Kurdish leaders in Baghdad try to negotiate a peaceful settlement

REBEL HEADQUARTERS, Northern Iraq (AP)—Leaders of four Kurdish groups are in Baghdad trying to negotiate a peaceful settlement to the rebellion against Saddam Hussein, rebel sources said Saturday.

The talks started Friday after Saddam expressed readiness "to discuss everything with the Kurdish side except secession," said one source close to the Kurdish leadership. All of the sources spoke on condition of anonymity.

The Kurds had been reluctant to negotiate, fearing Saddam would reserve on agreement once his government recovered from its shattering defeat in Kuwait.

But a spokesman for one Kurdish group said rebel lead­ers were spurred to act by the plight of hundreds of thousands of Kurdish refugees who are struggling against cold, hunger and disease in the mountains bordering Turkey and Iran. The refugees fled their homes in northern Iraq when Saddam's forces crushed the rebel uprising, which began after Iraq lost the Gulf War.

The United States and other Western nations are sending troops into northern Iraq to build camps for the Kurdish refugees and protect them from the Iraqi army. But the allies made clear they would not intervene to help the Kurds' re­bellion, and Kurdish leaders have conceded they could not topple Saddam without foreign help.

A rebel source said the lead­ers went to Baghdad after con­sulting with the permanent members of the U.N. Security Council — the United States, Britain, France, China and the Soviet Union.

"They were asked whether they would be prepared to guarantee any agreements reached with Saddam and some have already agreed to do so," the source said. The source would not give any specific de­tails.

A U.S. diplomat at the United Nations, who also spoke on condition of anonymity, said she was unaware of any discus­sions with the Kurds in New York. But she said the perma­nent members had a regularly scheduled meeting scheduled Monday and that the Kurdish situation had been a prominent topic in their recent meetings.

The White House said Saturday it had no knowledge of the meeting in Baghdad, but did not object to talks that might lead to a peaceful return of the refugees.

"If the Kurds are able to work out an arrangement for their safe return, then obviously we would welcome such a development," White House spokesman John Herrick said.

Paula el-Deen Kaka'a, a spokesman for the Kurdistan Democratic Party in Damascus, Syria, said the trip followed meetings between the Kurdish groups and a delegation from the Iraqi government.

He said the Kurdish leaders included Jalal Talabani of the Patriotic Union of Kurdistan, Massoud Barzani of the Kurdistan Democratic Party, Saedi Abdul-Rahman of the People's Party of Kurdistan and Rashid Mumend of the Kurdish Socialist Party.

Talabani, who negotiated a cease-fire with Saddam to end unrest in 1984, was the only man not granted amnesty by the Iraqi president following Saddam's 1988 campaign against the ethnic group.

The Kurds' main demand is full respect for a 1970 agree­ment granting them full auton­omy in their region. The leaders also want a truly democratic and pluralistic political system in Iraq and an end to the dictatorship of Saddam's Arab Socialist Ba'ath Party, sources said.

Hearing others is as important as being heard

I have been described as being "non-confrontational." I can't decide whether or not this is good. I guess it could be good in the sense that it means I let things blow over and not let them get under my skin. I can't imagine how long Asistent News Editor is a good thing even if the time something bothered me I flew off the handle trying to rectify it. But being "non-confrontational" can be bad too. It implies that when something really does need to be said, I would rather go on being rather than face the core of the problem. This isn't a fair analysis of me, though. There have been numerous times when I thought I might explode if I didn't tackle the problem at hand.

So, when these occasions do arise I stand up to whatever it is and say my peace. This isn't a fair analysis of me, though. There have been numerous times when I thought I might explode if I didn't tackle the problem at hand.

Krier wins Sheedy award for teaching excellence

William Krier, associate professor of English, has won the 1991 Sheedy award for excellence in teaching in the College of Arts and Letters at Notre Dame.

The award, endowed by an anonymous donor, has been given annually since 1970 in memory of Rev. Charles C. Sheedy, C.S.C. former dean of the college.

"Hill Krier has established an exemplary record as a teacher in his department and for the college as a whole," said Michael Loau, O'Shaughnessy dean of the college. "This award honors not just his teaching of literature and film," he added, "but also his commitment to improve the Arts and Letters-Science Honors Program and other college-wide programs."

