Elections for class offices, off-campus commissioner today

Auditorium, Forrest read some of Sophomore's speech as they search for speaker Friday night at the Library.

Forrest, the last of six literary events, was reviewed one of Forrest's work that deals with the power of the word and writes mostly figures to speak at this year's Sophomore Literary Festival ends tonight.

Alcohol committee heads stress immorality of drunkenness

Father David Tyson, however, said, "The drinking problem on campus is that the students don't think that there will be any change in the alcohol policy. According to Beauchamp, there is a clear message that alcohol abuse should not be tolerated."

Tyson said many parents faced their letters by saying, "We don't know exactly what the policy is and what's going on except that the University has a clear message that alcohol abuse should not be tolerated."

Some suggestions he offered included expanding successful events such as "An Evening of Poetry," which will include reading Saturday were Carla Huffman, Dan O'Shea, and Mike Barret. Leon Forrest, a novelist, journalist, and poet, spoke Friday night; a story on him is at left.

Off-campus commissioner today

By JAMES JANSEN

News Staff

A voice for off-campus students at Notre Dame will be chosen today during the election of off-campus commissioner.

Voting will take place at the LaFortune Student Center at the first floor booth from 11 a.m. to 4 p.m.

Sen. Gary Hart, claiming he "may have brought a political Juggernaut to its knees," narrowly won the Maine caucuses yesterday to shatter Mondale's lingering claim as the front-runner for the Democratic presidential nomination. Hart pulled in approximately 53 percent of the votes in caucuses meetings in 412 cities and towns. Mondale had about 44 percent. — AP

Dunked in Alcohol

Many students choose to play ball rather than socialize, the courts at Saint Mary's and the Rockne Memorial are usually packed all day during the week. This is where we really spend our weekends, not sitting at a bar or chugging a beer bong, as the committe seems to think. If they are truly determined not to allow us any fun at all, and to condemn us to a life of unfeeling, unmolested by the ways of the world, they should take a bulldozer to the foul line and chop down the new basketball backboards. Rip those planks off the Rockne floor, boys. It's the one thing that is the stupidest thing to have to do in this world. — The Observer

He added, "I don't know if it (a policy change) will work; it will result in more students getting hurt, "but the University has a responsibility to teach people to drink responsibly."

In general, he said, "people choose to break the law, and I think that's their prerogative."

As for counseling programs, Tyson said, "There is evidence that education and awareness programs alone won't work. There has to be a policy accompanying them. He said he has "mixed emotions" about using counseling as a disciplinary measure, but it must be made clear "there's a difference between a person who's an alcoholic and one who's an alcoholic abuser."

"Not a large percentage" of Notre Dame students, Beauchamp said, "are alcoholic." According to Tyson, "the issue, obviously, is the person who drinks to get drunk."

This attitude is what Beauchamp believes must be changed. "The hall party has become the standard feature of social life, yet after you graduate, you wouldn't be caught dead" at that kind of party. Students who are alcoholic have been confronted about drunkenness," because "it is not accepted in society.

Beauchamp admitted most Notre Dame students drink before coming here, but "the situation in which they had alcohol then was generally more controlled than here" because in high school "you had to go home and face your parents." Self-regulation here, Tyson said, "hasn't worked." Beauchamp said his main priorities are "to eliminate those situations which encourage alcohol abuse and to recognize state laws and liability." While "we can ignore liability," he said, "our moral responsibility outweighs the legal responsibility.

"Students," he said, "look at current drinking as a right when in reality it is a privilege. And it's a privilege which can be taken away by this school. What you're allowed to do as an individual, when you put 7,000 of you together, perhaps there have to be some restrictions."

"We take our responsibility to develop students' values very seriously," Beauchamp said. "If the current situation regarding alcohol is in conflict with what we stand for, then it's not to be changed."

Class of '85

By AMY BAKER

Five tickets for the class of 1985 are competing in today's election. Candidates have been busy campaigning, posting posters, and visiting dorms all week long. Each of the candidates on the O'Brien ticket have previous experience in a variety of activities, according to O'Brien. "I believe we have what it takes to do the job next year," she said.

"By having such a diversified group of individuals we are offering everybody an invitation to participate," said Christy, about her ticket. "We offer the senior class jobs they want most - publicity, placement and parties."

If elected senior class secretary, Shinn said, "We'd like to take a look of traditional events that worked well in the past and add new activities, like off-campus open houses, Winterfest in Monte Carlo and Senior Initiation Week.

