President tells nation next week’s summit to be ‘mission of peace’

WASHINGTON President Reagan told the nation yesterday night he is going to Geneva and his first summit meeting with a Soviet leader on “a mission for peace” that he hopes will continue in future years.

Reagan said his purpose in meeting Soviet President Mikhail Gorbachev next Tuesday and Wednesday is to “try to map out, together, a basis for peaceful discourse even though our disagreements on fundamental questions will not change.”

Excerpts from the prepared text of the president’s nationally broadcast address from the Oval Office were released by the White House before Reagan was scheduled to speak.

“It is my fondest hope that the two of us can begin a process which our successors and our peoples can continue,” the president said. He described that process as the ability to face differences “frankly and openly and beginning to narrow and resolve them” through communication and elimination of the barriers between the two superpowers.

He called for cooperation “wherever possible for the greater good of all.”

“My mission, simply stated, is a mission for peace,” Reagan said.

Columbia volcano kills thousands as it buries villagers in water, mud

Associated Press

BOGOTA, Colombia - A volcano in western Colombia erupted before dawn yesterday and sent torrents of mud and water crashing into a river that drowned a sleeping town and buried a sleeping town and that buried a sleeping town and that buried a sleeping town and that buried a sleeping town and that buried a sleeping town.

The current eruption of the Nevado del Ruiz volcano, which has been spewing ash, smoke and gas since Oct. 19, 1974, apparently melted snow around its cone, creating tons of mud that went crashing down Lagunilla River.

“Eighty-five percent of the town (Almero) is destroyed, and we estimate there are 15,000 deaths,” Gov. Eduardo Alarte, of the state of Tolima, told a broadcast interviewer with the Bogota radio chain Caracol.

Officials at Almero, a farming town in the state of Tolima just 30 miles from the volcano and 105 miles northwest of Bogota, was inundated by mud that swept down to the Llanguipta River after the eruption of the volcano, Nevado del Ruiz (Snowpeak of Ruiz).

Anti-Apartheid Network affords chance to join protest movement

It seems our generation grew up in the shadow of student protest. While mom and dad got ready to go to work on Friday nights, we watched protestors and policemen battle it out on the evening news, but it really didn’t matter much to us. All we were waiting to see was “The Brady Bunch.”

So while college students were getting killed by National Guardsmen, we were learning to tie our shoes.

Last week, one of the protestors of the 60s, looking a little tired and with what could have been the beginnings of a bald spot on the back of his head, claimed our generation is beginning to show signs of a protest spirit again.

Abbe Hoffman is a name which you probably remember but are not sure why. He was one of the leaders of the protest movements of our childhoods, and was generally the kind of person your mother might have warned you about.

If you only expected this man to come to Notre Dame and rant and rave about his former days of glory, you were in for a surprise. More of his remarks were directed toward the federal government than his listeners students should be protesting today than to reminiscences about the past.

The reason he gave for protesting seemed to be especially applicable.

“Students have stopped seeing themselves as students but as citizens in a community. Once you’re a citizen of a community, you have rights, you have needs. You have a right to have a say in decision making,” he proclaimed.

One area which Hoffman suggested protesting was investments in South Africa.

He compared tuition payments to paying taxes, and said he had been asked but as citizens, to have a say in how our taxes are spent.

Which seems like a reasonable idea, you might have said to yourself as you left Washington Hall, hoping you got back to your dorm in time to at least see the end of “St. Elsewhere.”

But before you return to your regular routine, remember the one protesting, and it doesn’t have to be meeting Notre Dame security in front of the Administration Building at high noon for an afternoon of rock throwing and name calling.

There are more subtle ways for citizens to protest. There are An-Apartheid Network at Notre Dame which is organized specifically to protest apartheid.

It meets every Thursday night at 7 in the Center for Social Concerns. Here members of the network make plans for their next move, and welcome anyone who would like to join them.

The group is using a new tactic starting today, and although it will take place around noon and it will occur in front of the Administration Building, there won’t be any rocks thrown.

Instead, it will be a vigil. A prayer will be said and past events in South Africa will be discussed.

After the vigil every week, letters protesting the University’s investments in South Africa will be presented to Father Theodore Hesburgh, University president.

Patrick Mullen, vice chairman of the Anti-Apartheid Network, compared the presentation of the letters to what is done at the South African embassy in Washington, where letters are presented every day.

If a vigil doesn’t seem to fit with your sense of protest, Mullen suggested writing letters to Hesburgh or Thomas Carney, chairman of the Notre Dame Board of Trustees.

The network is working toward educating the students about apartheid in preparation for a student referendum next spring asking the University to continue to invest in South Africa.

There will be lectures, films and debates sponsored by the network in order to get students to form educated opinions about the subject.

Which means, of course, that even if you do not want to protest in front of the administration or write letters, all you have to do is protest is pay a bit of attention to the activities of the network and maybe attend a film or lecture.

Then you have to form an opinion and vote next spring.

This seems pretty far removed from mailing pamphlets to residents of New York, but it is still a form of protest.

Which, according to Hoffman, is just exercising your rights as a citizen.

Council represents SMC parents

MARILYN BENCHIK
News Staff

Keeping parents informed of events at Saint Mary's while giving them the opportunity to discuss these events at biannual meetings is the purpose of the College's Parents Council.

All parents of students are technically members of the council, while 22 serve as its active members and officers.

"The council acts as a liaison between the administration and parents," said Thomas Nessinger, a council member. Active members and officers are invited to attend meetings at the end of October and in late February and early March to offer their suggestions and review recent events at the College.

The council does not participate in any active policy-making.

"We hope to keep the council viable and to assist (Saint Mary's President) Dr. Hickey in any way that we can. We may question, but we do not antagonize," said Priscilla Trunck, co-chairman of the council.

Second year council member Charles Hetterich said the council does not promote fundraising activities on a formal basis. Members are asked to participate in fundraisers which take place in their native area.

The members of the council work with the admissions and public relations departments. They often call prospective students, and review the career and counseling department. Hetterich said.

The council is broken up into several different sub-committees. These committees allow the council to cover a variety of issues concerning most aspects of Saint Mary's day-to-day business.

Although not actively involved in the search for a new president, the council does have a member who works on a committee designed for this purpose. Last year's council chairman, Thomas Nessinger, serves as this year's committee representative.

House decides to raise government debt limit

Associated Press

WASHINGTON - The govern­ ment's latest fiscal foe was tem­ porarily cleaned up yesterday after the House gave final congressional approval to legislation raising federal borrowing authority - the national debt limit - to $1.5 trillion.

Without debate and only ap­ proval for two dozen members present, the House, on a voice vote, approved the legislation that postpones a credit crunch through Dec. 6 by raising the government's $1.824 trillion line of credit by $86 billion. It now goes to the White House for President Reagan's ex­ pected signature.

The Senate passed the measure on a voice vote Wednesday night.

Senate Majority Leader Robert Dole, R-Kan., said the action would "relieve the president of any burden while he was at the summit" next week with Soviet leader Mikhail Gorbachev.

Without action, the government would have been in default. The president had ordered federal agencies to stop issuing new checks starting today if Congress had not in­ creased the debt limit.

Attached to the legislation is an extension until Dec. 15 of the 16­ cent-a-pack federal tax on cigarettes. Congress has not completed action on pending legislation making the 16-cent tax permanent and without the extension the tax would have dropped to eight cents per pack after midnight yesterday.

The temporary bill also would ex­ tend until Dec. 14 a government program of aid to workers and com­ panies hurt by competition from im­ ports, a limit on the size of federal Medicare reimbursements to doc­ tors and hospitals, and the method of calculating benefits for unemployed railroad workers. Those programs also expired yesterday.

In September, the Reagan ad­ ministration asked Congress to in­ crease the debt limit from its current level to $2.078 trillion. But that necessary legislation had become tangled in congressional wrangling over rival plans passed by the House and Senate to force a balanced budget by the end of the decade. *

Opposition to Marcos agrees to Jan. elections

Associated Press

MANILA, Philippines - Members of President Ferdinand Marcos' party and his political opposition agreed yesterday to postpone a spec­ ial presidential election proposed by Marcos for Jan. 17, but favored a new date.

A new date was not set.

Leonardo Perez, Marcos' political affairs minister, said representatives of the ruling New Society Movement and the opposition agreed to the postponement in a negotiating session.