A 1965 Notre Dame graduate, Krier received his master's in American Studies from the University of Michigan and his doctorate in English literature from Indiana University. He joined the Notre Dame faculty in 1973 and became tenured associate professor of English in 1976.

Krier served three years as co-director of the joint undergraduate honors program, where in which he worked with a committee to enhance its curricular breadth. Previously, he served six years as director of undergraduate studies in the English department, and he has been co-director of the concentration in film and cultural studies. In addition, he served on a committee that helped revise the Arts and Letters Core course syllabi and on the College of Arts and Letters Council.

In his teaching of literary works and film, Krier emphasizes showing students the method of analyzing a work, rather than simply getting them to memorize and repeat factual material.

"One student told me he found the work of analyzing a novel was easy, that anyone could do it," he recalls. "That's someone who's been successfully taught. He can now pick up a novel, interpret it, and enjoy it. All it takes is basic intelligence and some basic training."

Krier says he is a teacher because he wants to return what he has received from his own teachers. "It's nice to make a living creating more, rather than using up more," he says. "I also teach because I like to think. And that's a good fit for me."

Teaching also energizes him. "Once you get students to think for themselves, they're an overwhelming source of energy."

A major change in Krier's approach to teaching came when he first taught in the Arts and Letters Core course, a year-long seminar taken by all sophomores in the college.

"Before I taught Core, I was part of the star system, lecturing to 70 students and thinking that to be a good teacher meant being a good lecturer. When I began in Core, I didn't know how to keep silent and let the students talk. Once I did, I've come to enjoy teaching much more."

Teaching Core also affected his lecture courses, he says. "I've totally restructured what I'm going to say since I've learned a much different way of relating to students. I used to start by building a series of questions and testing them at the end. Now I start by giving all the answers I have so we can talk about where we're going right away."

"Then the focus is on how we're going to get there, or even whether that's a place worth going," Krier added. "By focusing on method over simple content, everyone contributes to the class, and I'm no longer in control of the mystery of knowledge."

"I hope my students can go out of class convinced they can do things they couldn't do before."

Marines begin building first safe-haven camp for Kurds

SILOPI, Turkey (AP) — U.S. Marines on Sunday began building the first safe-haven settlement for Kurdish refugees in northern Iraq, despite more bitter denunciations from Iran.

As Marines moved into the area of Zakho, Saddam Hussein's troops withdrew as agreed, some even offering smiles and waves to the arriving Americans.

But the Marines were surprised to find 200 Iraqi police in the city. The police pulled out as well, but some U.S. officials objected to the fact that they had been sent to Zakho at all.

"We are very concerned about this new development, the introduction of police forces, which we think is contrary to the spirit of our agreement," said Lt. Col. Bob Flook, a U.S. military spokesman.

However, Marine Col. James Jones, head of the 24th Marine Expeditionary Unit, which arrived in northern Iraq on Saturday, said he did not find the brief police presence "particularly disturbing."

The United States and its allies are bringing in thousands of soldiers to protect the Kurds, who fear bloody reprisals from Iraqi government troops for their uprising against Saddam.

Throughout Sunday, swarms of U.S. helicopters ferried troops and supplies into Zakho, 17 miles from the Turkish border settlement of Silopi.

By afternoon, 32 blue-and-white tents provided by the Agency for International Development had been set up in a lush green meadow, and an American flag flew over the town.

"We will rapidly build this small neighborhood into an entire community," said U.S. Army Major Gen. Jay Garner, the senior U.S. commander on the ground in northern Iraq. He set up headquarters in the newly abandoned garrison of the 44th Iraqi division.

"We are in the job of saving lives and we're going to save lives and do a good job of it," Garner said.

Iraq's state-run press denounced the use of American troops to set up and guard camps for Kurds. More than 1,400 Marines are in Zakho.

"This provocative behavior is blatant interference in Iraq's domestic affairs and a flagrant violation of international law," said the government daily Al-Thawra.

The army newspaper Al-Qadissiya said, "The American Marines are in the job of saving lives and do a good job of it."

