Is there discrimination in academics at Notre Dame?

Editor's Note: This is part four of a five-part series focusing on the issue of sex discrimination at Notre Dame and Saint Mary's. Today's article examines the possibility of discrimination in Notre Dame and Saint Mary's academica.

The satirical revelation that men and women do not choose enrollment in the four colleges equally. Last year, 5,560 students were enrolled in the four colleges: 3,959 men and 1,600 women. Of the total men, 1,310, or 33 percent were enrolled in the College of Arts and Letters while 1,752, or 46.8 percent of the total women, were enrolled in that college.

The College of Engineering had 1,069 men, or 27 percent of the total men, were enrolled in the College of Business Administration while 369 women, or 22.9 percent of the total women, were enrolled in that college.

Sex Discrimination

College of Arts and Letters and that the smallest percentage of women enroll in the College of Engineering. Dean Michael J. Louie of the College of Arts and Letters said that the figures are a puzzle unless you rely on stereotypes which are "clearly inappropriately." He said that students, male or female, are discouraged or encouraged to enter a particular college. He said the percentage of women enrolled in the College of Business Administration and the College of Science is directly opposed to any stereotypes. He said he feels that the preference of a woman to enter the College of Arts and Letters rather than the College of Engineering is discrimination that leads to societal questions rather than specific facts of an aggregation of data in this situation.

Professor William Berry, assistant dean of the College of Engineering, said, "Even in this day, women perceive career options in arts and letters." He added that there are more career models in such fields as science and the humanities and that the upswing in enrollment in the College of Engineering started about ten years ago.

Even today, Berry continued, there is a low percentage of women engineers in society. This lack of women engineers makes it difficult for universities across the country to recruit qualified women professors. The private sector has made a concerted effort to recruit women engineers also. This change has been gradual.

Another factor Berry might say discourages the enrollment of women in engineering is that women are sometimes denied access to the curriculum.

Notre Dame currently accepts a prearranged number of men and women for admittance to each incoming freshmen class. Admission is not dependent upon which college the student plans to enroll in. In fact, many students do not make a firm commitment to a particular college until the end of their freshman year.

Does the amount of women who enroll in one college of Notre Dame, as opposed to any other, indicate discrimination?

The fate of the L'il Bubs weekend is still in limbo last night at the Campus Life Council meeting. Reservations put forth by North Quad rector of Alumni Relations Mario Pelli, rector of St. Edward's, and Vice President for Student Affairs Father David Tyrson killed a vote on the issue until the presentation of the women's logistics committee's presentation to a meeting of all the rectors.

Pegi said he polled most of the rectors on the North Quad yesterday and found overwhelming opposition to the weekend. Father George Rouan, South Quad rector representative and rector of Alumni Relations, did not support the South Quad rectors and found similar reaction.

The SMC Programming Board held its last meeting last night at Saint Mary’s. The main topic of discussion was the United Way Drive, of special interest to Saint Mary’s as this year’s poster child is the Catholic Youth Organization. The drive, chaired by Maureen Meagher, begins this Sunday at SMC and each hall and class will sponsor fundraisers, aiming for the goal of $82 per student. Also discussed was World Alcohol Awareness Week (Oct. 1-4) and Oktoberfest (Oct. 8-11). The Observer

Banning sale of beer by the pitcher would cut down on drinking problems significantly, says research by a Virginia Tech psychology professor. Dr. E. Scott Geller studied drinking patterns of over 500 students in three campus-area bars and found students, on average, drink 55 ounces of beer per person when it’s served in a pitcher. They drink an average 15 ounces from a bottle and 12 ounces from a glass. A pitcher provides more than most want to drink, Geller told the American Psychological Association, but students figure beer is cheaper by the pitcher and, once it’s ordered, feel compelled to compelled to “clean their plates.” The Observer

When getting ahead turns to treading water

Amy Stephan

Inside Thursday

And assuming we survive the onslaught, we’ll spend the rest of the semester treading water, trying to catch up, or at least stay above the surface.

We half-heartedly reach for the remnants of our semester-before goals and chop them down into easy-to-digest pieces. We might make it to some of our classes, we might take the stairs occasionally, the Irish might win a football game.

And before too long, even these reduced goals have to be mopped up and trimmed down to size. We, as students, are constantly faced with impossible (or semi-impossible) tasks. And, for the most part, we rashly set out to conquer all our goals, but instead are conquered by them.

We could sit back and lament our fate as students caught in a no-win situation, or we could, perhaps, try a new approach.

Although it seems ludicrous, many of us believe that if we once fail to meet our goals we might as well give up. “I didn’t run the relay, so why bother today?” Too often, one fails.

We make us see ourselves as failures.

And often we try to do everything, not stepping back to see what is most important and doing that first. Setting priorities takes time, something most of us have in short supply, but those who bother to set them claim it’s time well invested.

