Proposal would hurt students
Guaranteed Student Loans would be ‘stingier’

WASHINGTON (AP) - Federal payments to doctors in hospitals would go down, driving up costs to patients. The government would be less generous to farmers and college students. And, under the budget deal drawing in Congress, a broad range of fees would increase — from tourists entering the country to the investors filing for new patents.

In fact, virtually all Americans would be likely to find themselves digging deeper into their pockets.

Bush Peffer, a senior fellow at the Urban Institute and former director of the presidential Budget Office, sees a silver lining concerning the higher costs: "They're pretty widespread, so they shouldn't be intensely felt by any particular group or interest.

The proposals are contained in separate budget-creating bills that the House and Senate are editing this week. The packages are aimed at restoring the federal deficit by the end of next fiscal year that began Oct. 1, by $50 billion on average over the next five years.

So far, the tax increases contained in the plans have received most of the public's attention, with Democrats and Republicans blaming each other that the rich will pay their fair share.

But it's not just tax increases that the average American would notice, according to lawmakers and President Bush finally reach a deficit-reduction agreement.

In fact, most of the savings in the packages Congress plans to vote on come from spending reductions.

Among the programs hardest hit would be Medicare, which helps 33 million elderly and handicapped Americans pay their medical bills. Increases in the program, one of the fastest growing in the government, would be held to $43 billion to $49 billion below the amount needed to keep pace with inflation over the next five years.

Although details of the congressional plans differ, it seems certain that the reimbursements doctors and hospitals receive for treating Medicare patients will be reduced.

The Senate Finance Committee bill, for example, would hold increases in payments to hospitals to 3.2 percent in 1991, 2 percent below the expected rate of inflation for hospital costs. Reimbursements for family doctors would increase by just 2 percent next year, while payments to specialists such as surgeons — would be frozen at this year's levels.

With their federal reimbursements reduced, doctors and hospitals could be forced to pass their costs onto patients — all patients. The government limits the ability of health-care providers to boost costs for Medicare recipients.

Medicare patients themselves are being singed out by the budget writers. The $75 they must pay each year in deductibles, the amount the government begins picking up the tab would increase to $120 next year under the Senate Finance bill, $110 under the House Democratic plan.

Colleges students would also find the Guaranteed Student Loan program stingier, under a measure approved Monday by the House Education and Labor Committee.

The measure would cut to 3 million students at colleges, graduate schools, and trade schools — would no longer be available at schools where more than 25 percent of students have defaulted. That is expected to end the program at about 1,000 schools.

Security is big issue living off-campus

Once a student has moved off campus, he or she becomes one of the most pressing concerns for Notre Dame security. The student is not directly responsible for the security of off-campus students, according to Capt. John Johnson, director of Notre Dame Security.

"Any student living off-campus or becoming a victim of off-campus crime would come under the jurisdiction of the agency in the area in which they live or the area in which the crime happened. The agency of Notre Dame security is responsible for on-campus areas, campus boundaries, and access roads, although the law enforcement agencies in other areas may call on us to assist in other respects," he said.

Notre Dame Security does liaison work, connecting off-campus students with the law enforcement agencies in their areas, and provides crime prevention information to them, according to Johnson. He said, "There are broad possibilities for security services. In general, we share information that can contribute to making life safer and more secure."

Currently, Notre Dame Security is working with the two off-campus student representatives, Mark Bettecourt and Stephen Leitonweber, and the local police agencies to put out a series of mailings addressing security issues, according to Notre Dame security officer Dr. Sikorski.

"We are trying to provide some basic reminders and make them aware of a couple of things that are available to them from the South Bend police department and us," Sikorski said. "We're trying to put together a series trying to address the problem of securing off-campus residences before students leave for midsemester break."

Sikorski recommends that well in advance of fall break students should survey their residence and compare it to where they live with their parents. If locks are missing or broken, or if there is an absence of external lighting, students should contact their landlords about the problem. Students should also check for "hidden areas" where shrubs, trees, or fences would hide a potential burglar from someone passing by on the street.

The local police department should be contacted a few days before the student leaves, according to Sikorski. He said, "They will offer a home-bake which they can deliver to you if they let them know a few days in advance. They will give your house a security check - it will be checked at least three times in a twenty-four hour period: one time every eight hour shift at a minimum."

Just prior to leaving for break, according to Sikorski, students should make an effort to ensure that their residences will look 'lived-in' during the break. Timers and photocells can turn on lights and radios periodically. Newspaper and mail delivery should also be halted for the duration of the break.

Off-campus student representative Mark Bettecourt emphasizes that there is only so much the off-campus representatives can do, and he encourages off-campus students to make use of the available resources for keeping themselves and their residences secure.

"There is only so much we can do to protect ourselves," Bettecourt said. "There are a lot of resources out there, especially a courtesy home-watch program provided by all of the local police agencies. What we are trying to do is make students more aware of what's out there. Either call Notre Dame security or call a local security agency and arrange a security check of your home."

Cecelia Burger, a senior who has lived off campus for two years, has yet to experience a security problem, but points to the importance of taking precautions.

Brown's rule on parties is a liberal farce

Brown University has done it again. In a "unanimous decision," the Greek Council at Brown dedicated that fraternities at this oh-so-sensitive school can no longer host Third World themeparties. What actually contitutes a Third World party will soon open to debate, according to the Brown Daily Herald, but "South of the BORDER" and "Haggie Night" were men­tioned in the article.

Of course, it doesn't really matter what the Greek Council can't decide what the benign, ban­ning them, because they’re doing it in the spirit of breaking evil ethnic stereotypes, so it has to be right.

Wrong. "Besides not want to be construed as commodifying ethnicity," boasted the public relations officer for the Greek Council. (Note: the "person" in question is a female, but of course, at a school with as much sensitivity as Brown, such a newspaper headline would make DARE refer to her as a "spokesman" for fear of breaking the golden rules of gender inclusive language.)

The "person" went on to say that banning those parties which could be construed as derogatory will make "parties more acces­sible" so that all people from all different backgrounds will feel more comfortable."

And, of course, the Greek Council has its collective humanitarian ego in line. God forbid anyone think that the folks at Brown weren't out to save the world, or at least the world they think needs saving.

Let's get serious Brown. How many times do they really think that Latin American students feel uncomfortable at a gathering bearing the theme of Latin American themes? I don't think it seems to me that if anything, the theme parties are celebrating the various cultures, not discrimination against them.

