'Black President' performs in library

By ANDRE THEISEN

The first black president of the United States held a press conference in the library auditorium last night, or so it seemed.

Dennis Rahim Watson, an energetic actor-comedian from New York, presented a one-man play entitled "First Black President of the United States," the play, part of the Black Cultural Arts Festival. Watson, an American flag and "Black to the Future" patch on his lapel, dazzled the audience in the library auditorium last night in a pageant, made opening remarks and then answered questions from the audience concerning his foreign, domestic and entertainment activities.

"We are here to haggle with a 17-year-old dark horse candidate has pulled ahead of his more established opponents during the current campaign to accept cuts in his defense program," said Lohman.

"This budget does not give us any solution to the deficit problem," said Hamilton. "A tough budget on one route, would not be able to deal with the deficit, but would just increase our costs." The new budget would also cut back on the spending of the Legal Services Corp. and the Job Corps.

What is as much a part of college life as exams, papers, parties and (mostly Notre Dame and Saint Mary's students) parties?

The answer is sickness. Whether a simple cold, the flu or something more serious, many students are faced with an illness which hampers all areas of a student's life, from studies to social life. And at this time of year, during the height of "cold and flu season," everyone is susceptible.

I am not talking about the Black Plague or serious illness. Cold and flu are not very serious in the long run and we must deal with these minor illnesses for the rest of our lives as we have dealt with them in the past. Yet the deadlines, lack of sleep, communal living conditions, etc. of college life amplify our small illnesses and make us more run-down. We find ourselves backed into a corner. Not only our studies but also other aspects of our lives suffer.

There are many reasons that students are especially likely to catch the flu bug. A lack of sleep is one obvious factor. No matter how well-planned the average student's schedule is, there will always be those nights (and early mornings) when studying, work or other responsibilities demand cutting back on sleep, the variable in any student's schedule.

Dorm life is a breeding ground for assorted viruses and germs. Out of the need to share our dorms, we also share our lives. While I value sharing, there is something in the mindset nature of a sore throat, a congested nose or a fever which encourages a withdrawn attitude. We may sympathize with sick friends and they may sympathize with us when we are feeling poorly but it is usually more difficult to share the discomfort of a cold or flu.

Yet despite any precautions we may take, one sick student soon becomes five or six. It is the few with especially high resistance or good luck who are able to stay healthy.

The flu bug is shrive and well among my friends, despite our precautions. We are valiantly fighting. Unfortunately the medicines are on the offensive.

Yesterday I went to the Student Health Center. I had exhausted all of my home remedies. It was time to let the professionals take over. After a typical wait, I was examined by the doctor. His diagnosis was: a slight cold. His advice was to rest.

It would be ridiculous to hope for immunity to be different than it is. The college environment will always be an ideal one for the spread of colds and flu. But this year, as the first wave of exams and papers is upon us and we take extra time to study and therefore sleep less, our bodies will pay the price. I will force myself to get more sleep and hopefully get well very quickly. It is much easier to take care of myself when I'm actually sick than it would be if I was just anticipating becoming sick. I always remember the flu bug is not as serious as everyone claims.
The trial of 251 gangsters began in South America. In Italy, defendants are not gangsters. Some are also charged with the June 17, 1983, crackdown on three for the Nuova Camorra Organizzata. All defendants are charged with the gangsters who were refused to attend their trials, but those who came were put in cages to prevent them from brawling amongst themselves. Some of the defendants screamed obscenities as they were led into the cages made of thick metal bars with spaces in between big enough for the prisoners to stick their heads out. The prisoners can stand and walk in the cages, which are big enough to hold 15 to 20 people. The first day was spent hearing a variety of motions from defense attorneys. The trial was adjourned until Thursday, and many of the defendants were returned to jail, where they are being held by authorities. Police say the Nuova Camorra Organizzata is a major faction of the crime syndicate, Cutolo to his followers. Police Sources have said the latter day was spent hearing a second-generation leaders of the former red army faction's active terror group, which had vowed to assassinate prominent West German figures in Italy. It is not considered as powerful as the Sicilian Mafia, but it has influence throughout Italy and is reportedly involved in cocaine trafficking in South America. Cutolo has spent more than half his life in prison and now has a 10-year term on the island prison of Asinara for charges ranging from drug smuggling to extortion. Police claim he has been running crime operations from his cell. One of the accused, Sister Adina Marchesi, 57, of the Naples convent of the Daughters of the Precious Blood, told reporters she had exchanged letters with Cutolo because she wanted to "save his soul." Police sources have said the letters contained coded messages from Cutolo to his followers.

Now the shadowy terrorist group, largely dormant in the past four years, has launched a new offensive in its war against West German capitalism and U.S. "imperialism." The latest victim was prominent industrialist Ernst Zimmermann, 55, chairman of West Germany's giant MTU turbine works, who was shot and critically wounded Friday at his home outside Munich by a man and a woman armed with machine guns. Bonn, West Germany - For more than a decade, the anarchist Red Army Faction terrorized Western Europe, emerging from underbrush to bomb government buildings and assassinate leading West German politicians and government officials and bomb U.S. Army bases. The latest victim was prominent industrialist Ernst Zimmermann, 55, chairman of West Germany's giant MTU turbine works, who was shot and critically wounded Friday at his home outside Munich by a man and a woman armed with machine guns.

