Once again, no contest for top posts in SMC 'race'

By MARGIE KERSTEN
Assistant Saint Mary's Editor

For the second year in a row, there will be only one ticket for the Saint Mary's student body elections, according to Mary Lally, the Saint Mary's election commissioners.

Lally attributed the unopposed ticket to the "lack of interest to the student body on the election procedure." The election date is scheduled for Feb. 12 from 7 a.m. until 6 p.m. in Hesburgh College Center.

"I really encourage people to vote even though the student body is unopposed, they still should vote," Lally said. "The ballots will have yes, no and abstain so everyone should be able to vote for the student body elections not to receive the majority of votes," Lally said.

There are, however, two tickets running for each of the class offices. Lally said.

SMC parietals "protect privacy"

Parietals at Saint Mary's are "a limited time where males and females can get together for an opportunity to form close, personal friendships," according to former Dean of Student Affairs, Sister Karol Jackowski.

The purpose of parietals is to protect students right to privacy and to enhance the character of the women's college, Jackowski added.

Philosophy Remains the Same

"While this philosophy has stayed the same, the parietals system has evolved through the years," she said.

Before the parietals system, or "male visitation" as it was once called, men were allowed to the dormitories of the residence halls but not permitted inside.

"It was a kiss goodnight at the door, that was all," said Thelma Heller, the night assistant in Regina Hall for the past 14 years.

"From there, they let them come as far as the lobby, then eventually into the lounges," she said.

Men were permitted to stay in the lounges until midnight, then eventually all night, but were closely watched, she said.

"Back then, freshmen had curfew, and anyone caught breaking the curfew could be expelled," meaning a student had to sign in at the front desk every hour until 2 a.m., Holmes said.

"Those seniors freshmen were expected to be at midnight on weekdays and midnight on weekends," said Holmes. This was carefully recorded in a sign-out book, which could also be cross-checked with other Saint Mary's dorms' records.

The system, of pre-checking the students names eliminated the possibility of students signing out one dorm and going to another Saint Mary's dorm, but instead leaving campus, Holmes said.

TV's coverage of tragedies limited, not sensationalized

How many times have you seen the space shuttle Challenger burst into flames? If you have tried to tune into a television, your answer will undoubtedly be "too many." Last Tuesday afternoon, each of the three T.V. networks aired four straight hours of news coverage concerning the explosion. After the first half hour, there was little actual "flame." "Shock, Trembling and rather spent four hours replaying the crash footage, talking to resident experts and waiting for the much-delayed NASA conference to begin. Hundreds of network television stations spent an entire afternoon repeating themselves and biding time. Why? Greed was not the culprit. The three networks lost a combined $9 million in airing this news broadcast without interruption. Prestige may have been a factor. It is no secret that it is a matter of pride for each network to have the most, most authoritative news department. Each network probably saw this major event as a chance to shine. The networks also saw it as their responsibility to give this tragedy maximum coverage. Most Americans were interested in this event and anxious to know exactly what happened. Many turned to television for information. On the afternoon of the crash, there was a 66 percent increase in T.V. viewing over the typical January afternoon. Because the shuttle exploded during late morning hours, many people who are at work, viewers joined the broadcast for brief periods throughout the day. With new viewers tuning in constantly, the networks felt it necessary to continually repeat the few known facts and the same take-off footage. Those who couldn't get to a television until late in the afternoon were no doubt thankful. But the four-hour unbroken repetition of the same facts was, to say the least, tedious. For the people who just tuned in, four hours of repetition was useful. For the viewer who kept his set on for four hours, hoping for new information, the situation became almost ridiculous. The shuttle explosion footage is both tragic and spectacular. But after 50 repetitions, we are no longer moved by it. Finally, a tragedy that should affect us moves us. If a story is covered extensively in a print medium, one can read as much or little about this event as one chooses. But when one sits down to watch a news broadcast, one must either watch the entire program or risk turning away and possibly missing several items. Television news also is not limited to the news programs themselves. News updates between entertainments are common to all three networks, making it all the more easy for the viewer to overdose on a hot news item. Television lacks some of the diversity of other news media. The three networks cover most national events and there is little difference in the way they report. In print media, one may choose from a spectrum of publications ranging from the highly conservative to the sensational, in television, one must either watch the sensational footage or turn off one's set. Television does not necessarily air major news stories any more than do the other news media, nor is it any more sensational. But given the almost identical coverage provided by the three networks on most major stories, television offers fewer options than do other media. The option to turn off the set, especially when coverage becomes too sensational, is always open.

