Divestment assessment postponed

The Notre Dame Board of Trustees Friday decided to completely reassess the University's investment policy in May 1987 but did not take any action at the present time, according to Richard Conklin, assistant vice president for University relations, speaking at a noon press conference.

"Essentially there isn't any change in Notre Dame's current policy," said Conklin.

The only real change, according to Conklin, is the see DIVEST, page 4

Humbled’ associate provost to be 16th president of ND

“I’m humbled.”

Those were the first words of Associate Provost Father Edward “Monk” Malloy upon being announced Friday as the next president of Notre Dame. Following commencement on May 17, 1987 and will serve five years.

Malloy’s term, which is renewable, will officially begin July 1, 1987. On the recommendation of Malloy, the board also elected Father E. William Beauchamp as executive vice president.

Beauchamp, who was one of the five presidential candidates, will succeed Father Edy Joyce. Beauchamp will also serve five years.

In addition, the board voted to renew Provost Timothy O’Meara’s term on Malloy’s recommendation.

O’Meara, who as provost has been Malloy’s boss, will serve the same term as Malloy and Beauchamp.

Flanked at a crowded news conference by hesburgh and Board of Trustees Chairman Donald Keough, Malloy said, “No one, except me, nor do I intend to try.

But together, together in the administration, together with the trustees, together with my fellow brothers and see MONK, page 6

Other candidates ‘delighted’

Delight and relief were the emotions expressed by the three candidates for University president who were not selected for the top two executive posts. Father Michael McCafferty revealed his enthusiasm for the selection of Father Edward “Monk” Malloy to be the 16th top executive leader of Notre Dame.

“It’s great. I’m extremely encouraged, not just about the appointment of Father Malloy, but for the future years ahead,” said McCafferty, one of the five men considered for the position of University president.

The third candidate, Father Ernest Bartell said “I’m happy for Notre

With the election of Father William Beauchamp to the position of executive vice president, he and newly elected University President Father Theodore Hesburgh will work as a team, Beauchamp said.

Beauchamp, 44, current executive assistant to University President Father Theodore Hesburgh, and previously considered a possible successor to Hesburgh, will succeed Father Edmund Joyce, current executive vice president.

Joyce is retiring this year after serving at Hesburgh’s side for the past 35 years. Both Malloy and Beauchamp will serve five-year terms beginning on July 1, 1987.

Beauchamp was elected by the board on Malloy’s recommendation. “I see in Bill and (Provost Timothy O’Meara) and many other leaders of the present administration sets of qualities which I think will allow me to do the things I do best, to concentrate on those, and to have great confidence in them,” said Malloy.

brought in today. But Father Malloy is the boss,” he said. Beauchamp said be and Malloy will model administration after that of Hesburgh and Joyce. That’s (Malloy’s) model. We will function as a team,” he said.

“I think both (Father Joyce) and I believe the new team going now are going to bring a new spirit to the place. They’re going to bring new ideals and new initiatives, and that’s good,” said Hesburgh.

Beauchamp, in addition to his role as executive assistant to the president, has also served as assistant professor of management in the College of Business Administration.

Beauchamp graduated from the University of Detroit in 1964 with a B.S. degree in accounting, receiving an M.B.A.

Widely-recognized leaders provide insight on success

"Having a bad start was probably the best thing that ever happened to me. We won 5-3 my first year, then lost the opener the following year. Everybody was pointing at me to do what I would succeed me.

"Had I not moderately successful, I never would have questioned the way I was coaching. Now I constantly question everything I do."

These are the words of voicing from Hallmark Joe Paterno commenting in an advertisement called "on staying power," which is sponsored by Panhandle Eastern Corporation and appears in such newspapers as The New York Times.

"On staying power" contains information with people widely recognized as perennial leaders in their professions. The purpose of the advertisements is to provide others with enduring values and attitudes that lead to success over a long period of time.

Recently, Charles Schulz, the creator of the Peanuts comic strip gave his philosophy on how he has remained at the top for all these years:

Schulz said, "I am not concerned with simply surviving. I am very concerned about improving.

"To have staying power you must accommodate yourself to the task. I have never maintained that a comic strip is Great Art. It simply happens to be something I feel uniquely qualified to do," Schulz said.

From the words of recognized leaders, one should note leadership is a learning process. To maintain leadership one must be the best and leave to others what he cannot do well.

In short, one can see common threads between the society's leaders. One could conclude that universal principles exist which assist successful leaders.

How a leader interprets these principles helps to determine whether he succeeds or fails at his task.

At Notre Dame, University President Father Theodore Hesburgh has staying power built on a clarity of purpose and a spirit of tenacity. A tenacity he inherited from his predecessors who built and rebuilt Notre Dame.