The purpose of giving parties themes is, I believe, to give people an event for people to attend. Fraternities obviously want people to attend their parties, so what could possibly motivate them to plan an event around a negative theme? And let's not forget, when the University Food Services planned a "South of the BORDER" feast, I highly doubt they had malicious ethnic stereotypes in mind. In fact, I doubt they had anything in mind but good food and fun.

Frankly, this thin-skinned attitude of liberals at schools like Brown is getting a bit boring. What began as a genuine interest in erasing stereotypes has become an all-out attack on anything and everything that could be misconstrued by a bunch of people who aren't even the targets of the discrimination they're condemning.

When the Greek Council speaks of the "fine line" between what constitutes a Third World theme and what does not, perhaps they should think about the fine line that separates the real world and LaLaLand.

Group says 500 million children suffer hunger

WASHINGTON (AP) — More than 40,000 children under the age of five die every day from malnutrition and infection, despite increases in the worldwide supply of food, a hunger relief group said Monday.

Children are among 500 million people suffering from hunger, of them living in poor, developing nations in Asia, Africa and Latin America, according to the report issued by Bread for the World. The group works to eliminate hunger.

A major cause of hunger is disruptions caused by wars and fighting in many nations: Afghanistan, Angola, Cambodia, Ethiopia, Sudan, Mozambique and Liberia, to name a few.

Art Simon, the group's president, said Bread hoped to encourage countries to show down military spending and direct the money to feeding the hungry.

"The billions we have spent to arm developing countries now boosts us, especially since that money could have been used to meet the world's nutritional needs," he said.

Many deaths of children could be prevented if food and medical treatment were available, he said.

Although the Third World has the greatest number of hungry people, developed nations like the United States are not immune from the problem, the report said.

Despite its record agricultural productivity, as many as 18 million Americans are without the proper nutrients that promote good health and growth. Of these, some 8 million are children and 2 million are over the age of 65, the report said.

Lecture talks of ideas for Christian revival

By PETER AMEND

Christianity no longer holds the strong cultural influence it once enjoyed in the Western World according to Dr. Nicholas Lobkowicz, president of the Catholic University of Fribourg in Germany.

Lobkowicz, a former professor in the Notre Dame philosophy department, said Christianity provided the foundation for Western civilization.

"Christianity unifies nature so that we could advance in science and technology," he said. "It has shaped the rules of men and women and our values. Only human nature has shaped culture in a more fundamental way than Christianity.

The leadership position of Christianity had lasting ramifications on modern society. America was founded by Christians and they passed the hope of a Christian America to their children, according to Lobkowicz. "The ideas of Christianity have become institutions which are rooted in society," he said.

Yet the methods the Church employed to reach their prestigious position are no longer effective in today's world according to Lobkowicz. The Church's inessent drive to convert the world, "caused its downfall," he said. "Christianity has excluded all of the other religions of the world. It was not humble." Lobkowicz said two main paths have been sought to regain the Christian movement. Some say staying conservative will bring on the revival, while others claim that change is necessary for survival.

JIDDAH, Saudi Arabia (AP) — Recent rises in oil prices stem solely from fears of a war, not a supply shortage. Kuwait's oil minister said Monday. Analysts said Saudi Arabia, whose reserves have risen dramatically in the past year, will probably help prevent severe price shocks during a war.

The oil minister for the exiled Kuwaiti government, Rashid al-Ameeri, said at a news conference that oil prices would increase in the event of hostilities. But he said they would not skyrocket to $100 a barrel, as predicted recently by a former Saudi oil minister, Ahmed Zaki Yamani.

Ameri spoke in the Saudi capital, where his government-in-exile has been established since Iraq invaded Kuwait on Aug. 2.

A U.S.-led multinational force has been deployed to Saudi Arabia in response to the Iraqi aggression, and the stand-off is entering its 11th week.

A trade embargo meant to force Iraq out of Kuwait has cut off four million barrels per day of oil exports from Iraq and occupied Kuwait.

Industry experts noted Saudi Arabia, which sits on a third of the world's proven oil reserves, would cut its own production to stabilize the market. The Saudis already have been instrumental in offsetting the shortfall in the oil market resulting from the invasion of Kuwait.

Rise in oil due to fear, not shortage

The kingdom increased its own output by about two million barrels per day to 7.5 million barrels, and convinced other members of the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries cartel to increase their output.

In addition, Saudi oil officials refer to the four strikes made between June 1989 and April 1990 in a previously untapped central region of the kingdom. During that period, official estimates of the kingdom's proven reserves jumped by about 50 percent to 252 billion barrels. Light sweet crude was trading at $37.75 per barrel Monday on the New York Mercantile Exchange. Oil was selling on international markets for about $21 a barrel in July.

Man who staged dog-fight for TV is arrested

J GOLDEN, Colo. (AP) - A man accused of staging a dogfight for a television news report that cost a star reporter her job was ordered arrested on Monday after he failed to appear in court.

The other defendants, former KCNC-TV reporter Wendy Bergen and former station photographers Scott Wright and Jim Stair, were advised of their rights.

The three, along with the missing man, Guy Walker, were indicted by the Jefferson County grand jury in September on 15 felony charges accusing them of staging pit-bull fights and lying to the grand jury.

The fights allegedly were staged for Bergen's series "Blood Sport," an expose of underground dog fighting telecast during the May "sweeps" period when the race for ratings becomes particularly competitive.

Jefferson County District Judge Gaspar Perricone issued an arrest warrant for Walker, who faces two counts of dog fighting. Walker's attorney, Antonio Lucero, said his client did not have transportation to Monday's hearing.

Perricone scheduled a Dec. 14 motions hearing, and gave the Jefferson County district attorney's office another month after that date to respond. No trial date was set.

The judge denied the defendants' request to bar television and newspaper cameras from the courtroom.

Bergen, an award-winning investigative reporter, resigned shortly before a grand jury issued indictments.

Campus Ministry and You

Last Thursday an open letter to the Notre Dame community - signed by many, not signed by more - urged three things:

- if you are gay or lesbian, "come out" to your friends.
- whoever you are, resist all forms of discrimination toward those who are gay or lesbians.
- embrace gay men and women as valuable persons in the Notre Dame community.

