More than 2,000 students gathered in front of the administration building Friday afternoon as student leaders rallied the support of their fellow students in favor of their rights at Notre Dame.

"Students along with faculty, administration, priests, doctors, lawyers, and alumni have voiced their displeasure with the alcohol policy as an ineffective solution and one which was lacking in student input," said Student Body President Bob Bertino.

Freshman Dan O'Brien, one of the initiators of the protests to the new policy, explained, "Notre Dame has arrived. We've finally made it to the 1960s — now we're only 25 years behind the times."

"Our basic right to assemble up for others' rights, speak out against nuclear arms, protest abortion, and fight to end world hunger, then these same people must allow us the chance to speak for ourselves."

Bertino also expressed a deep concern among students against the new exam policy, the attempts to close down dorm food sales, elimination of the Irish Wake and Polish wedding, and limiting the number of occupants in a student's room.

"How can we be a university of leaders if our mentors expect us to be followers?" said Bertino. "We will not stand silent while they make student life worse than it already is." Following O'Brien to the podium was first-year student senator Dave McAvery, a key speaker in last week's rally. McAvery explained, the issue at hand is student rights.

"Our freedom as students is being threatened," said McAvery. "As of now, we are even being told that the total number of people in one room cannot exceed four persons at two times the number of students assigned to sleep in that suite."

"Our basic right to assemble is being violated...I can think of no greater oppression." McAvery also alluded to a proposal that would give the student-free Campus Life Council power to override administrative vetoes on student policy by a two-thirds vote. According to McAvery, however, the administration rejected this option. "They don't want us to have a vote on student policy," said the senator.

Junior Tom O'Reily, this year's Mock Convention Chairman, believes Notre Dame student social life is being threatened by the administration.

"Social life is more than just beer," explained O'Reily. "It's enjoying the company of more than four people at a time."

Former Student Body President Brian Callaghan also believes in a strong social life and he wants to see it preserved for Notre Dame's strong academic life.

Callaghan talked of disorganized violent and chaotic acts. "The Chicago Tribune blamed us last week," explained the former president, "but as long as we can show that we are a clean bunch of students, we can be proud of ourselves."

Callaghan believes the university has a responsibility to educate its students outside, as well as inside, the classroom. He advocates expansion of the roles of the RAs and residents in the administration.

"We need a new student center," said Callaghan. "We need facilities to carry on a healthy social life."

Callaghan also called for a new commercialized student district with restaurants and shops within walking distance of the campus, an underground club, and including senior bar on a non-alcoholic basis to everyone on Saturdays.

Callaghan also called upon the University to meet with students. "Communication and good faith must have to be..." said the senior. "The university...must take the first step. I believe the students will react in a positive light if they're shown cooperation, if they're shown support, and if they're shown trust," he said.

Cathy David, student body vice president, explained, "We came here to learn, but rather than being educated, we are being told what to think and not how to think."

David cited a recent report done on the alcohol policy by Dr. Ronald J. Hustinger. The report called the proposed solution "apathetic and punitive." The report described the administration as promoters of all-closed bars by confining students to their rooms.

Ending the rally, Bertino explained that students do care and expressed disgust with the way the alcohol commission was run.

"The two student representatives on the committee were swept away, thus shutting down any hope of student communication and reaction to the final tally, both voted against the policy, yet they were alone in their dissatisfaction. We were vic­ tims of legislation without true representation."

In a press conference after the rally, Bertino agreed drunkenness is immoral but maintained that the school's method is wrong.

"Encouragement to have students at home, in their rooms, will not solve the problem." "And if one person gets killed (driving off campus), they'll have to look at the issue again. We want to see RALLY, page 3

Easy book checks out an expected benefit of library automation

By FRANK LIPQ

Selecta Staff Reporter

The Five Year Automation Plan of the University Libraries is moving towards its implementation phase. This plan will improve library efficiency and provide more convenient access to library materials. It will allow for integration into a campus-wide computer system.

This plan includes the installation of terminals in student, faculty, and administration offices throughout the Memorial Library and the branch libraries. A machine room has already been built in the library and the coaxial cable has been installed throughout the library. Assuming contract approval, the computer will be installed over the summer and the data-base will be loaded during the fall.

An assessment survey dealing with the future of library automation was completed in December 1982. It was decided a new library computer center was needed to meet these needs. It would have to integrate present systems, give better access to collection through an alternative to the traditional card catalog system, correct the card catalog system to a computer data-base form, modernize the system of book loans and manage journal subscriptions.