ND says ‘thank you’ to 1980 grad

By CLIFF STEVENS

After years of quietly helping others, Ann Titus got a big “thank you”
from Notre Dame on Saturday.
University President Father Theodore Hesburgh presented Titus with the 1986 Dr. Thomas A. Dooley Award during the half-time of the Notre Dame-Maryquette basketball game. Titus was given the award in appreciation of her service with a Pennsylvania food bank.

The award commemorates Notre Dame alumnus Dooley’s medical work in Asia in the 1950’s.

“The award was pretty overwhelming. I feel like I haven’t done much more than anyone else. It’s something I have just always enjoyed doing,” said Titus, a 1980
Notre Dame graduate.

Titus began her work with an emergency food bank hotline and a food stamp outreach program designed to inform the needy of their eligibility for foodstamps.

From there, Titus served as warehouse manager at the fledgling Food Pantry Program which operates as a collection and distribution center for charity food agencies throughout Pennsylvania and eastern Ohio.

Titus said the program has since grown to include a 160,000 square foot warehouse and a garden program for fresh produce supply.

“I have gotten my family involved. The food bank started in my church has been taken over by my mother and my father helps deliver food.”

Titus said her plans for the future
include continued work with the Food Pantry Program (can’t help people on an ongoing basis like the government can. We’re just for emergency situations,” she said.

“Children­ don’t think you have a responsibility for each other. It’s a matter of finding where you can put your talents to best use. And I think just about anybody can find that within their own environment - in business, law,
medicine, or wherever.”

She said Notre Dame students can “find their own way” to live up to this responsibility. “Titus said, “I think we do have a responsibility
for each other.”

Reflecting on the issue of federal social spending, Titus said that such expenditures should not be abandoned despite the sys­ tem’s problems. “I don’t think you can replace government programs with charity food pantries. We (the Food Pantry Program) can’t help people on an ongoing basis like the government can. We’re just for emergency situations,” she said.

Titus said her plans for the future
include continued work with the food bank. “I’ll always back them in some position,” she said. Titus received a miniature replica of the Dooley statue which was dedicated at the Grotto on Saturday.

“Then I got out of school I could not imagine going into a traditional job,” said Titus. She said she had always been interested in service work, including undergrad participation with the World Hunger Coalition. Titus said she is happy with her choice.

“If I have enjoyed service work more than I enjoyed being a student.
I like doing both physical work and mental work,” Titus said.

Regard­ing the responsibility of Catholics in such a world, Titus said, “I think we do have a responsibility for each other.”

“I have also per­ sionally seen people picking through the Food Pantry’s garbage dumpsters, and the food that we dump is really bad.”

Regarding the responsibility of Catholics in such a world, Titus said, “We need to do what we can. It’s a matter of finding where you can put your talents to best use. And I think just about anybody can find that within their own environment - in business, law,
medicine, or wherever.”

She said Notre Dame students can “find their own way” to live up to this responsibility. Titus said,
“I think we do have a responsibility
for each other.”

Brennan said that students interested in becoming involved in the election (other than as candidates) are encouraged to contact their respective dorm judicial board commissioners or OUBD. Brennan said that the election rules will remain the same as in past years with the notable exception of the recently-ratified senate amendment which permits official or organizations to make non-monetary endorsements of candidates. Official organizations include any club/organization officially recognized by the University, student governments and the respective hall governments, and the campus media.

Brennan said he expects more campaigning than in the past if the various organizations “actually go out and support a candidate.” These endorsements are non-monetary, he added. Endorsements also may not appear in the form of any printed material except that which the candidate purchases through his campaign fund.

Endorsements will be submitted on an official endorsement form to the five-man OUBD Election Committee. The endorsement form must be available at the OUBD office.

The Senate also approved an amendment last week which raised the campaign spending limit from $95 to $125 for the offices of student body president and student body vice president.

Onobudam's role in the election is primarily as a coordinator, said Brennan. OUBD's duties include: organizing the election process, distributing and collecting petitions, supervising the voting, counting the votes, and most importantly, monitoring the candidates and enforcing election rules. Each dorm's judicial board actually conducts the voting, he said.