Perez said the presidential elec­ tion, proposed by Marcos for Jan. 17, with probably hold "sometime from the first week of February." The Na­ tional Assembly, controlled by Marcos' party, is to begin debate Laurent and Corazon Aquino, widow of assassinated opposition leader Benigno Aquino, are considered the strongest contenders.

ND leaders abandon discount idea

By CHRIS BEDNARSKI
Senior Staff Reporter

Student government rejected an idea which would have given its members discounts at South Bend stores in return for free advertising in the student government newsletter in early September.

Student Body President Bill Healy said the idea was to compensate student government members for their work. The idea came from a former student leader, said Healy. He said Notre Dame student government members are not paid, unlike those at other schools.

“We’re extremely proud of the work student government members do,” he said.

In a Sept. 5 memo to his cabinet members Healy asked for volunteers to take on the project of getting student government members discounts at South Bend stores. “We can offer them free advertising in our newsletter,” says the memo.

Healy said after getting responses from some cabinet members on the project it was decided that the project should be canceled because student government members shouldn’t be working for pay but for the sake of their jobs.

Ireland and British reach agreement about government of N. Ireland

Associated Press

DUBLIN, Ireland - Ireland and Britain approved a historic agreement yesterday giving the Roman Catholic nation a formal voice in governing the troubled Protestant-dominated British province of Northern Ireland.

Prime Minister James Chichester-Fraser of Britain and Garret FitzGerald of Ireland at a summit today in an undisclosed location.

Authorities say it is the most important initiative on Northern Ireland since 1974, and is designed to help pacify a strife-torn region where more than 2,450 people have been killed since a centuries-old Catholic-Protestant conflict flared anew in 1969.

In the latest violence, a member of the mainly Protestant Royal Ulster Constabulary was shot and seriously wounded as he drove to work today near the Irish border. Police blamed the Irish Republican Army, which is trying to wrest the province from the United Kingdom to unite it with the Irish Republic.

Officials in Britain and Ireland have refused to disclose more than the outlines of the plan. But it appears largely to formalise a relationship that has existed in practice for years.

It gives Ireland a consultative role - thus far not publicly defined - in Northern Ireland's affairs Irish and British press reports said the republic's government would maintain an office in the area of Belfast, Northern Ireland's capital, where members of the Catholic minority can bring their grievances against the Protestant-led administration.

In return, is to acknowledge British sovereignty over Northern Ireland as long as the Protestant minority so wishes.

Soviet claims CIA kidnapped him

Associated Press

MOSCOW - Vitali Yurchenko, denying he defected and scaring questions about his connection to the KGB, made his first public appearance in the Soviet Union yesterday since his release from a U.S. prison last year.

He appeared at a weekend conference in a Foreign Ministry auditorium packed with Western reporters and Soviet journalists.

Yurchenko left the United States in 1981, is in a suit ending to what the State Department said was a defection three months earlier by one of the KGB's senior spies.

The Soviets frequently broke into laughter as Yurchenko derided the CIA, its director William Casey and some of the Western correspondents who asked questions.

The news conference was reminiscent of an appearance last year by Oleg Piotrovsky, a Soviet journalist who defected to Britain, lived among the CIA's "safe house" in the suburb of Fredericksburg, Va., but Yurchenko would not say directly whether he worked for the KGB secret police and intelligence agency. U.S. officials say Yurchenko ran the KGB's Washington office from 1975-80 while working at the embassy there.

Greatness defined by action not power and wealth

Few of us would dispute that our world is filled with wrong and injustice. Few would deny that we live in a world where both luxury and poverty flourish side by side, where some children go to bed hungry at night and get a barely literate education day by day and others get to choose between the best foods and go to the best, most expensive universities.

Franklin Johnson

It seems clear that a world tolerating this kind of injustice should be changed, that it should and could be made better. And yet many argue that we must resist change until we have no choice. They argue for security, for preservation, for the current way things are. They present the fact that the world does not yield to change easily, if at all. And they ask us to recognize and accept the inevitability of demanding any change at all. Moreover, they ask that we provide an exact formula for justice; they want clear, precise, mathematical results.

In short, in the face of hungry children, they ask that we wait a few more generations.

Unfortunately, the just world we all want will not automatically arrive on a generation or two, as our grandparents and great-grandparents can attest. Justice only comes to the world through pain, and suffering and heart-rending sacrifice. Then, when one generation is done, the other still has so much to accomplish, for fighting for justice is never a fight of certainty. It is a fight of danger and risk.

Abraham Lincoln, in freeing most of the slaves in 1863, could not foresee the results of his action. Those who helped establish the United Nations and Israel did not know what the new world they were creating would bring. Certainly the signers of the Declaration of Independence never knew how they would have more history and build a nation whose revolution continues today.

Perhaps every generation, like ourselves, faces the same challenge to end as much needless suffering as possible. Perhaps too each generation has more power and wealth at its disposal that it could bring to bear on this suffering than any other. Surely our generation is the richest and most powerful the earth has ever known. But riches will not define the greatness of a generation, nor will always choosing the easy, most certain step.

Instead, our greatness will be defined by what we choose to do with our power and wealth. For we have a chance now, just a chance, to end starvation, poverty and oppression, the most obvious forms of needless suffering in the world.

We, as a nation, have more power than any other in the world. As we individuals have only the short years of our life. There is no need for reason, for us to crawl, cowering, into some shell of failure that will engulf this world, but we will inherit it. And we can change it. The road of change is often harsh and the obstacles sometimes insurmountable. But it is only by accepting the challenge, and trying as best we can, that any generation can ever hope to attain a newer world.

Franklin M. Johnson is a Notre Dame law student.
Fears of losing power not worse than prestige

Dear Editor:
The relentless efforts of anti-apartheid activists to bring the United States to bear on the South African regime have placed the issue of racist state policy at the front burner of American politics. In a recent stadium prove that the student body is against apartheid. In the context of an official student referendum, I think it might be a more accurate measure of student opinion.

Boundaries are not set on area of social good

Dear Editor:
I was going to respond to Chris Edwards' eloquent slanderings of the Anti-Apartheid Network, but because I believe many will react to that, I will focus my reply on the specific argument he presents below.
In his article about the trendiness of the South African minority-held governments, he argues that students are guilty of "over-sexed drug addicts, it is doubtful they could not be represented without a state of apartheid. As citizens of a democratic society, we have a right to voice our opinions when important issues arise. In actuality, the greatest chances of the United States permitting South Africa's minority to rule the South African government. In actuality, the greatest chances of the United States permitting South Africa's minority to rule the South African government. If Steve Safranek's arguments are to go unheeded, then I guess it is. The biggest reason for the loss of freedom in the past was the involvement of the U.S. foreign policy in concentrated on beating the Marxists on the bar.

Repression of whites is only mere conjecture

Dear Editor:
Steve Safranek's recent article on University researchers to experiment on the South African minority is mere conjecture. Let's take care of our nation, or is social good limited to our nation. If Safranek's arguments are to go unheeded, then I guess it is.

Present investment plan threatens US security

Dear Editor:
In response to Steve Safranek's Nov. 12 article, this student is not a student, but I was not aware that a student referendum had taken place, or does it count votes? A student is not a student in its true sense. The fact that one chooses to get involved in the common cause is a matter of personal choice, and does not negate any of the other causes mentioned by Safranek. The difference is that we don't believe that there has to be a quota of people devoted to each cause. The fact that we blacks in South Africa would be glad to know that there is not a "clear social good" such as the pro-live movement, is not to say that Safranek echoes the writing of George Orwell: "One Party is not worse than the other." Unfortunately, the signs of a movement are often the same, and I do not want to see another group with a similar name trying to preserve a state of apartheid.

Great chance of loss lies with present plan

Dear Editor:
Writing in response to a Nov. 8 Viewpoint article which argues to "Let South Africa be South Africa," the author of the article, attempting to be the ultimate pragmatist, states, "South Africa is a good ally as a strategic partner we must not turn our back on." He proposes the three: "First, the United States must use its leverage to rule the South African government, and in actuality, the greatest chances of the United States permitting South Africa's minority to rule the South African government. If Steve Safranek's arguments are to go unheeded, then I guess it is.