Federal investigators blamed the attack on the Red Army Faction, which had vowed to assassinate prominent West German figures in connection with a two-month hunger strike by imprisoned gang members. They ruled Red Army Faction members and nine sympathizers began a protest fast in several West German prisons in early December, demanding to be housed together and treated as political prisoners.

Since then, nearly 60 bomb and arson attacks have been directed against Americans, French and West German interests across the country. Bonn Interior Minister Mohnhaupt, has abandoned the hunger strike, but several of those still on the protest list are in deteriorating health. German officials believe a death would trigger new violence.

"We must be prepared for further terrorist attacks," Interior Minister Friedrich Zimmermann recently told a parliamentary committee on security.

The Red Army Faction, originally known as the Baader-Meinhof gang, was spawned in radical student circles in the late 1960s. Its declared aim was to overthrow the West German state and expel American military and business interests from Europe.

The gang developed into a ruthless, efficient cadre that claimed responsibility for 33 political slayings and scores of bombings and bank robberies.

Last month, the Red Army Faction announced a "military" alliance with Direct Action, the French urban guerrilla group that claimed responsibility for the Jan. 25 assassination of Paris Defense Ministry official Rene Audran. The two terrorist groups said in a letter to Paris-based newspaper that they would fight NATO and other "imperialist" institutions in Western Europe.

But Bonn officials said that the Red Army Faction, while still a threat, is not as strong as it was throughout much of the 1970s, nor does it enjoy significant popular support.

"There is no real sympathy for these people today," Interior Minister Hans-Guenther Kowalski said.

Officials say the two-month hunger strike is an attempt by the Red Army's "hard core" to recruit new members.

Some of the hunger strikers are being fasted to keep them alive. But the measure is so controversial that the West German parliament decided to halt force feeding unless a prisoner loses conscious.

Government security officials say the Red Army Faction's active sympathizers - those who can be counted on to smuggle messages out of prisons or house terrorists on the run - number between 100 and 150 people. Between 20 and 30 active Red Army terrorists are still believed to be at large, according to Kowalski.

Kowalski acknowledged some wanted Red Army suspects are "second-generation terrorists," or those too young to have been active in the early 1970s. "They have an ability to attract some new members, but it is a very weak and limited ability," he said.

sanctions against South Africa and declared that he has sent South African President P.K. Botha a telegram saying only "shape up or ship out."

In dealings with Central America, he said his administration intends to treat people as human beings - not foreigners.

He plans to develop "a human policy," not a foreign policy. His general attitude about Latin America is "to leave it alone." He announced that Jesse Jackson will be his secretary of state, which brought applause from the audience.

On the issue of dealing with the Soviets, Watson said, "I oppose the isolationist attitude of my predecessors." He plans to be in close communication with Chernenko, and believes he can cut the defense budget by 25 percent without decreasing America's strength.

He then began singing a humorous rendition of the song "War," encouraging the audience to clap their hands and join in.

Economic disparity among blacks in the United States could be a "true cliché of the '80s," Watson, if they remember that the black community is a powerful economic market. By skillfully handling their economic power, Watson believes blacks can bring about meaningful changes.

To deal with unemployment among youth he proposed that unemployed youth be "put to work in urban centers where they live." Concerning crime, Watson declared that his administration will not support actions like those of Bernard Goetz. "We cannot tolerate individuals taking the law into their own hands," he said. He is also opposed to capital punishment, claiming that "those without a capital usually get the punishment." As far as women's issues, he supports the Equal Rights Amendment and affirmative action, and is opposed to federal aid for abortions and abortion clinics. "All life deserves a chance to make it," he said.

Watson also promised to appoint more women and minorities to meaningful positions at all previous administrations combined.

The new President concluded the press conference by declaring that we can make the world a better place by working together.

Watson got the inspiration for his play, which he wrote, directed and performed himself, from his political science background, diplomatic work and extensive reading on current issues. He was educated at Fordham, Pace and New York Universities. He was named "Outstanding Young Man of America" in 1982 and was awarded both the Avon Youth Award from the National Black Leadership Round Table and the Youth Award '84 from congressman Walter Fauntroy.

Watson is also the author of five books and has appeared on a black soap-opera. He is currently touring the country, performing his play for college audiences and civic groups.

The reason for his play, he said, is to show college students that they must be politically aware and able to think on their feet. His message to today's college students is that they have a responsibility to make a difference in America, to get beyond petty politics of race, class, religion and social status and get on with brotherhood, respect, business and ethnic tolerance.

The challenge of the '80s, according to Watson, is "to be bold, innovative and daring in dealing with race, religion, justice and equality. Like Captain Kirk of "Star Trek," we must go where no man has gone before, and do things no man has done before to survive the current nuclear madness.

"The unborn of the world are waiting on you and me to get our act together for a safer world."

Watson's play was the second to be shown at the University Black Cultural Arts Festival, which runs from February 5 through March 2.

Reagan plans to bring back Nixon operatives

Associated Press

WASHINGTON President Reagan plans to recall to duty three key White House assistants in the Nixon administration for strategy assignments to key White House assignments in communications, lobbying and politics, sources said yesterday.

The sources, insisting on anonymity, said Reagan would name:

• Patrick Buchanan, one-time speechwriter in the Nixon administration and now a television commentator and newspaper columnist, as chief of White House communications, in charge of speech-writing, media planning and perhaps other areas.