With regard to the problems arising in last year's elections, Brennan said, "We don't expect a repeat of last year, but if someone tries something, we will be ready to deal with it."

...gals suggested students entertain women in the hall parlors or the Student Center.

The 1967-68 directive was more blunt: "Students may have women guests in student rooms only on special occasions announced by the Dean of Students. Such special occasions occurred approximately a dozen times each year, such as football games or Midnight Mass at Prom.

The following year, students finally became tired of visiting with women in 9' by 12' halls allowed each weekend. Social visitation hours were dealt with in the hall.

The proposal granted halls, for a.m. Friday and Saturday. In March 1975, the recently-oriented halls, for

...Worse Liberal Than Others

As rector of Cavanagh Hall since 1963 and Stanford Hall in the late 1970s, Father Matthew Miceli has seen the sweeping changes that have made women a common component of the Notre Dame residence hall landscape.

"There were no gillet rooms, so it didn't make much difference that there were no Visiting hours," Miceli said.

As for mothers and sisters, "We didn't get too many visitors in those days," before the advent of more conventional and water travel.

Students weren't upset with the strict rules, he said. In fact, "We were more liberal at that time than other schools," including some state institutions. Miceli said he could not remember dealing with any violations during the years before pareitals.

But student unrest in the late 1960s caused "a lot of writing and talking about the issue," he said, and pareitals became part of the nationwide "general relaxation all over," and "a catering to students doing the unresting."

When pareitals first went into effect they didn't make much difference, since the campus had not yet become coed. "But after coedification, there was a greater need for interaction between men and women," Miceli said. Private rooms had to be used because dorms and the student center weren't set up for proper social and recreational gatherings.

Miceli said he has no problem with the current rules, and the drastic change hasn't shocked him.

But he said he thinks limited pareitals, as opposed to traditional, is a proper policy, "like wearing your pants in public. It's a decent dorm to do. It's decent and gentlemanly. Propriety demands it."

In 1972, a proposal which allowed men in student rooms was drawn up. But this idea came under fire by a group called "Concerned Alumni, Parents, and Members of the Saint Mary's family." In a letter, they expressed opposition to the proposed policy and urged others to protest the new policy.

The opinions of the Holy Cross Sisters were divided over the effect of the new policy on the character of the College, according to Sister Rosaleen Dunleavy, archivist of the Cushwa-Leighton Library.

"There were some who could see the need for them, but others were extremely opposed to the idea," Dunleavy said.

An article in the The Observer said the group's arguments were insulting to the students. "Their implication that the approval of the policy would immediately open the floodgates of carnality upon the previously pristine Saint Mary's is illiberal and naive," it said.

On March 10, 1972, the revised pareital system was fully implemented. Men were allowed in rooms on Fridays from 7 p.m. to 12 a.m., Saturday from 12 p.m. to 12 a.m. and Sundays from 12 p.m. to 10 p.m.

Men left their identification cards at the front desks of the halls, which were staffed by students during pareitals. Men also had to be escorted by a hall resident at all times.

In 1977, students were granted pareital extensions. Men were allowed in the dorms until 2 a.m. on Friday and Saturday nights. These hours were originally experimental, but eventually became permanent, and in 1982 marked the beginning of yet another trial period for the pareital system. A change made weekend hours the same, but men were allowed in the dorms from 5 p.m. to 10 p.m. Monday through Thursday.

In March 1984 the College President John Duggan approved the most recent pareital extension. The hours are now Monday through Thursday from 4 p.m. to 12 a.m., Friday from 4 p.m. to 12 a.m., Saturday 12 p.m. to 2 a.m. and Sunday 12 p.m. to 12 a.m.

These changes came after student government distributed a pareital survey to students. The results of the survey indicated student interest in a pareital extension, said Jackowski.

Students Favoried Changes

Since the last change, selected faculty, staff and administrative personnel have objected to the earlier locking of the doors, according to Jackowski.

These people had to either remove the locks or were given keys to the locked doors, according to Marne Sullivan, student body president.

Students were satisfied with the latest change in hours, and there are no plans in the immediate future for another change, according to Sullivan.
Blood! Guts! Gore! Rambo invades ND!