"This new development is fragmenting Iraq and imposing a complete U.S. domination over it," officials estimate 800,000 of Iraq's 4 million Kurds fled to the mountains along the Turkish border after their rebellion failed. About 1.5 million are thought to have sought refuge along the border with Iran.

Conditions in the new camps, being set up in lower-lying areas of northern Iraq, should be better than in the mountains, where cold, disease, and hunger have taken a heavy toll among the refugees.

In a sign of the desperate conditions in the mountain camps, Turkey's Anatolia news agency said Turkish troops shot and killed one Iraqi Kurdish refugee and wounded five others Sunday while trying to control a stone-throwing mob near the settlement of Cukurca. The mob broke out as refugees crowded a food distribution point, it said.

The Iraqis soldiers pulled out of the Zakho area after Garner met with an Iraqi general and instructed him to withdraw his forces to a point 18 miles south of the city.

Garner told reporters that the meeting was "professional...strictly business. It was not confrontational."

The first 400 Marines landed in Zakho early on Saturday by helicopter, and the bridge over the Habur River border with Turkey was opened by them before dawn the same day.

Rock musician John Fogerty marries a native of Indiana

ELKHART, Ind. (AP) — John Fogerty, the lead singer of the Creedence Clearwater Revival rock band, got married Saturday night in Elkhart to Julie Lebedzinski, 23, a social worker.

"It was like a musical career, we'd just be like any other couple," said Fogerty, who was married Saturday night at the Elconia Country Club. "I'm probably going to have a pretty boring neighborhood." The rock singer/songwriter met his wife when he was 18.

"I was at a party at the hotel in Indianapolis after the show with a couple of the band members. When suddenly the crowd parted, and there was the most beautiful girl I'd ever seen in my life," Fogerty said. "I always tell people that — it was like this light came out of the sky. She was there with her sister and we sat and talked."

"My sister had asked me to come down to Indianapolis to help her with something, and I knew about this party and I met John there and I brought her back."

Some time later, the pair again met in Los Angeles, where Fogerty was recording one of his hits and Lebedzinski was visiting on business.

"She called me at the hotel and said, 'Hi, this is Julie Lebedzinski. This is Elkhart, Indiana. I started laughing — I knew it was her. We started dating after that, around the end of '86. Fogerty said. "I just remember being in Indianapolis when he married his wife, and seeing her wedding dress in Indiana."

The South Bend-based rock band was playing at the wedding reception.

"I just think they're a great couple. We went to the wedding and it was beautiful," said the bride. "They play a lot of variety, and we go to a lot of weddings, and we're not married!"

"It was good to have an accordion player playing polkas or something," Fogerty said. "I'm just going to be a music teacher in high school, there were many times the trio which included here".

Although they now live in Los Angeles, they won't mind returning to the Elkhart area where she grew up.

"It like here a lot better though. We'll have more weddings down here, I'd be happy if we'd be able to do that or not. But we've considered it."

"We do come back here a lot though," Fogerty said. "I'm a private pilot. I wanted to get my instrument's rating, so this Saturday I decided to do it here rather than out there. And I actually stayed here for five weeks even though Julie was back in California."

"That's when I realized how much easier the pace of life is here. You hear everyone from California and you say, but until you've lived with that congested I really don't know."

There's no more traffic — just getting from one place to another, not sitting in a maze — you're always thinking well, how can I shorten this process, how can I save time?"

"I actually stayed here for five weeks even though Julie was back in California."
WASHINGTON (AP) — Vice President Dan Quayle said Sunday it might be a good idea to prosecute Iraqi President Saddam Hussein for war crimes.

"You can't rule it out," Quayle said on NBC-TV's "Meet the Press."

"Perhaps this would be a good idea," he said. "One of the questions is: who is going to go in and arrest Saddam Hussein once the... crimes are alleged?"

As to trying Saddam in absentia, Quayle said: "It's an idea that is kicking around, and it's certainly worth discussing. But I have no announcement on that this morning."

Secretary of Defense Dick Cheney, on CBS-TV's "Face the Nation," predicted the Iraqi leader "will eventually be replaced," but said that for the present "he still has the only organized military force left in his country."

Both Quayle and Cheney reiterated administration assurances that U.S. troops setting up refugee camps for fleeing Kurdish rebels will remain in Iraq for only a limited time.