• Edward Rollins, director of the president's 1984 re-election campaign, as head of an office handling intergovernmental relations between Washington and state and local governments.

• Max Friedersdorf, the White House's chief congressional lobbyist in the first year of Reagan's administration, to a similar position again.

An official announcement of their appointments was expected soon, the sources said.

The appointments will be the first major personnel moves under the command of Donald Regan, sworn in yesterday as the new White House chief of staff.

Buchanan, a favorite of hardline conservatives, is best known in Washington for tough speeches he wrote in 1969 for then-President Nixon attacking the news media.

Former White House chief of staff H.R. Haldeman, in his book, "The Ends of Power," wrote that, "The concept of Agnew's inflammatory speeches against the Eastern 'elite' center in New York and Washington, which controlled communications in this country, came right from the Oval Office. The speeches were written mostly by Buchanan, Nixon's most hard-line speech writer.

In a move designed to widen the current "narrow review process" given to religious groups, the Student Senate yesterday approved a resolution urging the creation of a Religious Board of Approval.

The proposed commission, which will still must be approved by the Campus Life Council and Vice President for Students Affairs Ralph David Tyson, would be able to recognize campus groups as official student activities.

It would consist of members of the Theology department, the Office of Student Affairs, University Ministries and Student Government.

The Office of Student Affairs denied the interdenominational religious group Campus Crusade for Christ the right to exist as a recognized student activity after seven years of on-campus recognition, according to Executive Coordinator Doug Wurth.

"It is my belief that the decision was in error," he said.

"We need to bring into focus all the rhetoric. The way it is now, it is a narrow process," for admitting or denying religious groups recognition, he said.

Recognition as an official organization allows certain privileges, including the right to use campus buildings, to apply for funds from student government, and to set up a booth at student activities night, Wurth said.

Student Senator Paul Healy, who cast one of the two dissenting votes, was against the measure because "I believe that Notre Dame is a Catholic university and that's why I came here."

A recommendation which would require graduate and law students to pay an Observer fee equal to those of undergraduates at Notre Dame and Saint Mary's unanimously passed. Sponsored by Student Senator Javier Oliva, the measure was proposed in "the principle that some people are paying and some aren't." In the interest of fairness, all students should pay," Oliva said. "There is no doubt in my mind that they are reading it," he added.

If implemented, the proposal could lower the Observer fee for undergraduates, said Observer Editor-in-Chief Bob Vonderheide. Student Activities Board Manager Kevin McGovern agreed the measure was needed, saying "it's not fair to us (the undergraduates) that (the graduate and law students) derive the benefit" said McGovern.

Student Senator Dan McNamara reported the status of late night study space in the South Dining Hall's faculty dining room. The room activities are closed to 3 a.m. Sunday through Thursday, starting next Sunday.

McNamara said the administration's recognition does not mean they will allow you to talk, "the rhetoric. The way it is now, it is a narrow process," he continued.

McGovern agreed the measure was needed, saying "it's not fair to us (the undergraduates) that (the graduate and law students) derive the benefit" said McGovern.

Young boy withstands wind chill of 65 below

Associated Press

MILWAUKEE - A 2-month-old boy who came back from the dead with his blood and arms felt like blocks of ice had formed beneath his skin and he appeared clinically dead.

Doctors said yesterday he had been outside between 30 and 35 minutes when he was found.

Yesterday, he was alert, playful and eager for his two favorite things, "gum and popcon," said his mother, Judy Troche.

After he was found frozen, doctors connected him to a heart lung machine to warm his blood and cut open his arms and legs to allow tissues to expand.

"What's been learned from Michael is going to change the way we look at hypothermia," said a spokesman for Milwaukee Children's Hospital, where Michael remains in the pediatric intensive care unit.

Hypothermia is the medical name for low body temperature. The recovery has amazed doctors.

"When he came in, the legs and arms felt like blocks of ice, and as you squeezed his toes, you could feel ice in the blood as you would crush ice under the skin," said Dr. Kevin Kelly, associate director of the pediatric unit.

He said the boy's condition was upgraded yesterday to fair and stable, although he still faces three to four weeks of rehabilitation in the hospital.

"When he was brought into the hospital, he had no vital signs," said Leigh Morris, the hospital spokesman. "If you didn't know better, you would have said he was clinically dead.

U.S. denied port access

Wellington, New Zealand - New Zealand yesterday refused a second U.S. request to let an American warship make a port call. Prime Minister David Lange said he would admit no ship without assurance that it does not carry nuclear weapons, which the United States refuses to give.

Both sides expressed regret over the standoff, which the Australian prime minister, Robert Hawke, indicated could be solved by a change in position.

He told a news conference: "I have today replied to the United States confirming our policy and reiterating that the request is reiterated again unacceptable and advising them to send a vessel which I can be sure conforms with the policy.

Lange said his government would not admit any American warship unless it could be certain the vessel did not carry nuclear weapons, which about 80 percent of U.S. Navy ships are equipped to do. The United States refused to say whether its ships carry such weapons.

In Wellington, State Department spokesman Bernard Kahl expressed "deep regret" over Lange's decision and said, "We are considering appropriate responses to the government of New Zealand's denial of port access.

He said the issue is expected to be taken up during the visit later this week of the Australian prime minister, Robert Hawke.

Dear Editor:
The Notre Dame Rowing Club travels over 10,000 miles a year to represent the University in competition. The club races in both the fall and spring, traveling completely at the student rowers' expense.