"Hesburgh wrote, "Over the years, one's philosophy of education grows and becomes more precise and detailed. What I wrote 15 years ago I would hardly write today."

Hesburgh has, as Schulz said, "accommodated" himself to the task at hand. He has changed the University while constantly learning from the changes he has witnessed.

"Of course every leader has to have a personal vision of where he or she wants to lead, and just having it won't do. Effective leadership means getting the best people you can find to share the vision and help in achieving it. When you are talking about best president of the United States or president of Willow Grove College, the principle is equally valid," Hesburgh wrote.

Interestingly, both Paterno and Hesburgh, two different kind of leaders, both quoted Churchill, who faced problems of much greater proportion than either of these leaders.

Paterno wrote, "I never get excited by a win, because, as Churchill said, 'success is never final.' Likewise, I never get depressed over a loss, because, as Churchill wrote, 'the lesson in it.'

Hesburgh cited Churchill's quote, "The only guide to a man is his conscience." He was using Churchill's statement to show that a man must do what is right over what is popular. When Father Edward Malloy and Father William Beauchamp replace Hesburgh as Executive Vice President Father Edmund Joyce, these two new leaders will have to structure their own philosophy of leadership.

Fortunately, like Hesburgh, Paterno and Schulz, Notre Dame's new leaders will have the example and words of history's finest leaders as a guide.

Leadership involves sacrifice, patience, compassion and a host of intangible qualities the men I have cited possess.

None of these means leaders are not human. In fact, recent research shows the most important quality of the person who governs well is "esseo umano, to be human."

Leaders make mistakes, just as all of us do. We should expect nothing more of them than we expect of ourselves; to be the best we can be, 'with what we have, where we are,' as Hesburgh has so many times said.

Notre Dame should receive the new president in that spirit. We must let him grow in the office that has grown so much during Hesburgh's 35 years!
Hickey expresses 'delight' over decision for Malloy

By MARJIE KERSTEN
St. Albert

Saint Mary's students, faculty and administrators have all speculated who the new president of Notre Dame would be, who was announced Friday as Father Edward "Monk" Malloy.

"I am delighted with the choice of Malloy as Notre Dame's next president," said Saint Mary's President William Hickey. "His years of experience in the office of provost gives him good insight on the University; it's the best position to learn the innerworkings of the University.

"In my mind, I thought Malloy would probably be selected," Hickey said. "He has the ordinary background of a president and has served as a faculty member, he said, adding, "He knows what makes a University run."

Hickey said he has known Malloy for a number of years and that he hopes for a positive relationship with Saint Mary's. "His desire to maintain Notre Dame as an outstanding Catholic University will be supportive to Saint Mary's."

Acting Vice President and Dean of Faculty for the College, Dorothy Feigl said she speculated, just as many students did, about the new Notre Dame president. "Malloy has the difficult challenge of filling a position that has been held by Father Ted for 35 years," he comes with the best background as a broad view of the University, she added.

Malloy will need time to be able to develop his own plan on how he will be . . . and I think he will be his own person," Hickey said.

A Nov. 2 Chicago Tribune article stated that Malloy had been chosen president. Hickey said he thought this article must have had the hardest impact on Malloy himself, because he would be wondering if it were true.

"We wish him good fortune," said Feigl. Hickey said Hesburgh gave him advice when he became president in February, and "I would give the same advice to Malloy."

You have to be courageous because you will face a lot of tough decisions, he said. "Sometimes the easy way to provide an answer may not be the right way, and the right way may not be the popular way," Hickey said.

"I have a sense of humor . . . a monumental crisis today may be trivial in 10 years."

Most importantly, however, is to keep laughing, he said.

ND community applauds decision

Members of the Notre Dame community applauded Friday's appointment of Associate Provost Father Edward "Monk" Malloy as University president.

"I can't imagine anyone not liking Ed Malloy," said Father Richard McBrien, chairman of Notre Dame's theology department.

"Malloy just professor of Christian ethics in McBrien's department.

"Negative comments or lack of enthusiasm for the appointment will come from people who had a different candidate. And my answer to them is: Thank God it's Ed Malloy."

As far as I'm concerned, he's the best of all the candidates," McBrien said.

"Malloy will replace University President Father Theodore Hesburgh in May, is considered a careful thinker who is able to make tough decisions, according to faculty and students interviewed.

"He's well-respected, careful, thoughtful, tough when he has to be reasonable, and solid," said John Roos, an associate provost to stay in tune with the internal operations of the University," McBrien said.

McBrien added, however, that Malloy will have to be more outgoing in order to fulfill his duties as president. Malloy doesn't like to draw attention to himself. The other side of the line, of course, is that the job requires a lot more than that," he said.