Dear Editor:
The relentless efforts of anti-apartheid activists to bring the United States to bear on the South African regime have placed the issue of racist state policy at the front burner of American politics. In a recent stadium prove that the student body is against apartheid. In the context of an official student referendum, I think it might be a more accurate measure of student opinion.

Boundaries are not set on area of social good

Dear Editor:
I was going to respond to Chris Edwards' eloquent slanderings of the Anti-Apartheid Network, but because I believe many will react to that, I will focus my reply on the specific argument he presents below.
In his article about the trendiness of the South African minority-held governments, he argues that students are guilty of "over-sexed drug addicts, it is doubtful they could not be represented without a state of apartheid. As citizens of a democratic society, we have a right to voice our opinions when important issues arise. In actuality, the greatest chances of the United States permitting South Africa's minority to rule the South African government. If Steve Safranek's arguments are to go unheeded, then I guess it is.

Repression of whites is only mere conjecture

Dear Editor:
Steve Safranek's recent article on University researchers to experiment on the South African minority is mere conjecture. Let's take care of our nation, or is social good limited to our nation. If Safranek's arguments are to go unheeded, then I guess it is.

Present investment plan threatens US security

Dear Editor:
In response to Steve Safranek's Nov. 12 article, this student is not a student, but I was not aware that a student referendum had taken place, or does it count votes? A student is not a student in its true sense. The fact that one chooses to get involved in the common cause is a matter of personal choice, and does not negate any of the other causes mentioned by Safranek. The difference is that we don't believe that there has to be a quota of people devoted to each cause. The fact that we blacks in South Africa would be glad to know that there is not a "clear social good" such as the pro-live movement, is not to say that Safranek echoes the writing of George Orwell: "One Party is not worse than the other." Unfortunately, the signs of a movement are often the same, and I do not want to see another group with a similar name trying to preserve a state of apartheid.

Great chance of loss lies with present plan

Dear Editor:
Writing in response to a Nov. 8 Viewpoint article which argues to "Let South Africa be South Africa," the author of the article, attempting to be the ultimate pragmatist, states, "South Africa is a good ally as a strategic partner we must not turn our back on." He proposes the three: "First, the United States must use its leverage to rule the South African government, and in actuality, the greatest chances of the United States permitting South Africa's minority to rule the South African government. If Steve Safranek's arguments are to go unheeded, then I guess it is.

Pro-lifers are creating a permanent underclass

"The wailing of the newborn infant is mingled with the dirge for the dead," said the ancient Roman poet Catullus. He could be referring to the Reagan administration's attitude on pro-life action. President Reagan actively opposes legalized abortion and received the implied support of some American bishops during last year's election because of it. In the past year, though, no pro-life action has been taken.

Mark Drajem

These bishops, specifically Archbishop John F. Quinn of Chicago, recently attacked Mario Cuomo and Geraldine Ferraro because their politics did not demonstrate uniformly legalized abortion. This issue certainly helped the President receive a sweeping mandate last November. Those who supported Reagan because of his abortion stand forgot that being pro-life encompasses much more than anti-abortion.

Just as drinking ages don't prevent us from getting all the boozing we desire, illegal abortion only leads to the back alley. Economic actions by the government must be taken to support those with no option but abortion.

Pregnancy and raising children are expensive. It sounds good to protect abortion legally, but further measures to make the law more workable, or more importantly, to prevent unnecessary abortion are required.

The two federal programs which could best reduce abortion are education and incidentally, the Soviet worker is unable to name more than 275 million people. It is easier to believe that, at times, we tend to deny the human quality of the Soviet people.

Ken Kollman

Americans are strikingly ignorant of Soviet leadership, history and culture, preferring instead to think of them as non-humans, or at least somehow less than a nation of people. So we have Danziger Times in the Chicago Tribune and monitor says with all seriousness, "Tu rulers, and unfortunately their subjects as well, are not people like us."

According to a New York Times survey, 76 percent of those Americans polled were unable to name Michael Gorbachev as the Soviet leader. For five percent were unaware that the Soviet Union and the United States fought on the same side in World War II. As for the future, it is one of little hope. Gorbachev said Russian workers work harder than American workers, but that they are "forced to be... harder workers" and that they are awarded very little free time or choice of jobs. This is a falsity, because, in fact, the Soviet Union has been called one of the "world's greatest goof-off societies."

Both sides naturally are given a choice to specialize in a certain field prior to higher education, and incidentally, the Soviet worker is given much free time as the average American worker.

There is a tendency to blame this ignorance on the fact that the Soviet Union is a closed society and do not have access to such information. The truth is, information about communism and communism is readily available in books, magazines and even the best newspapers, but Americans prefer quick TV news clips that give snippy images of U.S. and Soviet confrontation, painting the Soviets as an aggressive enemy.

Whether the Soviet Union is a de facto enemy or not, television news shapes a fixed image of Soviet barbarism, not only by showing us political moves such as Hungary in 1956, Czechoslovakia in 1968, Afghanistan in 1979, or the downing of a commercial airliner, but also by giving few images of real-life, warm-blooded people of the Soviet Union. A flood of unfathering words such as cold, enemy, emotionless, sad, gray, brainwashed and spy often showed up in The Times survey.

Grade school history books cited in The New York Times Magazine credit the Soviet defeat of Germany in World War II almost entirely to the help of the United States. It is little wonder that only 42 percent of Americans polled knew that more Russians than Americans died in World War II.

What is so unsettling is that many of our leaders, particularly our president, evidently believe in the same sort of misconceptions. As a result, Reagan sees the Soviets as "the focus of evil in the modern world," and "evil empire."

Perhaps Reagan still believes Dean Acheson, who in 1947 said, "It is a mistake to believe that you can at any time sit down with the Russians and solve questions," or with Billy Graham in the 1950s who remarked, "My own theory about communism is that it is maintained by Satan." In Reagan's black and white world, the hammer and sickle flies dark and devilish.

Ignorance breeds mistrust, and our relationship with the Soviet Union is one of "bad faith," a term adopted by Henry Kissinger. They refuse proposal and we assume they are aiming for superiority. We hold a NATO summit, and they think we are scheming. It is a cycle fed by ignorance. What we do in fact believe about the Soviet people fosters persistent mistrust.

We seem to have a skewed image of 275 million people on this planet, but it is not just any 275 million people. It is the nation that we happen to be pointing 30,000 nuclear weapons at, and only when we begin to consider them as human beings can we deal with them effectively. Let us hope that Reagan's white hat is not over his eyes in Geneva, for he shall see that, alas, Gorbachev does not goose-step into the room.

Ken Kollman is a sobornen English and government major at Notre Dame and a regular Viewpoint columnist.

President Reagan once said, "Let's not delude ourselves, the Soviet Union stands for all the rest that is going on. If they weren't engaged in their current activities, the rest wouldn't be any hot spots in the world." Does he believe that? Do we believe that? It is easier to believe that, at times, we tend to deny the human quality of the Soviet people.

Father Rock gives out the ‘new’ ten commandments

This is the ninth episode in The Observer's serial publication of the Notre Dame football story, "The Gipper's Ghost." In last week's episode, halfback Dan Reagan (the ghost of George Gipp), an up-and-coming star of Notre Dame in the late 1920s, returns to campus to show the present-day players the secret of winning football. What will be revealed to you here today will transform the Fighting Irish from a group of talented but complacent athletes into the greatest football team in the land.

TUESDAY's practice found the new Notre Dame team into contenders for the national championship.

"Boys, I can't tell you where these came from. You wouldn't believe me if I did. Trust me. These came from a very knowledgeable source. Just know that if you memorize these commandments and practice them, you'll turn the Notre Dame football team into contenders for the national championship."

"For the benefit of those of you in the back, I'll read these out loud."

In a clear, compelling voice, Father Rock began reading.

"The first commandment. Thou shalt not

Father Rock added, "Now, boys, if you break these commandments, you'll be held accountable to me. Coach Kelly has authorized me to dispense penance in the form of laps and push-ups, if you forget there any questions?"

O'Flanagan raised his hand.

"Ryan?"

"Father, which ones are mortal sins?"

"The first, fifth, seventh, and the tenth. Especially the tenth."

"You mean the tenth one - the one about the cheerleaders - isn't a mortal sin?"

O'Flanagan looked relieved.

"No, Ryan," Father Rock said, "it just wouldn't be fair. Whoever originally wrote those old commandments, he'd never seen the USC cheerleaders."

