Volunteering to help others: a calm in the eye of the storm

The Career and Placement Office everyday is a Grand Central Station of future-hunting sessions, ranging from the confidant to the frantic. At the Freshman Year of Studies Office, only its inhabitants' slightly younger faces differentiate it from the senior's stamping ground. In the library, the middle classes are swarming and sweating under pile of textbooks and term papers.

As students spin around and around, bouncing from class to interview to lab to dorm to dining hall to library, the Administration Building swells with talk of colonial fundraisers, student body diversity, and the constant tug-of-war between teaching and research. Money needs to be generated for new classroom facilities and an automated library and dormitories and...

This tornado of growth and progress touches down a few times and wreaks havoc with such ideals as the University's mission and its Catholic identity.

One afternoon last September I needed to find respite from this funnel of academia. I was searching for an idea to fill this space and I ended up near the library reflecting pool. I looked for inspiration in the trees, in the cracks of the sidewalk, even at the bottom of the pool where there was nothing but slush caked to dirt.

Several ideas passed through my head, but none stayed around long enough for me to grab onto it. When I had just about given up on finding an idea in this sector of campus I noticed a young man, another student, walking in my direction from the Union Circle. He had with him a small child, about four or five years old.

The boy's age and the Notre Dame student obviously was trying to teach him English. The boy stood on the steps of the library, directly under the mosaic.

"Top, that is the top," the young man said squatting down to the boy's level and pointing to Jesus on the library wall.

"Top," the boy repeated.

"You are at the bottom," the young man patted the ground as he spoke. "Do you want to go to the top?"

"Top," the boy said again.

The couple then straightened up and walked out of my line of sight into the library. The boy tried to put his arm around the student, but he could only hold onto his leg. All the while he was looking to the top.

It struck me then how ironic this situation was. Inside this looming structure, both a working tool and a reflecting pool, I looked for help in finding respite. A healing was taking shape. Whether the students finally have grasped a message that they've got to be a part of the community that it's only temporary, he continued.

"They've (the students) gotten the message that you've got to be a part of the community that it's only temporary," he continued.

Whether the students finally have grasped a message of responsibility, or simply grown to realize an uncomplicated sense of priority is an issue that can be debated. But the fact remains that students are caring.

Later that afternoon I saw the student and the boy leaving the library. The former probably had taken his small friend to the 13th floor so that he could show him the whole campus, this institution of higher education. The college student may have been carrying the boy's shoulders, but it was the latter who was saving his teacher from the tornado.

New social group seeks active role

By MARK MELLETT

In the spirit of “We are the World,” the Overseas Development Network, Inc. seeks students who want to play a direct role in global development issues. ODN, Notre Dame’s newest social concern group, was started by senior Paul Astello and junior Sophia Twarog, with the help of Ken Jamieson, professor of economics. The club is in conjunction with the original ODN, which was established in Massachusetts in 1965.

With the Catholic tradition of Notre Dame, ODN hopes to tap the resource of human capital. Twarog said she is seeking to bring those who genuinely care for the welfare of others into the organization.

“As a Catholic university, we should be called to more than academics,” says Twarog. “It’s a good outlet for the need that students have to be a part of social development and welfare.”

Twarog said a unique aspect of ODN is that they actually take part in the financial development of a region in a Third World nation. Through activities such as films, lectures and dances, Twarog said she hopes to raise enough money to fund a small-scale development project in an underdeveloped area of Latin America, Africa or Asia.

Grassroots projects already established by the ODN of Massachusetts include tricycle making and tree planting projects in South America and Africa.

Within the activities, the student will be oriented to the culture of the region he or she deals with, Twarog said. “A key part of ODN is education,” she said. Twarog plans to bring advocates of social development to Notre Dame to lecture and wants to present workshops headed by Notre Dame professors.

Twarog said ODN considers itself a liaison to an awareness of what is available in organizational work for students. Presently, 1,500 development organizations are offered. ODN can “open the door for students in the long term with internships and job training,” Twarog said.

ODN also hopes to strengthen the quality and organizational effectiveness of campus organizations, she said. By working with RASTA, World Hunger Coalition and SOGA, the new group wants to unify the potential of the campus.

“We have a lot of ideas,” Twarog said. “Frankly, I feel we have the potential to follow through on it.”

The group’s first meeting will be tonight at 7 in the Center for Social Concerns.

Comedian activist comes to ND

By PRATIBHA TRIPATHI

Using humor in the crusade for a better world, Dick Gregory will speak to the Notre Dame campus as part of black awareness month at the Library Auditorium at 7 p.m.

Although not as well-known to students as other campus speakers, Gregory is an influential human rights activist. He is also an author, lecturer, philosopher, political analyst and expert on nutrition and diet control.

His lack of popularity is one of the reasons Esther Ivory, chairwoman of ODN, felt Gregory was a good choice for the group’s first speaker.

“With the Catholic tradition of Notre Dame, I feel we have the potential to take this one step further,” said Ivory. “The purpose is to bring people, in particular blacks, who would not ordinarily be invited.”

Gregory began his career as the first black comic to work in first-line white night clubs. From a comedian to a human rights activist, he bridged the gap between the black and the white by promoting unity and understanding.

As the ‘60’s progressed, Gregory joined the budding civil rights movement. Inspired by Gandhi, Gregory began experimenting with prolonged fasting in protest of the Vietnam War.