The plan was drawn up with these factors in mind by Penncomp, Inc., a Coralville, Iowa, computer company. The plans were presented to the university administration. Faculty and students were surveyed. John T. Ryan Jr. of Pittsburgh, a University trustee and president of Allied Chemical, was the Penncomp consultant.

The plans were recently completed and include a development proposal and an estimated total budget for the project. The total cost is expected to be $51.5 million for library automation.

The Automation Advisory Committee, which had been guiding the project, was dissolved last week. The Specifications for the computer department and Automated Library system vendors were invited to campus to give presentations which were attended by the Penncomp representatives, faculty and students.

Woods said, "We looked at about 10 different systems. He said care should be taken in the selection process because of the importance of the system to the university's libraries and computer systems. It must also be cost effective."

Woods commented that the automation guidelines, a contract has been negotiated with a computer vendor. Woods said, "It wouldn't be appropriate to say which one (computer vendor) was decided on at this time. The contract is awaiting the approval of the University Computing Policy Committee. Woods also added that a decision from the committee within the next week and that the contract will be approved and signed.

Mondale to speak in Washington Hall

Special to the Observer

Former Vice President Walter Mondale, candidate for the Democratic nomination for president, will deliver a Law Day address at 10 a.m. tomorrow in Washington Hall. The address is sponsored by the Law School. There will be 615 seats in the balcony open to the public on a first-come, first-served basis. Mondale will be introduced by Law School Dean David T. Mondale was last in the South Bend area as vice president at a fundraising dinner for Congressman John Brademas in the A.C.C. July 15, 1978. His last visit to South Bend was Sept. 10, 1976, at St. Joseph's. Mondale, a former Democratic vice presidential nominee, gave a foreign policy address.

The Senate has moved barely an inch since Tuesday, when it first met up by the week. $44 billion deficit reduction package supported by President Reagan. Cuts in federal programs are politically sensitive in a year in which one-third of the seats in the Senate are up for grabs. With some 80 amendments still pending, it seems likely the Senate will spend this entire week on the bill. The Reagan plan has the deficit growing each year by more than 7 percent above the rate of inflation. It would freeze discretionary spending in 1986 and let it grow by the rate of inflation in 1986 and 1987. It would undo recent tax and payment and guaranteed-payment benefit programs. Milani fund collection continues

By PAT SAIN
Senior Staff Reporter

More than 100 hours of Shakespeare's plays have been read during the past week to raise money for Adam Milani, a high school senior critically injured in a hockey game on December 7.

Milani was in a hockey game against Culver Military Academy when he went after a puck and was knocked down against a ledge inside the rink. The impact crushed a vertebra in his neck, leaving him without movement from the chest down.

Milani, a senior at St. Joseph's High School, plans to attend Notre Dame next year. He has been named a National Merit Finalist, and a Notre Dame Scholar. Currently, he is finishing one course he needs to graduate.

Money raised by the Shakespeare marathon will be used to help pay for therapy, two wheelchairs, a modified van, and an addition to the first floor of the Milani home.

In an interview with the South Bend Tribune in February, Milani said "I'm working on things like brushing my own teeth, brushing my own hair... mainly fine motor skills." He is also practicing tools for writing and typing.

The physical therapy lasts three hours a day. Professor Milani said, and emphasizes strength and balance. "You can now transfer himself from his wheelchair to his bed," Milani said.

"The Shakespeare reading is an outpouring of affection and love... it would be impossible to think everybody involved," Milani said. "We want to extend our appreciation to everyone involved."

Spiral cord research is still in its infancy, said Milani. "There is still hope that some of the techniques that will be perfected in the next few years will be of benefit to Adam," he said. "Along with the technology and techniques there is the maker, also.

Milani plans to live in St. Edward's Hall on campus next year, where his brother Michael lives. An advantage of St. Ed's, Milani said, is that renovating his dorm four years ago made most of the building accessible to handicapped people.

Most schools, as an automated door, are still being proposed. A modified van by the Shakespeare marathon will be put in the Adam Milani Fund to help pay for his therapy and manual and electric wheelchairs. The electric wheelchair will be used by Milani to go to classes.

The money will also help buy a modified van with an extended roof and a lift for Milani's wheelchair, said Professor Milani. The fund will eventually be modified so his son can drive it.

The Fund will also offset the cost of an addition to the Milani home for Adam.

Information can be given to the Ber­ hany Guild/Adam Milani Fund at Sacred Heart Parish.