Two years ago, in order to enable the team to become more competitive, the club purchased, at its own expense, a rowing machine at the Rock so that club members could use the machine as part of their winter workouts not only to stay in shape but also to test people and record their progress. The ergometer was placed in the gymnastics room at the Rock so that club members could have free access to it. This machine was purchased by several members of the Notre Dame community to take advantage of the machine's benefits. As a result we spent a lot of time and money every spring repairing damaged parts broken by well-meaning but untrained people. This and the extra wear and tear are the price we willingly accept.

However, last Thursday night, for the second time in the last year, the ergometer was vandalized and its speedometer was stolen. Without its speedometer, the ergometer loses its value as a method of testing progress. This makes it very difficult for those intending to compete next weekend in the Madison Classic in Madison. This is a winter race done completely on rowing machines like ours (except there will be speedometers). We will still compete, although this insensitive act will impair our efforts.

We hope that whoever stole the speedometer has good use for it. Better than the use the 100 members of the club had for it. Maybe they knew the person who stole the other one last year and just had to have one of their own.

We are disappointed by the fact that all members have to suffer because of the selfish actions of a few fellow members of the Notre Dame family. We hope that whoever stole the speedometer will reconsider and return it to us. We also would like to invite anyone who sees a crew team member on the ergometer to feel free to ask for some instruction. We would be more than happy to explain - who sees a crew team member on the ergometer to see.

Implications of cancelling graduate orientation

Dear Editor:

I am a new graduate student at Notre Dame and began my course of studies on Jan. 16 with the spring semester.

The graduate school asked me in a letter several months ago to report to Washington Hall on Monday, Jan. 14, for an orientation at 8:30 a.m. I was looking forward to the orientation since it was the first time I had ever been on campus.

I went to a lot of trouble that particular morning to be on time for the orientation thinking that new students would probably be welcomed by someone from the graduate school and someone would tell us something about the campus and activities available to us on campus.

The bad news was that the orientation was cancelled, and there was a small note on the door of Washington Hall saying that the orientation was cancelled and to report to the Registrar's Office to enroll. My reception and welcome was as cold as the weather that morning.

No one gave an explanation for the cancellation, and some people in the graduate office were even unaware that the orientation was called off. I was upset when I went to pay my complete tuition and was told that I must pay $6500 as a graduate school fee. Paying that fee bothered me when the graduate school did not even go out of their way to welcome us officially.

I guess I feel a little cheated and left out, and I am still wondering what is going on at Notre Dame. It sure would be nice to at least get an apology, an explanation and maybe even an orientation. I am sure some of the other new graduate students this semester were as disappointed as I was to arrive so early on the 14th of January to a very cold reception.

Matt Crehan Notre Dame graduate student

P.S. I'd settle for a refund on my Graduate School fee or maybe a free ticket to a Notre Dame basketball game, or even a "Hi, Welcome to Notre Dame."

Freshman Year program needs some changes

The brutal weather we have endured since our return to campus has evoked memories of another winter three years ago, when current seniors were just freshmen. That winter, which came in the midst of a 10-17 basketball season, only served to remind all of us that perhaps we should have gone elsewhere for college. Anywhere had to be warmer than here.

I was upset when I went to pay my complete tuition and was told that I must pay $6500 as a graduate school fee. Paying that fee bothered me when the graduate school did not even go out of their way to welcome us officially.

I guess I feel a little cheated and left out, and I am still wondering what is going on at Notre Dame. It sure would be nice to at least get an apology, an explanation and maybe even an orientation. I am sure some of the other new graduate students this semester were as disappointed as I was to arrive so early on the 14th of January to a very cold reception.

Matt Crehan Notre Dame graduate student

P.S. I'd settle for a refund on my Graduate School fee or maybe a free ticket to a Notre Dame basketball game, or even a "Hi, Welcome to Notre Dame."

You walk by the stadium late at night and see a light burning. Who is someone living there? In the stadium? If you are a typical student you have probably heard rumors about people living in the various buildings around campus. You may have heard strange noises coming from a dark Architecture Building late at night, or seen a student walk through an unmarked door in LaFortune. So what is the real story about these “non-residential” buildings? Yes, there really are students who live neither off campus nor in dorms, but in an unusual form of extra space.

Matt LaChance enjoys a beautiful view of Saint Mary’s lake from his comfortable three-room apartment in the Architecture Building. In exchange for locking the doors at night and unlocking them on the weekends, LaChance pays no rent, a situation he calls “a good deal.” “I’m very glad I got it; otherwise this year would have been real tough financially,” he said. The occupant of the room is chosen every year by the chairman of the department, and must be a fifth-year architecture student who qualifies for financial aid. The job is limited to men because they “do not want a woman living in the building alone.” According to LaChance, “Last year (the resident) found a burn in the plastic on one of the floors in the middle of winter. They nearly scared each other to death.” Security and the administration sometimes appear to be oblivious to LaChance and his place of residence. When he arrived on campus this year, the guards at the main gate laughed when LaChance told them where he was going. “They told me that no one lived (there). And then I had problems getting the doors unlocked!” Although he lives by himself, LaChance says he is never lonely. There is always someone in the building and “in the summer, my friends from Montgomery play their stereo very loud.” As for socializing and the question of parties and parities “If theLuck covers me, but realistically no one is around to enforce anything.”