Prince Sadruddin Aga Khan, U.N. executive delegate for Iraqi and relief, said on "Meet the Press" that the U.S. operation "is a very limited one in terms of the time frame — like maybe 60 days or whatever."

Quayle declined to specify a time period, but said the United States has "no desire to be there on a long-term, permanent basis."

Cheney said the same, but added that "for right now, over the next few weeks, only the U.S. military has the capability to rescue those people and provide what they need in a very remote part of the world."

He said the operation would be turned over to an international organization such as the United Nations or Red Cross as soon as possible.

Prince Sadruddin said the United Nations and United States "are not working at cross purposes," in the relief effort. "We are not on a collision course."

Cheney said there had been no confrontation with Iraqis, who he said have "actually helped our people in some cases, in terms of identifying places where mines were located."

"We have to be on guard, but at this point everything's going well," he said.

WASHINGTON (AP) — John King, whose slash-and-burn style of politics carried him to the top of the Republican Party in West Virginia, decided to break with the big time in the nation's capital.

He ended up out on the street among beggars and thieves, sleeping at night in a shelter for the homeless.

The 40-year-old former state Republican leader told The Washington Post he came to Washington in 1988. He started Palladin Consulting, a small operation that he made big through post office boxes, fancy mailing labels and mirrors.

But King said his intense personality and undiplomatic style were bad for business. Early last year, it all but dried up and he was evicted by August when he was putting out sweeties.

By October, his money had run out and he was evicted from his apartment and from the homeless shelter, where he called the professor he knew while he was a student in a small, doorless cubicle with several other men, slept on an Army cot, ate when he was given food, and woke up when he was told to.

Night after night, his companions talked about drugs, robberies and prison. One had been convicted of slitting a woman's throat and discussing techniques for using a straight razor.

Ashamed of failure, he stayed away from friends and relatives. "I couldn't face it. I became a man who had lost all my life," he said.

Finally, he began to feed up with the small talk and friends. He cleaned himself up, started seeing a therapist and now is looking for work.

"I wanted to be Henry Ford, not a bum," he told the Post. "I ended up being George Patton with a Valerie Marquis de Sade thrown in for character."

In his political ascendancy, he says he saw himself as a West Virginia version of Lee Atwater, the late Republican political chairman who helped candidates with campaigns criticized for emphasizing negative points.

Dear Editor:

I am joined, I hope, by a sizeable group of people here at the University of Notre Dame in regretting the ending of Richard Phelps' tenure as basketball coach. While everyone is quick to praise on his deficiencies and his last, lackluster season, everyone should be equally quick to remember his exemplary record as a coach utterly beyond reproach when it came to the honesty and integrity of his program.

I am in a position to know a little of the inner workings of the basketball program. I was employed there for two and a half years. I took great pride each day, while watching the evening news detail the violations of yet another college sports program, in knowing that the program for which I worked could stand up to the closest scrutiny. Working, as I did, with recruiting, I can assure everyone that not a single move, whether it be a high school ballplayer without checking and rechecking the rule books, even calling the NCAA offices in Kansas City if there were any questions of interpretation, Coach Phelps' commitment to honesty in recruiting was rock-solid.

I can also assure you that his emphasis on preparing his players for "the real world" came from his honestly-held beliefs that basketball glory was, at best, ephemeral. Digger made a lifetime contract with the young men he brought to this university. Upon their graduation, he promised, they would be ready for the rest of their lives—whatever that future might hold.

Very few college athletes will leave school loving their coach, and, by and large, that's the way it should be. Coach Phelps' athletes, however, will find their respect for what he taught them, by example as well as words, growing as the years go by. That is where Digger's true greatness lies. He has always looked beyond the immediate gratification of winning to his perception of his role as an educator. He would be glad to be remembered more as an instructor of young men than as a "war chief." Take a good look at what Digger's former athletes are doing today. The list is in the media guide. Compare that list with a similar one for any other coach. The record speaks for itself.