CILA to protest dining hall firings

AMY STEPHAN Assistant News Editor

CILA will sponsor a protest of the allegedly unprovoked firing of five dining hall workers last Novem­ ber in front of North Dining Hall tomorrow.

Fifty or 60 students are expected to picket and distribute fact sheets tomorrow during lunch hours, said Nancy Brennan, a CILA educa­tion officer and co-organizer of the protest. An organizational meeting for those interested in participating will be held today in the Center for Social Concerns. CILA also in­ tends to invite interested dining hall workers to picket, said Brennan.

Student awareness and education are the main goals of the display she said, adding the protest is intended to demonstrate solidarity with the fired workers.

CILA is also drafting a letter to Father Theodore Hesburgh, University president, which they hope will encourage him to re­ examine the incident, said Brennan.

Two pantry workers and three managers were fired last November for their role in an alleged plot to ex­tort money from another worker.

The pantry workers were accused of the actual extortion, while the managers were fired because the dining hall administration claims they knew of the extortion and took no measures against it.

In a May 19 Observer ar­ ticle, William Hedl, a University security investigator assigned to the case, said there was "no evidence of any wrongdoing" on the part of the pantry workers and security "was able to demonstrate the actual extortion, while the managers were fired because the dining hall administration claims they knew of the extortion and took no measures against it.

CILA tried to organize a discussion group on the issue, but faculty members to participate, she said.

Brennan said the protest is in­ tended to "expose the injustice to the people involved in fir­ing... they were denied rights..." The official employees relations hand­ book of Notre Dame states all employees are entitled to an oral warn­ ing, a written warning and a sus­ pension before being fired.

"In the issue has been lagging," said Brennan. CILA tried to organize a discussion group on the issue, but had difficulty convincing untrained un­iversity faculty members to participate, she said.

Brennan does not foresee any conflicts over the demonstration. "We're not going to storm the dining hall," she said.

Tomorrow was chosen for the protest because it is International Worker's Day. Brennan said, and one years ago tomorrow Dorothy Day distributed the first copies of The Catholic Worker in Washington Square in New York City.

William Hickey, director of Notre Dame Food Services was not ap­ proven for comment because he is recovering from a heart attack suf­ fered last week.

After, the assistant director, refused to comment on the protest because of legal complications and because he says "was not in­ volved that much" in the firings.

For the near future, Bertino hopes to meet with University President Father Theodore Hesburgh early this week. He also hopes to present an appeal to the Board of Trustees before the semester ends.
Viewpoint

ROT C is the service of war-making

Recently I had occasion to enter my son, Christian’s, new school. It happens that the best elementary school in our new town is Holy Trinity Catholic School. My first visit involved the place and, of course, noticed the large statue of Jesus in the “sacred heart” mood standing by the entrance way.

Just across the hall was a poster on the wall which read “God Bless America” with a picture of the American flag. As we accompanied our son to his room on his first day, we passed a room full of children pledging allegiance to the flag of the United States.

That is how it all starts —pledging allegiance to a foreign power. A power foreign to Christians is no less than evil. Pledging allegiance includes obeying orders, if and when given, to kill those designated enemies. I know, for I look such an oath contrary to the teachings of Jesus (Mt. 5:38) when I served in the military, both as a enlisted soldier and as an officer.

But I had an excuse then. I did not know about the teachings of Jesus prohibiting the use of violence by his followers, although I was raised in the Church.

The basis of Christian refusal to honor such a section called “Pledge of Allegiance” is not found in the rationale usually assumed by fellow Christian militarists. The Christian does not necessarily believe that the American military establishment “promotes or fosters war.” Although today, American “first strike” weaponry and Central American adventurism suggests just that, the Christian does not ignore Russian.expansionism; the evils of Soviet socialism; nor is the Christian unaware of the “protection” militarism claims to provide.

For Christians, the point is much deeper. Reserve Officers’ Training Corps Catholic chaplains in the same way abortion clinics or electric chairs do not belong on Catholic campuses. This is because to kill one’s enemy rather than to love him is to sin against God and his son’s teaching, practice and promise.

At best, ROTC is, in a traditional Catholic terminology, an “occasion of sin.” I was tempted by the offer of a job with the ROTC at Miami. I was discouraged by the absurdity of the promises.

The audience, knowing that the Great Rondini will distract it. Maybe the President will forget the problem: alumni drinking at tailgaters before football games. It is often said that the Great Rondini himself is forgetful, but the Great Rondini has become so much deeper.

