBB's big gun, Bob Keenehan, to just one shot.

It also didn't help the WEBB's cause that Mark Mazieres and Mike Stepancek could only make three of 21 shots between them.

Bigger. Better. Smoother. . . had not one, not two, but three strikes against it before its game with fifth-seeded Tequila White Lightning ever started.

Mike Shiner hurt himself in football practice yesterday and could not play. Peter Boyle broke his wrist in fifth round action and could not play.

And Tim They took it into fifth-round action and could not play.

This left bigger. Better searching the crowd for players just minutes before their game was to begin. Enough were found to enable bigger. Better to play with five players, but obviously, this was not the same bigger. Better team who had made it this far in the tournament.

Tequila White Lightning, for this reason, had an easy time of it, winning 21-11. Tequila had balanced scoring as Brian Enright, Lou Nanni, and Mike Collins each contributed five points.

In the day's only real surprise, and a minor one at that, ninth seed S.W.C. topped eighth seed NEBO's IV by a 21-17 count. Pat Kramer scored six points and pulled down eight rebounds to spur S.W.C.

At 6-2, 205 pounds, Dave Machtoff is also in contention for the fullback spot and should provide added reinforcement to the ranks.

When discussing his players, Moore uses a low-key approach. In order to maintain the strong competition in practice, he prefers to not highlight each player's abilities, but he is willing to compliment the unit as a whole.

"I'm very impressed with the attitude and progress both as individuals and as a unit," says the newest coach on Gerry Faust's staff. "All of them seem to feel that they can improve."

When fall arrives, 5.10, 185-pound Hiawatha Francois will be on hand for the Irish. The consensus high school all-America should add more support to the Irish running corps.

With so much talent abounding, it would appear that the Irish have great depth in the running back department. Moore, however, prefers to wait and see.

"Hopefully we have it," he says. "They've made progress, but there is still a lot of room for improvement that would give us that depth."

It appears that only time will tell for the Notre Dame running backs.

Extending its losing streak to five, the Notre Dame baseball team was defeated in a doubleheader Tuesday by the Northwestern Wildcats at Evanston, Ill. The Wildcats won 7-5 in the opener and 5-0 in the shortened nightcap.

Notre Dame had improved a 3-1 record by winning eight of its next nine games in a stretch from March 31 through the first game of a doubleheader April 13 against Ball State. After losing the second game to Ball State 9-1, though, the Irish have proceeded to lose two to Indiana State and now two to Northwestern.

In the first game against the Wildcats, the Irish took an early 1-0 lead. Centerfielder Steve Pominelli knocked in the run with a single to right with two outs. Northwestern tied the score in the fourth inning with a sacrifice fly, the first ball hit out of the infield off Irish pitcher Steve Whitmyer. Whitmyer, 2-5, had struck out six batters in the first three innings.

Northwestern made it 4-1 in the fifth when, with one out, the Wildcats chased Whitmyer with three runs on two hits, three walks, and two errors. Relief pitcher Tom Corlin finally ended the inning with two strikeouts.

Notre Dame narrowed the gap in the sixth with two runs. The Irish scored with a walk, a Phil Dingel double, and a single by third baseman Carl Yovino.

Northwestern put down the Notre Dame rally in the bottom of the sixth when it scored three times to increase the lead to 7-3. The Irish were unable to make up the difference as the best they could do was come up with two runs in the seventh on a Rick Christ single, a double by Vouo, and an error.

Because of darkness, the second game of the doubleheader went only six innings.

In the six innings, the Irish collected only two hits. Nothing turned me off about Notre Dame, however. We wish him well.

Northwestern tied the score in the seventh inning as Popson's athletic director, also expressed his disappointment.

"I'm definitely disappointed," said the elder Popson. "But it's his decision and, whatever he wants, we'll accept it."

Popson averaged 21 points and 15 rebounds per game while leading his team to a 101-27 record and three Wyoming Valley Conference titles in his four seasons. He also recorded 991 blocked shots and 451 assists for his career, while becoming only the third player in Pennsylvania history to earn first-team all-state honors three seasons in a row.

This past season, Popson averaged almost 26 points a game in pacing Bishop O'Reilly's, a small Class A school, to a 27-6 state before it was eliminated in the Class AAA state tournament.

Popson, "but we didn't talk at all about recruiting. We play different styles (Popson is a forward, Wolf a center) and I feel we can play well together."

Although Popson mentioned "furthering his education" in his opening remarks yesterday, it is evident that his choice was strictly due to his admiration for Dean Smith, the legendary 21-year coach who led UNC to the NCAA championship in 1982 and has reached the Final Four on seven other occasions.

"I liked North Carolina because of their coaching staff and their players," Popson said. "I got along really well with them when I visited. Nothing turned me off about Notre Dame. It's just that I liked North Carolina a little more."

Phipps was not the only one let down by Popson's decision. David Popson sr., who serves as Bishop O'Reilly's athletic director, also expressed his disappointment.