The Notre Dame Security Department is in charge of the ACC and has two students living there. They pay rent for their apartment and work 12 hours a week. According to Director Gene Terry, “This is primarily for security, and it makes it possible for (these) students to take part in student activities. They know who should and should not be in the building.” ACC inhabitants Richard Stickney and Tom Cashling could not be interviewed, for security purposes. According to a secretary in Hayes-Healy, the building has no human residents but, “we’ve got mice.” The business buildings are also reportedly inhabited by gnomes, especially in the basement of Hurley. As legend has it, a ghost inhabits Washington Hall, but no live person haunts its rooms after hours.

Many rooms occupied in past years are now gone or empty. Originally, apartments were set up in the buildings on campus for insurance purposes but this is no longer necessary, according to Director of Student Activities Joni Neal. “This is slowly being phased out. For example, there will no longer be an apartment in LaFortune after the renovations.”

Student Activities is in charge of housing students to live in LaFortune and Stepam Center. Applications are submitted in March and April and must be approved by financial aid before interviews take place. This year the selection will be made by Neal. She says the job is open to anyone but, “my own conscience would not allow me to put a female in the room, especially in Stepam.”

The small two-room apartment in LaFortune is currently occupied by Rich Flint, a former resident of Cavanaugh Hall who claims not to mind dorm life at all. “I value having no neighbors and no rector or R.A. to check up on me.”

Flint says he is bothered occasionally by the noise outside his room in the Nazz, especially when they have shows. “The walls are paper thin and I can hear every mistake, every wrong note.” People also ask him to open doors and find the fuse box when necessary, but generally he is left alone because few know of his living quarters in the building.

In return for the free room and a small stipend, Flint is employed as a custodian. He is supposed to act as security and check the doors at night, but he says LaFortune has hired student managers to lock up, which leaves him with very little to do, something a busy math graduate student doesn’t mind in the least.

Having to shower in Grace and being awakened for 8 a.m. tests are two of the biggest problems faced by Nick Molochin, the senior living in stepam Center this year. Otherwise Molochin enjoys the job which gets him a free room plus $1215 salary. In return, he coordinates three other students to monitor the open courts at stepam, lock up at night, and is present to oversee other activities during the course of the year.

Molochin doesn’t mind being around students and says he “has met a lot of kids from different dorms” and played ball with many of them. He also enjoys free movies and Bengal Boats and a first row seat at pop rallies. Something he said his parents enjoyed.

Even though he is located in an isolated spot and is not allowed to have parties due to the building code (save an occasional late night basketball game with friends), Molochin does not suffer socially. He received permission to participate in interhall sports with Grace Hall and attends Grace dances and parties.

Overall Molochin enjoys his job and claims to have the “best of both worlds.” I like it. Some people wouldn’t probably because of less interaction with roommates and other people, but I’m pretty much of a loner and like being by myself. “I’m living on campus without having all the rules being forced down my neck.”

“Probably one of the better jobs on campus but one with a price to pay,” is how graduate student Jerry Young describes his life in the Center for Continuing Education. For working approximately 20 hours a week and paying a very reasonable rent, Young is able to live in a fairly large room on the mezzanine (between the first and second floors) with a view of the stadium. With two other students, Kevin Guillet and Scott Cassidy, Young

Eye-opening exercises

Strange days indeed

Five in the morning is just about when you start to hit your nightly stage, unless, of course, you are sound asleep in your little bed in your very own room with lots of warm blankets and a fluffy, soft pillow in your arms, comforting surroundings, which is what I guess, is not where I happened to be on this particularly cold morning.

Instead, I was hard at work in the office, shivering away over a few applications and other potentially crucial matters of importance, when the bangs on the door to my office woke me up, saying the only thing worse than having to switch to “Plan B” is not having a “Plan B” to switch to, as so I painfully found out on this frosty morning, which happened to be yesterday.

So, I decided to get radical. That’s right. I took the road less traveled by I turned on the TV.

Well, naturally I didn’t expect to find much of anything on at 5:30 in the morning, except maybe a King James Version totin’ minister preaching about goodness with a toll-free number shining at his feet I a half light from fab beyond, my friends, but luckily some semblance of hope was still sorta springing within my breast, and it paid off. I like I said, sorta.

When the first thing I saw on the screen was a small novel warning me not to attempt any of the following activities without a doctor’s consent, I knew I was going to be good for at least another half hour.

So then the story young man appeared, scantly clad, but when I caught sight of her legwarmers, I knew there was only one thing it could be.

Aerobics! Or something like that.

This chick looked like Phoebe Cates. She moved like Chi­ta Rivera. She sang like Sheila E. This was it. I had found my destiny.

My destiny continued to squirm on about the screen while two more girls joined her on the set, although they weren’t as cute as the other girls so as to distract from the main attraction. I’m sure. Then they started jumping around, and after awhile, they started dancing.

And then the music started.

At first it was easy, and the reason I knew this was because I could do it myself and I was still sitting in my chair. You know, simple stuff, neck exercises, look up, look down, look right, look left. “Come on, come on, come on,” the leader of the sextet - oh, excuse me, the trio, crossed with the same syllabic accretion as “I want that stock bed.” Her head swung back and forth as she continued. “Go right, and left, and right, and left. Come on.”

But then her arms started flying around and then they did unspeakable things on the floor while the camera swirled slowly around them in order to expose every possible, uh, angle. This is where I drew the line. I’ve got my principles, you know. Besides, I wasn’t about to move from my chair.