The Director of Campus Ministry also wrote a letter that date, expressing some concerns about the open letter, while firmly stating the availability of the Campus Ministry staff to offer support to members of the community who have questions and concerns about their own sexual orientation and identity.

This column wishes to state very clearly that Campus Ministry has absolutely no hesitation in endorsing the second and third points above. We believe that all men and women of all backgrounds are essential to forming, challenging and reforming the University community and that persons never deserve to be harassed because of who they are, what they believe or what they do. This position is consistent with the relational ethic of Jesus, who derided only those who belittled or ridiculed others. Jesus never limited his own embrace only to those fully in accord with his own ethic. Jesus clearly modeled how to support persons without necessarily endorsing or declaiming anything.

We are not sure, however, that it is appropriate for graduate students and faculty members who believe they are already established in their own sexual identities to counsel undergraduates to make any definitive statement about theirs. Recommending premature disclosure is a serious ethical issue. Undergraduates are still ambiguous about matters sexual, and are entitled to be. Undergraduate years are more a time of questioning than answering, and anything that suggests that questioning end and definitive statements be made robs those years of their most precious components.

So, to those of you struggling with the issue of sexual identity and orientation, we suggest an alternative to "coming out": mediate your process of exploring your sexual identity with someone you trust - someone who is safe.

A safe person is one who clearly has no predetermined agenda for you, sits as a friend rather than judge, respects your struggles and does not rush to fix them. A safe person listens with respect and concern. Such a person might challenge us, but we never feel judged or dismissed.

An unsafe person is one who appears to have some personally vested interest in how your life gets played out and is less than honest about that agenda while letting it get in the way of listening. An unsafe person doesn't really listen, but lectures or attempts to control the sharing.

We strongly urge everyone on campus to find a safe person or persons with whom to explore all crucial issues as sexual development and identity. Safely come out with your questions; give the answers time.
Gorbachev wins Nobel Prize

OSLO, Norway (AP) — Soviet President Mikhail Gorbachev won the 1990 Nobel Peace Prize on Monday for easing international tensions, but it raised questions about the future of the Soviet Union.

"If this prize contributes to the peaceful and quiet transition of the Soviet Union to a society of equal nations and citizens, we welcome it warmly," said Vladas Havel, a frequent dissident who became Czechoslovakia's president after the Soviet Union eased its grip on the East bloc.

Toward an era of equal nations and citizens, the Nobel Peace Prize has been awarded to Mikhail Gorbachev, a courageous force for peaceful change in the world.

British Prime Minster Margaret Thatcher called the choice "terrific." And French President Francois Mitterrand said Gorbachev "has played a decisive factor in the easing of tensions in the world."

Some Soviet citizens were less enthusiastic about the honor for Gorbachev. "I don't know much about politics, but what I see in the store, I hold the government responsible for," said Lyova Ily, a 38-year-old Moscow factory worker. "And what I see in the stores is nothing — they're empty."

The 71st Peace Prize was the first in Soviet history. U.S. presidents Theodore Roosevelt and Woodrow Wilson won the award in 1906 and 1919 respectively.

Gorbachev, 64, 20 years a Politburo member, is a full-fledged leader of the Soviet Union and a possible candidate for the Kremlin.

"We know that there are great problems in the Soviet Union, but that is not what he got his prize for," said Gorbachev's aide, Gregoriy Piatkovsky, leader of the five-person Nobel Committee. "The big thing that is happening in the world is the recognition of the superpowers.

"If you will read the text you will see we are talking mainly about international policy," she said.

The committee's citation said the "greater openness (Gorbachev) has brought about in Soviet society has also helped promote international trust."

The committee had made many contributions to the "dramatic changes" in East-West relationships since he came to power in 1985.

"Confrontation has been replaced by negotiations. Old European nation states have regained freedom. The arms race is slowing down and we see a definite and active process in the direction of arms control and disarmament," Gorbachev told a Norwegian TV interviewer his reforms were popular outside the Soviet Union because "the world was ripe for change."

"It had grown tired, the arms race, the hardships resulting from an overload of current problems facing the world community," he said.

In the past five years, the Soviet Union has agreed to reduce nuclear and conventional armed forces, helped scale regional conflicts in Africa, Asia and Latin America, and withdrawn its forces from Afghanistan.

Many world leaders praised the award, several said they hoped it would lead to even more freedom in the Soviet Union.

LOS ANGELES (AP) — The National Enquirer has been telling about celebrities for decades, existing millions of supermarket shoppers with tantalizing headlines about lustful, jilted or displaced stars.

Now, inquiring minds are witnessing the tabloid under siege.

In recent weeks, CBS-TV's "60 Minutes" did an expose, Los Angeles magazine uncovered sources scandal, and Elizabeth Taylor and Brooke Barch have filed lawsuits.

But National Enquirer Editor Iain Calder said last week the tabloid's millions of readers "largest circulation of any paper in America" — needn't worry.

"Readers can expect more juicy headlines on the order of "Princess Di Pregnant, How She Used Food and Sex Techniques To Make Sure It's A Girl."

"You won't see any difference in the way we cover stories," Calder said from his Lantana, Fla., office. "It sort of goes with the territory. Every few years you suddenly get attacked."

"After all these stories are run, within a few days, the stories are Jimi Hendrix story on Bob Dylan."

The current wave of Enquirer-bashing started with the October issue of Los Angeles magazine, which said the tabloid paid sources for stories they had nothing to do with.

The National Enquirer, with a circulation of 4.1 million, maintains it scrupulously investigates stories before publication.

"Basically, what your lawyers tell you is, 'Do you believe it and have you checked it?'" Calder said.

Rod Lurie, who wrote the magazine article, said he obtained a 10-page list of Enquirer payments and sources. Many of the sources insisted they never supplied the information they were credited with, according to Lurie.

Calder said the document was "one by one by one, they all told me what was going on. When they did, they were 'sources.'"

One of those sources was Stuart Goldman, a writer charged with unauthorized entry into a Fox Broadcasting Co. computer in an unrelated case. He was identified as an investigative reporter in a '60 Minutes' piece on the Enquirer.

"I received about 12 checks for stories I didn't work on," Goldman said. "When I question, it, they said, 'Don't worry about it. You were probably shorted on other stories.'"

The Enquirer maintains its accuracy has been unfairly questioned.

The Supreme Court upheld the closing of adult stores.