I saw "Rambo" Friday night. Great. Rock. Sylvester Stallone (alias great big giant pecular muscles ) drops into Vietnam by parachute. His mission to destroy the entire surface population of southeast Asia in six days.

Well, I exaggerate a little. He's actually supposed to rescue some American POW's who've been captured by the Vietnamese since the war ended. Stallone eventually accomplishes his mission all alone and without ever smiling. Along the way we get treated to such great dialogue as "So Rambo, what brings you here?" and "I'm coming to get YOU!"

I went to bed that night thinking about Rambo and wondering if the things he valued - big treats, hand grenades, beautiful women with automatic weapons - were important and relevant to me as a Notre Dame student. I fell asleep and began to dream.

Kris Murphy Dreamscript no 8,360 Subject: The movie he just saw Title: "Rambo Saves Notre Dame From Traditional Catholic Values"

It is almost dawn. Snow falls lightly as Rambo's plane approaches the South Bend area. He stands near the door of the small transport plane with his parachute on his back. He carries an AK 47 attack rifle, 25 hand grenades, two .45 caliber pistols, a bow and some arrows, a spiky gun, and enough ammunition to blow up the whole hemisphere.

He is dressed in black except for one of those obnoxious headbands.

His Mission: to rid Notre Dame of the rock n roll, drug, student, government, ethanol, proh who give quotes on Fridays, and this column.

At approximately 6:55 a.m. he jumps. The night is cold and black as he dives headfirst into destiny. Before his chute even opens, the smell of ethanol hits him in a sickening way. At 12,000 feet, it is concentrated and potent. He gags and chokes, reaching with teary eyes for his ripcord. Before his chute even opens, the smell of ethanol hits him in a sickening way. The horrible cries and explosions have awakened the sleeping campus. He steps out of the dining hall to see windows opening and students running. A small group of lightly armed but lightning-quick Notre Dame security police charges out of the Badin parking lot with pistols drawn. Rambo meets them with a thick rain of bowling lead and they fall instantly onto the cold cement.

He crouches behind a pillar as his walkie-talkie crackles to life. His superior tells him that there will be a beer drop on North Quad in approximately 15 minutes. Kegs and six packs will be dropped in by planes in an attempt to solve what they call the "alcohol problem." He has 15 minutes to complete his mission before the beer drops and his extraction. He knows it is not enough time. He decides to head for the Administration Building.

Some die-hard students burst from Alumni in a desperate attempt to get to 8 a.m. classes. This will not do. These early classes must be stopped at all costs. He moves the students down in their trucks.

He is so intent on eliminating anyone that he does not hear a

There is little opposition on the way to the Dome. The word has spread. He is looking for Notre Dame.

He runs up the front steps of the giant Ad Building, scattering and marring security guards as he advances. He fires his machine gun sporadically and without reason. Floor tiles fly up in a spray and the walls are reddened. Up the stairs he goes, his face set on a hard, methodical sour. Glass shatters. The smell of gunpowder fills the air.

Finally he reaches his objective. Father Ted's office. The man who rules du Lac. Rambo kicks in the door and utters his first words of the long, terrible morning: "Heorgh, I came for YOU!"

Father Ted sits serenely behind his desk. He is used to obnoxious students. He too utters his first words of the day: "Young man, you are obviously drunk and very disorderly. That is enough. I'm recommending suspension. The alumni will have your head when they see what you've done to the football program."

Rambo falters. For the first time ever, he is deeply afraid. There is no wrath like die hard alumni. He starts to lower his weapon but then stops it up again. He has come this far. The mission is not yet complete.

He remains motionless, eyes locked, unflinching. Destiny hangs heavy in the air. Men of steel, wills of iron. Rambo begins to squeeze the trigger. Hebsherg reaches for his pen...

I wake suddenly. I am covered in a cold sweat. My body shakes. I have seen great men do battle. I have served as a spectator. I have tasted death and I have got to stop writing this stuff.

'Star Wars' defense must be based on infallibility

Much has been and will be written about the Challenger disaster. The initial reactions of shock and sadness to consider what this says about the feasibility of a perfect technological system are mounted against the reality of perfection.

no easy solutions

The possibility of a successful missile defense system has been in question since Reagan first made his dream public with his famous Star Wars speech in March 1983. It is, fact, it was in question even before that.