Nope. I was perfectly content to sit there, typewriter still running, and just watch. It may have been a bright and early morning for the Aerobic sisters, but it was a very late night for me. And this was explanation at its very best. How could anyone with any amount of self esteem allow themselves to be photographed from every side, and I do mean every side, while touching up their armpit and hip muscles? Don’t bother me with that now. I’ll think about it later. Promise.

“Now all just keep on jazzing it out right on through our message from our sponsors, now, you hear?” Phoebe chirped. Oh yeah. I jogged it out, all right, I couldn’t watch anymore, I decided. I’d had enough.

Eventually, I did the respectable thing. I turned off the typewriter so I wouldn’t waste any electricity.

“Chita was back,” I hope you didn’t stop there on our commercial break, come on out,” she sang. And then she and her cohorts got down on all fours, into a position I can’t really describe unless you happened to catch the Imperial Walkers in “The Empire Strikes Back.” You know what I am talking about. “Me too, me too, me too,” they chanted, and not letting any other people do anything, than dancing.

“Come on, get tough, get strong! I know you do not need to stop, come on!”

That was it. I just couldn’t take it anymore. It was infecting. My arms were beginning to fail, my feet were starting to shuffle. I was getting tough. I reached out for the Off button. “I hope you haven’t stopped,” Sheila E purred. “I still haven’t stopped.”

But then it was over. The screen went black. She had stopped, and I had won.

So you can bet that you’ll never find me the victim of aerobicize again, much less awake at 5:30 in the morning. Trust me. You do believe me, don’t you?

Now come out.
Black Hawks fire coach

Associated Press

CHICAGO - After a short and stormy reign as head coach of the Chicago Black Hawks, Orval Tessier was fired yesterday by General Manager Bob Pulford, who took over as interim head coach for a second time. A replacement was extended for a year to run from the 1985-86 season.

Pulford, who once served as both coach and general manager of the National Hockey League team, relieved Keith Magnuson in 1982 before hiring Tessier.

Pulford could still named assistant coach Neilson to the top job, but said: "I had considered it but I felt at this stage that would be unfair. I feel the one that has to take over and I have." Tesser, 51, took over for the 1982-83 season when he led the Black Hawks to a 47-25-10 record and a Norris Division title. The Hawks reached the Campbell Conference Stanley Cup finals that season and Tessier was named NHL coach of the Year.

But everything has been downhill for Tessier since then.

He was evened by the Hawks and fired after his 3-9-6 record to finish the 1983-84 season.

Lendl top-seeded in Lipton tourney

Associated Press

DELRAY BEACH, Fla. - With John McEnroe and Jimmy Connors sitting this one out, Ivan Lendl is top-seeded in the inaugural $1.8 million Lipton International Players Championships, a two-week tennis tournament which begins play today.

Martina Navratilova and Chris Evert Lloyd, seeded first and second, respectively, lead the women's field.

With the first ball has yet to be served on the hard courts at Laver's International Tennis Resort, the Czechoslovakian right-hander feels the LIPC eventually could become a fifth Grand Slam tournament or replace the Australian Open as one of the four Grand Slam events.

"It's the same size as Wimbledon and the U.S. open with 128-player fields for both men and women, larger than either the French or Australian Open - And, unlike the Australian Open, the LIPC will stage a mixed doubles.

If asked if the Australian Open will face away as a Grand Slam tournament, Lendl said: "It did already, a long time ago."

"It (the Australian Open) will always exist, but you can see the players don't show up there as they do at the French, Wimbledon and the U.S. Open."

The LIPC is the first two-week tennis event to start since the end of World War II.

The Australian Open had slipped badly in the 1970s as the top men refused to play since it was held during the Christmas holidays.

Major changes are being made to reinstate the Australian Open as a major draw. The tournament will be moved to January, meaning there will be no Australian Open in 1986. The Australian Tennis Federation also is rebuilding its facilities, and could possibly change from grass to either hardcourt or a synthetic grass surface.

Lendl, who won the French Open in 1984, has reached the final of a Grand Slam event five other times, only to lose - the 1981 French Open, the U.S. open in 1982-84 and the 1983 Australian Open.

While he eagerly jumped into the Australian Open controversy, Lendl was cautious about discussing the absence of McEnroe and Connors here.

"You can't put on a tournament and expect everyone to play," he said. "They have their own reasons not to play. I'm staying out of it."

McEnroe does not like to change surfaces, and right now he is in the midst of his indoor season. Connors, who was upset by Sweden's Stefan Edberg in the semifinals of the U.S. national Indoor Championships in Memphis, Tenn., on Saturday, has said he needs to take time off.

Lendl will highlight the opening day when he plays his first round match against Larry Stefanski. The match will be followed by Czechoslovakia's Hans Mandlko, who is seeded seventh in the men's field, against Rafaela Bregi of Italy.
N.C. State’s Washburn enters plea of guilty to charges of stereo theft

Associated Press

RALEIGH, N.C. — Chris Washburn, the 6-11 North Carolina State freshman who was one of the nation’s top most sought after schoolboy basketball players last season, pleaded guilty yesterday to three misdemeanor charges stemming from the theft of stereo equipment last December.

He was immediately sentenced to three days in jail.

“This is a clear to us — that this young man has to be punished. We recognize that ... and he recognizes that.” Defense attorney Wade Smith told Wake Superior Court Judge Milton Reid. “While there must be punishment, we hope the punishment does not close the door to his future.”