He has fasted over 100 times, at up to 167 days, to draw attention to important issues such as the plight of blacks, acid rain, and the ERA.

Gregory transformed his body to its peak physical condition in wartime to bring change to his society. Gregory is a trim, athletic 6-foot, 170-pound black who is a two-time Olympic boxer. He has written a number of books and reference books. His Freedom Sandwich Cookbook has been published.

Gregory’s career is one of his eight degrees and he is also a psychologist.

Manila vote counters walk away, claim Marcos falsified returns

Associated Press

MANILA, Philippines - Third computer operators marched out of the government's election commission yesterday, claiming the balloting that showed President Ferdinand Marcos defeating Corazon Aquino was falsified. An international observer group, meanwhile, accused Marcos of tampering with election returns in Friday's special presidential election.

The computer operators went on strike after paralleling a single file out of the Marcos-appointed commission's counting center.

"There was something wrong," a woman operator explained. "What's posted on the tabulation board does not tally with the computer board, and we don't know who is doing it. We can't take it any more.

The woman, who refused to give her name, told The Associated Press that workers spotted the problem Saturday night, when Aquino was leading in the commission's count by 100,000 votes. By midday yesterday, Marcos had taken over the lead.

Marcos has taken over the lead by this morning, with 28 percent of the precincts reporting, the commission's unofficial tally gave Marcos 5,956,235 votes to Aquino's 2,903,548, a split of 51.28 percent to 48.72 percent.

But an independent count by the National Movement for Free Elections, a citizens' ballot-monitoring group known as Namfrel, had Aquino in the lead by 5,570,319 votes to 4,806,166 for Marcos, or 53.7 percent to 46.3 percent.

The Namfrel tally represented 49.14 percent of the Philippines' 86,056 precincts. Final election results from this nation of 7,100 islands are not expected for days.

After the workers -- 27 women and three men -- marched out, tabulation was suspended. The total number of workers tabulating was not known but there were about 300 workers at 300 computers.

Vicente Saveliano, chairman of the nine-man Commission on Elections which operates the tally center, denounced the workers' charges as "a political attempt to sabotage our efforts." He said the commission's count is based on authenticated tally sheets which "are beyond doubt" and which anyone could see.

Marcos, who initially predicted an 80 percent landslide, was hard-pressed throughout his first seriously contested campaign since 1966 when he won re-election by defeating former Sen. Sergio Osmena.

In 1972, Marcos imposed martial law, which lasted until 1981. He then won another election, but no major opposition parties fielded a candidate. Marcos has held power for 20 years.

Marcos' latest six-year term was supposed to expire in 1987, but he called the special election to show domestic and foreign critics, particularly in the United States, that he still enjoyed overwhelming support in the Philippines.

Certification of the election result is up to the National Assembly, which was scheduled to begin its own separate survey today.

Citing the difference between the two counts, Political Affairs Minister Leonardo Perez said he would seek the assembly's approval to terminate all other vote-counting im-

In order to fund those priorities, O'Meara said, a campaign bigger than all previous fund-raisers was necessary. Although the concept of "Notre Dame: A Strategic Moment" is similar to past campaigns, its goal is much more ambitious because "we're a larger University and our needs need to have increased," he said.

"We see there's much more to be done," O'Meara said. "We believe that our benefactors also see that and they're willing to give." According to Sexton, the main thrust of the campaign is to build up the University's endowment, which now stands at approximately $510 million.

Sexton, who declined to comment about the campaign but instead referred all questions to Sexton, said during his October address that the University hopes the campaign will bring the endowment "up to over a half a billion dollars."

This, he said, "plus faith, is the guarantee of continued progress and avoiding the growing dilemma of either hopelessly high fees or curtailing our steady upward movement."

According to Sexton, most of the funds collected will go to financial aid for students. Approximately 20 percent of the funds will be used for undergraduate financial aid, and approximately 12 percent for graduate financial aid, he said.

Endowed chairs, which establish professorships to attract top scholars to the University, will receive the next largest portion of the funds, he said. The next biggest share will be used for research support and equipment, he said.

Money from the campaign will also finance the renovation of the Administration Building and construction of the new classroom, Sexton said. Funds will also go to the Center for Social Concerns, he said.

According to Sandman, campaign money already has funded the addition to the law school, and will eventually fund the construction of women's dorms. Campaign contributions also will enable the Memorial Library and Snite Museum to add to their collections, he said.

In addition, campaign money will be given to various institutes at the University, such as the Institute for Pastoral and Social Ministry. In order to fund these projects and institutions, administrators are soliciting funds from all Notre Dame constituencies, said Conklin. These include alumni, parents, board of trustees' members, corporations and foundations, as well as the Ford Foundation, he said.

Most of the contributions given so far have been toward scholarships and endowments, Conklin said.

Included among these is one of the largest personal gifts ever received by the University - $6 million from Joan Kroc, widow of the founder of McDonald's, to establish an Institute for Peace Studies.

After the amount of these contributions are made public during the official announcement, the campaign's national phase will begin, Sexton said.

The national phase will encompass 190 cities by 1989, with special events such as dinners being held for potential contributors in those areas, he said.

Those contacted during this period will primarily be alumni, he said.

Conklin indicated that the campaign's goal is to also be asked to contribute, he added.