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Supreme Court turned aside free-speech arguments Monday and boosted the executive government’s crackdown on obscenity.

The justices, over one dissenting vote, let stand the forced closing of three adult bookstores and one video rental shop in Virginia under a federal anti-obscenity law.

The businesses’ owners, convicted of racketeering and selling obscene materials, had argued that the subsequent seizures of their properties violated their free-speech rights.

The seizures were carried out under provisions of the Racketeering Influenced and Corrupt Organizations Act (RICO). Those convicted under that law may be forced to forfeit all assets and proceeds stemming from their illegal activity.

Justice Antonin Scalia wrote to hear the business owners’ appeal, but four votes are needed to grant such review.

In other action Monday, the court:

• Rejected the appeal of a former Virginia bookstore convicted in Washington state of aggravated assault for engaging in homosexual conduct while off duty.

• Set aside a Minnesota man’s federal conviction for burning an American flag during a 1988 demonstration in Minneapolis. The justices let stand a federal appeals court’s determination of conviction in light of their decision last June that flag burning is protected political speech.

• Turned down the appeal of two Peotone, Ill., policemen who said they were disciplined unlawfully for wearing earrings while off duty.

In the obscenity and racketeering case, the Virginia bookstore and video rental shop owners are the first ever prosecuted on racketeering charges stemming entirely from obscenity crimes.

Obscenity was added in 1984 to the list of underlying crimes on which a RICO prosecution could be based.

“The court’s determination of the validity of post-judgment forfeiture in this case will have enormous impact upon the future of RICO obscenity prosecutions, both state and federal,” lawyers for the convicted business owners said.

Dennis and Barbara Pryba, owners of the corporations that operated the bookstores and video shops in northern Virginia, were convicted of selling and distributing obscene materials and videotapes worth about $105,000. An employee, Jennifer Williams, also was convicted on obscenity charges.

Dennis Pryba was sentenced to three years in prison and a $25,000 fine.

Barbara Pryba was given a suspended prison sentence and fined $20,000. Williams was given three years probation and fined $2,500.

One of the corporations the Prybas owned also was fined $14,000.

After a separate jury trial, a federal judge convicted Dennis Pryba of racketeering and said he would be allowed to stay in jail while that case was pending.

For people between those extremes, the legislation would result in tax increases in the 1 percent range. That would result from putting higher consumer taxes on alcohol and tobacco, giving up next year’s income-tax adjustment to offset inflation, and raising the amount of wages subject to the Medicare tax.

Economists for the House Ways and Means Committee, which wrote the proposal, estimated its tax changes and cost increases for Medicare beneficiaries would cost the average family $382 next year. Analysts said:

Those with incomes averaging over $425,000 — the richest 1 percent — would face a $13,951 tax increase.

Democratic tax plan to hit the rich

WASHINGTON (AP) — A Democratic deficit-reduction plan under attack from the Bush administration would raise taxes on all but the poorest Americans, socking the richest 1 percent with increases averaging nearly $14,000 a year.

The proposal would cut taxes slightly on those with incomes under $20,000 a year, according to an analysis Monday by the staff of the Joint Committee on Taxation. Those above the $200,000 income level would face a 7.4 percent tax increase.

For people between those extremes, the legislation would result in tax increases in the 1 percent range. That would result from putting higher consumer taxes on alcohol and tobacco, giving up next year’s income-tax adjustment to offset inflation, and raising the amount of wages subject to the Medicare tax.

Economists for the House Ways and Means Committee, which wrote the proposal, estimated its tax changes and cost increases for Medicare beneficiaries would cost the average family $382 next year. Analysts said:

Those with incomes averaging over $425,000 — the richest 1 percent — would face a $13,951 tax increase.

Congressional Budget Office conclusion that the richest 5 percent of Americans saw their after-tax income rise by 3.4 percent between 1980 and 1990.

Unpredictable shuttle prevents peace of mind for riders

By Erin Ryan

The Saint Mary's Shuttle serves many purposes for a wide variety of people. Whether a person is going to class, to meetings, to work or to socialize, the shuttle bus is a necessity. No one really enjoys riding the shuttle, but the fact is that the students of Saint Mary's depend on it for transportation.

Occasionally, Saint Mary's students receive messages in their mailboxboxes concerning cases where women are attacked on "Rape Road." It is strongly recommended that no one walk alone. It is becoming increasingly dangerous to even walk in groups on weekdays, much less at night. If there was an even attack in the early afternoons. This leads more and more to dependence on the shuttle.

The promptness of the shuttle is extremely important. Without being fortunate enough to have access to an alternative form of transportation, such as a car, students at Saint Mary's are easily isolated from activities that are very much a part of their daily lives. Personally, I have missed meetings and been late numerous times because of the unpredictable shuttle. It is particularly important in the cold or nasty weather that the shuttle arrives at its scheduled stop.

During orientation, I vividly remember Saint Mary's assurance that the freshmen and their parents' safety. Every orientation meeting stressed the promptness of the shuttle in order to assure parents that their daughters would not have to walk home.

At about 1:45 a.m., one girl remarked that she had been waiting an hour.

I delegated myself to save these cold and wet people from further agony and ran to the nearest phone to call Saint Mary's Security. I explained to the Security official that the shuttle had not been seen in an hour and asked if they could send a car to begin to transport some people to campus. (We were told, along with our parents, that Security would be available if we were ever in a bind.) I was told that the shuttle had been seen twice that night by Security. I do not know how much time had elapsed since these alleged visions, so the bus was indeed running. The Security office had no explanation for where the shuttle was at the moment. He also would not come pick anyone up, since he knew the shuttle was running.

I told Security that I hoped that "Rape Road" would be safe that night, because there would be several people walking home. I headed back to the Grotto shuttle stop just in time to see the bus pull away. Yes, the shuttle was running, but on whose time? It was almost 20 minutes late, according to the schedule.

Shuttle buses do not run until an hour after football games are over. Rarely do Saint Mary's students go to the trouble of driving over to Notre Dame on a game day; it is the tradition to walk to and from games. After stopping off to visit some friends after the Michigan game, three of my roommates and I headed to the shuttle stop at the Grotto to catch the 1:38 a.m. bus. It was cold and raining so hard I could barely see. There were several other students waiting for the shuttle.