Reid also gave Washburn a suspended six-year sentence and placed him on probation for five years. Washburn was ordered to report for jail next Dec. 19, one year after he took what his lawyers said was $800 worth of stereo equipment from the room of two football players at the College Inn, an athlete’s dormitory.

There was no immediate word on Washburn’s status from the university.

Coach Jim Valvano, who benched Washburn after he was arrested, couldn’t be reached immediately for comment.

Washburn’s plea came as a grand jury was to consider indicting him on a second-degree burglary charge, a charge which could have brought him a 14-year prison term.

As part of plea agreement, Washburn consented to a 20-point probation order, which included provisions that he get mental health treatment, perform 320 hours of community service and pay $1,000 to a crime victims fund.

“Whether or not you are going to play basketball will be a decision for responsible officials” at NCSU to make, Reid said. “That is not an appropriate decision for this court.”

Last Sept. 20, Washburn was found guilty of assault on a female, given a 30-day suspended sentence and $425 and court costs. The woman said Washburn slapped her and pushed her after an argument in her dormitory.

Reds miffed; city is suing

CINCINNATI — Cincinnati Reds officials are miffed that the city is planning to pursue a lawsuit against them stemming from the National League ballclub all the way to the Ohio Supreme Court.

At a council committee hearing yesterday on the stability of Cincinnati sports franchises, council members indicated they’d take their fight for $15 million in lost revenues from the 1981 baseball players’ strike to the Supreme Court.

The city, which operates Riverfront Stadium, asserted the ballclub violated its lease by failing to play a full number of home games during the players’ strike. However, Hamilton County Common Pleas Judge Thomas Crush ruled for the ballclub, saying there was no provocation in the city’s 40-year lease with the Reds to cover a strike.

After your last exam, what tough questions will you still be facing?
The first half of the 1984-85 North Star Conference season ends this week with the Notre Dame women's basketball team in the thick of the fight for the early NSC lead. And a major determinant in that race will be the outcome of tonight's game between the Irish and current front-runner Dayton.

The Lady Flyers, who have a perfect 5-0 record in the conference, will be looking for revenge when Mary DiStanislao's Irish visit the UD Arena in hopes of improving on their 3-1 conference mark. In each of the last two years, Notre Dame has pulled off mild upsets over Lnda Makowski's squad, including a 65-57 stunner on Dayton's home court last year.

Although this is Dayton's first year as a Division I school (and first year in the North Star), the Flyers have made the switch from Division II easily - to nobody's surprise. They have been playing a Division I schedule for the past few years, and were one of the top Division II teams in the nation during the past two years. Last year, they held the No. 1 spot at one point in the season, eventually reaching the Final Four before bowing out with an impressive 27-4 record.

The 63-57 loss to Notre Dame was one of the four blemishes on that record and came a year after the Irish won a dramatic 68-64 overtime game over the Flyers in the ACC. In that game, guard Laura Dougherty hit a desperation 20-footer at the buzzer to tie the game at the end of regulation.

"I don't think Dayton expected to lose either of those games," says DiStanislao. "With them coming off a big loss (against No 11 Western Kentucky) and having a lot of talent, they'll really be ready to play."

Notre Dame, too, seems ready for the showdown after blowing out two NSC opponents - Butler (79-40) and Evansville (74-55) last week. The Irish proved they have the best defensive team in the conference when they are playing well, but, more importantly, seemed to found a groove on the offensive part of the game, despite the loss of second-leading scorer Carrie Bates who left the team last week.

"This is a big game for us in terms of keeping up our momentum," says DiStanislao. "We'll see how good we really are. It's also important in terms of our positioning within the conference."

The inside game is helped by the play of forwards Lori Cahill (4.6 ppg), Michele Kruty (6.7 ppg) and Sharon Curd (5.9 ppg). Center Monica West (4.6 ppg) and forward-center Cheryl Dickerson (5.4 ppg, 5.7 rpg) also help out the attack under the basket.

Although the inside game of the Flyers is strong, they currently lead the conference in rebounding margin. Notre Dame may have the strongest inside game in the conference. Freshman center Sandy Boham has been coming on strong in recent games, as has senior Mary Beth Schueth who broke the school's all-time rebounding record in Friday's game against Evansville.

Take advantage of this opportunity to shape your future and ours... join a company that is changing the face of the new expressionist. Tomorrow is taking shape at a company called TRW.

At TRW's Electronics and Defense Sector, we recognize the value of new ideas. We provide an environment with space for free thought and expression. With us, you can reach deep into the expanse of your imagination and help to develop technologies that literally reach beyond the stars.

We're looking for people who can bring a solid background in communications and scientific spacecraft, alternative energy sources, high energy lasers, and microelectronics development. These opportunities are open to you.

A win over Dayton would put Notre Dame in a commanding position when the second half of the conference schedule begins. Unlike the Flyers who have faced most of their tough competition at home, so far this season, the Irish have had to play most of their conference games on the road. With the toughest part of their schedule almost completed, the Irish could still find themselves in a tie for first place and, therefore, in the driver's seat.

Defeating the host Flyers will be no easy task, though, as Makowski has eight players, including three starters, returning from last year's conference. The Flyers averaged over 90 points a game at ACC. This year's 10-8 squad has not put as many points on the board as it has the past two years, as has struggled occasionally with its complete Division I schedule, but the Flyers do have a number of talented players.