"A lot of people are still asking us if we're serious," said Decker, leader of the "Mob" ticket. "I guess they think we're going to be in charge of Lebanon if we're elected. Ask any former class officer and they'll tell you that the job is basically a social commission. If the people don't think the mob has the originality and initiative to run the class, then they deserve another year of happy hours and ski trips," he said.

Queenan believes, "our biggest asset as a ticket are our enthusiasm looking forward to next year and our resources for getting the job done."

p.m. Students who currently reside off campus and those intending to move OC next semester are eligible to vote. People who still live on campus will vote in their dorm instead of LaFortune.

A general concern for greater involvement of off-campus students was voiced by the five students voting for OC commissioner. Some of the more specific goals for an incoming commissioner include a reliable OC newsletter, happy hours, new meal plans, and a better system of student parking on campus.

Doug Honeywell, a candidate for OC commissioner, said, "I want to try and unite OC people with on-campus students and lift the quality level of those off-campus through dinners and happy hours."

Jim Hager's campaign would like to "work through the student unions and realize that the goals of OC students are also in the interest of on-campus students. We have many common goals."

Ben Suplick has just one plan - "to accomplish everything I promise."

He feels OC students need a section in the Observer, a formal, and possible some kind of food court.

As OC commissioner John Malley would try to initiate, "a Sunday mass in the library auditorium, and a discussion at Center, and reliable delivery of a OC newsletter of just having it in LaFortune."

Junior Michael Colgan, the final candidate for OC commissioner, was unable to be reached for comment.

The race has just begun

Some rarer foolish and highly premature political forecasts are predicting a landslide victory for Ronald Reagan in November 1984. This type of crystal ball prediction is reminiscent of a 1948 headline in the Chicago Tribune which read, "Dowey

Randy Fahs

Monday analysis

Defeat Truman." Not only is the election far from over, but it has barely begun. There are so many variables in any election to try to make a prediction eight full months before people go to the polls. There are a multitude of factors to watch if one is to keep abreast of American electorate opinions. The opposition is a big factor in the outcome of any election. With seven major candidates still in the race, the Democratic Party can appeal to almost every interest group and political viewpoint under the sun. The key to success may be whether or not Democrats can unite their political machinery behind one ticket for the general election. The 1980 election was a triumph for the political organization and lobbying tactics of the Republican Party. The Democrats, who enjoy numerical superiority in their registered membership, were outmaneuvered and outspent in the vast majority of elections, both local and national. In the age of electronic media, elections are big business. With technology and advertising, techniques can enhance a candidate's chances greatly. Another thing to examine is the state of the nation and the world. Many observers think the Hostage Crisis in Iran tipped the balance in 1980 in favor of Ronald Reagan. Had Jimmy Carter been able to secure the return of the hostages prior to the election, the official snack food at the White House might still be peanuts, not jelly beans. The nuclear freeze movement and the continuing crises in both Lebanon and Latin America may prove to be key issues come November. Ronald Reagan's gunboat diplomacy may come back to haunt him unless he can drop a sledge hammer on another Grenada-like mosquito. Military action in an election year is indeed risky business.

America loves decisive and painless victories, but protracted stalemates, especially when there is bloodshed, can bring down even the most popular president. With the improvements in the national economy, it will not be as hot an issue as it was a year or so ago. The wealth disparity between rich and poor Americans has grown since Reagan took office. Also, budget cuts in social programs and White House public relations blunders have alienated certain segments of the electorate. If these groups vent their frustrations on election day, they may exert an unusually strong influence.

Ronald Reagan the persona is also a tremendous factor. He may be the intellectual equivalent of a hamster, but the positive effects on his popularity of his "rally round the flag" speeches cannot be denied. While he has the ability to greatly enhance his chances in the election, his off-the-cuff remarks are often embarrassing and damaging to his credibility.

These are just a sampling of the plethora of factors which might affect the outcome of the presidential election. Instead of holding the white flag and surrendering, the Democrats have fired the starter's pistol to show that the race has just begun.

If Ronald Reagan is to be re-elected, he will have to campaign as hard as he did in 1980. The incumbency speaks strongly in his favor, but it won't win the election by itself. Witness the Iowa caucuses when he made a personal appearance in that state and still failed to upset the Democratic race for delegates.

By the way, there is still another factor which exercises an unusual effect on elections - the weather. On days when the weather is favorable, the Democratic Party has consistently shown better turn-outs. The only conclusion about elections which can really be drawn is that they are affected by nearly everything and mandate next to nothing.

Timid males

Dear Editor:

Why is it that so many Notre Dame males complain about the quality and quantity of "normal" social interaction with their female counterparts? I for one am tired of hearing about the supposed timidity on the Notre Dame campus.