Although this campaign is the most ambitious, it is certainly not new to the University.
OC students play a game of cat and mouse (and bird and dog...)

Someone said that a dog is man's best friend. Well, there are some off-campus students who would like to add mice, fish, cats and other assorted animals to that list.

Many off-campus students have discovered some of the joys and pitfalls involved in owning a pet. Junior Mike Frey says his mouse, Knute is "a good friend. I can talk to him and he can't talk back." Frey and his roommates also have three fishes: Darby O'Gill, Snooper and Goldie.

The advantages of having pets far outweigh the disadvantages, according to most pet owners.

"They aren't that hard to take care of," senior Kevin Hamer said of Knute and the fish. "It is a pain to clean the tank, but I imagine a dog would be harder to take care of." "I am glad we have a pet," said junior Ralph Mastrangelo, who has a cat, Gumby, and a kitten, Latoni's. "They are never alone with a pet around. Heck, she even moonwalks!" Mastrangelo's roommate, junior Otto Boersma, said the cats were the best pets he has ever had. Maintenance does not seem to pose an obstacle, according to Mastrangelo. "There are no problems in taking care of a cat. You have a litter box and that is it," he explained.

When long breaks in school come around, most students either have friends come in to feed their pets or they take their animals home with them. There is never any question in the Frey and Hamer household as to where Knute will be spending his vacations. Proud owner Frey said, "My mouse comes home with me."

Once a student gets a pet he likes, there are almost no problems, but finding the right pet is sometimes more difficult than one would think. Mastrangelo and his roommates had always wanted to get a dog when they moved off-campus, so they did. But they could not keep him.

"We had a serious flea problem for the first three months of last semester," Mastrangelo explained. "You could not sit on the couch. I had fleas in my bed and everywhere."

Good pets not only provide a hassle-free friendship to their owners, they are also "kind of a conversation piece," as Hamer put it. When he and his roommates have parties, the mouse is put away ("reserved for special occasions"), and everyone takes time to tap on the fish aquarium.

Senior (co Latoni), who refers to his pet as Thomas the Mouse, said there was another advantage in having a pet. "I think it is a good way to keep people out of the house when you are gone all day or at the library at night. If you do have a pet in the house, people think twice about going in," he explained.

Mastrangelo echoed Latoni's sentiments. "Most people who live in houses, especially if they are around bars, do get pets," he explained. "Everyone that can have a pet, should," Hamer said. "And those that can't, should make friends with someone who has one."

"Share the fun of a pet!" he cheered.

Winter just isn't the same without snow shoveling

Dave Dvorak
Out of the lunchbox

WE always hear of American workers losing their jobs and being replaced by machines. It's pretty unfortunate, but the reasons are simple.

Machines are more efficient than humans. Machines don't take coffee breaks or demand weekly psychchecks. Machines don't go on strike.

Yet, as logical as this seems, we know deep down that there is something unnatural about mechanical monsters crankng out products that human hands were meant to fashion.

Face it, the machine-knit sweater you bought at The Gap doesn't mean nearly as much to you as the one Grandma knits you for Christmas.

The pervasiveness of all this becomes especially unsettling when we consider that even the great American Institution of snow shoveling is in serious danger of extinction. The culprit? The gas-powered snowblower, of course.

Anyone who spent his childhood in a cold winter climate knows that snowshoveling sidewalks on cold winter afternoons was an important part of growing up. It built character. It built discipline. It built shoulder muscles.

It was also an important source of employment. On snowy afternoons, my friends and I used to run home from school, grab shovels and hit the streets. Together, we'd walk from house to house, ringing doorsbells and offering to sell our services.

Rarely could a housewife or a little old lady say no to a few bright-eyed kids with red cheeks and runaway noses. They would usually pay in time, or at least something. "You know, I was just thinking about how badly my walk needed to be shoveled."

Once we got the job, my friends and I persisted until it was finished. We'd barely be able to lift the shovels as we heaved the snow aside. But we always did a thorough job, making sure the sidewalk was clean right down to the cement.

We usually earned a buck or two each sidewalk we shoveled. It was tax-free income that could later be invested in candy, Christmas presents or a new baseball glove.

But I feel sorry for kids growing up in my neighborhood today. None of the neighbors on the block need their sidewalks shoveled anymore. After all, Mr. Thubert, a guy down the street, bought a Toro snowblower last year.

Mr. Thubert is a skinny, wimpy guy. His wife, who's twice as big as he, is always boosting him around. When his kids play cowboys and Indians, they like to tie him up and shoot rubber-tipped arrows at him.

But after every snowfall, Mr. Thubert rolls that fearsome red machine out of the garage. With one quick pull of the cord, the thing roars to life, shattering the sacred silence of the winter landscape.

Mr. Thubert himself undergoes a frightening change of character. A maniacal gleam appears in his eyes and a sinister smile spreads across his face. His wimpiness suddenly gives way to a confident machismo. Newly-realized power rests in the grips of his hands.

With a simple squeeze of the power-drive lever, Thubert and his snowblower take off down the block. The red monster lunger ahead, gobbling up snow and anything else in its path, throwing everything formato'side the air.

The hearts of all persons nearby are swept by terror as the man and his machine approach. Mothers grab their children and run indoors, other kids dive frantically into snowbanks to get out of the way.

When Thubert is finally finished, he has cleared all the sidewalks on the entire block. It's not an act of charity, though; it's a power trip.