McBrien and others noted that Malloy has made unusual strong efforts as associate provost to stay in tune with Notre Dame faculty members.

Since he was appointed associate provost in 1982, for example, Malloy has tried to talk with each of Notre Dame's 800 faculty, Roos said.

Among students, Malloy has earned a reputation as a well-rounded man who can just as easily discuss ethical issues like abortion as mix it up on the basketball court with the residents of Sorin Hall, where he lives.

"Although he has some strong opinions himself, he seems to be open-minded to the students in his class. I think he will be an excellent president to replace Hesburgh," said Notre Dame senior Chris Toal, one of Malloy's students.

"He always makes it a point to tell his students that if they have any problems or questions, to stop by and see him in Sorin," Toal added.

As Malloy assumes the presidency, many people agree that his greatest outside asset will be the tradition left by Hesburgh.

Frank Reilly, dean of the College of Business Administration, said Malloy will be able to build on the strong financial foundation built by Hesburgh. In his 25-year tenure as president, Hesburgh has increased the University's endowment from $9 million to more than $30 million.

"Malloy has one of the critical qualities that is needed and that is 'vision' of where Notre Dame should go in the future," Reilly said.

Added Collins: "It's a big job, but I have a hunch he's going to do pretty well."

Approximately 75 to 100 people, mostly students, gathered outside the Board of Trustees meeting Friday around noon to express concern over the Board’s decision concerning divestment.

Peter Walsha, professor of government and international studies and member of the Ad Hoc Committee on South African Investments, announced to the group that the Board had not decided to divest and that the decision was "about as bad as it could be.

"Father Henbury is deeply reluctant to divest. The true trustees have pointed to next May to make a review.

"That's the pressure point," said Conklin.

There was never a formal vote taken by the Board, said Conklin. The report of the Board of Trustees Ad Hoc Committee on South African Investments was received by the Board, and then the Board moved on to other business, according to Conklin. During the presentation of the report, one clarification was asked for, but otherwise the Board received the report as it was presented.

Most of the conclusions of the ad hoc committee's report were restatements of past policy, according to Conklin. The first conclusion, however, was new. It said "the committee recognizes the need for complete reassessment of its investment policy in May, 1987 following publication of Reverend Sullivan's recommendations and pursuant to evaluation of progress by the South African government in the dismantling of apartheid called for by Reverend Sullivan".

Sullivan said in May 1985 that if all statutory apartheid was not eliminated from South Africa by May 1987, all companies should leave South Africa and an economic embargo should be undertaken, according to Father Oliver Williams, member of the ad hoc committee and professor of management.

All the endowments of universities that have been following the Sullivan principles for a dilemma, said Williams.

"Most of us feel that the (South African) government won't have eliminated all those laws," said Williams. Since Sullivan has said he will call for divestment in that case, the University will have to decide whether there is reason to keep those investments, said Williams.

Conklin said the University adopted the enhanced Sullivan principles in 1984.

The American Catholic bishops have called on Catholic institutions to divest from businesses operating in South Africa or use their votes in shareholder referendums if there is no significant progress toward dismantling apartheid by May 1987, according to the committee's report.

The investment committee, ad hoc committee, and executive committee have the power to divest from certain businesses at any time without calling the full board together, said Conklin. The committees have used this power recently to divest their holdings in certain companies, said Conklin, though the Board did not specify the names of those companies.

Notre Dame has divested about 13 companies from its portfolio since its first policy in 1978, said Conklin. "We have investments in 29 companies having employees in South Africa," he said.

The investments amount to $33 million or 9 percent of the University's endowment, accordingly Conklin.

Two banners were taken away from the group by a man identifying himself as a security officer, according to several students present at the gathering. Rex Bakow, director of security, said he would not comment until Monday.

Cameras focus in on the other decision of the day as students outside the board of trustees' meeting, held in the CCE, protest apartheid and University investment in South Africa.

Malloy well-equipped to lead Notre Dame

By MIRIAM HILL and CINDY RAUCHORST

Notre Dame's newly-named president will come to the job well-equipped, bringing with him an extensive background in both educational and administrative aspects of the University.

Father Edward "Monk" Malloy, a 45-year-old native of Washington, D.C., most recently has served as the University's associate provost. In this position, he has assisted Provost Timothy O'Meara in coordinating all facets of University academic life.

Malloy has spent about half of his life here, arriving in 1959 on a University basketball scholarship. The Sorin Hall resident said he will continue to live in the hall next year.

"I've found I enjoy living in a dorm... it gives me an accessibility that I wouldn't have otherwise," Malloy said.