Two embarrassingly basic ideas set priorities and learn to take small failures in stride. Yet if all of us followed these guidelines, there would be a lot less caffeine consumed on campus.

SUzy Donner Boars in a current of misplaced goals, and we hear her murmur as she drifts along: “I will set priorities, I will live with failures.”

Hang in there, Suzy. It’s only September.

China and Britain promise freedom to 1997 Hong Kong

Associated Press

PEKING - China and Britain initiated a pact yesterday for post-colonial Hong Kong in the year 1997, promising the people the right to strike, speak freely, pray and govern themselves in a capitalist society - but enriching Peking's ultimate authority.

The agreement, revealed after two years of secret negotiations, specifies that the prosperous free port ruled by Britain for 143 years will become a special administrative region of Communist China when the British lease expires July 1, 1997.

In precise detail, the document guarantees almost every right that Hong Kong residents now enjoy, and promises that those liberties "will remain unchanged for 50 years" after the handover date.

The crown colony had anxiously awaited the details of the pact and first reactions to the accord were warm. Hong Kong, with its 5.5 million people, 98 percent of them Chinese, has been the most prosperous and economically successful remnant of the once mighty British empire.

The draft agreement was released in Hong Kong nine hours after it was initialed in Peking by British Ambassador Sir Richards Evans and Chinese Vice Foreign Minister Zhou Nan, the chief negotiators, in a ceremony seen live on television in Hong Kong.

The colony ranks third among world financial centers, behind New York and London. The United States is Hong Kong's biggest market. Two-way trade is more than $46 billion a year, nearly twice the volume of U.S. trade with China.

Senate approves legislation concerning health warnings

Associated Press

WASHINGTON - The Senate today approved legislation replacing the general health warning on cigarette packages with four alternating warnings about the specific dangers associated with smoking.

The legislation, approved on a voice vote, now goes to the House, where supporters predicted speedy approval.

Under the amendment, a section of the bill listing the surgeon general's findings about smoking was removed from the legislation although it will appear in a report accompanying the bill.

Sen. Wendell H. Ford, D-Ky., has said that was done because of concerns that putting the findings in the actual bill would complicate pregnancy. "Quitting smoking now greatly reduces serious risks to your health."

"Smoking causes lung cancer, heart disease, emphysema and may complicate pregnancy." "Cigarette smoke contains cancerous substances."

But some council members still wanted to show it all of the reacof the decision of a student to enroll in a particular college, among them academic background and parental pressure.

Dean Emil T. Hofman of the Freshman Year of Studies said, "We (at the Freshman Year of Studies) do not act as the agent for any major or any college." He added that the Thomas Year of Studies office tries to give the freshmen as much information as they want or need.

The principles (of counselling) are the same, whether for men or for women. There is no sex bias at all in the Freshman Year of Studies," he said.

Hofman added that there is a myth that men and women have different levels of academic performance at Notre Dame. He said, "The average GPA of Notre Dame women has an insignificant difference to the average GPA of Notre Dame men."

Assistant Arts and Letters Dean Robert Waddick said, "although it may sound archaic, engineering is a relatively new field for women in society." He said he saw the numerical difference in women in the respective colleges as not static and that since women have been admitted to the University, the percentage of arts and letters women to total women has been dropping while the percentage of engineering women has been rising. In 1974, 111 women graduated from Notre Dame. There were 64 art and letters graduates and only 2 engineer graduates. He said it is a slow process, but it is moving toward equilibrium.

Waddick recalled that a "woman's job" was to be in the fields of nursing or teaching. Now, he says, the push is opened to them in a wide variety of fields. He said that more and more women are opting for graduate school, law school or medical school. He expressed his hope that the narrowing of the gap between men and women is a societal trend and is not limited to an academic setting.

Kim Arnold, director of career placement services, said she agrees that progress for women is not limited to academia. At entry level positions within corporations, she said, there is "widespread hiring" without any discrimination involved. She said the job market is promising for both women and men.

The major discrimination seems to be not in the job market. "There are still certain industries that women have trouble advancing in," she said.

Arnold added that her personal theory on why there are fewer women who choose engineering at Notre Dame is because there is a "comfort level factor" in a human enterprise. This factor is simply an indication of whether an individual fits into his or her environment with a degree of comfort. Any minority group is beset with this "comfort level factor" if they are to overcome prejudices and strive towards their goals, she said.

She added that she believes it requires an extra-ordinarily motivated and motivated individual to overcome these obstacles.

read more carefully. "One of my aims in class, no matter what subject, is to make people take their own words seriously." Wills stated. "After all, we go through life using words all day long, well or ill, and the sooner you learn the proper use, the better the benefits you will reap," explained Wills.