He shuts off the snowblower, and by the time the deafening roar has ceased, Mr. Thubert has returned to his normal wimpy self. With a smile, he leaves the machine in his garage. His wife opens the door and yells at him to set the table for dinner. Like a beaten dog, he hangs his head and follows her into the house.

Meanwhile, all the kids in my neighborhood are out of jobs. I often wonder what they do with themselves all afternoon. I'm worried that they might end up like the kids from somewhere like southern California, where snow-shoveling never has and never will exist.

 Mention snow shovels to California kids and they'll think you're talking about a new wave band. Since they don't know how to shovel snow, they waste their childhoods flinging Frisbees, riding skateboards and playing Hacker Sack. As they grow up, their priorities come to include activities like surfing and getting their hair permed.

That's no way for a kid in my neighborhood to grow up. Give him a snow shovel and put him to work.

Coed dorms would trade old problems for new

We must be aware of our top officials' proposals

if Attorney General Edwin Meese has his way, the philosophy on which our entire criminal justice system is based could be thrown right out the proverbial window. In an interview published in U.S. News and World Report, Meese was asked about his criticism of the Miranda ruling, which gives suspects the right to counsel by an attorney before police questioning. Meese was asked, "Shouldn't people whose ways may be innocent have such protection?"

Meese replied, "Suspects who are innocent of a crime should. But the thing is, you don't have many suspects who are innocent of a crime. That's contradictory. If a person is innocent of a crime, then he is innocent," Meese stated. "If it were only true. How many innocent people have gone on trial for a crime they did not commit? Yes, they were likely and, hopefully, acquitted, but they had to be suspect to be charged. Desire for law and order is something which most of us possess. Yet it becomes frightening when our nation's highest law enforcement officer suddenly wants to change our principle of "innocent until proven guilty" to "guilty until proven innocent."

Of course, it is easy for us to go along with Meese's thinking. One could assume that most of us are not guilty of anything worse than a traffic violation. Most people do not commit serious crimes, so they do not concern themselves with the rights of those who might be so accused. But put yourself in the shoes of someone who is accused of committing a crime. You may be innocent - only you yourself truly know - but if you are, what do you think might happen to you if you were questioned by police without the counsel of an attorney? Our criminal justice system is a complicated place. An innocent person trying to muddle through it without the assistance of a trained specialist would be like a philosopher trying to decipher a complex electrical schematic drawing.

One of the basic tenets of our justice system is that the worst thing which could happen would be an innocent man going to jail. It is better for a guilty man to go free than for an innocent man to be imprisoned. And without the assistance of legal counsel, many innocent people might go to jail. Fortunately, it is most likely that Meese never will get his wish regarding the Miranda ruling. But I bring this up to you for this reason: We need to be constantly aware of what our leaders and policy makers are thinking. We need to question their actions so we are assured they are doing the right thing. You don't have to immediately write the attorney general and tell him your opinion, but just be aware of what's going on. A wolf will have a better chance at catching a sleeping sheep than one who is wide awake.

William Wilson is a sophomore government and international policy and, until recently, permissive in alcohol use policy when compared to the majority of college campuses. Consequently, we experienced a developing loss of boundaries in alcohol use, while at the same time we wrestled with male/female issues which long ago disappeared from many campuses. Should more changes be made in either area, a new set of community and individual problems would surface. If changes are to be made, it would be my view to look to psychological, political or theoretical bases for such changes. From a psychological perspective, if changes were made, we would be trading off a set of problems, which are associated with a most complicated development stage, for another set of problems.

I would like to thank the editorial staff for the invitation to comment on this discussion.

James Roach’s victims were forgotten in letter

Dear Editor:

As a lawyer, a member of the law enforcement community and a frequent visitor to the University of Notre Dame, I feel compelled to respond to Ms. Kinta Haller’s letter attacking Corazon Aquino. It is obvious that Aquino made a move to reestablish her image after the death of her husband, President Ferdinand Marcos, which she lost in a 1986 election. Aquino had been the opposition candidate in the Philippines and had been courted by the military in an attempt to get rid of Marcos. She was widely regarded as a viable election choice and to advocate a military coup and say it is in “the best interest of the people.”

I do not believe that Aquino knows how unpopular the military is, and should they do anything as foolish as to attempt a coup the results would be tragic. Violence would surely erupt, especially between the army and the NPP (Non-Partisan People’s Party), which would disintegrate New Philippines Army. Moreover, President Marcos holds the reins of the military through his good friend General Fabian Ver, chief of staff of the Armed Forces. It would be quite impossible to plan a coup within a country without news of it leaking to the president and his putting an end to it.

Moreover, the country’s economy is deteriorating. The Philippines has a huge foreign debt and many businesses are closing. The Philippines has a huge foreign debt and many businesses are closing. The Philippines has a huge foreign debt and many businesses are closing. The Philippines has a huge foreign debt and many businesses are closing. The Philippines has a huge foreign debt and many businesses are closing. The Philippines has a huge foreign debt and many businesses are closing. The Philippines has a huge foreign debt and many businesses are closing. The Philippines has a huge foreign debt and many businesses are closing.