According to Tina Rosenberg in this February's The Atlantic Monthly, the Reagan administration has ministered some of its own internal reports on the feasibility of the SDI, intentionally highlighting one or two paragraphs of optimism in these documents that are volumes thick, while ignoring hundreds of pages of evidence telling of nearly insurmountable challenges to the defense system. Rosenberg writes about three specific reports in which the administration twists the findings to produce optimistic outlooks. The first one, still classified and thus rumored for the public, was the original report of the White House Science Council that is thought to have given Reagan a thumbs-up on Star Wars and presentation to the public. The White House to this day will inform us that the report told of a breakthrough in astronomy that made SDI possible. But unnamed sources who are connected closely with the report say the answer to the "big question" of feasibility and worthiness of an SDI program was unmistakably "no," in capital letters, "said Rosenberg. So even before Reagan presented it to the public and research began, the information was fitted to the administration's liking.

Repeatedly cited by the administration as evidence in support of Star Wars, two more classified reports evidently remain highly skeptical. What is called the Fletcher Commission has been cited many times by Secretary of Defense Caspar Weinberger as giving "great promise of... improving strategic stability." And that a report by a panel led by defense consultant Fred Hoffman also lends enthusiastic support. Both reports were interpreted optimistically by the administration.

A member of the Fletcher Commission, Air Force Major General John Toomay, objected to the final summary of the report, claiming that the tone was "forthright." He complained that the administration refused to emphasize the long list of disadvantages of an SDI program.

The Hoffman Commission report in fact did not endorse the SDI but rather supported a limited system of ABM missiles to decrease Soviet confidence in a first strike. Science magazine quotes Hoffman himself saying that for SDI to work, "you would need everything to work. Even as a nontechnicist, it seems to me that the likelihood of this happening is small."

This mention of the necessity for perfection belongs me to my point. For SDI to work, it must work perfectly. In other words, an imperfect missile defense system is no defense system at all against an all-out nuclear strike. While the NASA space program can continue to progress after a disaster, we must question whether it makes sense to go on spending for a defense system that relies on infallibility. A missile in technology, theory, judgment or whatever caused the Challenger explosion would not just sit an error to be worked out by more Pentagon-supported scientists. Rather, it would be perhaps the last mistake of our civilization.

Reagan has a dream. He is determined to go through with SDI research no matter what evidence shows it to be a silly waste of tax dollars. Consequently, the White House will characterize any report that expresses reservations about SDI as favorable. Or the reports never will be released. Rosenberg quotes a government source familiar with one unreleased classified document, "The study didn't meet with their approval, so it was suppressed."

This questionable habit of shaping research to fit the administration's visionary defense system rather than the other way around seems a bit like denying the truth. And it also seems a likely truth that all technology is fallible. Why keep funding a defense program that relies on perfection if seven people can perish so easily when perfection falls short?

N.Y. Giants Quarterback Phil Simms threw three second-half touchdowns to lead the NFC to a 28-24 victory over the AFC in yesterday's Pro Bowl. Simms, making his first appearance as the NFL's all-star game, completed a 15-yarder to Washington's Art Monk and two-yarder to Dallas' Doug Conkle before hitting Tampa Bay's Jimmie Giles from 15 yards with 2:47 to play to rally the NFC from a 24-7 halftime deficit. Simms saw more action than expected, as starter John Blandford got the worst of a bruised knee sustained in last Sunday's Super Bowl - The Observer

Do not be fooled by the 11-9 record the University of Maryland basketball team. The Terrapins are a poorly-remembered dangerous team that could present more than a few problems for Notre Dame tonight at 7:30 at the ACC. Of the nine Maryland losses, six have come in the exceedingly competitive Atlantic Coast Conference, including a one-point loss to highly-rated Georgia Tech. Irish head coach Digger Phelps is well aware of the capabilities of the Terrapins.

"They are a very talented basketball team. Their record in their conference is very deceiving. The fact that they are 1-6 in their conference doesn't mean a thing. They are a team that can explode," says Phelps.