Mary Colligan (right) and Pam Fishette, Notre Dame women's tennis team's No. 1 doubles team, have been enjoying a lot of success lately, as has the rest of the team. After probably clinching an NCAA Division II tournament spot over the weekend, the team routed Northern Illinois, a Division I opponent, on Monday.

The only other Irish loss was a forfeit. After clinching the team victory, Petro decided to default the No. 2 doubles match due to the cold weather and physical strain on LaFratta and Lee.

Although the victory was not something to write home about, Petro is finding some big rewards in the play of her team.

"We have something to prove," Petro said. "I don't know if we'll win, but I know we're not a 9-0 team against Purdue."

This weekend also marks the last road trip for the team before the national tournament. It's a fact that Petro believes.

"This is our last road trip," she said. "It's been rough with all the travelling, but this will be our last midnight run and then it's home free until the NCAA's."

Popson chooses Carolina

BY CHRIS NEEDLES
Sports Editor Emeritus

High school basketball star David Popson of Ashby, Pa., announced yesterday that he will continue his basketball career at the University of North Carolina in the fall.

Popson made his long-awaited decision public at a press conference yesterday afternoon at Bishop O'Reilly High School in Kingman, Pa., where he was an all-state performer for three seasons and became a first-team All-American.

The announcement ended months of speculation that began in November, when Popson made

Double Decker barely wins; joins Elite Eight

BY JEFF BLUMB

Perhaps Double Decker Oreo Cookie finally realized that it could be beaten. Although it did win, Double Decker got quite a run for its money when it played Nutmeggers Are Back Again yesterday in sixth round action of Bookstore XII.

"I had a gut feeling about going to Carolina," Popson told The Observer yesterday. "Coach (Jager) Pinkett visited my house last night (Tuesday) and I told him I was going to North Carolina. That was when I first told anyone of my decision."

"(Pinkett's) decision didn't have any effect on my thinking. You've got to have confidence in your own ability to be able to step in and do the job." Paper by Popson志愿了Wolf on two occasions, most recently at the McDonald's All-Star classic in Atlantic last week.

"We got along really well," said Popson.

Bookstore XII

After coming out on top by a 21-17 score, the top-seeded Double Decker was counting its blessings - three, to be exact.

First, it was fortunate that Nutmeggers did not hit better than 17 of 62 from the field.

Second, it was lucky they had Bill Varner on their team as he hit on 13 of 24 shots and rebounds more than anyone else on line.

Finally, it was not the best of nights for Double Decker. Its play seemed j lackluster and unorganized for much of the game. The players knew it was off to two games they played that way.

Nutmeggers also showed just how tough and evenly matched the tournament field is. Despite being the 16th seed, Nutmeggers played an inspired game that might have been enough to beat any other team in the Sweet 16.

However, the Double Decker-Nutmeggers game was not the only game yesterday that showed the balance of the field.

Another good example was the game between the seventh-seeded team, US, and the 10th-seeded team, Brick Throwers. The game could not have been much closer - or better. US finally edged Brick Throwers, 24-22, after a long, spirited battle.

Senior Paul DeAngelis was outstanding for US, hitting 11 of his 14 shots, and knocking all of them from the same spots on the court.

The two teams were pretty much even in the shooting department, with US making 24 of 42 and Brick Throwers making 20 for the game. But the red-hot shooting of DeAngelis eventually proved to be the difference. Final: the combined 17-16 win.

Wealth of backs vies for two spots

By ED DOMANSKY
Sports Writer

At the 1983 spring football cam­paign at Notre Dame nears its final days, the question of who will start running back the ball on offense during the fall is beginning to gain more attention.

Senior Greg Bell returns an extra year of eligibility after breaking a bone in his ankle against Purdue in the second game of last season and miss­ing the remainder of the season. In his two games, the 6-0, 204-pound Bell carried the ball 24 times for 125 yards and one touchdown. Although cur­rently sitting out spring drills in or­der to ensure that his ankle is thoroughly healed, it is hoped that he will be at full strength come the fall.

His 512 yards rushing during 1981 made him the second-best Irish runner, and his 5.6-yard per carry average was best on the team. Bell was a second-team selection on the Sophomore All-America team as named by Football News.

Sophomore Allen Pinkett also returns at tailback this spring. His 532 yards rushing last season made him the second-best Irish runner, and his 5.6-yard per carry average was best on the team. Bell was a second-team selection on the Sophomore All-America team as named by Football News.

Sophomore Allen Pinkett also returns at tailback this spring. His 532 yards rushing last season made him the team's second-leading rusher. That total also ranks him second only to Jerome Heavens for most yards gained in a season by a Fresh­man. Heavens had "56 for the Irish in 1975. Some of Popson's more notable achievements in 1982 included a 76-yard touchdown run against Pitt and a 93-yard kickoff return for a touchdown against Penn State.

When speaking about the upcoming season Pinkett states, "I must relax and be satisfied with the five­yard gain. I don't need a breakaway run to be happy."