No, he's certainly not perfect. Twenty years of having your every word analyzed and quoted does strange things to a man. It stretches many things far out of proportion. But, in the final analysis, Digger hasn't asked anything of his athletes that he hasn't asked of himself. The physical toll this takes on a 49-year-old man is much greater than that on an 18-year-old. He has earned his retirement, if he really desires one, and he can certainly be proud of the fact that those young men who resided here, however briefly, under his guidance have received something of value from his basketball program, whether or not they ever have the insight to realize it.

Let's not make the mistake of letting Coach Phelps leave without our thanks and respect. He could have been Jim Valvano—no, we would have wanted him to.

Phelps deserves respect for his integrity

Student thanks Digger for his accomplishments

During the Phelps era student-athletes were students first and athletes second. Also, you can a clean program without any hint of the scandals so prevalent in "the business." But clearly you viewed the young men you worked with as more than commodities or instruments; you treated them as men.

I hope that, in looking back over your career, people remember not only your win-loss percentage but also the graduation rate of your players, the fact that you avoided foul play, the opinion of your peers and your treatment of those you worked with. Good luck in your future endeavors and thank you for what you have done.

Dear Editor:

The Catholic University has declared this year to be "Year of Women." In this year, the University has made a genuine desire to recognize the contributions and achievements of women. There has been, however, one glaring and tragic omission: The reference to women should have been more meaningful in its promotion. It has been gratifying to see the University in the midst of a deliberate commitment to honor women.

In January, several of my colleagues and myself—men and women, liberal and conserva­ tive—signed the letter to the Faculty Senate that would spark a discussion of women's issues. The theme was "Honoring Our Sisters: The Economic Disparities of Women Enter the Economic Equation." The response has been disappointing. When the committee attended the full Faculty Senate, it was not permitted to present its findings. Few summaries have explained otherwise, other than that honoring women would be "divisive" or "show a lack of balance." Could it be that women at Notre Dame are facing a crisis?

Can it be that Notre Dame with its "Year of Women" has decided to ignore the issues that women employed outside the home are facing? Has the "Year of Women" theme made "advancement and achievement for women synonymous with "out of the home and away from the family"? Is the only measure of success in a Catholic university the material rewards of work in the marketplace? Has the well-intentioned desire to hail the achievements of women been manipulated and taken over by a one-sided partisanship sympathetic to the family?

The Faculty Senate's treatment of this issue is essentially insensitive and ill-considered, but the more insidious is the Faculty Senate's actions may be found in the ecclesiastical teaching of the Catholic Church. In the words of Pope John Paul II: "While it must be recognized that women have the same right as men to participate in various public functions, society must be structured in such a way that wives and mothers are in practice compelled to work outside the home, and that their families can live and prosper in a dignified way even when they themselves devote their full time to their own family."

Cardinal Kinsella, in his pastoral letter "Concerning the Family," has exhorted Catholic women to "prepare for a vocation of service to the community and the Church."

I hope the University will rectify the needless wound and the needless disrespect that has been inflicted on women who serve their families and their society at home with their family. Indeed, the University, in completing the year of women, must instruct us in the expectations of the "Year of Women," a mentality which honors women more for their work outside the home than for their work within the family must be overcome."

Welcome to an evening of cultural beauty and talent. Welcome to Africa Night.

The evening began with the pleasant aroma of an assortment of African dishes provided in an all-you-can-eat, buffet style. With much to choose from, several guests who were willing to try everything carried two plates overflowing with the spicy food.

By SHONDA WILSON
Assistant Accent Editor

After this pleasant atmosphere of mood music, chatting and eating, people settled down in their seats to witness the central feature of the evening, New York actress Vinie Burrows, who has appeared in several Broadway shows, offered Broadway productions, and international festivals.

Burrows presented a one-woman show, entitled "Sister! Sister!" which, as she says, uses "the raw materials of women's experiences and a variety of accents and dialects to transform the bare stage into an international study of the dignity of human beings."

That is exactly what happened. The audience began in the gloomy boredom of Stepan center and traveled to an African village, to El Salvador, and to an African-American home, to name a few of the cultures explored. Scenery had nothing to do with this transformation as it consisted of only a single chair with a long green length of cloth draped over it.

The transformation was the result of Burrows' beautifully descriptive words that invoked active participation from the audience in the performance by engaging their imaginations in an international journey. Just as the scenes changed, so did the personality of Burrows who presented fragments of women's lives of various nationalities.