Basketball fans expressed enthusiasm at Malloy's decision to continue the tradition of "Monk Hoops," the weekly Sorin contests named for Malloy.

"I'll play as long as I can still walk," Malloy said. "I enjoy playing basketball as much now, if not more, than I did during his days as a Notre Dame player."

The new president, well-known among students for his accessibility and ability to relate to undergraduate concerns, said he values this reputation among students.

"I prize spending time and being available to students, and I will struggle to find ways to have a presence with students, or as many students as I can," he said.

In the past, Malloy has maintained student contact primarily through his popular theology courses, whose consistently large class lists attest to the associate professor's reputation as a campus educator.

Malloy has chaired two University-wide committees, one which recommended updates in the core curriculum, and another which last year instigated an academic honesty code for the University.

Described by many as a prolific writer, Malloy specializes in the study of Christian ethical issues such as sexuality, war and peace, criminology and biomedicine. He has written two books and numerous articles on ethical subjects.

"I think any public figure today has to have social concerns, and my particular training is to teach about them," he said.

At Vanderbilt University, Malloy earned a doctoral degree in Christian ethics in 1975 after completing theological studies as part of a Smith Fellowship.

He then returned to Notre Dame as a member of the theology department faculty. During an undergraduate trip to Mexico with the Community for the Lay Apostolate, Malloy said he received a calling to the priesthood.

But before entering Moreau Seminary in 1969, Malloy completed his undergraduate and master's degrees in English at Notre Dame, in 1963 and 1967 respectively.

While at Moreau, Malloy completed a master's degree in theology, and in 1970 he was ordained a priest in Sacred Heart Church.

"For me, my primary identity is as a priest," Malloy said. He added that being Notre Dame's president will simply be another way for him to carry out his ministry as a priest.

Malloy said his decision to enter the priesthood also was influenced by his strong Catholic background.

"I was an altar boy, I went to Catholic grade school and high school," he said, adding that there were many priests over the years whom he admired and who influenced his decision.

Malloy received a law degree from the same institution two years later. He pursued postgraduate studies in higher education on a part-time basis at Michigan State University between 1966 and 1971 while teaching and serving as associate director of admissions at Alma College in Alma, Michigan.

In 1975, after receiving a Juris Doctor degree from the University of Notre Dame Law School, he returned to Alma to work as an attorney in a general practice law firm. He entered Moreau Seminary at Notre Dame in January, 1977, received a master's in divinity degree in 1981 and was ordained a priest April 17, 1982. Between 1980 and 1984, when he assumed his present position, he served as administrative assistant to Notre Dame's executive vice president Father Joyce.

In 1984, he chaired the University Committee on the Responsible Use of Alcohol, which set the University's present policy on student use and abuse of alcohol.

You work hard trying to build something and you hope that somehow the thrust forward will continue and that the University will continue to grow and prosper in as many ways as possible.

Irish Extra

An early snow storm has made Steve Beuerlein’s room a warm haven. He lives in a corner room in Sorin Hall, arguably one of the most prestigious and coveted rooms on campus. Outside the wind swirls the still light snowfall. In the rain, mostly at home, had been played. And in many, the Irish had come away winless. The end of last season, he says, was the lowest point of his career.

“I can’t pick out a time or day, but just the way the whole thing ended with Coach Faust,” Beuerlein says. “It was a very rough year for me personally as well as for the whole team. I was really just down, and it just seemed like the whole world was caving in around us and around myself.”

“I just thank God for the friends that I’ve got, the support that I’ve had, and the people that have helped me through that whole thing and kept me and everyone fighting on. That’s the reason why we’re where we’re at today. Any normal group of people would have folded a long time ago, but we’re still fighting because we know we can still make something out of it.”

For most of Beuerlein’s career at Notre Dame, it has seemed that the rain had been falling on him and his teammates. Countless games in the rain, mostly at home, had been played. And in many, the Irish had come away winless. The end of last season, he says, was the lowest point of his career.

“I can’t pick out a time or day, but just the way the whole thing ended with Coach Faust,” Beuerlein says. “It was a very rough year for me personally as well as for the whole team. I was really just down, and it just seemed like the whole world was caving in around us and around myself.”

In 1921, the Notre Dame football team played in a wooden Cartier Field stadium, and Knute Rockne led the Irish.

But according to Helen Fisher and Thelma Covell, South Bend residents who have attended games since the 1921 season, Notre Dame football has not changed all that much.

“There’s the same atmosphere there now as there was then,” Covell says. “There’s the new stadium and there have been different coaches, but the atmosphere—the excitement—is the same.