Maryland, coached by Lefty Driesell, will be looking to rebound after losing Saturday, 64-62, to last year's ACC champions, Virginia. A victory against Notre Dame in the ACC, where they have not won in their last four visits, could turn their season around in a hurry. The Terrapins' main weapon is senior Len Bias. The 6-8 forward is considered by many to be one of the best players in the country. The talented senior is averaging 22.9 points a game while pulling down 7.7 rebounds a contest. "I predict that that Bias will go in the first three picks in the first round," Phelps says of Bias. "That's why we are playing against him. He's a man playing in a boy's game."

"He's just a great player. He does so many good things with the ball, and he's so strong physically: You are seeing one of the premiere draft picks come in here on Monday night."

Guard Keith Gatlin is the quarterback of the Terrapins. The 6-5 junior has 10 assists for the season, while scoring 9.1 ppg. At the other guard spot is senior Jeff Baxter, who averages 9.2 ppg.

Completing the front line for Maryland are sophomore center Derrick Lewis and senior forward Tom Jones. The 6-7 Lewis (8.1 ppg.), that he is not the fastest of players, he says the change in tempo is working.

"It was no big adjustment," commented Dolan. "Now the big men get the rebounds and start the break. Then we're trailing for the rebound hawks."

Dolan was an Irish starter since last year, and Dolan and his teammates had to switch from the slower half-court game to the quicker transition attack. While Dolan freely admits that he is not the fastest of players, he says the change in tempo is working.

The Irish, on the other hand are looking to rebound against the bigger and stronger front line of Notre Dame.

Maryland forward Len Bias will lead the attack tonight. The Terrapins meet the Irish tonight at the ACC at 7:30. Bias is averaging 22.9 points a game and is considered to be a top NBA prospect. John Cloyce preview the game in his story at left.

of a one-and-one with 1.07 left, but Hicks came up to knock the ball out of Tom Goff's hands and maintain possession for Notre Dame. Rivers then hit one of two free throws after a foul by Cop to put the Irish up 73-68.

The Irish had come downcourt on a chance to tie, but Pop Simms missed a 12-footer and Fazil Kempton. The 6-9 redhead then canained a pair of free throws with six seconds left to put the game ice.

"I thought we got a good shot from Simms at the end, although I think Walker (Downing) was open on the left," said dejected Warrior head coach Rick Majerus afterwards. "I guess we would have liked to have seen Walker take the shot, but by that point in the game we had a forward playing at guard and a guy who had to guard the big man. We did the best we could."

Majerus' personnel problems occurred because Troster, Boone and Copes all fouled out in overtime. Majerus did Barlow for the Irish.

ITEMS - Notre Dame was outscored by eight field goals but hit on 28-of-33 shots from the charity stripe to come out on top. The Irish are connecting from the line at a 74.6 clip, with Barlow leading the way with a 90.5 percent (46-of-51). Barlow hit 9-of-10 from the line Saturday.

Dolan's previous best was a 20-point game against Maryland in his freshman season. "Organizers of the 1986 U.S. Olympic Festival announced late last week that Phelps, along with South Carolina's Bill Foster, Boston College's Gary Williams, and BYU's LaVell Anderson will coach one of the four teams at the festival in Houston July 25-Aug. 5.

The Irish were not only sharp defensively but also aggressive in their attacks, keeping every opponent on their toes throughout the match. The Irish's strong showing in both the foil and epee events earned them a well-deserved victory.

The Notre Dame men's track team got fine performances from both its veteran members and some seasonally experienced. At the ACC indoor track championships, the Irish scored 221 points to outdistance second-place Oral Roberts 195.

Once again, the Irish middle-distance crew provided the base of the victory. Junior Robert Nolden set a meet record while qualifying for the NCAA meet in the mile run with a time of 3:59.62. Both John McNeila and Mike VanderVelden also took the epee and the sabre competitions, giving the Irish a 7-2 domination in the foil.

The two teams exchanged bouts early, as neither team commanded the victory. Notre Dame's Charles Chauvel, foil champions of the last meet, said Kovacs pulled off a 5-4 margin. "That was definitely a key bout in our match," said DeCicco. "It gave us the upper hand in the overall team score." Although a late turnover by Michigan's Brian Van Wie in the 1000-yard run, also with a meet record and IC-AA qualifying time of 2:12.60, "Relative to the small size of our indoor facility, those were very good times," said Notre Dame head coach Joe Plante. "(Junior) Jem Tyler, (senior) John McNeil, Van Wie, and Nobles all have good chances of qualifying for the NCAA meet individually or as a two-mile relay. Their relay is off the NCAA mark by only one-tenth of a second." The football team has contributed four members to the Irish sprinting corps in the likes of sophomores Tim Brown and Brandy Wells, junior Alvin Miller and senior Milh Jackson. "They all have had extensive high school track experience and just enjoy track as a way of attaining that extra edge," said Plante.