Burrows entered the stage in her beautiful African costume in a manner that shone with brown. She carried a green candlestick holder and burning candle singing, "More Than Two Billion Women in the World." The message of the song was that somehow these two billion should come together as one strong unit.

Immediately following this call for unity among women, Vinie Burrows presented her one woman show 'Sister! Sister!' at Stepan Center Saturday night.

And it's a popular war. The mother thinks that because of the hatred that the daughter is carrying around, she is sick. Evidently the mother and daughter don't agree on very much.

The mother thinks that because of the hatred that the daughter is carrying around, she is sick. Evidently the woman and daughter thinks that you have sick, I would not have sent her to the university, or "child should come together as one strong unit."

The older woman realizes that her mother is the "sturdy bridge that I crossed over on." The bond between these women, despite their differences, demonstrates the bond that Burrows hopes will develop among women throughout the world.

With this theme revealed, Christopher Kougznizone, President of the Notre Dame African Student Association, showed that the bond between women should also be evident between all men and women. There should be such a unity between men and women because as Kougznizone said, "if women did not exist men would be without hope and therefore without life."

After the performance, the evening ending in a whirl of African dances and buffet. As Kougznizone said, "Everyone...[shook] their body as we...[celebrated] the equality of women to men and the unity between the two.

Dorms battle at Regatta

By ELIZABETH VIDA
Accent Writer

After last year's summer-like weather, you couldn't help but hope that even after a week of winter weather, the Fisher Regatta would bring sunshine and warmth.

Unfortunately, the miracle of beautiful weather eluded St. Mary's this year. Temperatures barely climbed above fifty degrees, and for those lucky enough to get an afternoon swim, it was much colder.

The Observer/Keith Walsh

This year's event, like past Regattas, showcased both the wild and sublimity in floating crafts. St. Edward's Hall's two story house boat, complete with stairs and a barbecue, stole the show, winning the "most original entry." No detail was forgotten, including astroturf grass, sofas, and a tiny doghouse boat christened with the name of a particular women's dorm.

In contrast, the elaborate of simply huge (like Keenan Hall's "room-without-a-ceiling" boat), there were two boats this year that were smaller and subtler. Knott Hall's "Four Girls on a Board" definitely would have won the prize for the most cost-efficient boat.

Fisher Hall took the Regatta Cup, remaining men's champions. Their boat featured aerodynamic styling with lightweight aluminum sides connected by wooden slats. Lewis Hall also successfully defended the women's championship.

Serin Hall offered an alternative to the standard wooden raft. Their boat consisted of five heavy duty plastic garbage cans, with lateral support provided by four wood beams.

"The Otter Express" looked great until wakes from the Regatta officials' motor boats capsized it one hundred yards from shore, before the race. Buckets were required to bail out the five garbage cans.

Both of Dillon Hall's entries could be described as unusual, and certainly not aerodynamic. One boat sported a large white wire structure, which looked like nothing in particular except perhaps scaffolding. It sunk while docked at shore, soaking the entire crew.

The other Dillon boat, which used a lake to power the boat, spied more concerned with sabotaging other crafts than winning the race. They used a hose to douse any competing crafts within reach. The amount of water balloons thrown at other dorms' boats prompted one observer of the Regatta to comment, "It's not a race, it's a war."

Stanford's "Duck" (right) paddles around St. Mary's lake while St. Edward's (below), winner of the most original entry, parades on their house boat.

According to Ted Stumpf, co-editor for the event, "This was the first year all of the dorms participated, with thirty boats total."

About the weather, which forced the picnic to be cancelled, Stumpf said, "Turnout was really good considering there was no picnic and the weather was so cold. We'd like to thank everyone for coming and we're looking forward to an even better Regatta next year."

Lyght goes fifth, four others follow

ANAHEIM, Calif. (AP) — Five Notre Dame players were drafted in the first four rounds of Sunday's NFL Draft.

Irish star Chris Zorich went home to the Chicago Bears, while linemate Bob Dahl was picked up the Cincinnati Bengals. Running back Ricky Watters will join former Irish star Joe Montana in the 49ers organization. Raghib "Rocket" Ismail was selected by the Los Angeles Raiders, as the 10th pick of the draft.