"So, what happens if a high-quality right end like me breaks one of them?"

"Well, Ryan, when you meet St. Peter at the Pearly Gates, I'm sure he'll understand."

"What's that?"

"Show you his press clippings And pray!"

Kentucky looked into Associated Press

LEXINGTON, Ky. — Kentucky coach Eddie Sutton said yesterday that he doesn't believe the NCAA will come down too hard on his football program after its investigation into allegations that former players accepted money and gifts from boosters. The Lexington Herald-Leader reported on Oct. 27 that 26 Former Wildcats said they had accepted gifts, sold their free season tickets for more than $1,000 and been paid for speaking engagements by members of National Collegiate Athletic Association panels.

The reported activities occurred during coach Joe B. Hall's 13-year tenure at Kentucky that ended last March. Sutton was named head coach on April 5 after spending the past 11 seasons at Arkansas.

"I've got to believe the NCAA won't come down too hard on us during a Southeastern Conference media day because we've not been accused of any NCAA penalties come in recruiting." An NCAA official said last week that the investigation probably would take six months.

Cathy Emigholz, a 6-1 forward from New Dorp, N.Y., has made a commitment to play basketball for the Notre Dame women's team beginning next season.

An honorable mention pick on Street & Smith's preseason All-America team, Emigholz told Irish coach Mary DiStanislao of her intentions early yesterday afternoon.

"Cathy is a solid player," said DiStanislao. "She hustles and plays both ends of the floor very well. She is a good shooter and a good rebounder, although I think she will have to increase her shooting range for the college game."

DiStanislao, who said she envisioned Emigholz mainly as a small forward, said yesterday that she will not sign any more players during the early signing period, which began on Wednesday and runs through next Wednesday.

on a pushing foul in front of the Crime's goal was ruled to be outside of the penalty kick area, and the Studs failed to convert the indirect kick near the end of the first half. Stanford seemed to lose much of their initial intensity after that call, and the half ended with the Crime on top, 1-0.

The second half saw the Crime starting to dominate play in the Stanford end, and 14 minutes into the half, the Crime's Tom White beat a Stud defender inside the penalty area, but was tripped from behind before he could launch a shot. The Crime were awarded the penalty kick, and Buddy Webster beat the Studs' goalkeeper to his right to give the Crime a 2-0 advantage.

With 2.5 minutes gone in the half the Crime struck again. This time, Tom White, deep in the Studs' defensive left corner, booted a crossing pass that deflected off of a Stud defender high in the air. Mark McVeigh was waiting for the Crime as he subsequently headed the ball into the net.

Two minutes later, the Crime put the icing on the cake as Paul Schoner beat the Studs' goalie to a crossing pass that gave the Crime a 4-0 advantage. That proved to be the final score as the Crime began their celebration.

"There's just so much talent on this team," said Pecoraro. "Anytime you get a bunch of guys together to practice on a muddy field on Tuesday and Wednesday afternoon this week, it shows a lot of desire."

PHOENIX, Ariz. - They quickly are becoming a laughing stock of the National Basketball Association, but the Phoenix Suns aren't laughing about being the league's only winless team.

"We're going to get out of this mess," said Coach John MacLeod, whose club is off to the worst start of its 18-year history at 0-9.

"Once we learn a little patience and better judgment, we'll be OK. If we're going to be in a slump, I'd rather have it now and then come on strong in the end. But we have put ourselves in a position. It is up to us to get out of it."

The Suns, who last season had their first losing record in eight years at 36-46, have switched from a finesse style to a run-and-gun offense. They quickly have become the new laughing stock of the National Basketball Association.

Macleod has thought of junking the new offense and going back to calling set plays and missing the entire preseasOn in a contract dispute, said, "We're not playing much defense. We get ahead and then we're not able to sustain it because we start kicking the ball around or show poor judgment in our shot selection."

Macleod said he has thought about junking the new offense and going back to calling set plays and winning.

"To say that we're playing poorly is an understatement," MacLeod said. "We're not playing much defense. We get ahead and then we're not able to sustain it because we start kicking the ball around or show poor judgment in our shot selection."

Phoenix leads the league in turnovers and points allowed. "If we're going to be in a slump, I'd rather have it now and then come on strong in the end. But we have put ourselves in a position. It is up to us to get out of it."

for the first time on home ice thus far into the young season. Notre Dame has beaten Kent State twice but has dropped six consecutive road games. While Smith can explain his team's up-and-down play when it comes to travelling, he looks forward to being on familiar ice at the ACC tonight and tomorrow night.

"It's hard to explain our record on the road," Smith says, "but I think the home ice helps a great deal. When you're playing on the ice you're used to practicing on all week, and when you know how the puck comes off the boards - I think those things all help."

Phoenix 'off' to miserable 0-9 start
Associated Press

PHOENIX, Ariz. - They quickly are becoming a laughing stock of the National Basketball Association, but the Phoenix Suns aren't laughing about being the league's only winless team.

"We're going to get out of this mess," said Coach John MacLeod, whose club is off to the worst start of its 18-year history at 0-9.

"Once we learn a little patience and better judgment, we'll be OK. If we're going to be in a slump, I'd rather have it now and then come on strong in the end. But we have put ourselves in a position. It is up to us to get out of it."

The Suns, who last season had their first losing record in eight years at 36-46, have switched from a finesse style to a run-and-gun offense with hopes of catching the world champion Los Angeles Lakers in the Pacific Division.

Instead, Phoenix leads the league in turnovers and points allowed. "To say that we're playing poorly is an understatement," MacLeod said. "We're not playing much defense. We get ahead and then we're not able to sustain it because we start kicking the ball around or show poor judgment in our shot selection."

MacLeod said he has thought about junking the new offense and going back to calling set plays and winning.

"You have no confidence when you're 0-9," said veteran forward Al­ van Adams. "You only get tighter and more tentative. That's a natural by-product of losing. It's not easy to swallow."

All-Star forward Larry Nance, who is playing his way into shape after missing the entire preseasOn in a contract dispute, said, "We're making little mistakes and putting our heads down because we're not winning. A lot of people are feeling a lot of pressure. We want to win so bad."

They were undefeated in regular-season play.

They were not scored upon as a team.

Last night, they won it all.

The O.C. women's soccer team beat Stanford 1-0 in the interhall soccer playoffs.

Basketball teams hold scrimmage

By PHIL WOLF

Sports Writer

Notre Dame's men's and women's basketball fans will have their first chance to see the Irish in action this weekend, as both teams will hold their annual intrasquad games Sunday in the Athletic and Convocation Center.

The women's team will play at 6:30 p.m., and the men's squad will follow approximately at 7:30 p.m. Tickets, which cost $12 for adults and $6 for students, are available at the ACC Ticket Office at Gate 10. The games are sponsored by the Marathon Oil Company to benefit Logan Center and the Neighborhood Youth Help Program in South Bend.

Team photographs will be distributed free of charge, and both teams will be available for autographs. The men will sign autographs before they take the floor, and the women will be available after their game.

Tentative starting lineups for the men's game include Tim Kempton, Ken Barlow, Donald Royal, Scott Hicks and David Rivers on one team; and Gary Voice, Jim Dolan, Matt Becsuwan, Joseph Price and Michael Smith on the other.

Women's coach Mary DiStanislao said she has not decided on starting lineups for her squad's game.

"What happens in an intrasquad scrimmage like this is we'll be changing shirts a lot from blue to gold," DiStanislao said. "I'll be looking at different lineups for different situations.

The women probably will play two 10-minute halves with regular-game rules. DiStanislao said the men will play at least one half of stop time. Head Coach Digger Phillips said, with a second period of 15 minutes running time.

"(In the) second half it depends how I feel," Phillips said. "I'm flexible."

The men's team will play host to the St. Mel's Olympijs club from Yugoslavia on Nov. 20 and open its regular season at home against St. Joseph's (Ind.) on Nov. 22.

The women's team opens its season on Nov. 30 at Purdue.

Irish meet St. Thomas in crucial home series

By MARTY STRASSEN

Sports Writer

Under normal circumstances, a two-game series at home ice this early in the season would not be labelled "crucial." But for the Notre Dame hockey team tonight in the Joyce Center, the opener, the first of a weekend pair of matches against St. Thomas, marks the point in the season when the Irish are going to have to bring down the Danes to show the nation they are on the rise.