Students who have been taught by Licence and now by Wills also feel that the two teaching approaches differ entirely. "Wills is very much more humane and more reflective," said Scott Eberno, a senior in American studies. "He's more interested in the personal reflection on issues in our life, whereas Wills wants us to examine an institution."

And as long as we students, regardless of our majors, journey through these halls for the purpose of broadening our intellectual horizons. Decio Hall Faculty will soon be known as great success at the University of Notre Dame.

The Decio Foundation is a shaky base

Dear Editor:

After reading of the dedication day pomp and ceremony for the new "Decio Faculty Hall," I feel it is my duty to offer a peak behind the scene, the facade, and relate my first-hand experience with the Decio people.

Besides my constant studies, I am a writer who contacted the Decio Foundation that year for help with a contractual obligation with one of my books. However, after reading in the Observer that the dedication was "this week" and that (Decio) is a building, and we are creatures put together by words, words, and ceremony for the new Hall, I thought the thought first occurred to me as I sat in the back of a crowded Sacred Heart Church on that Friday afternoon of the building's dedication. During the homily of this Dedication Mass, the Associate Father Hesburgh has demonstrated his ability to engage in what he calls "enormous confidence.

After attending these ceremonies, I soon realized what this building symbolizes is much more than its simple brick and mortar walls suggest.

I continued to read the text, trying to understand its context and content. It seemed to be discussing a movie, specifically a movie about karate. The text mentioned a character named Daniel who is beaten up by his ex-boyfriend, but is saved by a man named Miyagi. Daniel then becomes a part of a karate tournament and ultimately becomes a better person. The text also mentioned other characters such as Morita, who is the fix-it man at Daniel's apartment complex. The plot continues with Daniel defending his friend Alii and getting beaten up by a motorcycle gang. At a beach party, he meets a girl and is invited to participate in the region's karate tournament. In the end, Daniel learns about life and becomes instrumental in the story.

The text also discussed the themes of personal growth and the importance of rehabilitation. It mentioned the importance of rehabilitation over punishment, as stated by Mr. Miyagi: "Bury your mistakes, keep learning, and you'll get even stronger." It also highlighted the importance of self-improvement and the power of personal growth.

Overall, the text seems to be discussing a movie that focuses on personal growth and rehabilitation, with a strong emphasis on the importance of self-improvement and the power of personal growth. The movie appears to be a mix of action and drama, with a strong message of hope and resilience.

Howard, Miller injured
Jackson leads Irish receiving corps

By MARK S. PANKOWSKI
Sports Writer

Injuries to several key performers have hurt the Notre Dame receiving corps as a whole, but they have not kept Irish flanker Milt Jackson from picking up where he left off last season.

With fellow wideouts Alvin Miller (sore knee—"given up") and Joe Howard (sore hamstring) hampered thus far, Jackson has had a lot of pres­sure on him. But he has responded with statistics that could make '84 his best year ever.

In 1983, Milt Jackson had 25 receptions for 436 yards (17 of those receptions came in the final 4 games). In just three games this season, the 6-foot, 181-pound junior from Fairfield, Iowa has made six catches for 75 yards and two touchdowns. With statistics like these, it is his best year ever.

"Once you've identified a coverage, you've got to be able to react in three seconds or the quarterback will be sacked. Milt can do that," said Stock.

The Irish flanker is also known for his skill at getting open against a tough secondary.

"He can accelerate well which is important against man coverage," Stock said. "Unless you can accelerate, you can't get open."

Jackson is modest about his abilities as a football player, preferring to give most of the credit to his coaches.

"I haven't done it all myself," said Jackson. "I have worked hard, but coach Stock has made the receiver that I am. Coach Stock has helped me tremendously."

Regardless of who is responsible, both Stock and Jackson agree that the veteran flanker has improved on last year. As he did last year, Jackson still makes the circus-like catches, but now he concentrates more and makes the more routine receptions.

"I think what Coach Stock showed that was different from last year is that he is more consistent," said Stock. "This year he's been a key guy, a better blocker, and more effective in all categories."

Jackson believes his improvement is also a result of additional experience.

"You get a little more confident year after year," said Jackson. "You get to know the defenses. The coaches help you, and you get another year's experience." Stock with Howard and Miller injured, Tim Brown, a freshman, starts at split end. Another freshman, Reggie Ward, is Jackson's back up at flanker. The Irish veterans downplay the in­fluence of the younger receivers, however.

"I don't worry about them being freshmen," said Jackson. "Once you get action, you are experienced. You know what it takes. Reggie, Tim, and all of them have had action. I don't think of them as freshmen anymore."

Stock sees the relationship between Jackson and this year's fresh­men as being similar to the relationship between Howard and Jackson in years past.

"When he (Jackson) was learning, Joe Howard was a big help taking him under his wing," Stock said.