The parents were also informed that if ever one of us did not have a quarter, it would not be a problem. It costs a quarter to ride the shuttle on weekdays and $1.25 for weekends. (It would be a sin to ride without a quarter.) We even offered to run up to our room and bring back a quarter after being dropped off. The shuttle driver made us get off the bus. If all the freshmen parents only knew! Further, do not believe that students should be expected to pay if the bus is not going to arrive as scheduled. Shuttle buses do not run until an hour after football games are over. Rarely do Saint Mary's students go to the trouble of driving over to Notre Dame on a game day; it is the tradition to walk to and from games. After stopping off to visit some friends after the Michigan game, three of my roommates and I headed to the shuttle stop at the Grotto to catch the 1:38 a.m. bus. It was cold and raining so hard I could barely see. There were several other students waiting for the shuttle.

I headed back to the Grotto shuttle stop just in time to see the bus pull away. Yes, the shuttle was running, but on whose time? It was almost 20 minutes late, according to the schedule.

My roommates had waited for me to come back, assuming that Security would be there any minute. They were nice of them, but they did not know how nice they were planning to be until 40 minutes later when the next shuttle resurfaced.

In that 40 minutes, I would estimate that more than 30 people walked back to Saint Mary's. These people did not wait together; they walked in small groups. As this practice is becoming increasingly dangerous, I was not about to walk.

Upon arriving at Saint Mary's, I sloshed over to the Security building mad, wet, cold and hungry. I explained my complaints to the man in the building. The man nodded a lot but did not know really to whom I should go about my problem.

I realize that it is not Security's job to see that the shuttle is on time, but whose job is it? Furthermore, why can't Security come to the aid of students in need? I'm tired of no one doing anything about the situation.

I'm starting to think perhaps a lot of the things promised to our distant, unsuspecting parents on orientation weekend were just a load of blarney. Until Security seems a little more interested in the safety of Saint Mary's students, I doubt I will look at another one of those warning memos as more than required paperwork.

If Security cannot become more responsible and willing to help Saint Mary's students, I may as well transfer to Gainsville. Who knows? Maybe I'll be safer there. The key phrase here is "who knows?" Who knows when Security's negligence is going to lead to a serious, unfortunate situation?

You may be thinking that the Michigan game was a long time ago, and this is old news. The reason I was unable to type this up sooner is that I've been in the infirmary with pneumonia. I can't imagine how I became so sick. Perhaps it had something to do with that cold, wet night when it took me so long to get home.

Students are majority, deserve more parking

Dear Editor:

Parking stakes.

On my path to the law school, I travel through an empty parking lot of one or two hundred spaces. This parking lot is reserved for guests who somehow have priority over students. Who are these guests? Do they pay $13,000 a year? Has anyone told them that they even have a parking lot, or are there only 15 of them? If there are so few, why do they need thirty spaces for each of their cars?

I asked these same questions to an individual in charge of parking and was told that this guest lot was not "in front" of student parking, but "beside" student parking. What? Not only is the guest lot obviously closer to the University campus, but the space was originally for students. I should like to park in this individual's den and proclaim that I am merely "beside" her home.

But how can I complain if students are allowed to park by the ACC. Unless, of course, there is a hot rod show.

Incidents indicate that Security is shortsighted of vision

Dear Editor,

Inmate security is not a new problem here at the University of Notre Dame. I am replying to Julie Scharfenberg’s letter (The Observer, Oct. 8). I agree that something needs to be done to improve security.

However, the students here at ND pay enough tuition to attend this university. I do not think that such a high crime rate is excusable. Yet right beneath it, the dark grounds surrounding the University of Notre Dame. I am not being negative, but I think that something needs to be done to improve security.

On Monday, Oct. 8, I attended a lecture by Professor Hart, visiting from the English Department of the University of California at Berkeley. This lecture was part of the Notre Dame Women’s Center’s 1990 program. Hart is a leading feminist scholar, a woman who has contributed much to the feminist movement.

Hart’s lecture was titled “The Changing Nature of Labor: Women Working in the 1980s.” The lecture was held in the Hesburgh-Skipper Auditorium of the University of Notre Dame. Hart is a member of the National Organization for Women, which promotes equal rights and opportunities for women.

Hart began her lecture by stating that women have been working in the labor force since the 1920s. She noted that this has been due to the need for women to support their families during times of economic hardship. Hart emphasized the importance of understanding the history of women’s roles in the workforce, especially during times of crisis.

Hart also discussed the changing nature of labor in the 1980s. She noted that women have been increasingly entering the workforce, and that this has led to changes in traditional gender roles. Hart emphasized the importance of understanding the ways in which women’s roles in the workforce have changed, and the implications of these changes.

Hart’s lecture was well-received by the audience. Many of the attendees were impressed by Hart’s insights and her ability to communicate complex ideas in a clear and concise manner.

Dear Editor,

I am a woman and a recent convert to Catholicism. While I was in college, I wrote about women leaving the Church (The Observer, Oct. 8). I know of many women who have left the Church because it was a women’s issue.

Sister Coll asserts that the Church does not sufficiently recognize the contributions of women, and that it “victimizes” them. Yet, these other women convert to Catholicism in an attempt to receive praise of themselves as women, nor do we feel that woman is the most important thing. For public recognition of women’s contributions, the National Organization of Women; for our search for truth and our faith in Christ, we have joined the Catholic Church.

Sister Coll cites, as one reason, the lack of recognition of the Church, her concern that the women’s contributions to the Church will pass away as human consciousness. By contrast, God’s knowledge of individuals’ contributions to the Church is eternal.

A gift from an anonymous woman to an orphanage, just one prayer offered by a woman for the Church alone in privacy, or the instruction in Church doctrine given by a woman to her child with a worthy contribution to the Church.

Yet, human recognition of women’s contributions to the Church will pass away as human consciousness. By contrast, God’s knowledge of individuals’ contributions to the Church is eternal.

At Notre Dame, alumni have been involved in organized service programs since the early 1980s, said Peter Pranica, assistant director of Alumni Clubs.

"The goal of such programs is to recognize the considerable talents of Notre Dame alumni and to effect positive solutions in the local community."

According to a video produced by the Notre Dame Alumni Association, the goal of such programs is to recognize the considerable talents of Notre Dame alumni and to effect positive solutions in the local community.

Members of the Notre Dame Club of Detroit have adopted the St. Martin de Porres high school. Other Notre Dame alumni clubs have targeted three areas of emphasis within the school: students, faculty and development.