The opposition has not been sensibly businessmen choose to invest in an economy that was unstable and run by a thuggish military. There is an unfortunate truth is that both Roach and Joseph Carl Shaw, his partner, received the punishment which flow from their actions and aren’t admissible. To forget the innocent victims, Corazon Aquino that the opposition was forgotten. Truly, victims of crime have, in the words of the Supreme Court, been forgotten, unwanted and unrecognized.

It is important for us to remember the facts surrounding this crime.

The following facts were taken from edited excerpts of the South Carolina Supreme Court:

Shaw, Roach and Ronald Eugene Mahaffey spent the morning of Saturday, Oct. 29, 1977, “shooting up” with drugs and drinking beer. At approximately 11 that afternoon the three decided, in Mahaffey’s words, “to see if we could find out how to get to rape.”

Shaw, Roach and Mahaffey drove to Polo Park, a baseball park, located off Apline Road northeast of Columbia. There they saw a parked late model car occupied by Taylor, 17, and Hartness, 14.

Shaw, who was driving, pulled up beside the parked car in such a way that Roach, who was in the front passenger seat, was directly in the path of the car. Mahaffey was in the back seat.

As a prearranged signal from Shaw, Roach leveled a .22 caliber rifle through the car window at Taylor and demanded money. Taylor gave the three his wallet.

Shaw and Mahaffey got out of their car and Mahaffey took the keys out of Taylor’s car. Shaw ordered Hartness out of Taylor’s car and forced her into the back seat of his car with Mahaffey. Shaw got back into his car, turned to Roach and said, “ok, now.” Roach then shot and killed Taylor who was still sitting in his car.

Harness was carrying a .22 caliber rifle. After her killing, Shaw was wrong. His latest pathetic effort, concerning CBS, was equally inept.

I believe that his accusations of CBS being sympathetic toward Cuba are not entirely correct. I would like to know why he bases the aim of a network on the actions of a lone employee, Robert Taber.

His conclusion that the CBS network “would not stoop to insult Castro” does not take into account all of the other important factors concerning the poll of Grenada residents and their subsequent airing, of lack thereof, I must agree with Coglianese that the coverage of the children at McAuliffe’s school was tasteless, but so were the repeated broadcasts of the shuttle explosion and the reaction of the McAuliffe family at Cape Canaveral by the other networks. I fail to see how being an altar boy is the first step to the priesthood. Silly, chelsee me.

I also find it hard to believe that Ted Turner wanted to buy CBS to transform the network. Perhaps money and prestige were more likely motivators. I would just love to see Jesse Helms buy CBS. Why, we would be able to hear the Moral Majority on network TV. Such joy!}

Accusation against CBS was not completely true

Dear Editor:

I was appalled Thursday to find another article by Rich Coglianese in The Observer. After being so ridiculed for his idiotic article on the restoration of the Latin Mass, I felt that Coglianese would learn to enter the realm of reality. Unfortunately, I was wrong. His latest pathetic effort, concerning CBS, was equally inept.

I believe that his accusations of CBS being sympathetic toward Cuba are not entirely correct. I would like to know why he bases the aim of a network on the actions of a lone employee, Robert Taber.

DURHAM, N.C. - Mark Alarie scored 24 points and Johnny Dawkins added 22 as fourth-ranked Duke broke open a tight game early in the second half and beat second-ranked Georgia Tech 75-59 in an Atlantic Coast Conference game yesterday.

The win improved the Blue Devils' record to 22-2 overall and 9-2 in the ACC, both ranked North Carolina. Georgia Tech has lost two of its last three, both to ACC powers, and is 4-6 and 3-2.

The Blue Devils travel to Storrs tomorrow before returning home to host the Fighting Irish of Notre Dame Sunday in a nationally televised contest.

The combination of a ball-hawking defense and Georgia Tech's cold shooting helped the Blue Devils race out to a 17-6 lead in the first 14 minutes.

The lead grew to 25 points with 9:49 left, and the lead was never threatened.

The Yellow Jackets got within 52-46 at the 9:55 mark, but the Blue Devils closed the half with a 10-1 run, sparked by Dawkins' 3-pointer with 5:49 left, and the lead grew as large as 68-53 on a Dawkins dunk with 3:25 remaining.

The final score was Duke's biggest advantage.

John Salley led Georgia Tech with 17 points, while Mark Price scored 12. Bruce Dalrymple had 11 and Tom Hammonds 10.

Georgia Tech committed 21 turnovers, 12 in the second half, and coughed up 46 percent from the field after shooting 56 percent in the first half.

Duke shot 45 percent in the opening period, but warmed up to 50 percent in the second half and finished at 52 percent.

Kiss orphans were able to control the Irish effectively was under the supervision of head center Trenia Coughman's 14 rebounds. Xavier was able to outscore the Irish, 40-33. Although some of the difference can be attributed to the unusual circumstances of the game (the Irish shot 67 percent from the floor), the DIamid's exploited concern as a factor in her team's return for successful conference play.

ND track team finishes 3rd in meet

Ten personal records were set by members of the Notre Dame track team in Friday's Indiana Intercollegiate Track Meet held in West Lafayette, Ind.

Head Coach Joe Piane watched as Notre Dame took third place out of an eleven team field. Only Indiana and Purdue outscored the Irish.

"Overall, we were very pleased with the meet," said senior co-captain John McNeila. "A lot of guys ran their best times of the year, and this was a great tune-up for the Central Conference meet next week."

The Central Collegiate Conference meet spans five states and normally provides the Irish with one of their biggest challenges of the year.