The supposed one-two combination of Todd Lyght and Raghib Ismail was scrapped when Rocket signed with the Toronto Argonauts.

The Los Angeles Rams, surprised that cornerbback Todd Lyght was still available, snapped him up with the fifth pick of the NFL draft Sunday.

The choice of the Notre Dame defender was relatively obvious since the Rams were among the worst in the league last season in pass defense and are planning to go to a more aggressive scheme that will require solid man-to-man coverage by their cornerbacks.

Heading into the draft, Los Angeles coach John Robinson said of Lyght, "We don't expect him to be available, but we'd be happy to take him."

"The last two or three weeks, we made scenarios," said Jeff Fisher, the Rams' defensive coordinator who was hired away from the Philadelphia Eagles during the offseason. "Todd Lyght's name never came up. We thought Cleveland would take him with the second pick."

The Browns, however, chose UCLA safety Eric Turner. The Rams then thought Denver, picking fourth, might take Lyght.

"As soon as Denver took Mike Croel, there was no question who we would take," Fisher said. "We thought Lyght was one of the best players in the draft, and a lot of people had Rocket Ismail and Lyght as the best two players available in the draft." Robinson said Lyght would certainly have a chance to be a starter his first season with the Rams. Fisher sounded as if he expects him to be.

"In our scheme, you have to be smart, one, and tough and aggressive, two," Fisher said. "Lyght is both of those."

Lyght also was surprised he didn't go before the fifth pick, but he said he was happy things turned out the way they did.

The Notre Dame softball team continued its winning ways this weekend, sweeping two games, a streak which has coincided with an awakening of their hitting.

Following its twinbill with Dayton (2-22) 8-1 and 42 runs in taking two each weekend, sweeping its third doubleheader in four days.

Since Tuesday's split with Indiana State, however, Notre Dame has belted out 57 hits and 42 runs in taking two each from the Pumas, Loyola and now the Flyers.

"The two losses to Detroit were frustrating because we know we are much better than they are," said senior first baseman Kathy Vernetti. "I think we took it upon ourselves personally to do something to get our bats going."

"One factor is that the teams we've played recently haven't had the pitching quality we've faced earlier in the season," added senior outfielder Megan Folsom and Rachel Crossen all knocked in runs.

"We hit the ball in bunches in this game," said coach Brian Boulac. "Christy Connoyer especially had a big game."

In the nightcap, Notre Dame rallied from a 2-1 deficit with three runs in the fifth inning to grab the victory. The Irish struck first, as back-to-back walks to Laurie Sommerlad and Fay hurt Baiard's one out later when Casey McMurray rapped an RBI-triple to right.

Dayton countered in the fourth. Curnutte belted an RBI-triple off Carrie Miller (6-5) to score the first run, and Kelli Lyman followed with a single, bringing home Curnutte and giving the Flyers the 2-1 lead.

But in the fifth, Sommerlad led off with a single. Crossen knocked her in with a double and Fay followed with a sharp single to left to plate Crossen. After McMurray singled to put runners at the corners, Fay came home on a Dayton throwing error on a double steal to put Notre Dame ahead 4-2.

They started the scoring early, getting three runs in the sec- ond, but the Flyers answered in the bottom of the inning to close the Irish lead to 3-1.

Notre Dame upped the lead to 5-1 in the sixth as second baseman Christy Connoyer—who went four-for-four in the game—tripled to lead off the inning and scored on third baseman Debbie Boulac's grounder to the right side. Catcher Amy Folsom followed with a single, and one out later, came home on Vernetti's single.

The Irish racked on three more insurance runs in the sev- enth as Fay, Folsom and Rachel Crossen all knocked in runs.

From there, Miller shut the door on Dayton, allowing only five hits for the game—three in the Flyer fourth—to earn her third consecutive victory.

"It took us a while to jell together as a team," Vernetti said. "We still have a lot of work to do offensively, but we're improving every game."

Returning home from their 15-game road trip, the Irish faced a similarly hapless Dayton team in the last two games of the weekend.

In the opener, the Irish scored their first run in the second inning when crossen tripled to right and scored on third baseman Astrid Boulac's grounder to the right.