Brown, who is a tenth of a second away from qualifying for the NCAA meet, also took the 800-meter run in the 60-yard dash with last week's 6.52 performance, won that event in 3:56.82. Wells finished second, qualifying for the IC-AAC's with a 6.44 effort. Senior Phil Chilcom placed third in 6:57.85 while returning from injury.

Miller cruised to victory in the 300-yard run with a time of 3:27.23. The Irish mile relay of freshmen James McGuire, Brown, Miller, and Jackson beat Loyola by four seconds to win in 3:28.85. "(Senior) Brian Fyrefly had an extremely fine race in the 600-yard hurdles, winning in 7:37.82," said Plante. "That was the first time that he broke 8:00 flat, and he did it twice." Pacey won the 800-meter run in 5:04, while McGuire finished fourth with a time of 5:14.91. Notre Dame also won the triple jump. "The match of the day between Irish and the Spartans was the 1500-yard run, also with a meet record and IC-AAC qualifying time," said DeCicco. "Kovacs pulled off a 5-4 margins.

EVANSTON, Ill. — The Notre Dame women's basketball team won its 16th consecutive North Star Conference game yesterday by scoring a convincing 76-55 win over Evansville. The Irish pushed Notre Dame's record to 12-5, 6-0 in conference play.

The Irish led 37-23 at the half and went on an 11-2 spurt in the opening minutes of the second half to take a 25-point lead, 48-23. Senior guard Lynn Eibes scored seven of those points, and sophomore center Sandy Botham added the other four points.

The Lady Aces came run midway through the second half to cut the Irish lead to 12 points at 54-42, but were not able to get any closer.

Evansville hit 19 shots from the field and connected on just six attempts from the foul line to account for its points. Evansville had just 17 field goals, but converted 21 free throws.

The Irish had four players in double figures. Senior forward Trena Keys led the way with 18 points, while Eibes added 17. Both 10 and freshman forward Heidi Runke 12. Sophomore guard Mary Gantch chipped in with eight points. In the second half, Eibes scored 11 of her 17 points, Botham netted 12 of her 16, and Runke eight of her 12. Keys paced the attack in the first half by scoring 14 of her 18 points.

"Our defensive intensity was the key to the game," said Notre Dame head coach Mary DiStanislao. "We also got excellent inside play from Sandy and Heidi. Lynn Eibes had a good game from the outside.

"Evansville is a scrappy team, but we showed a lot of poise by playing well in their home gym.

Evansville (4-1, 1-3) was led in the scoring department by sophomore center Karla Hughes with 13 points and junior forward Tammy Simmons with 11 points. The Irish take on Dayton at the ACC Wednesday night at 7:30, and Keys will have a chance to become Notre Dame's all-time leading scorer.

The Irish were not only sharp defensively but also aggressive in their attacks, keeping every opponent on their toes throughout the match. The Irish's strong showing in both the foil and epee events earned them a well-deserved victory.

Irish down Warriors in heart-stopper, 74-72

The Irish still had plenty of time to tie the game, but disaster struck when Rivers' pass for Barlow in the left corner wound up in the hands of Marquette's David Boone. Barlow quickly foiled Boone to set up a one-on-one situation and with only 1:19 left in the second half, the Warriors needed one free throw to take the lead. But they couldn't get it. Boone's first attempt rolled off the rim and into the hands of Donald Royal, who quickly got the ball to Rivers. It was as if for us to take it as possible, and to shoot if I could," Rivers explained. "But I got the ball and what I thought I should pass it to. I passed it to Sean Connor in the right corner.

Connor's baseline shot missed, as did Barlow's follow from close range. But with one tick left on the clock Dolan grabbed the ball and knocked it through.

"Sean took the shot from the corner," explained Dolan, "so the plan was for me to take it as open as possible. I didn't pass it to Sean Connor in the right corner.