Stand outs for the Irish on Friday were senior Jim Tyler and junior Bob Nobles. Tyler came back into an unplayable lie on the 16th hole. Middle-distance runner McNelis was nipped at the tape in the 1500 meter race.

The Irish next run in the Central Collegiate Conference meet on February 14-15, in Madison, Wis., and then they are on to Bloomington for the Indiana IAC meet.

Tway wins playoff, Williams title

Associated Press

SAN DIEGO - Bob Tway escaped a playoff victory yesterday - his first on the PGA tour - when Bernhard Langer missed a four-foot putt on the second extra hole of the Shearson Lehman Brothers Andy Williams Open Golf Tournament.

Tway, 26, and in his second season on the tour held his two-to-three shot lead into the final round but then watched as his tee shot shot some 30 feet from the flag and he missed his chance for his first major championship.

Tway was about 20 feet from the cup. Langer ran his first putt some four-to-five feet beyond the cup, and Tway, with a chance to win, also missed. He went two-to-three feet past the cup.

Langer, using a cross-handed grip and putting through the shadow of a television tower, pushed his second shot to the right and, tight-lipped, tapped in for bogey.

Tway holed his short one for the title and the winner's share of $81,000 from the total purse of $450,000.

Langer, who made up two shots over the last three holes, won $48,600.

Langer, playing about four minutes in front of Tway, dropped an 18-foot birdie putt on the 16th hole of Torrey Pines' South course.

East All Stars beat West, 139-132; Pistons’ Thomas wins game MVP

Associated Press

DALLAS - Isiah Thomas scored 12 of his 30 points in the fourth quarter, four during a critical 8-0 streak near the end of the game, to lead the East to a 139-132 victory yesterday in the 36th NBA All-Star game.

Thomas, repeating his Most Valuable Player performance of 1984, gave the East the lead for good with two free throws with 2:09 remaining, making the score 131-130. The Detroit Pistons' guard, who also had 10 assists, added two more free throws 20 seconds later to complete the 8-0 run.

The West led for most of the game until the stronger East started pushing the ball inside to Philadelphia center Moses Malone, who scored seven points in the final quarter. Thomas scored most of his fourth-quarter points early in the quarter to keep the East close.

Kareem Abdul-Jabbar and James Worthy, both of the Los Angeles Lakers, led the West with 21 and 20 points. Worthy, in a spectacular performance, scored 14 of his points on layups or dunks.

Houston's Ralph Sampson and Denver's Alex English added 16 points each for the West. After the lead changed hands only once in the first half, which ended with the East ahead 69-66, there were 11 lead changes and six ties in the third period.

Earvin "Magic" Johnson of the Lakers missed almost half of the second half because of foul trouble, but finished with 15 assists after collecting 10 in the first half. Johnson's two free throws with 1:11 to go cut the East's advantage to 133-132, but an offensive rebound and basket by New Jersey's Buck Williams restored a three-point edge with 58 seconds left, and the West didn't score again.

Three baskets apiece by Philadelphia's Julius Erving and Thomas helped the East cut a 14-6 deficit to 22-21 and the West settled for a 36-34 margin at the end of the quarter. English had eight points in less than 2-and-a-half minutes early in the second quarter and Abdul-Jabbar hit two straight baskets to give the West its largest lead at 53-44 with 6:51 left.

Bird, Saturday's three-point contest winner, scored 12 points, including two three-pointers.

Worthy scored 10 points in a span of less than four minutes as the West led for all but 24 seconds of the first quarter.

Johnson had six assists in the period as he attempted a spectacular pass nearly every time down the floor. The West hit 13 of its first 17 shots but 11 turnovers in the first nine minutes allowed the East to stay close.

Three baskets apiece by Philadelphia's Julius Erving and Thomas helped the East cut a 1-4 deficit to 22-21 and the West settled for a 36-34 margin at the end of the quarter. Irish wrestlers drop matches with Purdue and Clemson

By RICK RIEBROCK

Notre Dame's wrestling team lost matches to Clemson and Purdue, but Irish head coach Fran McCann said that he was by no means a lost weekend.

Even though his team's record fell to 5-6, McCann said the Irish show signs of stepping up to a higher level of quality that will enable them to compete with solid squads on a regular basis.

"I really don't know what our guys did out there," McCann said. "I saw some very positive things that show me we've come a long way. We've made a lot of progress.

a very unofficial player but you saw today that when it comes to showtime, he can take over.

It looked as though Washington started to dazzle in the second half and Rivers was forced to the bench on his fourth foul, leaving a lead it would never relinquish. Then the Irish proceeded to pad the lead with clutch foul shooting, hitting 13 of 17 down the stretch.

Overall, Notre Dame collected 14 offensive rebounds on its way to out rebounding Syracuse. The Irish gradually expanded the lead when 118-pound Carl Hildinger won by forfeit and 126-pound Dave Carlin won by a 10-4 decision.

Dana then defeated Clemson's Bobby Taylor by technical fall to raise his record to 35-6. The 35 victories by the 134-pound freshman tied Notre Dame record for wins in a season by a freshman previously set by Phil Bay in the 1981-82 season.

The Irish could get only one more victory, however. Dave Helmer suffered a 7-3 decision at 190 pounds.

McCann said the Irish were very close to upsetting the Tigers.