Center Theresa Yingling is the most stable of the Flyers, not only because of her size (6-5), but also because of her team-leading scoring average (12.5 ppg) and rebounding (7.9 rpg) averages. This junior has been a constant at this level for the last two years, but has also come off the bench.

The same thing can also be said for Dayton's 6-5 guard Leah Abia who is second on the team in scoring (11.4 ppg). She, too, has been in and out of the starting lineup, but her contributions as scorer and playmaker is very important to the team.

Yingling and Abia may be the big guns, but they have plenty of help as ten players average more than four points an outing. Much of the added scoring comes from the guard position — where two juniors, Rhonda Kettle and Mary Byers, combine for 20 points per game.

The inside game is helped by the play of forwards Lori Cahill (4.6 ppg), Michele Kruty (6.7 ppg) and Sharon Curd (5.9 ppg). Center Monica West (4.6 ppg) and forward-center Cheryl Dickerson (5.4 ppg, 5.7 rpg) also help out the attack under the basket.

Although the inside game of the Flyers is strong, they currently lead the conference in rebounding margin. Notre Dame may have the strongest inside game in the conference. Freshman center Sandy Boham has been coming on strong in recent games, as has senior Mary Beth Schueth who broke the school's all-time rebounding record in Friday's game against Evansville.

Freshman Kathy Brommeld has also played well off the bench, scoring in double figures in both games last week.

The emergence of Botham and Brommeld has made the loss of Bates a little easier to take, although they will not be able to make up the loss of four years of experience.

"Both Kathy and Sandy are going to have to be productive on both offense and defense," says DiStanislao. "Dayton's a little more wide-open than they used to be, so we're going to need some inside defense and keep them off the boards."

Once again, the Irish will be looking to junior Trena Keys to lead the offense. The 6-0 guard forward has been having her best year, leading the team with her 16.5 points per outing. She has also grabbed six rebounds per game. Lynn Ebben will also be looked to for points, although scoring has been inconsistent. She returns to the starting lineup. Freshman guard Mary Gavin will run the show with senior Laura Dougherty coming off the bench.

"Defeating Dayton will be to get productive minutes from the kids," says DiStanislao. "Dayton doesn't beat itself easily."

"We have to get scoring out of Trena, good shooting out of Lynn, strong efforts off the bench, and good decisions by Mary. If we do that, we should win."

New Jersey Generals sign Flutie to contract

Associated Press

NEW YORK - Doug Flutie, the Heisman Trophy-winning quarterback from Boston College, signed a contract with the New Jersey Generals of the United States Football League yesterday that his lawyer said will make him one of the highest paid athletes in sports.

"Contracts were executed," Bob Woolf said last night. "Although he would give no details, it has been estimated that Flutie would receive $7 million under a five-year deal with Generals owner Donald Trump."

"There's been all kinds of speculation, and most of it has been quite accurate," Woolf said. "It's a contract that is deserving of a Doug Flutie. I've always said that it's something that should be in the vicinity of a Herschel Walker or a Steve Young and that's what it is."

Young, a quarterback for Brigham Young, signed a contract said to be worth $40 million over five years with the Los Angeles Express of the USFL. Walker, a Heisman trophy-winning running back from Georgia, signed a four-year contract with the Generals for an estimated $6 million.

"It could be very historic. It could be like Joe Namath coming to the American Football League."

Namath's signing by the New York Jets 20 years ago was credited with giving the AFL the credibility that led to an eventual merger with the National Football League.

The document which tied Flutie to the USFL was 50 pages long and attorneys for the two sides took 100 days to hammer out the final details.

Greg Luzinski retires

Associated Press

NEW YORK - Greg Luzinski, one of baseball's most feared power hitters since joining the Philadelphia Phillies in 1970, said yesterday that he was retiring and would become freshman baseball coach at a New Jersey high school.

"The realization was nobody wanted me," Luzinski said in an interview with USA Today. "Luzinski, who became a free agent last November after four seasons with the American League's Chicago White Sox, was selected only by the Pittsburgh Pirates in the free-agent draft."

"No team offered him a contract," said Jack Sands, Luzinski's agent. "Because of investments we have made, he will receive $200,000 a year for the rest of his life."

Luzinski, who lives in New Jersey, said he had been appointed freshman baseball coach of Holy Cross High School at Delran, N.J.

Today could be your last chance to ever watch a Notre Dame varsity swim meet in the Rock Municipal Pool.

This afternoon, both the men's and women's teams will be farewelled to the Rock when they play their season opener. The men will go to Wayne State and the women to Kalamazoo.

Although the Rockne Memorial Aquatics Center housed the only pool on campus, it is continuing to fence well when he coached the Notre Dame fencing team. Mike Gostigian (2-1) also went untouched.

"It's hard to beat a Wayne State on Friday and not have the momentum carry you past the teams we played on Saturday," said DeCicco. "It was a pleasantly surprised as our overall momentum carried through in our tournament.

For the rest of the schedule, DeCicco believes that his fencers are ready and able to continue on their high.

"We have our first national title in six years," said DeCicco. "But we must make a big impact on that team. I just hope that we can do what we did in the NCAA championships as just about every Irish fencer saw action.

The match with Wayne State was for the hitting Wayne State squad. For the Irish, Mike Gostigian (2-1) also went untouched.