Helen Fisher brings a consecutive game attendance record of 282 into today’s game against Penn State. Thelma Covell missed two games a few years ago because of an illness in her family, but those are the only two games the pair have missed between them since the 1921 season.

on after his sophomore year. When Terry Andryniak directed the team to a 41-17 win over Navy, the two were shuffled in and out the rest of the way.

When Lou Holtz signed on, the quarterback question arose almost immediately but with a new twist.

“At first I wasn’t sure (what to expect),” Beuerlein says, “because everywhere he had gone he had been associated with some sort of the option. It’s not going to surprise anybody that I’m really not an option quarterback. I never had been and never will be. I was a little apprehensive at first about the whole situation.”

Holtz put all Beuerlein’s fears to rest. Almost from day one, Holtz reiterated that Beuerlein was not going to be his starting quarterback.

“I was very good for me in the spring to hear that,” says Beuerlein, “and I was coming off a very frustrating year for me personally and it probably was wakening a lot of my confidence. I wasn’t quite sure if the whole thing was meant to work out far my experiences.

Still it wasn’t enough for the fans or the media. Weekly, Holtz would defend his quarterback and, at times, chastised the media for its criticism of Beuerlein.

“All quarterbacks, if they’re going to be successful, have to have a lot of confidence in themselves,” says Beuerlein. “They’ve got to believe in themselves and not worry about what other people are saying about them. At times it’s hard to do, and I admit that last year, at times, it got to me. I was trying to go out there and make things happen when what I should have been doing was going out there and playing my game and not worrying about what people were saying. I was trying to make the big play all the time.”

Now, after a 1-4 start, the big plays are coming for Beuerlein. Although Holtz is known for his use of the ground game, Beuerlein has had his best back-to-back performances in some time, throwing for 517 yards (27-for-42 passing) and three touchdowns. Two of his scoring strikes have been to Tim Brown for 77 and 84 yards. He is Notre Dame’s career leader in six categories, including total offense and passing yards. Despite the up-and-down nature of his stay at Notre Dame, Beuerlein wouldn’t have it any other way.

“I wouldn’t trade the Notre Dame experience for anything in the world,” he says. “It’s been a very special place for me and the people I’ve met and the opportunity that it’s given me are incomparable. I never could have experienced it anywhere else.

“Football has been up and down to say the least through the price has risen to almost twice what it was only $10.

Speaking of the seniors, the Bookstore Basketball tournament is April 27, 1986. A team named Lee’s BBQ Roundhouse with a guard named Steve Beuerlein wins the Bookstore Basketball XV tournament. On a bright, sunny day, Beuerlein truly enjoys playing. “(That’s the way I have fun).” For next year, he promises to be back with Bookstore and football again. Beuerlein is Notre Dame’s “secret sub” for Jim Dolan. For Beuerlein, the often embarrassed quarterback, it’s another shot at the sun.

Penn State defensive tackle Bob White
Corrigan clarifies scheduling remarks

By DENNIS CORRIGAN
Sports Editor

Notre Dame Athletic Director Gene Corrigan denied charges that Notre Dame is softening its future football schedule, saying "The thought that we could come out with a creampuff schedule really is a misperception."

Corrigan's remarks came at a press conference Friday and were in response to an article in Wednesday's Toledo Blade as well as much-abbreviated articles that had appeared in papers around the country on Thursday. In the Blade article, Corrigan said that Notre Dame was attempting to buy games to increase Notre Dame's home schedule, not to make it easier by scheduling such opponents as Indiana, Northwestern and Stanford. Corrigan reiterated this point Friday. "My whole gist of the conversation that I had with John Gugger (author of the original article) was that we needed more home games." Corrigan said, "I can't imagine a school that sells out every game and has for 27 years since Ara (Persianjian) came, having five home games one year and six the next. Finally, especially, it's a killer for us because we don't get into fund raising with it at all."

"The money that we make from football and basketball is what runs a 21-sport program at the University of Notre Dame and the best interhall program in the world. And in order to sustain that, one of the things that we have to do is buy some home games."

What Corrigan wants is to make sure Notre Dame can come game by game a season to increase revenues. "So the balance between the number of home games is a result of home-and-home se-rison which most major pro-ymists insist upon in order to play Notre Dame. By buying home games, Notre Dame gives the opponent a monetary guarantee for playing the game on the road. In turn, Notre Dame is in no way obligated to play a second game at the opponent's home."

In order to do this, single games had to be added with teams Corrigan said had asked to play Notre Dame. "Indiana's just a one-game series," said Corrigan. "The Northwestern game was one that they came to us a couple of years ago and felt that their scheduling situation was a lift like a [circular spreading] major program announcement that we were going to start playing them next year.

"We wanted to play a game in our inaugural season and we scheduled Notre Dame in Soldier field. We think it's a good game for us to open the season with."