Dane head coach Leif Smith realizes the importance of these games, and his team has posted a 2-6 record in its first eight.

"Every game from here on in is a big game," says Smith, who attended and played for St. Thomas College.

"When you're 2-6, that makes it even more important to come out and confine and make a good showing this weekend."

The Irish will have their work cut out for them, however, in attempting to come out on top in a series with a pair of wins. The Tommies have made appearances in the final four of the Division II Championships in each of the past two years, and have lost only three lettersmen from last season's 25-7 team.

Notre Dame suffered 10 losses and tied two against St. Thomas last year, and Smith expects to face an equally strong team this weekend.

"They're a fine skating team. There's not much I can say about that," Smith explains. "Hockey is the king sport over there, and those people on their back and shakes their hand."

Smith realizes the importance of these games, and that makes all the difference in the game.

No matter what happens, though, no one could ever doubt that Faust has given Notre Dame head coach Pat Howling has not been a problem

Will Irish come home to find celebration?

By JEFF BLUMB

Sports Editor

Things have not been going well for the Fighting Irish these days. The team is 4-6-1 and has lost three of its last four games. However, there is some hope in sight for the Irish fans.

The team is coming off a 3-2 overtime win over the Minnesota Golden Gophers. The win was a welcome break for the Irish, who had been struggling as of late.

One positive aspect of the game was the return of senior forward Tim Kempton. Kempton had been out for several games due to injury, but returned to form a solid line with sophomore forwards Matt Bucala and Daniel Smith.

Kempton scored two goals in the game, including the game-winning goal in overtime. His performance was a relief for the Irish fans, who had been concerned about the team's offensive output.

The win against Minnesota was a big step in the right direction for the Irish. They have a tough schedule ahead, but if they can maintain this level of play, they have a chance to make a push for the NCAA tournament.

State College, Pa. - The last time Notre Dame provided three leading players from its team, the Irish fell to Princeton in 1962, you say.

Remember what happened afterward? Sure, the Irish returned home to find 9-10 of the student body on Notre Dame Avenue awaiting their arrival. What amounted to one of the biggest impromptu celebrations Notre Dame has seen in quite some time.

Will there be a similar scene tomorrow night on Notre Dame Avenue when the team arrives back sometime just after 11:00? That question can be answered only by the team itself as the Irish attempt to be giants against top-ranked Penn State.

The task will not be an easy one for Notre Dame, although a win certainly is within the realm of possibility for the red-hot Irish. The game will be an opportunity for Notre Dame to show everyone that it does belong in the Big Ten.

The Irish were tabbed as top conference opponents for a fourth time in the last four years, and they have been on the outside looking in as they missed the playoffs each of the last three years.

Last night, the Irish were able to plant themselves firmly in the Big Ten with a 3-2 overtime win over Minnesota.

The Irish dominated the game from the beginning, outskating and outmuscling the Golden Gophers. They scored two goals in the first period, thanks to goals by Tim Kempton and Joseph Price.

The second period was a more defensive struggle, with both teams trading shots and creating scoring opportunities. However, the Irish were unable to capitalize on their chances, and the game remained scoreless until the third period.

In overtime, the Irish scored a goal to win the game. Tim Kempton scored the game-winner, capping off a dominant performance by the Fighting Irish.

The win was a big boost for the team, who are now 4-6-1 on the season. They have a tough schedule ahead, but if they can continue to play at this level, they have a chance to make a push for the NCAA tournament.

Presseason expectations for the Irish men's basketball team are running high. Similarly, however, great expectations are expected from the women's basketball team this season.

In the first-ever North Star Conference preseason coaches poll, Notre Dame's men's basketball team was picked to finish third, while the women's basketball team was picked to finish second.

For both teams, the conference championship is the ultimate goal. The Irish are looking to improve upon last season's 15-9 record, while the women's team is hoping to make a run at the conference title.

The Irish men's team is led by senior guard Tim Kempton, who was named to the preseason All-Big Ten team. The women's team is led by junior forward Joseph Price, who was named to the preseason All-Big Ten team as well.

Both teams have strong rosters, and are looking to make a statement this season. The Irish men's team is led by senior guard Tim Kempton, who was named to the preseason All-Big Ten team. The women's team is led by junior forward Joseph Price, who was named to the preseason All-Big Ten team as well.

‘Freedom’ shows costly outcome of protest in Northern Ireland

Northern Ireland’s political turbulence made its appearance on stage, as the play “The Freedom of the City,” opened in Washington Hall’s Lab Theatre last night. The play, written by Brian Friel, is a reaction to the social problems of the Irish ghettos and the government’s overreaction to a crowd of protestors.

The play centers around three people who find themselves in the mayor’s parlor of Derry City’s Guildhall as they seek refuge from tear gas and rubber bullets. Upon realizing where they are, the three look about the place and indulge themselves in the mayor’s liquor cabinet.

Jack Blakey, Lauren Longua, and Michael Andrews, as, respectively, Skinner, Uly, and Michael, are excellent, as their portrayals demonstrate a subtlety, a sense of the quietly dramatic for the three main leads.

The play is performed on a stage with seating on all sides; the naturalness of this breaks through the audience’s distance, and consequently, the audience somewhat believes itself to be in the actual Guildhall; these people could be them.

A false illusion of what is going on inside the Guildhall is shared by the media and British militia; only the audience knows the truth. This mirage is masterfully conveyed through the use of a TV camera and four televisions, which intermittently chronicle an on-scene reporter’s reaction to the “takeover.” The outsiders believe a group of approximately 40 guerrillas have sieged the Guildhall but are led to believe otherwise.

‘Freedom Of The City’ provides a powerful stimulus for the mind and heart.

This is it, for one time only.

Friday is your chance to party all night long at the ACC as Non-Varsity Athletics celebrates the opening of the Rolf Aquatic Center with its extravagant “all-nighter.”

There will be sports, games, food, music and good times for everyone who participates in this event to help raise money for the St. Joseph County Special Olympics Organization. Instead of wasting away a Friday night wishing that Penn State were playing here Saturday, now you have the chance to join all your friends at the ACC and have a great time while supporting a charitable cause.

This “sports party” will include tournaments in basketball, nerf football, soccer, volleyball, tennis and raquetball, among many other team activities. In addition, the new pool will be open for inner tube water polo, water basketball and a game of Marco Polo.

For those who aren’t tournament-minded, there will also be recreational swimming, basketball, tennis, ice-skating and whiffleball. You’ll be able to play just about any sport you want, and there will also be aerobic sessions at 10:00 p.m., 12:00, 2:00 and 4:00 p.m. “(Some) students complain that they never get to use the ACC, and now we’re giving them the whole thing for 17 hours,” Assistant Director of NVA Sally Derengoski said. Students should bring their own sports gear and bathing suits. Derengoski encourages everyone to “come over and use the facilities ... use this brand new pool.”

For a break from all the physical activities, students can go to the upper concourse and view the exhibits featuring the International Special Olympics, which will be coming to South Bend in 1987; the entire Notre Dame/Saint Mary’s community will play a large role in hosting the Olympics. There will be plenty of food at the concession stands and music for everyone’s enjoyment.

Derengoski also said that the party is a great opportunity for students to get out and do something different.

And this event isn’t just for Notre Dame students, as the party is being made possible through the combined efforts of both Notre Dame and St. Joseph County Special Olympics. For information on the party, call Derengoski or Sally Henn in the NVA office.

Boredom obligatory with 'To Live and Die in L.A.'

It's been a long time since I've had such a bland picking popcorn kernels out of my teeth. What else was there to do? Watch the movie? Ten minutes into it I was lost. Maybe it's just not my kind of flick. After all, I'm the kind of girl who jumps up and cheers for touchdowns when the other team makes them. I didn't learn to tie my shoes until the fifth grade, and I didn't know how to check a book out of the library until a couple of weeks ago. (I am a senior.) No, I am not over the road, tears off down a major highway full of afternoon traffic, causes semis to jack-knife all over the place, pushes around the little tootsie that served as an informant and bed buddy to our main (dead) hero. And that is the end. Yay!

The whole thing has to do with a counter-terror money operation in L.A., which the Secret Service cannot seem to bust. From there, it's all good guys vs. bad guys. You want details? There aren't any worth repeating. It's just one chase after another. Which way to the lane one-way highway full of afternoon traffic, runs into other cars at unreal speeds, everyone whiplashes and heart-attacks (in the theater. I mean) and repeatedly gets shot at.