"We gave them a very good match," McCann said. "One match that was critical was at 167 pounds, where Geneser went against their guy who is ranked No. 5 (26-3-1 Mike Pitts). Chris wrestled him tough and lost 7-6.

"If we win one of the five, the match can go either way."

The three matches against Michi gan State, Clemson, and Purdue in this weekend will give an indication of stepping forth for the Irish, but McCann said that type of match is helpful in building a solid program.

"We got banged up a little," he said. "It was quite a tough weekend, including the match against Michigan State, but we have to go through something like this to help our young team improve.

The Irish will have some time to recover from their losses before they end up leading their last four matches. Next Saturday, they will travel to Bloomington to face Indiana.

Women's swimming sweeps dual meet with Valpo, UIC

By KATHLEEN MCKERNAN
Sports Writer

"We swam very, very fast," Notre Dame swim coach Tim Welsh said of the women's win after the dual-per- formance Friday night in the Rolfs Aquatic Center. In the double-dual meet, Notre Dame soundly defeated Valparaiso, 67-46, and Illinois-Chicago, 71-42.

With the wins, the Irish raised their record to 7-2, but more importantly they came together more completely as a team and gained important experience in championship events.

"A number of very important things happened in these meets," Coach Welsh said. "First, we made substantive time drops. Second, we swam two new events."

Those events were the 1650-yard freestyle and the 400-yard individual medley. Usually in dual meet competition, teams compete in 1000-yard races instead of the 1650. In the upcoming championships, however, the Irish will compete at the 1650 distance. Friday's meet gave them an opportunity to prepare for the championships in that event.

"What was exciting about that event was that not only did we swim it fast, we swam it well," an obviously pleased Welsh said. "We balanced the smaller parts of the long race very well."

Notre Dame's two 1650 swimmers, Anne Costello and Sarah Vakkur took first and second places respectively, with less than six seconds difference between the times in the long event. And while only Costello and Vakkur placed highly in the event, the fact that the team was able to compete successfully in the new event gave everyone a big boost of confidence, according to Welsh.

Senior Anne Darlington of Fairfield, Ohio, also contributed strong swims to Notre Dame's cause on Friday. Darlington swam the 400 individual medley in 4:48.04, a new Irish record.

"Amy's success and the 1650 race were the most significant swims as far as indicating coming championship performances," Welsh said.

Jean Browne, a freshman from Alen¬town, Pa., turned in strong swims in the 100-yard freestyle race and the 200-yard freestyle relay. In the 100 freestyle, her 57.93, which she swam in exhibition, would have won first place honors. She also participated in the relay with the fastest time of 1:43.62.

"One good thing about this meet was seeing Jean Browne come around," said Welsh. "That was just terrific."

Junior Suzanne Devine, the Notre Dame record holder in many of the butterfly and freestyle events, also had an excellent meet. She finished first in the 100-yard butterfly and dropped under two minutes in the 200 freestyle. Coach Welsh was especially pleased, however, with the way the team has pulled together as a unit recently.

"The team has really started to jell over the past few weeks," Welsh said. "A couple of things have been important to our recent successes. First, we've had considerably improved performances, which builds confidence. Second, we've had some easy wins, which makes things easier during our most competitive meets."

The women swimmers had faced Valparaiso and Illinois-Chicago in the season at the Notre Dame Relays, yet they still really did not know what to expect. Valparaiso came into the meet with an undefeated dual-meet record of 8-0 after finishing with a 5-8 mark last year. They also had beaten five teams that they lost to last year.

"It was important that our swim¬mers were relaxed and comfortable for this meet," Welsh said.

The relaxed Notre Dame women dominated Valparaiso and Illinois-Chicago. Near the end, when an Irish victory was assured, Notre Dame relaxed even more and let the other two swim more or less against each other.

Men's swimming down Ferris St.

By SCOTT INGLIS

A determined Notre Dame men's swim team downed the Ferris State and came away with a big 78-35 victory at the Rolfs Aquatic Center. The win, which came in Notre Dame's last home meet of the year, and the team's record to 4-5 and served as a sign to Head coach Tim Welsh that his team is building together at the right time with the Midwest Collegiate Conference opening dual meet in a few weeks away.

"The exciting things is that we won one and won one big," said Welsh. "This was the kind of meet that the team really needed. It was good for moral, good for confidence and good for the upcoming championships."

Notre Dame started the meet well as it never looked back, taking the first event, the 400-yard medley relay in 3:39.93, a time that was almost three seconds faster than any previous time this season.

"That has been a meet goal for us for some time," said Welsh. "This is the first time we have led a meet from the beginning. It was an awfully big lift to start off the meet 4-0."

Things only got better from there for the Irish, as the men took first place in none of the eleven events on the day from Ferris State and led the meet from start to finish. Welsh attributed his teams success to key swims combined with other circumstances.

"We were a little faster today than we have been, and they were a little slow," said Welsh. "But we knew we had to swim well to win. Everything fell into place for us with all of the variables turning out in our favor. Those things combined made for the lopsided score."

Exceptional performances for the team were turned in by doubles¬ winners John Koseka and John Coff¬ ey, Koseka, a freshman, took first place in both the 50-yard freestyle with the 100-yard free-style with times of 21.97 and 49.95 respectively to boost the Notre Dame effort.