"We're playing Miami of Ohio, the cradle of coaching," continued Corrigan. It's a wonderful school with great tradition. Their athletic director's got the vision to retire and he and I are friends. He said to me, 'one thing I'd never ask you to do is to come to a game with Notre Dame.' That was about 2 weeks before they beat Ohio State, and we decided before they beat LSU that we would give them the opening game in the 90's.

Corrigan also was quoted as saying that Notre Dame wanted to play more games that shared Notre Dame's phidosophy of academics and athetics. "If you're all aware of the CFA academic awards, there are only three schools that have won it-Duke, Virginia and Notre Dame. Duke and Virginia have talked to us about a one-game set out here."

Corrigan reaffirmed Notre Dame's commitment to playing intercollegiate games across the nation but said the teams should not play everywhere every year. "We'd really like to play in every season but not every year," he said. "It's a good fun for the people that we play there, and that's why we'd like to get into every part of the country. We're trying to get a series going with Boston College, but that does not mean we're going to play Boston College every year from now to eternity. We've got a four game set with them in the 90's.

"We've gone a three-game set with BYU. I don't consider that the most significant in the country. We felt that it was an area the country we have not played and that Notre Dame's schedule wouldn't take effect until after 1992, which is as far as we're concerned. Notre Dame's schedule is planned."

Lions hold off Irish, 21-17

Late in the fourth quarter, everything that built up against 185-ranked Penn State turned to dust.

Blair Kiel had led the Irish in an impressive comeback in that 1981 contest, and all they had to do was put together one more sustained drive to run out the clock and pick up their first conference win. But against the fourth quarter, Penn State went 16 periods without giving up a TD.

Penn State has a host of defensive leaders. Outside linebacker Shane Conan has 64 tackles while tackle Bob White and inside linebacker Don Graham each have seven sacks. Cornerback Duffey Cobb, who saved the Maryland game by breaking up the two-point conversion attempt late in the game, has four interceptions, and Penn State has picked off at least one pass in eight of the Lion's nine games, and Penn State has also turned four of five fumbles into scores. "(Nose tackle) Mike Rasso (32 tackles) is extremely strong," says Holtz. "(Inside linebacker) Troy Bauer (33 tackles) is very quick. He's an individual play. We don't have everybody in synch (on defense) while they all complement each other."

"They absolutely control the line of scrimage. We won't have a chance without outstanding defense because you just won't score points against Penn State."

According to Holtz, using new offensive sets and trick plays will not work.

The veteran senior Penn State defense will run up against an Irish offense and quarterback is rolling up points lately. In the recent victories, Notre Dame has been led by Brian White (102-of-175, 7 TDs, 5 interceptions) who is establishing a career best for passing yardage with 289 against Stanford. He has not thrown an interception in the last three games. He leads an offense that has only been held under 100 yards in first downs by one team, Pittsburgh, all season long.

Notre Dame will send tailback Anthony Johnson (58-for-328, 7 TDs), fullback Fernel Taylor (60-for-364, 5 TDs), tailback Mark Green (54-for-248, 2 TDs) and flanker Tim Brown (42-for-237, 2 TDs) against Penn State after gaining 332 yards against SMU.

While Brown has stolen the show, split end Mill Jackson (18-for-238) and tight end Joel Williams (3-for-107, 3 TDs) both have been impressive with their play away from the ball.

Brown ranks second on the NCAA all-purpose yardage chart, averaging 14.9 yards every time he touches the ball, and netting 134.4 yards per game for the All-America candidate.

On special teams, Notre Dame punter Dan Sorensen averages 39.2 yards and placekicker John Carney is 14-for-20 on FGs, leading the team in points with 63. Lion's punter John Bruno averages 36 yards per punt. He has 37 FGs and 63 points. The Irish plan to counter the ferocious Penn State kick-off coverage by using Skip Holtz to neutralize the Lions kicker downfield.

Why does the Notre Dame football team want to beat Penn State so badly Saturday? Perhaps it is because the Nittany Lions are undefeated and are trying to improve their national ranking (third) and chance for a bowl game for the National Championship.

Or it could be that Penn State thrashed the Irish last season 56-6 in the rain on national television. In that game, 15-year-old Adam Manca kicked five field goals and Steve Beuerlein threw four interceptions. The Irish also lost two fumbles and had a punt blocked.

Mabye it has something to do with the fact that Notre Dame has not beaten a top-ranked team all season, going 0-2 against second-ranked teams Michigan and Alabama. Whatever the reason, the Irish cannot afford the mistakes that cost them those games if they expect to be 5-0.