I'm accused of murdering my adulterous wife. The plan required someone who felt no pity, pain, or fear: someone unstoppable...

Well, the girlfriend gets his sports car in the end, while he just gets torched and shot to death while he's burning - by a cop we dismiss as a wimp all along. The cop's buddy - the hero of the movie - beats up everyone, and likes to set fire to things. His little hobby is igniting paintings in art galleries. (My dream man, personally, will take a fork to his parents and feed his dog lighter fluid.) Meanie-weenie's girlfriend is a fired, too. She even has red hair, I guess to remind him of his passion for setting fire to things.

The Terminator: Arnold Schwarzenegger star of his own piece, who currently teaches sculpture and is an instructor at the South Bend Art Center. The presentation will occur tonight from 7 to 11 p.m., 1 to 3 p.m. Monday thru Friday and to 9 p.m. on Sunday.

The Secret Service agent Richard Chance (William Peterson) arrests counterfeiter Carl Cody (John Turturro) after he hides unsuccessfully in an airport restroom.

Art

An exhibition of work by Noira Marti Geffrion will open Sunday with a reception at the Notre Dame Museum of Art. Geffrion, who currently teaches sculpture and is the acting assistant chairperson of the art, art history and design department at Notre Dame, creates organic forms derived from tree branch structures, combining sculpture, drawing and collage elements. The exhibit, which opened at 9 a.m. on Sunday, features a room installation, drawings and 17 polychrome bronze sculptures.

Music

Sunshine Promotions presents John Cougar Mellencamp at the ACC tomorrow night at 8 p.m. Tickets are $14.50.

Theater

The Notre Dame department of music will present Udo Reinemann on Sunday at 4 p.m. in the Annenberg Auditorium as part of the University Artists Series. Accompanied by pianist David Selig, Reinemann, one of the most distinguished lieder singers of his generation, will perform Franz Schubert's song cycle, "Die Winterreise." The concert is free and open to the public.

Dance

The SAB presents Dance Your Bums Off Number 1 tonight at South Dining Hall. Featuing both a DJ and the band Boston Society, three of whose members were previously employed in professional models, the evening begins at 9 p.m. Admission is $1.

Movies

The Student Activities Board hosts the movie "The Terminator," tonight and tomorrow night in the Engineering Auditorium. In The Year of Darkness, 2029, the rulers of this planet devise the ultimate plan. They would reshape the future by changing the past. The plan required someone who felt no pity, pain, or fear: someone unstoppable...

"Confidentially Yours," director Francois Truffaut's last film, will be shown at the Annenberg Auditorium tonight. In this tribute to the screwball comedies of the 1930s and the black mysteries of the 1940s, Fanny Adent stars as a secretary who sets out to clear her boss when he is accused of murdering his adulterous wife. Tickets for the 7:30 and 9:50 shows are $5.

"The 1985 100-Mile Radios Graduate and Undergraduate Student Art Exhibition" opens today in the Moran and Lisle Theater Galleries at the School of Fine Arts. The art covers from works from all media are accepted, and each artist may enter up to three pieces. The opening reception and awards presentation will occur tonight from 7 to 9 p.m. Gallery hours are 9:30 a.m. to 12 p.m., 1 to 3 p.m. Monday thru Friday and 1 to 3 p.m. Sunday.

Undistinctive Cap-N-Cork suffices as local beer joint

features writer

A couple of my friends had been after me to check out the Cap-N-Cork Lounge for a long time. They said it was a nice place to hang out and have a couple of beers.

This turned out to be true. I had a good time hanging out at the Cap-N-Cork, playing darts and quaffing a couple of beers. But I have a good time hanging out and drinking beers almost anywhere, and the Cork was not an especially fun place to be hanging.

Though it does have a few special attractions, the Cork is basically an average bar. One of the special attractions is the draft beer. Every day the Cork features 10 ounce drafts, Budweiser or Bud Lite, for 50 cents.

That's right. Every day.

At the back of the bar, there is a take-out counter selling assorted hard liquors and beer. Prices aren't too expensive for take-out, so it's worth keeping in mind if one's room or house desperately needs beer after King's Cellar Liquors closes.

The Cork also serves lunch. Since I was there during the evening I can't comment on the quality of the food, but again the prices for hamburgers, pork tenderloin and shrimp baskets were right, so it might be worth a try.

Aside from these features however, the Cork could be the corner bar anywhere in the United States. Though clean, the decor is totally without distinction. It's the usual assortment of ancient beer signs, candlelit booths with red and white checkered table cloths and electric dart games.

A large room with tables off the main barroom, presumably set up for lunches, contains the bar's artistic masterpieces: two large, tacky paintings of the Arc de Triumph and the Cathedral of Notre Dame in Paris. There is also a separate area for a pool table near the take-out counter.

The clientele seems to be a set of regular patrons. They are a fairly mellow group of people, working folks who seem to prefer a little social life to television in the evening.

A juke box provides music for the bar. It has a pretty good selection of rock and dance tunes, though there isn't any place to dance. In the same room as the tacky paintings, there is a large-screen TV, which was not in use at the time I visited the bar.

Generally, the Cap-N-Cork is not a bad place. It simply doesn't have anything about it, except cheap beer, which makes it an especially good place, either. I would recommend the Cork, at 441 E. LaSalle Ave., to off-campus students who live in the area, but for those on campus it really isn't worth a special trip down Route 31.

Notre Dame takes its shot at No. 1 for 19th time

Will Penn State become another victim of Irish?

By NICK SCHRANTZ
Sports Writer

In 1936 the first Associated Press college football poll came out, and since that time Notre Dame has played 18 top-ranked teams, acquiring a 5-12-1 record in those games. From 1964 to the present, however, the Irish have gone a very respectable 4-6 against the No. 1 team.

Tomorrow Notre Dame faces unbeaten and No. 1 ranked Penn State. Will the Nittany Lions make Notre Dame their 10th victim, or will the Irish pull off the upset and create another chapter in the book of memorable Notre Dame victories?

Irish coach Gerry Faust is 1-0 in games against top-ranked teams, the win coming by a 31-16 count at Pittsburgh in 1982. The Irish entered the game with a 5-1-1 record, but had been struggling with a recent loss and tie to Arizona and Oregon, respectively. On the other hand, Dan Marino had led Pitt to a 7-0 record and the Panthers were expected to use their explosive offense to handle defeat the Irish.

A Larry Moritarry touchdown and Mike Johnston field goal gave the Irish a 10-0 lead at the half. Pitt stormed back to take a 15-10 lead, but after that the day belonged to the Irish.

Blair Kiel hit Joe Howard for a 54-yard touchdown pass and the lead on the famous "flicker" play, while Allen Pinkett later broke three tackles on a 76-yard run to give Notre Dame an insurmountable 24-16 lead. Pinkett scored an insurance touchdown that wasn't even needed, as the Irish defense, led by Mark Zavaglini's 16 tackles, bent but refused to break.

Perhaps one of the biggest upsets in Notre Dame history, though, came in the 1978 Cotton Bowl, when the Irish thrashed the top-ranked and undefeated Texas Longhorns, 38-10. The Irish vaulted to the top of the polls because of the victory, and ended their national championship season at 11-1, the only blemish being an early loss to Mississippi.

Texas' Heisman Trophy winner Earl Campbell did gain 166 yards on the day, but he failed to score in the tough Irish defense, led by Ross Browner and Bob Golc, held him in check all day. The Irish took advantage of two second quarter turnovers to set up Terry Butrick touchdown runs, and went into the locker room at the half with a 24-10 lead. MVP Vagas Ferguson added two second half touchdowns to go with his second quarter score to ice the victory.

Every year there seems to be another "Game of the Century," but the 1978 Sugar Bowl was one that legitimately qualifies for that title. Alabama entered the game undefeated and No. 1, while the Irish also were unbeaten and not far behind in the polls. Notre Dame survived a late scare to win by a thrilling 24-23 score, and captured the national championship based on its 11-0 record.

The Irish drew first blood as quarterback Tom Clements passed his way down the field to set up a Wayne Bullock touchdown run. Alabama used the running game to score in the second quarter, but AI Hunter quickly put the Irish in front again at 14-7 with a 93-yard kickoff return on the ensuing kick.