A typical program matches alumni with students to help continue the school's tradition of sending 90 percent of its graduating class to college. In addition, the club members provide free legal and financial advice to the faculty of the school. Finally, the club tries to meet the needs of the school through donated equipment and supplies.

Programs such as the one in Detroit do "not cost a lot of money... the club uses its resources and connections to effectively serve the needs of the community," said Pranica.

In San Diego, Notre Dame alumnus Dr. Dennis Negro '59, provides plastic and reconstructive surgery free of cost to those cannot afford the procedure. His work is part of a program called Project Fresh Start, which is promoted by the local alumni club.

The Notre Dame Club of Washington, D.C., joins with other schools alumni groups to assist the Sursum Corda housing project. Alumni provide physical maintenance as well as legal and financial assistance which will allow the residents to become owners of the property.

Other programs that Notre Dame sponsors include Christmas in April, a one-day intensive program in which skilled and unskilled volunteers refurbish homes in a target neighborhood, Pranica said. Over 3,000 alumni, students and faculty participate in this yearly project.

In addition, alumni participate in the Summer Service Project program. Notre Dame students travel across the country to work in service agencies such as soup kitchens and homeless shelters and earn tuition scholarships for their work.

The local alumni clubs provide funding for the scholarships and support for the students who come to their cities.

In the future, the alumni office at the University hopes to become a clearing house for different types of service options for alumni clubs. Hopefully the alumni office will develop a register of information so alumni clubs will be able to access information easily, Pranica said.

The James F. Andrews Conference provided an opportunity for representatives from alumni associations across the country to exchange ideas and information.

The conference was named in honor of a 1961 Notre Dame graduate and co-founder of the Universal Press Syndicate. Since 1981, a fund established in Andrews' memory at Notre Dame by his wife and friends has made possible undergraduate student participation in Summer Service Projects.

Representatives from the University of California at Los Angeles, Duke University, Indiana University, Yale University, Iowa University, Princeton University and Notre Dame conducted sessions about alumni service opportunities.

John Kobara, executive director of the UCLA Alumni Association, spoke to the group about UCLA's unique adult illiteracy program. UCLA was the first alumni association/university in the country to start a national adult illiteracy program.

"It's a new way of bridging and connecting alumni back in the institution," said Kobara.

UCLA's alumni association has distributed handbooks about the program to 250 universities across the country. Former Los Angeles Lakers' basketball player Kareem Abdul-Jabbar serves as the program's national representative and First Lady Barbara Bush has recognized the efforts of the program. The program is underwritten by General Telephone Corporation.

The final phase of the program is making UCLA's quarter of a million alumni aware of the opportunity, said Kobara. The other phase includes the recruitment of tutors. So far over 700 volunteers in the Western part of the U.S. have been recruited.

Starting a program such as UCLA's illiteracy project is very easy because the alumni association is relying on existing networks, Mr. Kobara said.

A new illiteracy program at Iowa University was discussed at the conference.

The Adult Literacy in Iowa Volunteer Effort (ALIVE) program is state-wide in Iowa, however, the University hopes to expand ALIVE to include Iowa alumni across the country, said Diane Baker-Gruwell, assistant director of alumni continuing enrichment and community service.

After hearing the success of Notre Dame's programs, Iowa also hopes to start an adopt-a-school program and organize a Christmas in April project in the future.

At Yale University, alumni participate in Summer Service Projects similar to the program at Notre Dame. Last summer was the first year of the program and the response was incredible, said Nina Gilekson, associate director for programming at the Association for Yale Alumni.

Alumni club members picked out the project sites and provided support for the students during the summer, she said. For the first year, Yale alumni clubs paid for one-half of the scholarship money.

Conference sponsors hope the meeting will become an annual event as the concept of alumni service networks continues to spread to universities and colleges across the country.

Alumni service programs are catching on because they capitalize on "untapped resources," Kobara said. "With 50 million highly educated people in the United States...we have to utilize that resource."

The Observer
LOS ANGELES (AP) — Fans held their breath as the Los Angeles Raiders survived against the tenacious Seattle Seahawks, and stadium security forces tried to make sure fans held their liquor someplace else.

The results after a one-game beer-sale ban imposed at Sunday's NFL game at the Los Angeles Coliseum:

— Fans 24, Seahawks 17.
— Attendance 50,624; beer sales 0.
— Police citations outside stadium 66; fan incidents inside stadium 4.
— People caught with alcohol at gate 24, tickets confiscated 24; 14.

"We want beer!" chanted the crowd in the third period to protest the one-game ban on alcohol, imposed in an effort to halt spectator violence. Signs among the fans included those reading "Bite Me, Send Beer" and "I Know Beer.

The alcohol ban was approved by the Coliseum Commission after a Pittsburgh Steelers' fan received a near-fatal beating during a Sept. 23 game between the Raiders and Steelers.

LaDonnarecht, 35, of Tustin, Ariz., was hospitalized for more than a week after the attack. Sheriff's investigators were assigned to investigate the beating, and police were scheduled to arrive late Monday.

Police said there were six arrests and 24 fan ejections from within the stadium Sunday after fans were searched upon entry and any beer or alcohol found was confiscated. Authorities said two of the arrests and 24 of the ejections were alcohol-related.

The numbers were well below the 31 arrests and 88 ejections at the last previous home game, Sept. 30 when the Raiders beat the Chicago Bears 24-10 and there was beer sales.

Los Angeles City Councilman Zev Yaroslavsky, one of the prime supporters of the alcohol ban in the stadium, said during the game: "The atmosphere is better now and there are fewer incidents basically, this is becoming a detoxification facility.

Although 84 people were ticketed outside the Coliseum on Sunday for violating the alcohol ban, "there were no reported incidents," Los Angeles Police Sgt. Steve Lalosco.

Lalosco said the only apparent incident inside the Coliseum on Sunday came when a Raiders fan allegedly spit on a Seahawks fan and was arrested for battery. The names of those involved were not made public.

The police spokesman said officers roaming near parking lots and sidewalks in the area gave citations to 84 fans for possessing open containers of alcohol and drinking in public.

Also, a greater number of security guards and police officers were on duty during the game, officials said.

The Raiders have been making arrests and ejections at games this season. The public address announcer last week had the first names and last initials of all 18 fans who were ejected from the stadium, said during the game: "The atmosphere is better now and there are fewer incidents basically, this is becoming a detoxification facility.