"If our football team does not turn the football over," said Head Coach Lou Holtz, "and we play a sound kicking game, and all of our people play each and every play without an error, we can play with Penn State. But that's a lot of ifs.

"Penn State is almost two turnovers a game in the plus. They punt at the ball and they are quick with good hands. Penn State's stats tell the story."

And what an ugly story it is for the Irish. The Nittany Lions average 29.8 points and 412.5 yards (251.8 rushing, 160.7 passing) per game while surrendering 19.8 points and 272.3 yards (94.1 rushing, 211.3 passing) per game.

"This is as good a football team as we've played all year," said Holtz. "They have a great defense, when we've played them, they sound fundamentally and they do what it takes to win. They start in the middle like 18 seniors defense and these are kids that already have the experience of playing for the national championship last year."

Penn State State's offense vs.
Notre Dame's defense

Penn State's dominating ball control rushing game will collide with Notre Dame's defensive strength, permitting no team more than 106 yards, and the one left standing should win the game. Penn State will bring D.J. Dozier (141 for 607, 9 TDs) along with a pair of tough fullbacks, Tim Manoa and Steve Smith, to bear on the Irish.

"Shaffer isn't a spectacular quarterback," said Holtz, "but he never seems to make a bad play and he's a winner."

As of late the Nittany Lions have had trouble putting the ball in the end zone after working it down the field. In the last two weeks, they have scored only three TD's after gaining 772 yards and rolling up 47 first downs.

"You've got to give Maryland credit," said Head Coach Joe Paterno after narrowly beating the Terps 17-15 on a blocked conversion pass last week. "We missed too many scoring opportunities, particularly early in the game. We've got to be a little less cavalier and Gent in there early. We've got to get the killer instinct and until we do that, we'll find ourselves in some tough games."

And the Notre Dame defense strengthens at the goal line. Penn State has 24 touchdowns on the ground while the Irish have given up only eight rushing TDs in eight games. But, defensive end Wally Kleine (6-6, 274), the anchor of the left side, will miss the game because of a shoulder injury. Jeff Rume (6-6, 292), who filled in against SMU, will start.

On the other side, Robert Banks (6-5, 205) has terrorized the enemy all season, totaling 37 tackles behind linebacker Mike Kovaleski and Kleine. Kovaleski, the leader at 57, will return following a slight concussion against SMU.

Linebacker Cedic Figaro (6-3, 222), who established a single-season team record for fumble recoveries at seven, has come up with the big play on defense all season. He has 36 tackles this season.

Shaffer will test a Notre Dame secondary that has been severely hampered by key injuries to Mike Haywood and Brandy Wells.

Free safety Steve Lawrence "has had a couple of fine games in a row," according to Holtz. Senior cornerback Marv Spence has teamed up with Lawrence to give the backfield some stability. In a surprise move last week, Mark Green, who excelled at defensive back DB in high school, has seen some work at that position in practice this week.

If the Irish hope to stop the Lions, it will be through turnovers. Notre Dame caused fourteen turnovers against SMU, its best effort in that category in '86, and intercepted two passes. In the first five games of the season Notre Dame went 1-4 turning over the ball 14 times and capturing 16-opponent turnovers. In the last three games, Notre Dame is 3-0, losing the ball two times and recovering it eight times.

Penn State's defense vs.
Notre Dame's offense

"When you get the football, Penn State really goes on offense," said Holtz. "They run 34 different patterns and they might have you see two or three a couple of years ago. They are very complex. Their defense is really outstanding, unbelievable."

Each week, the Observer sports staff, a random student picked by the sports editor and some well-known figure in the Notre Dame community predict the outcome of the week's major college football games. Records are compiled as to how each person does against the spread. The person must pick the winner and give the scoring points. Home team is in CAPS.

Malloy will build on Hesburgh’s foundation

The Notre Dame Board of Trustees has just made what is possibly the most important decision in its 110-year history. Since Father Theodore Hesburgh’s passing, the entire generation of students has passed through this academic institution, influenced by Hesburgh. Three-fourths of all living Notre Dame alumni have Hesburgh’s signature on their diplomas. Thirty-five years worth of Notre Dame graduates have gone on to influence this country in business, science, religion, government, the clergy and the armed forces—all a product of Hesburgh’s Notre Dame.

Through good times and bad, Hesburgh has been a stabilizing force, a solid Catholic founder and father, for an institution that is in his image. But when he does, you can feel the future of greatness.

The choice has been made. Father Edward “Monk” Malloy will build on Hesburgh’s foundation and his firm and his opinions Monk has not fallen into the trap of indecisiveness. His beliefs are firm and just the same. These beliefs and opinions never dominate, they merely guide his words of advice and counsel.