Alabama grabbed a 17-14 lead, but the Irish quickly pulled ahead on the strength of a fumble recovery and Eric Penick 12-yard touchdown run. Alabama quarterback Rich Todd caught a pass for a 23-21 lead, but the Crimson Tide missed the crucial extra point. The excitement, already at a high pitch, rose as the Irish methodically drove 79 yards to set up a Bob Thomas 19-yard field goal for the University of Pittsburgh to attend. The Irish currently stand at 2-6 for the season, but they will be looking to raise their record tonight when they face St. Thomas (Minn.) at the ACC. Face-off is 7:30 p.m.

Hello again, everybody!

In a way, it is only fitting that tomorrow's game between Notre Dame and Penn State take place in State College, Pa. This small town located in the middle of Pennsylvania is far removed from the glamour of Philadelphia and the steel mills of Pittsburgh. It is an area filled with hard-working people, who till the land and manage to get by one day at a time. It is the perfect setting for these two teams.

This game may wind up looking more like a $1.98 beauty contest than a basic matchup. There are two teams who come from blue-collar areas of the country, and they reflect it with their respective styles. Neither team will impress you with their play, but both teams have been winning games by using solid defense and making big plays. Now it's just a question of which team can do it tomorrow.

Penn State football has always reflected the tone of the State College area. Oh, sure, when the Nittany Lions won the national championship in 1982, they had such glamour players as Todd Blackledge, Curt Warner and Kenny Jackson and an offense that could be described as electric. That was an exception to the rule, however, because this year's team is more characteristic of the school's football tradition.

The Nittany Lions are almost boring. The uniforms are straight out of a Goodwill box, and Joe Paterno looks like a displaced accountant peeking through the bottom of those two Coke bottles he calls glasses. A quarterback who has completed only 45 percent of his passes and a tailback who averages a mere 4.6 yards per game are the stars of an offense which is as flamboyant as mucro.

The defense isn't much different. J.I. Linebacker U. has produced some great ones in the past like Jack Ham and Greg Buttle - guys who had names that sounded like linebackers. Now its leading tackler is Rogers Alexander. Hardly something that strikes fear into the heart.

Still, Penn State is undefeated and No. 1 and that's all that matters.

The Nittany Lions have come from behind in six of their nine wins this season. The combined margin of victory for seven of their nine wins is 28 points. Like the area around the University, there's not much flashy about this season, but they will be looking to stretch their winning streak to seven games this weekend, and that opponent has gone on to claim the national championship.

Herschel Walker led the undefeated Georgia Bulldogs to a 17-10 victory and the national title in the 1981 Sugar Bowl. Walker gained 150 yards and scored two touchdowns, while Bulldog defensive back Scott Woerner made two interceptions and several key plays as the Georgia defense constantly stopped the mistake-prone Irish.

Many Irish fans remember the 1974 Notre Dame-USC game in which Trojan running back Anthony Davis returned the second half kickoff for a touchdown to key a Southern California come-from-behind victory. What many Irish observers don't recall so much is the 1972 game in which Davis scored two touchdowns, including two long kickoff returns, to give the Trojans a 45-23 victory. That win allowed USC to finish the season undefeated, and with their later Rose Bowl victory claim the national title.

Notre Dame, after a 45-year absence, came back to the bowl scene in the 1970 Cotton Bowl against the undefeated and top-ranked Texas Longhorns. Joe Theismann broke several offensive records in the game, but a Texas interception in the final seconds ended an Irish drive and preserved the 21-17 Longhorn lead. That lead stood as Texas took its 20th straight victory and the national title.

USC entered its game against the Irish in 1967 not having won at Notre Dame Stadium since 1939. The Trojans finally were victorious because they had a running back named O.J. Simpson, who gained 157 yards and keyed USC to a 24-7 win. Southern Cal went on to win the rest of its games and claim the national championship.

Notre Dame came into its 1965 match with Michigan State as the highest scoring team in the nation, averaging 255 yards a game on the ground. The huge Spartan line so thoroughly dominated play that the Irish had 12 yards rushing, 24 yards passing and only three first downs. MSU won 12-3 for its 10th straight victory, and then went on to win the Rose Bowl and claim the No.

Two years experience makes difference for Ballage

By JEFF BLUMB
Sports Editor

I imagine what it would be like to have 90,075 people looking, no, actually more like glaring—down upon you. You stand alone, sul.len, disappointed, your head down, while 15 years down the road you will look at a celebrat ion taken place.

You just have been burned by the opposing receiver for a touchdown.

You feel like you have let your team and coaches down.

But worse, all those eyes.

For Notre Dame strong safety Pat Ballage, that scene was an all too common one two years ago. On his way to a starting cornerback role as a sophomore, Ballage had little experience as a defensive back, playing primarily at tailback in high school.

Faced with the challenge of such a passing combination as Bernie Kosar to Eddie Brown and Todd Blackledge to Kenny Jackson, Ballage felt in press defense the hard way. And did the criticism ever flow from the Irish fans wondering why this guy that kept getting burned was.

"You're upset, you're down, but you've got to realize that everyone is going to make a mistake," Ballage said. "It's not like you've got a whole season over a tight end and lining up as a nickel back in a strong safety position."

With a faced with an abundance of good cornerbacks, the Irish coaches decided to move Ballage to strong safety last spring. The shoes he was to fill was big ones, those of the hard-hitting Joe Johnson. Still, there was really no doubt that Ballage could come through on this transition to strong safety.

"In our system the strong safety and cornerbacks are interchangeable," explains Chris toff, Ballage's defensive backfield mate.

"I hurt a little bit on that It's not like I had the ability to play defensive back as a sophomore for a major college program. Two years ago I was a good way to learn. Looking back now, I wouldn't have wanted it any other way."

Two years has made all the difference in the world for the senior on the football team from Pueblo, Colo. Now a solid figure in the Irish defensive secondary, Ballage no longer looks like the constant critic of fans.

"Pat has a great amount of confidence now, not only in terms of going one-on-one with a receiver, but also playing physical with the run."

So far this year, Ballage's been named a starter in one of the Big Eight schools like Oklahoma, Nebraska and Colorado, as well as UCLA. This makes the All-Big Eight running back an interchangeable part of the Irish defense.

"You feel confident, but that's not the kind of person I am. I would get better. A lot of people were getting burned was."

"It's not like I had the ability to play defensive back as a sophomore for a major college program. Two years ago I was a good way to learn. Looking back now, I wouldn't have wanted it any other way."

Ballage is the sixth leading tackler for Notre Dame so far this season, pulling down opponents and others, and getting into positions and feels right at home at strong safety.

"It was a good switch for me in terms of the future," Ballage says. "My position, I kind of knew I wanted to go there. I'm more comfortable back there now. I know what I expect, experience is a big key."

Experience in the defensive secondary is something Ballage had little of when he arrived at Notre Dame as a freshman. A tailback.

"You're upset, you're down, but you've got to realize that everyone is going to make a mistake." - Pat Ballage

Back in high school, where he rushed for 2,110 career yards, Ballage was recruited by Notre Dame as a defensive back.

Big Eight schools like Oklahoma, Nebraska, Colorado, as well as UCLA, all were looking to recruit Ballage as a tailback. Only Notre Dame wanted him as a defensive back, a position he has improved a great deal on his

Further, there was pressure to stay home and play college football in the Big Eight or WAC like most area players did. Ballage's brother Breyonce had even played for Colorado State, so it came time to choose a school, though, strangely enough Ballage chose Notre Dame.

"I guess I was the wild one who decided I wanted to go from Colorado State, not just to Notre Dame, I wanted to get away from home," Ballage says.

"Actually, I was kind of surprised that Notre Dame had found me in such a small area and such a great distance away."

Ballage got a chance to return to his home state earlier this season when Notre Dame played at Air Force. The visit was not quite as pleasant as he might have liked, however.

"The first question I get when I go home is usually about the Air Force game," Ballage says. "This year it was really special for me, being a senior and all. I was really hoping to beat them at least once while I was here."

That may not have happened, but Ballage has his sights set on other goals these days. "Right now, I just want to help us win our last three games," he says. "We're very motivated. Next year we've got a good opportunity to win this league, and I'll be the first to say I have plenty of other options open to me because of this place."