One man said Sunday that his binoculars were checked to make sure they contained a flash. Another fan was seen walking in holding a sports bottle but neither fit nor that fan's backpack was checked.

A female fan noted a positive side effect of the ban. "There was no line in the bathroom," she said.

And the lines were short at concession stands, where before Sunday's ban the beer lines represented about 30 percent of concession revenues.

"It's a big ticket item, but public safety comes first," Yaroslavsky said.

CINNITAN (AP) — Players aren't the only people with World Series butterflies. CBS is nervous, too.

The network is practically a rookie when it comes to the World Series, since it hasn't broadcast one since 1950. And the ratings were down a bit in the first three games.

"We had only a four-game series in the NL," said Jeremy Hammond, CBS' executive producer for program planning. "The NL is a good league, but started a little bit slow. Generally speaking, we're pleased."

The six prime-time playoff games averaged a 13.5 rating, down 10 percent from last year's night games on NBC. CBS is up $10.4 billion over four years for baseball and that's one of the biggest contracts in history.

"I think they're getting hurt on the baseball deal," said Fred Anschel, an analyst with Dean Witter Reynolds Inc. in New York. "I don't want to sound chauvinistic, but the fact that no New York or Los Angeles team is in it always takes something away."

CBS nervous as it prepares to broadcast first World Series since 1950 fall classic

CBS producer Race LaCivita and producer-announcer Ed Gehron weren't thinking about that when they poured around Riverfront Stadium at 9 a.m. Monday.

A half dozen more monitors preview graphics, but CBS has even built a small set behind the fence in left-center field for just such a scenario.

"It's better than my, you know, my own studio," said a CBS employee who didn't want to be named. "Larry Tisch will like that."

Tisch, the chief executive officer of CBS Inc., is known more for cut fastballs than big hits. He hasn't seemed to mind spending money on sporting events, since CBS's regular prime-time schedule has been slumping longer than the Atlanta Braves.

CBS even asked people think of television, they think of pictures. But one distinction of CBS playoff coverage was the audio.

Mark Radulovich, known as Mr. Music in the truck, has four microphones pointed at the infield, two in the right-field bullpen, four in the outfield and another in left-field bullpen.

Several replay cameras also have adjacent micros.

ANN ARBOR, Mich. (AP) — Dave Parry, the supervisor of Big Ten officials, has apologized to Michigan coach Gary Moeller for a blown call that sealed the Wolverines' 28-27 loss in Michigan State, costing them the No. 1 ranking and a clear shot to the Rose Bowl.

"He was just calling up to say how he felt about the matter that they had talked to the officials," Moeller said Monday during his weekly news conference. "I told him they missed it. He said they missed it on the pass interference."

The play in question came with six seconds left in Saturday's game. Michigan, which had just scored to pull within a point of the Spartans, tried to win the game with a two-point conversion.

But receiver Desmond Howard was bumped and knocked down by defender Eddie Brown, then dropped the pass from Elvis Grbac after hitting the ground.

There was no flag from the officials indicating interference and no signal indicating Howard had possession long enough for a catch. Thus, the score remained 28-27.

Moeller said Parry assured him that tapes of the play would be sent to every Big Ten officiating crew.

"So what can I say to him?" Moeller said.

The crew, headed by referee John Nealon, was the same that worked the Illinois-Ohio State game a week earlier. Illinois won that game when no flag was thrown on an apparent forward lateral that went for a touchdown.

"There's nothing wrong about official is if you don't have something, don't call it," Moeller said. "So if you don't throw the flag, then you never saw something."

"It's the same thing that happened to us at Notre Dame. Maybe we'd be better off having a problem on defense, so if he fell down they'd think something happened.

"Something's got to be done, obviously, but I don't know what. I don't think it's a matter of people trying to cheat."

Moeller was asked if he thought college football was ready for instant replay, like the NFL.

"I think it's ready for it, but I don't know if we can afford it," he said. "What do you do if that game's not on TV? What do you do with schools that can't afford the equipment?"

"There's got to be a reason for this happening and there's got to be a solution. But I don't know if it's instant replay. Does the NCAA mean the Mid-American Conference has to have instant replay? Does Adrian and the other Division III schools?"

Moeller said he won't dwell on the subject.

"We've got to tackle," he said. "If we did that, there wouldn't be any problem with the officiating."

"We don't even have a military draft in this country," said Steinberg, "but we draft football players. We really need to see systems like free agency. Free agency is free enterprise."

Anticipating concerns that players would draft inward to lie agents associated with winning traditions, some players might not like the traffic and smog in Los Angeles, or the pressure in New York and would choose to live somewhere like Green Bay. You also wouldn't have Joe Montana, Jim Kelly, and Dan Marino competing for the same spot. Associate Athletic Director and SIF of Notre Dame, Roger Valdeserri, speaks on sports agents in the Notre Dame community, emphasizing the education of Irish players.

Saint Mary's volleyball wins one loses two; Concordia falls while Nazareth and Calvin are victorious

By EILEEN MCGUIRE

The Saint Mary's volleyball team came out with a win after Thursday's struggle against Concordia College. The Belles came back strong after a first game defeat (13-15, 15-13, 15-12, 15-6). However, over the weekend, the Belles lost to Nazareth College on Friday (15-1, 15-7, 15-11, 15-13) and to 11th ranked Calvin College on Saturday (8-15, 11-15, 1-8, 10-15).

"set goals to really improve on backcourt defense. We have made some strides and I've really set a very strong effort defensively," said head coach Sue Medley.

During Thursday's match, co-captain Kathy Kilkila led the team with 28 kills, 20 digs and 4 service aces. "We were very successful going outside. She is our outside hitter and we went to her over and over again," Medley praised.

In the matches against Nazareth College and Calvin College, the problem was the_inconsistent structure. "We need to compete every point of every game of every match," explained coach Medley. "We're playing in stress and against win giving the teams the early leads we've been giving them."

Sophomore Karen Lutron performed well during the matches against both Nazareth and Calvin. Against Nazareth she had 16 digs, five blocks and two service aces. Against Calvin, she came up with 13 kills, 11 digs and 11 blocks.

"The girls are working hard to prepare for the matches," assistant coach Medley. "We need to concentrate on executing once the match starts."