Any one of us could buy a set of encyclopedias if we wanted the facts and answers to every possible question. Books, records, video tapes full of advice and soothing words abound in today’s fast-paced world. But none of these can take the place of Monk. Monk is more than a pillar of knowledge, for his words, his philosophy, his opinions are the words of a man who has been through the papers of thousands of students covering every topic imaginable. But even with this great influx of ideas and opinions Monk has not fallen into the trap of indiesiveness. His beliefs are firm and just the same. These beliefs and opinions never dominate, they merely guide his words of advice and counsel.

Every night as I walk across the “God Quad” on my way home I’m greeted by the familiar face of Sorein Hall. The porch light is always lit, and the front windows tell the tale of all my friends who are a little behind in their classes.

When I was in third grade ...

Christian ethics: Malloy's books explore the issues of homosexuality and criminal punishment

MARY JACOBY
features editor

Father Edward Malloy is the author of two books in his field of Christian ethics which address contemporary social issues. "Homosexuality and the Christian Way of Life" was published in 1981, and "The Ethics of Law Enforcement and Criminal Punishment" appeared the following year in 1982. Both books are published by University Press of America.

In the preface to "Homosexuality and the Christian Way of Life," Malloy says that the book was written in response to the controversy between homosexuals and heterosexuals which has spread from the general society into the Christian churches. The debate is focused on one side by gays wishing to "come out of the closet" and on the other side by people who defend the traditional ethic exemplified by the monogamous family unit. At the theological level, Malloy says, recent studies have disputed the traditional ban of all overt homosexual behavior. and homosexuals in the past.

Malloy offers his belief that discussions of controversial moral issues pass through three stages: an initial challenge to the inherited tradition, a response from the defenders of the tradition, and finally a development of a new consensus. He sees the discussion of the homosexuality issue as in the second stage and has written this book to counter the challenge.

The book has two major divisions. The first is a treatment of the Homosexual Way of Life as the issue is raised in social and scientific literature on the subject. Secondly, Malloy explores the Christian community's ethical discussions of homosexuality as well as three main approaches to the issue in current Christian discussion in order to develop "an interpretation of the Christian Way of Life." As a criterion for judging the ethical status of the Homosexual Way of Life.

Lastly, Malloy explores several pastoral and ecclesiastical issues concerning homosexuality and offers his own opinion as to what the proper Christian approach should be.

Although Malloy writes that he feels a Christian lifestyle ultimately cannot be reconciled to a homosexual one, he argues for the basic civil rights of homosexuals. He says that legal reform is possible without society violating the traditional Judeo-Christian sexual ethic which includes heterosexual marriage and, by natural extension, procreation.

The second virtue Malloy discusses in defining a Christian view of sexuality is love. Malloy writes that love must not necessarily be connected with sexuality, but for sexuality to be "authentically realized," he argues that sex must involve love, "ideality, the love of sexual passion and the love of permanence and exclusive commitment can cohere in a relationship." Malloy states. The non-procreative aspect of homosexual relationships provides no opportunity for the growth of a love which carries the partners beyond the original focus in each other to the wider dimensions of joyful and serious service of a broader community.

In his second book . . . Malloy explores the contradiction between the horrors of violence and the seeming contradiction of using violence to prevent greater harm in society.

HOMOSEXUALITY AND THE CHRISTIAN WAY OF LIFE

Edward A. Malloy

define his conception of the Christian Way of Life.

"Chastity is not defined as virginity but rather as 'that virtue which enables all people of whatever sexual orientation, in whatever state in life' to achieve integrity of relationality (to self, to other and to God)." Malloy does not dispute that an individual homosexual can also be chaste. However, he states his doubts that sexual relationships involving many different partners - as he has found typical in his studies of homosexual lifestyles - can promote chastity by the very nature of their diversity and thus depersonalization.

Malloy continues to play the game that brought him to Notre Dame

Father Edward "Monk" Malloy, Notre Dame's next president, is known as an avid basketball player. In his years on the varsity, Malloy saw action in 18 games and scored 25 points.

"(My career) was unspectacular. I put in what they asked me to do. I was never a star, but I was allowed to play some."

"It's kind of neat to think you're out there elbowing the guy who's the next president of Notre Dame."

Since then, he has participated in almost every Bookstore Basketball Tournament and sponsored Monk Hoops Night at Sorin Hall.

"It's kind of neat to think you're out there elbowing the guy who's the next president of Notre Dame," says Notre Dame quarterback Steve Beuerlein, a resident of Sorin who also has a sideline in basketball.

But while Malloy's varsity career might not have been the most distinguished, his regular participation in the Bookstore Tourney and in Monk Hoops Night shows that his love for the game most certainly has not been extinguished.