The problem does not lie within the female population. The problem is rooted in the timid males who hide behind masks of timidity. The reason for this is more complex than timidity itself.

Most Notre Dame males were very popular in high school and never quite became attuned to the reality of being rejected. Hell, one of the greatest and most mystified universities in the country even granted them acceptance. Then they enter the "Notre Dame Zone" where the next guy is just as smart, just as popular as he.

And the women are so much brighter and wise to the ways of the world than Notre Dame males are used to. The Notre Dame male enters a world where he is no longer numero uno -- which is in itself rejection. Many of these males become intimidated by the whole situation. Unfortunately one of the consequences of this is that they shy away from doing the things they did in high school -- i.e. asking girls out on dates.

This leads to the formulation of excuses for the poor social interaction between women and men here at Notre Dame. It might be a cause of other problems such as alcohol abuse. And it is a shame that the major ex-

Walkmans

Dear Editor:

After reading Mark Bonnenghausen's opinion concerning the use of Walkmans on campus, I noticed distinct parallels between the outcomes of bans on Walkmans and on alcohol -- that is leading to the closet to drink to Bach or drink a Moosehead. This is untrue and a hasty generalization, but I will only address the walkman problem.

Bonnenghausen's problem is in part due to the fact that he thinks everybody running around campus wants to hear him say hello to them -- I don't. As for the dirty looks people wearing them give him when he greets them, I think they are more surprised that he somebody would try to carry on a conversation with only one person actively participating. A simple solution for Bonnenghausen would be for him to greet only trees or squirrels during his runs. At least they won't give him funny looks (I hope).

Campus comments: What is your favorite video game?

I don't have a favorite because I never play video games. I liked table tennis (Pong) when it came out but it was simple. The new ones are too complicated.

I like Centipede, because my dad works for Orkin and I hate bugs. Also my house is infested by cockroaches.

Although it's not actually a video game, I most enjoy the intense action of USSR Hockey. It is great to use the boom-button against the Russians.

My favorite video game is the race car driving because I enjoy the sensation of a crash.

I hate them because I think they are a waste of time, money and are addictive.

the point bounced off the helmet of a surprised Iowa State goalie, Mario Amantea, and over the open net behind him.

In a last-ditch effort to salvage the game, Notre Dame trailing 3-2, pulled Lukenda in favor of the extra attacker with just over a minute to play. With Cyclone's Glenn Hannon off for holding, the Irish ended up with a powerplay until just 16 seconds remained in the game. As when Lukenda finally came on, Notre Dame had a two-man advantage for nearly 45 seconds.

But despite several close calls in the late going, the Irish couldn't turn on the red lights behind Men about nine minutes left. Although in the final analysis, Sluby's points seem meaningless considering the fact that Notre Dame lost the game, that is not entirely the case. In hitting 14-28 seconds.

Chapman got the Irish attack going when he beat Amantea on a breakaway goal of his own at 10:48. Jenking goal at 13:24 put Iowa State up 3-1.

Chapman's second goal of the night on a powerplay at 7:47 of the final period pulled the Irish within striking distance at 3-2. Bowie and Adam Parsons had the assists. Scott Beilenfeldt then escaped the swarming last-minute Notre Dame attack and iced the victory for the Cyclones when he hit the empty Irish net with just two seconds remaining.

In Saturday's consolation game, Marquette won a 6-4 victory from Illinois State.

Notre Dame concludes its season with a 23-5 mark. Tourney winner Iowa State goes home at 10-12-0. Marquette finished at 15-13 and Illinois State, 14-15.

Serve in Appalachia

This summer the Glenmary Home Missions, a society of Catholic priests and Brothers, are offering opportunities for Catholic men to serve the poor of Appalachia. These volunteer programs will enhance your perception of those in need. Come and learn with Glenmary. Your choice of week-long sessions is available as follows:

DAYTON, Ohio - It could have been a replay of the Brigham Young game - or the Rutgers game - or the South Carolina game - or...
But this time it was the Dayton game, and the Notre Dame men's basketball team once again disintegrated in the second half Saturday, losing to the Flyers, 80-70.
Irish coach Digger Phelps must be having some nasty nightmares these days. To see your team play well in the first half after time, only to come apart at the seams in the second half when the game is on the line, must cause more than a bad dream or two.