The Belles will wrap up their home schedule with a 7:00 pm match against Division II University of Indianapolis on Tuesday, October 16.
PHILADELPHIA (AP) — Rich Gannon and Cris Carter threatened to step into the NFL's Survival Bowl into a homecom­ing Monday night.

Seth Joyner, William Frizzell and some funny bounces spoiled it.

The Philadelphia Eagles beat the Minnesota Vikings 32-24 Monday night, scoring twice in a 59-second span late in the fourth quarter to overcome deficits of 12 points at halftime and nine with four minutes to go.

But then Randall Cunningham threw a 40-yard touchdown pass to Fred Barnett that bounced off both Michael Brinn of the Vikings and Calvin Williams of the Eagles. Then Joyner sacked Gannon and Clyde Simmons recovered the fumble on the Minnesota 6 and Anthony Toney burst in for the winning score with 4:01 left.

And Frizzell, who earlier had recovered a fumble and stopped a drive with a sack, added a key interception as he returned 33 yards to the Minnesota 5 with just over two minutes left and set up Roger Ruzeck's clinching field goal with 1.53 left. The 19-yarder was Ruzeck's fourth of the game.

That left the Eagles at 2-3 and the Vikings at 1-5 in a battle of two playoff teams fallen on darker days. Minnesota's five losses have come by a total of 21 points.

Until the last-quarter heroics, it was a night for Gannon, who learned his football on the playgrounds of Northeast Philadelphia, and Carter, cut by Philadelphia in September despite 11 touchdown receptions last season.

They combined for touchdowns of 42 and 78 yards as the Vikings jumped off to a 21-9 halftime lead and 24-15 until the final four minutes.

Gannon, who has started the last three games for the injured Wade Wilson, was 18-for-35 for 270 yards, his best game as a pro. Carter, inserted in the lineup after Anthony Carter injured a hand in the first period, caught six passes for 151 yards after having just three catches for 30 yards in the first five games.

Two other former Eagles, Ken Clarke and Thomas Strauthers, chipped in with three of Minnesota's five sacks, two by Strauthers.

"Ma" deflected the ball and jumped right up to retrieve the ball again.

"My goalkeeper was wonderful," said Belles head coach Mary Alice. "She played a really good game.

"We all played a really good game," added O’Neill. "We played a quality game.

"Noatre Dame expected us to be of low caliber but we came in and gave them a run for their money,"

Saint Mary's faces Indiana University-South Bend on Friday and Mary Alice O'Neill will continue to guide the growing and tough Saint Mary squad.

Locker room policy heads list of various controversies

CHICAGO (AP) — National Football League owners will open two days of meetings Tuesday to discuss media relations policies and hear committee reports on a variety of subjects.

Commissioner Paul Tagliabue will chair the meetings that are expected to end Wednesday. "Locker room policy will be reafirmed," Michael McCaskey, president of the Chicago Bears, said. "The commissioner will stress the importance of a good relationship with the media. The public has the right to know and get the feel of what has happened on the field.''

The owners also are expected to hear committee reports on realignment and expansion, tampering rules, and the situation concerning international games involving the World League of American Football.

McCaskey said the financial committee would study ownership policies and if there is a need for any changes. None of the issues are expected to be resolved until the March meetings, McCaskey said.

The popular issue will be the one concerning locker room access, especially by women reporters, in view of the incidents involving the New England Patriots and coach Sam Wyche of the Cincinnati Bengals.

Lisa Olson of the Boston Herald recently claimed she was harassed by members of the Patriots and Wyche drew a heavy fine from the league for incidents involving the New England Patriots and coach Sam Wyche.

The Cleveland Browns and Buffalo Bills have allowed female reporters to attend practices throughout the seasons.

The Irish, meanwhile, host Michigan on Saturday morning after break, and both of those games will be difficult. Wooster is also up for a Division III tournament bid. It will be difficult to play them after break.

The Irish, meanwhile, host Calvin College from Kalamazoo, Michigan on Saturday morning at 10 a.m.

The Notre Dame Sailing Team will have a meeting today at 6:30 p.m. in Room 205 O'Shaug.

The Notre Dame Sailing Team will conduct a football concession stand this weekend in front of Dillon Hall. They will be selling food. "The Cause" t-shirts, as well as their own team t-shirts.

Steinberg contends athletes are no different from other entertainers.

BY DAVE DIETMAN

Steinberg is not the intensity, money-grabbing person that a top sports agent is often assumed to be. Rather, he believes that the sports business is too often devoid of morals that most people take for granted, and as if to prove it, donated his speaking fee to the Center for the Humane.

Referees have to blow the whistle at the end of game.

The National Hockey League season has just begun. The National Basketball Association will soon kick off its season. And I have something I have to get off my chest about both sports. It's the off-season. It stinks.

In the NFL, the fighting is a problem, of course. But forget about that for a second, and think about something that is more universally despised. In the last four minutes of a close game the officials swallow their whistles. They are afraid that they will decide a close game by giving a team a penalty. This is the equivalent of the Irish. This gives the goats of the game the liability. What can be a fast-paced game turns into a game that is sad joke. It is vaguely reminiscent of roller derby.

The NHL officials would decide to take the initiative and literally blow the whistle on the jerks who rule the close game for fans. I would enjoy hockey a lot more if referees didn't run it for me.

The NBA is not much better. When playoff time arrives players are allowed to attack each other viciously on breakdowns, drawing only personal fouls for potentially career-ending injuries. For instance, on the play last year when Chicago's Michael Jordan was viciously pulled to the ground by Detroit's Dennis Rodman in the Game Two of the semfinals of the NBA Playoffs, Rodman didn't even draw a personal foul instead, he was voted defensive player of the year. Not that the Bulls didn't commit their share of hard fouls; center Bill Cartwright is one of the worst offenders in the league.

Speaking yesterday, along with Notre Dame Sports Information Director Roger Valdescott, at the Notre Dame Law School, Steinberg emphasized that sports is simply a sector of the entertainment business.

"People ask me if I think professional athletes make too much money," said Steinberg, "but you never hear them complaining when Michigan Jackson makes $100 million a record, or when Sylvester Stallone makes $17 million for a movie like Rocky."

Steinberg was adamant in his view that sports should be treated like any other type of business, with regard to pay scale and a player's free choice where he wants to work.

"The concept of worth isn't the social value we place on it, but the competitive market value for the label."