Coffey senior co-captain, came through with a win in the 200-yard freestyle with a time of 1:49.90 and the 200-yard backstroke in 2:06.06 to lead the Irish.

With the meet well in hand at the end, Notre Dame was able to have a little fun, putting together an all-senior team for the last event - the 400-yard free relay. Although the team was edged out by Ferris State at the end, Coach Welsh felt it was a good way to end the meet and the season.

"This was a nice way for the seniors to end up their careers here," Welsh said. "Now we are looking ahead to our meets next week against Illinois-Chicago and Northern Illinois. With the win today, our two primary goals for the season, a winning record and a win at the conference meet in Evanston, we are well within reach."
Irish women whip Xavier, will face UIC tonight

By MARTY BURNS
Assistant Sports Editor

You could say the Notre Dame women's basketball team blew out Xavier Saturday afternoon at the AGL. If you said yes, you'd be wrong.

That's because "blow out" would be much too mild a term to descriPe Notre Dame's 104-57 massacre of the Lady Musketeers. Call it a thrashing, a pounding, or maybe just an utter submision by a clearly overwhelming force.

Whatever you call it, Irish head coach Mary D'Antonio called it an impressive win for her team, now 13-7 on the year and 6-1 in the North Star Conference.

"I think it was just a case of a team that was really ready to go right out of the box," said D'Antonio, who saw her team's 17-game NSC winning streak end last Wednesday against Dayton. "The Dayton loss last week was a very difficult loss for us. I think the team was really ready to put it behind us."

Notre Dame will have the opportunity to add another victory to its record tonight when it faces the University of Illinois (Chicago) in Chicago. The match-up with the 9-12 Flames will be the last non-conference game of the season for the Irish before they begin their seven-game stretch towards a second consecutive NSC title.

Notre Dame should be in good emotional shape for that stretch drive after its domination of Xavier on Saturday. Five Irish players scored in double figures as the team rolled to its most lopsided victory since a 107-61 win over the same Xavier team in the 1990-91 season.

Strangely enough this win on Saturday occurred despite the fact that Notre Dame was hurting for the battle, as key bench players Heidi Bunk, and Kathy Brommel sat out the game because of illness. This loss of bench strength, coupled with a flat opening by the Irish, seemed to bode well for Xavier's hopes at least to keep the game close.

But even those minor hopes were shattered soon after when became apparent that the Musketeer offense could not contend with the quicker, taller Irish defense. And while the Xavier backcourt was being stymied in its attempts to get the ball inside (the Musketeers committed 33 turnovers in the game), Notre Dame was getting easy shots underneath on the other side.

"I think it took us a few minutes to get started," said D'Antonio. "I think we were a little flat and we weren't getting good defensive play. But even though we were a bit stumped without Bunk and Brommel, we still knew we'd be able to get the inside."

Irish players Sandy Boychum and Dondra Toney must have known this also, as the two showed no mercy in directing the onslaught (see IRISH, page 10).

Notre Dame's Diondra Toney found the going tough inside on this try down the court. This was as rough as it got for the Irish, though, as they thoroughly whipped Xavier, 104-57. Toney scored a career-high 25 points and banded out 6 assists in Notre Dame's romp. Marty Burns has the game story at left.

ND dominates inside, Price puts end to slump

By CHUCK FREEBY

SYRACUSE, N.Y. - That's what it sounded like inside the Carrier Dome all day Saturday, as No. 14 Notre Dame beat Syracuse like a bass drum on its way to an 85-81 upset of the seventh-ranked Orangemen.

That's the sound of the Irish frontline pounding away on the inside. The fearsome foursome of Ken Barlow, Donald Royal, Tim Kempton and Jim Dolan not only made major contributions on offense, but they took away the Orangemen's inside game on defense. A tenacious zone defense limited center Rony Seikaly to five points and shut out Syracuse's leading scorer, Rafael Addison, who was already bothered by a sore ankle.

"We dominated the inside all day and dominated the outside when we had to," noted Irish coach Digger Phelps. "Ken Barlow came through for us today. Joseph Price came through for us, and we just got a good team effort."

Price was particularly satisfied with his performance. Phelps made no secret at last Thursday's press conference he was unhappy with Price's play, but the senior guard responded with 12 points and 28 solid minutes of play.

"Considering the slump I've been in, I'm happy Coach still had the confidence in me and let me play," said Price. "When I hit my first shot, it took a little of the pressure off me. As everybody says, when I hit my first one, I'm on the road."

But that's the sound of noise reverberating through the massive Carrier Dome. A crowd of 13,297 - some of them sitting at least 70 yards away from the playing floor with an obstructed view - made no noise all day. All the yelling, however, failed to intimidate the Irish.

"We couldn't let them dictate to us at the free throw line," noted Royal, who connected on 14 of 17 from the foul stripe.

"We knew we had to do well at the line," said DiStanislao. "Considering the slump I've been in, I'm happy Coach still had the confidence in me and let me play," said Price. "When I hit my first shot, it took a little of the pressure off me. As everybody says, when I hit my first one, I'm on the road."

That's the sound of noise knocking on the door of the NCAA tournament. Saturday's win left little doubt in the minds of many that the Irish could be a force come March.

"We don't have to be ranked. Phelps after the game, "I know a lot of people question that, but I think today gives credibility. This is a win that could only help us in March."

"The victory means a great deal to me," added point guard David Rivers. "It's up to him to get good players."