Irish fall to Cyclones in CSCHL playoff final
By ED DOMANSKY
Sports Writer
The Notre Dame hockey team's bid for a playoff championship came up short Saturday night as the Irish fell to the Iowa State Cyclones, 4-2.
Notre Dame reached the finals by virtue of a 1-0 thrashing of Illinois State on Friday. Iowa State grabbed what turned out to be a come-from-behind 11-6 victory from the Warriors of Marquette in their Friday contest.
Three seemed to be the lucky number for the Cyclones as well. Dan Jenkins's bank shot from the side of the crease off goalie Tim Lukenda's skate at the 13:24 mark marked the third encounter grabber what turned out to be a Lukenda's skate at the 13:24 mark.
Notre Dame had taken 4-3 and 6-4 Illinois State on Friday. Iowa State from the Warriors of Marquette in its Friday contest.

Rejuvenated defense spurs Irish to upset-top-ranked Lady Flyers
By MIKE SULLIVAN
Sports Editor
DAYTON, Ohio - The Notre Dame women's basketball team is having a great season - at least for the same reason it showed at the end of last season when it won its last six games, and Saturday's 65-57 win over Dayton is a good example.

The Lady Irish iced the game with a 25-2 record, the No. 1 ranking in the country in Division II, and a highly-potent offense that had been averaging more than 90 points per game. Notre Dame had also been outscoring their opponents by about 20 points each game.

On the other hand, the Irish had been having their difficulties on defense of late. Not that they had been a poor defensive team, but they were not as tenacious defensively as Mary DiStanislao-coached teams of the past have been. Add to this the fact that Notre Dame was a poor 3-7 on the road and its chances against the Flyers did not look good.
However, Saturday's performance was, in some respects, Notre Dame's best of the season. While the Irish did commit 28 turnovers (many of them because of questionable traveling calls), they also forced 23 turnovers of their own. Thanks to these turnovers, good defensive play and strong coverage, they held the Flyers to their lowest point total of the season.
"It's real good with the team's defense," said DiStanislao. "Defense has been a sore spot for us all year, so it was nice to have a good defensive game for a change."

This was a great win for us because Dayton's an excellent team. Who cares that they're Division II? They're an outstanding Division I team. It's a real good shot in the arm for us."

The win was also significant because it was Notre Dame's third in a row - the first time this year that the Irish have won more than two straight. Now, with two games remaining, Notre Dame has won five of its last six to bring it record to 13-13, the first time it has reached the .500 mark since it was 4-4.
The Irish had to put together a solid, consistent effort to hold off the Flyers who were getting a good deal of help from the referees.
Despite the fact that the home team was whistled for only one foul in the entire first half, the Irish were able to hang onto a slim 27-24 lead when the teams went to the lockerroom.

Capitalizing on the outstanding inside play of center Mary Beth Schuehrt who grabbed six rebounds in the half and some good outside shooting by Trena Keys, the Irish were able to take a 12-10 lead 10 minutes into the game - a lead which they never lost.
As Notre Dame widened its lead to eight in the second half, it apitored that DiStanislao's strategy for defending the Flyers was working. By collapsing on Dayton's two major inside threats, forward Donna Burks and 6-5 center Therisa Vingling, the Irish were taking away a good chunk of the Dayton offense.
Although Burks ended up with 19 points and seven rebounds, she was held to below her average in both categories (15.4 points and 8.5 rebounds a game). Meanwhile, Vingling was held to just five points.
The Flyers made one last run at the Irish lead, however, as they cut the margin to just one, 45-44 with 8:15 remaining. However, Lynn Ebben hit a shot from outside and Keys completed a three-point play to increase the lead to six, and Dayton could get no closer than four the rest of the way.

The Notre Dame rebounding in the second half was a major factor as the Lady Irish outrebounded the Flyers 23-18 in the half, despite the fact that Dayton had been outrebounding its competition by more than eight rebounds a game.
Schuehrt, Keys and Laterra Willis led the Notre Dame inside play with 26 rebounds.
Schuehrt and Keys also led the scoring attack with 14 and 11 points, respectively, while Vonnie Thompson dished out a team-high five assists.

IRISH ITEMS - Notre Dame will get a chance to clinch a .500 record when it travels to Loyola-Chicago on Thursday. The Ramblers have clinched the North Star Conference title and should provide plenty of competition for the improving Irish.

Touche
The Notre Dame fencing team won the 1984 Great Lakes Championships this weekend with 157 points. Irish arch-rival Wayne State finished second in the 13-team field with 151 points. Pia Albertson in the women's foil and Mike Janis in the men's saber won gold medals for the Irish, with Mike Vander Velden and Andy Quadrino winning silver medals. Complete results will be in tomorrow's paper.