FAR SIDE
The precarious weather in Indianapolis never produced rain. But the Irish baseball team took the city by storm, sweeping a four game series from the hosting Butler Bulldogs. Highlighted by solid pitching, Notre Dame (26-12 overall) climbs to 9-2 in the MCC conference with first-place Detroit (11-1 in conference play) within sight.

Irish coach Pat Murphy saw significance in the team's performance against the mediocre 13-22 Bulldogs. "Butler is having their best season in some time. They beat Evansville twice, as well as Indiana and Purdue."

"To win 12 straight certainly is encouraging. Also, winning all four games on the road against any team is tough. We're gaining our confidence right now..." said coach Pat Murphy.

Notre Dame set a dominating tone early in the first game, scoring four runs in the top of the first off starting pitcher Scott Metzinger; then proceeded to rattie him for 11 runs, courtesy of four pivotal Bulldog errors, in the next three innings. Irish sophomore lefty Chris Michalak (9 strikeouts) and freshman Robert Arguello combined for the seven inning shutout.

The Irish and pitcher Alan Walania cruised through the second game. Walania (8-4) allowed only one run, that coming in his ninth inning of work, where he was relieved by right fielder Eric Danapolis, to preserve the 5-1 victory.

First baseman Joe Binkiewicz, continuing his phenomenal hitting streak (25-46 in his last 14 games) by going 7-15 in the series, stroking a homer in the second game.

"Binkiewicz is unconscious; I'm afraid to wake him up," Murphy added.

Incredible though it may seem, his 11 homers in the last 12 games fail to do him justice. "He had three homers taken away from him by the wind (which blew in the entire series). One went for a double and two were outs," explained Murphy.

On Sunday, Binkiewicz began ND's attack with a lead-off walk. A Cory Mee sacrifice, a stolen base and a Mike Coss single brought home the first run. Continuing his aggressive play, Murphy had Coss steal second. Dan Bauch then came through with a single, which caused an errant throw and the second run.

That was all sophomore right-hander Pat Leahy needed. He completed his seven inning on a schedule.

LOS ANGELES (AP) — The fastest player in football is now the richest.

Raghib "Rocket" Ismail spurned the Dallas Cowboys on Sunday and signed the most lucrative contract in pro football history with the Toronto Argonauts of the Canadian Football League.

Toronto owner Bruce McNall said Ismail's contract includes a guaranteed $18 million in U.S. dollars over four years and incentives that could increase the value of the deal to more than $36 million.

The speedy wide receiver-kick returner from Notre Dame said there were several reasons he chose the CFL over the NFL, but one of the most important was financial security for his family.

"I'm going to make my family happy," said Ismail, runnerup in last year's Heisman Trophy voting. "Regardless of how things turn out for me, they're going to be able to live comfortably and not have to worry about anything."

Ismail, who skipped his senior season at Notre Dame to turn pro, replaces San Francisco quarterback Joe Montana as football's highest-paid player. Montana makes almost $4 million per year.

Most people expected the Cowboys to make Ismail the No. 1 pick in Sunday's NFL draft, but the second set of NFL offices instead approved negotiations with Ismail before dawn. The Cowboys obtained the first pick in a trade with the New England Patriots.

"We made good faith negotiations with the Rocket, but the numbers were totally out of our range," Dallas owner Jerry Jones said. "We found out pretty quick he was headed for Canada."

Some of the incentives in Ismail's contract are based on his ability to boost attendance for Toronto games in the SkyDome. McNall denied reports that the package also includes condominiums in Toronto.

"I felt that if we can add people in the stands, it's a very sound investment," McNall said. McNall hopes that Ismail can do for the Argonauts what Wayne Gretzky has done for the Los Angeles Kings, another team that he owns. Kings attendance has skyrocketed since Gretzky, a part-owner of the Argonauts, signed a $15 million contract in 1988.

Despite the high expectations, Ismail said he feels no pressure.

"I'm determined to enjoy everything that's happened to me, to laugh and succeed," he said. "I'm going to do my job and not worry about anything."

McNall's reputation as a generous owner also influenced Ismail, who joined Magic Johnson in the owner's luxury box.