None of those options, however, is likely to involve 59,075 people glaring down at him.

Hunter leads Irish to Gator Bowl win

Time Capsule by Mary Burns

On Dec. 27, 1976, Head Coach Dan Devine had his Fighting Irish down "Gator" and surrounded by sexy Lions. Fortunately for Notre Dame, there was a Hunter in its midst.

Irish tailback Al Hunter, who earlier in the season had become the first Notre Dame to rush for more than 1,000 yards in a single campaign, had covered those yards and though he was the lead the 15-ranked Irish over Penn State, 29-9, in the Gator Bowl. The victory gave Notre Dame a 9-3 final record for the 76 season.

Hunter made it look routine on both touchdown scores of the first half, one of which the Nittany Lions defense had sworn not to let end. The first of these carries the Irish lead health 5-0 after tailback Len Furr had run with the kickoff following a Penn State field goal. A Furr run completed a 29-yard touchdown run completed by two lengthy pass hookups between quarterback Rick Sager to surefire.

Sandwiched around that last score by Hunter were two Dave Rreve field goals which helped to forge the 20-3 halftime margin. The second of Rreve's boots came from 25 yards out with two extra kicks left on the scoreboard clock.

Head Coach Joe Paterno's Lions may have had only three points when they took the field for the second half, but the Pennsylvania State still had something—a roster full of talented players. Quarterback Chuck Fussina, fullback Matt Syder and receiver Jimmy Cabot all would later go on to respectable professional careers in football.

Those players gave it a good shot but the Irish were simply not to be had on this warm night in Jacksonville, Fla. The defense of Notre Dame looked as though it was waging a war in the Gator Bowl, but still managed somehow to keep Penn State from victory. In fact, the only score for the only score that Penn State got was in a desperation he in front of the Irish goal for Fussina and Syder to collectively; transport in moments later.

The victory was the third straight in postseason play for the Irish. The fourth straight, of course, would be another story as the Texas Bowl, only transplanted to Texas, the following year. In that game, the Irish would clinch the National Championship.

On this night in Florida, however, no one was imagining anything about a national title. Notre Dame simply was hunting for some Nittany Lions and a Gator Bowl trophy.
By DENNIS CORRIGAN
Sports Writer

"We're fully hard. That doesn't mean we're going to go out there and kill them," Paterno said. "You can never be asking those questions. We've got to play Notre Dame."

Heading into their final two games of the season, the Lions are rolling. While they haven't exactly been demolishing their opponents, their 9-0 record speaks for itself. While many have said that Penn State hasn't played a high-caliber schedule, Irish head coach Gerry Faust believes the polls are correct in their ranking of Penn State.

"I think Penn State deserves the No. 1 ranking," Faust said. "They're right where they belong. All it takes is one point to win a football game. They've been good enough and played hard enough to win when they had to win. We're looking forward to going up to play them."

In the back of the Penn State's mind will be last season's meeting between the two teams. The Irish were in complete control throughout the game and roared to a 44-7 win.

"We're going at things 100 percent differently from last year," said Paterno, in his 26th year as Penn State head coach. "We've worked awfully hard. That doesn't mean we're going to go out there and kill them, though." For the Irish, this will be yet another shot at a top-ranked team. Notre Dame is 4-2 in its last six meetings with a No. 1 team. In addition, a win over Penn State would keep the Irish on a roll.

Notre Dame's defense vs. Penn State's defense:

When speaking of the past three meetings between Notre Dame and Penn State, the name Allen Pinkerton comes to mind. Pinkerton, who has some of his best games ever against the Notre Dame Lions in his freshman year, returned a kickoff for 95 yards and a touchdown. The following year, he rushed for 217 yards and four touchdowns, the best performance of his career to date. Last year Pinkerton again scored four touchdowns while rushing 188 yards. It's no wonder Paterno has seen enough of the sophomore back.

"I wish Allen all the best in his pro career," Paterno said. "He's had a great (college) career. He's a delightful young man. It's a lot of zip he's got, and he's a great football player. But yes, he'll be happy to see him go." Pinkerton is once again expected to be a major factor in Notre Dame's offense. So this season he has rushed for 859 yards on 195 carries, a 4.4 yard average, and has scored 10 touchdowns.

Joining Pinkerton in the backfield is fullback Frank Stams, who has run for 148 yards and three scores. The Irish backfield has plenty of relief in Huwatha Francisco (201 yards, 2 TDs) and Tom Monahan (72 yards). For the second game in a row, Gerry Faust has kept his starting backfield a mystery. Although indications are that Paterno believe it will get the nod over Terry Andrysiak. Last week Andrysiak started but rotated with Pinkerton.

"No comment," said Faust when asked about the situation. "We're going to make them prepare for both by not saying anything," Paterno, though, doesn't think it matters that much.

"I don't see any difference between the two last years except that Beuerlein has more experience (Andrysiak) may be quicker running the ball, but I haven't seen enough of him to say he'll throw better than adequately," Paterno said.

On the season, Beuerlein has completed 79-of-159 passes (49.7 percent) for 1,051 yards, three touchdowns and seven interceptions. Like Pinkerton, Beuerlein has had his best games against Penn State, going 34-44 for 524 yards in two meetings. Meanwhile, Andreyyak has completed 49-of-82 (58.6 percent) for 364 yards, three touchdowns and one interception.

Whoever wins will have an excellent corps of receivers, led by Tim Brown (10 receptions for 155 yards and three scores). Reggie Ward has caught 18 for 271 yards, while Alvin Miller has grabbed 23 passes for 330 yards.

As a unit, the Irish offense has been racking up 335 yards and 26.3 points a game.

Once again, the Penn State defense is led by a superb group of linebackers. Headed by inside linebackers Troy Bauer and Rogers Alexander (87 tackles each), the Nittany Lions are surrendering 213.5 yards per game, but only 136 points per game. The Penn State defense is a veteran one, starting seven seniors and four juniors.

Penn State's offense vs. Notre Dame's defense:

A major criticism of Penn State is that it isn't scoring many points and therefore isn't winning by enough points. Faust doesn't subscribe to this.

"I think the mark of a great football team is its ability to win the close games and come from behind when it's a tight game in the fourth quarter," said the Irish coach. "They did it last year, and you have to give them credit."

This game again features a pair of premier running backs in Pinkerton and Penn State's DJ Dozier. Dozier has rambled for 591 yards on 124 carries (4.8 average) and three scores. The junior tailback is joined in the backfield by senior fullback Steve Smith, who has carried 71 times for 386 yards and two touchdowns despite also being a receiver out of the backfield, catching 12 balls for 111 yards and one touchdown.

The quarterback for the Nittany Lions is junior John Schaffer, who played junior-varsity at Moeller High School while Faust was head coach there. Schaffer is 91-of-205 (44.8 percent) for 1,186 yards, seven touchdowns and nine interceptions.

"John's got to be a more consistent thrower," said Paterno of his quarterback. "He's not a pointsett. We've got to do it in the clutch."

Schaffer's main target this year has been sophomore split end Ray Roundtree, who has four catches totalling 248 yards and two touchdowns.

The Penn State offense has been averaging 330 yards and 22 points a contest. Watch for senior placekicker Mano Mano to be a factor if the game is close. Mano has hit on 15-of-20 field goals (4-of-4 inside the 30) and all 21 of his extra-point attempts.

The recent Irish resurgence is due in large part to their defensive efforts. Over the past four games, the Notre Dame defense has allowed its opponents 512 yards and 11 points a game.

A large part of the defensive showing in the past few weeks has been the emergence of left tackle Eric Dorsey, who Faust says is "a bona fide candidate for all-America." On the season, Dorsey has made 64 tackles, including 17 for losses totaling 63 yards. He will be joined by right tackle Jeff Kant on the defensive line.

The Irish will play the 4-3 alignment, using the two outside linebackers, Cedric Fagan (43 tackles) and Robert Banks (38), as defensive ends. Inside, the Irish are led by co-captain Tony Furjanic's 108 tackles. Joining him are co-captain Mike Larkin (25 tackles) and Mike Kovaleski (67). Free safety Steve Lawrence leads the Irish secondary with 64 tackles and two interceptions. He is joined by strong safety Pat Bialage (42 tackles, 2 interceptions) and cornerbacks Troy Wilson (42, 1) and Mike Haywood (29, 2).