The President pulled off the same trick again. When it was reported that the CIA had directed the mining of three Nicaraguan harbors, Congress voted its increase, but failed to vote the money the President wanted for El Salvador. The Great Rondini did his number. He dispached the money anyway —and then slipped out of town.

The second trick of the Great Rondini is his ability to make everyone forget. It is often said that the Great Rondini himself is forgetful, but that is the case he has nurtured his personal affiction into an epidemic. The Great Rondini has campaigned, after all, on a platform of balancing the budget. He actually lashed Jim Carter for running up a $29 billion deficit. This year, the budget deficit is expected to be $200 billion, but the Great Rondini has made everyone forget what he said in the campaign.

Similarly, the administration of the Great Rondini has again declared a war against state-sponsored terrorism. This news was greeted with great excitement a couple of weeks ago by some newspaper editors who placed the story on the front page. The Great Rondini made them forget. A war against terrorism was declared when the administration first took office. In fact, it was made the number one priority. The war was declared again after both the American Embassy in Beirut and the Marine barracks were bombed in Beirut and now it has been declared one more time.

Reagan is the great escape artist

WASHINGTON — Harry Houdini, the Great Escape artist, has been upstaged by Ronald Reagan. Houdini — at least in the movie I saw — went into a river encased in something like a safe, his hands cuffed behind him. Moments later he emerged to gasps.

Reagan thought it, augh and giggled by two congressional resolutions week, got more money for his Central American adventures.

anyway and popped up in China. Welcome the Great Rondini. Reagan has become the Great Escape artist of our times. He has two basic tricks. The first is your basic now you see him, now you don’t maneuver. The President brought down the house with that one when he finally ordered the Marines withdrawn from Beirut. The audience, knowing that the Great Rondini had said that he was not going to be pushed around by terrorists, thought they were watching intently. But suddenly the Marines were gone. And so was the Great Rondini. He popped up in Santa Barbara. When he returned to Washington, it was as if nothing happened.

The President pulled off the same trick again. When it was reported that the CIA had directed the mining of three Nicaraguan harbors, Congress voted its increase, but failed to vote the money the President wanted for El Salvador. The Great Rondini did his number. He dispached the money anyway —and then slipped out of town.

Remember school prayer? The Great Rondini is, in a way, a masterful trickster. Everything he says is the service of peace is not the service of war. He has a deep concern for the welfare of the young. He has a deep concern for the peace of the young. He has a deep concern for the peace of the young.

Owing up to an age-old crime

by Keith Picher
features staff writer

Thirty-two years after capturing a not-brown statue of Notre Dame founder Father Edward Sorin and hiding it for a semester, two pranksters have finally admitted to the crime, prompted by a recent article in the campus newspaper

The mastermind, Chamillus Witzleben '53, decided to pull off the caper on a frigid moonlight night just prior to Christmas vacation in 1952. A former resident of Alumni Hall, Witzleben is now Chief of Pathology at Children's Hospital in Philadelphia and a professor at the University of Pennsylvania.

Witzleben was on his way to the post office (now the Knights of Columbus building) to mail some Christmas cards when he spotted the 1905 Biond mausoleum sitting on the steps of the building. His accomplice, Edward Manier '53, was studying physical chemistry at Corby Hall in 384 Dillon on a sand trap on the Burke Memorial Golf Course since it was the closest place to Holy Cross.

The two decided to hide the statue, with hopes of blaming the deed on the Fighting Irish. They buried Sorin in a sand trap in 384 Dillon on a sand trap on the Burke Memorial Golf Course since it was the closest place to Holy Cross.

December. During Christmas vacation, Manier ran into an old high school friend who was headed for Korea. He told him that he and Witzleben had stolen Father Sorin's bather and that they were just waiting for the right time to bring him back to South Bend. As well, they have seen any hope for co-ed dorms - a responsible policy is only representative of the problem. At a time when social solution to many of the real social problems on campus - fade into the background.

The dilemma, then, is one of memories versus disillusionment. A look at past great Reel and reactions on the campuses will be embellished and the disillusionment will fade. We want to come back and enjoy the memories.

We hope that this will happen. We can't wait too much to make a decision. Problems with student life and administration attitudes will no longer affect us. And so we will come back with green pants, visit our old rooms and tell the students how good they have it. We will laugh about the tricks we used to slip by the parietal rules and we may even encourage our kids to follow us here at Notre Dame.

The University understands all this and they have wasted no time in asking the seniors for their first alumni contributions which are necessary in order to receive any football tickets. And many of us will give because we want to see our friends and remember the good times. But the campus will provide the livelihood for the perpetuation of the University's attitude toward the students. As the years go by, the dilemma becomes less difficult to confront: we remember less and give more.

Unfortunately, forgetting one of the aims does not really resolve the dilemma. We are important for us to make our decision about contributing responsibly, on the basis of how we feel the University is educating and not merely to get football tickets. It would be juvenile not to give simply because we disagree with an alcohol policy but it is our only recourse not to give if we see evidence of a widespread and administrative attitude that conflicts with our idea of a university.

It is a matter that each senior must decide for him or herself and it is something that should be given serious thought.

I would like to thank anyone who has given my columns a bit of credit. Fewer and fewer are apparent each week, and that, in fact, we could not and could not do during spring break in Ft. Lauderdale.

I tell this story not to make another passionate argument about why the administration's new alcohol policy is a mistake (although I could make a bet) but to put my problems in the context of the dilemma of Notre Dame.

As well, we have seen any hope for co-ed dorms - a responsible policy is only representative of the problem. At a time when social solution to many of the real social problems on campus - fade into the background.

The dilemma of Notre Dame is something we need students to face as grad nears. On the one hand, we may have begun to look at our school nostalgically. We remember the many good times we've had and the many close friends we've made. We want to call the Fighting Irish and give more.

We remember the many good times we've had and the many close friends we've made. We want to call the Fighting Irish and give more.

We see that women are still treated as second-class citizens, and we want to see the university take a more proactive role in addressing this issue. We want to work towards a future where Notre Dame is not just a place for men, but a place for all.

A timid start and a serf frivolous and frolicsor

An Tostal, which means “spring festival” in Gaelic, continued its illustrious tradition at Notre Dame last week, judging from the overwhelming amount of participation by the students.

Timid Tuesday’s golf tournament took off a week-long celebration of springtime on the Notre Dame and Saint Mary’s campuses. The golf outing took place on the Burke Memorial course.

Events such as the Slam Dunk Contest and Air Band competition highlighted Wicked Wednesday’s activities. The Decathlon, with such events as the dining hall tray run and the “Simon Says” contest, made the sunny afternoon seem all the more enjoyable. Commented Engineering major Greg Brehm, “I liked the Slam Dunk Contest because I took second place.”

As the week progressed, so did the number of An Tostal events. On Thirsty Thursday, students from both campuses faced to Saint Mary’s for such events as the Tricycle Race, Twister, Jail, Dorm Feud and the ever-popular Mr. Campus contest. This year’s winner was Mr. Zahn, Tom Fanning. “Mr. Campus” was one of the more popular events of the day, according to Grace Hall resident Jeff Griffin. “It was pretty fun. I liked seeing (Mr. Grace) Leo Gomez make a fool of himself on stage,” he commented.

Terris Carrigan, a McCandless freshman, cited Jail as one of her least favorite events. “I nearly got hit by a couple of pies because guys kept throwing me in jail,” she said.

Frivolous Friday lived up to its name with its scheduled events. The South Quad featured such events as the Jello and Egg Tosses, the Bucket Brigade, the Licorice Eating Contest and the Tire Roll, while Green Field hosted the Mattress Race and the Keg Toss. Among the most popular events in front of the Sorin statue were the Serf Auction, the Loundmouth Contest, and the Trivia Bowl, won by Cavanaugh Hall. Friday night’s Recess Floor and the midnight movie, “Polyester,” brought the busy day to an appropriate close.

Some students, however, were disappointed with the film, which

Teamwork prevails as Macri's Deli repeats as Bookstore champions

It was teamwork that did it last year, and it was teamwork that did it again this year.

Macri's Deli downed Tequila White Lightning IV, 21-12, yesterday, in the rematch of last year's final to become Bookstore Basketball Champion for the second straight year.

Macri's Deli once again exhibited the excellent teamwork that led the team to the Bookstore XII Championship last year. In that game, Macri's Preferred Nook defeated the favored Tequila White Lightning, 21-15.

The two teams took to the Bookstore-site court painted in the ACC parking lot yesterday afternoon at 3 p.m. with introductions by Jack Lloyd, ACC basketball announcer. Brian Irwin, whose nine points in the final game helped to convince the Bookstore commissioners to give him the Golden Hatchet Award for the tournament, put Tequila White Lightning IV on the scoreboard first with a jump shot on which he also drew a foul. The score remained at 1-0 for several minutes, as both teams shot poorly every time down the court.

Bubba Cunningham finally was able to take the game to his first point of the game, about which, according to Cunningham, "Cunningham has now matched his season average."
