Jury acquits defendants of most counts in Denny trial

By LINDA DEUTSCH

The Independent News Service of Notre Dame and Saint Mary's

The jury convicted Williams on simple mayhem, with a maximum penalty of up to eight years in jail. In the charges decided against him, Watson was acquitted of all but simple assault on Denny, a lesser related offense. The maximum penalty is a year in county jail rather than prison.

The jury acquitted the defendants of most charges that required specific intent. Defense psychologists testified that Williams, 20, and his 29-year-old co-defendant acted in the heat of the moment and couldn't have planned their actions.

The verdicts were read, with Williams sitting calmly in the courtroom's front row, staring with a blank stare. He was found guilty on an aggravated mayhem charge against William's conduct, which could have brought him life in prison. Williams clapped his hands over his eyes, reared back in his seat and hugged his attorney.

The jury found that Watson, who had been held since shortly after the riots, tried to kill Denny, the count that could have brought him life in prison. "I am in total agreement with the jurors," Denny told The TV tabloid show "Inside Edition," "They should let the guy go. He spent a year-and-a-half in jail and has had time to think about what happened." He said he wouldn't comment on Williams until the jury finished deliberating.

As the verdicts were read, members of the Student Senate, Women's Basketball Team and women's crew sat on the floor, waiting for the decision.

The Student Senate supported students' right for dorm initiations

By ANALISE TAYLOR

In an attempt to foster both dorm and school spirit and to avoid further deterioration of the level of social activity on campus, the Student Senate passed a resolution last night supporting the right of dorm students and student groups to conduct initiation rites in accordance with University policy.

"The Student Senate's approval of the proposal is a signal that the student body does not approve of the administration's high-handed tactics in this matter," said District 3 Senator John Lyons.

Supporters of the resolution said that the new policy against initiation is ambiguous and needs clarification.

"I think it's a communication problem, not a total ban of initiation rites," said Joe Casaday, director of the Student Activities Board. "This ban can be done in an appropriate manner on the campus." Other concerns addressed included printing problems in computer clusters and security for the parking lots. A representative of the computer systems on campus, told the Senate about problems in the computer clusters on campus.

"We need to do something to be more responsible when they print," Lyons said.

If students continue to print numerous copies of papers and flyers, they may not be able to purchase other computers and materials.

How the Clinton health plan will affect the insurance benefits given to Notre Dame faculty and staff is not known at this time, due to many qualifications for the plan which will be defined, according to Roger Mullins, director of Human Resources.

According to the current draft of the plan, entities that employ more than 5,000 people will be exempt from entering the health alliances that the plan will use to pool together many small employers of a geographic area. The goal of the alliances is to give small employers the insurance purchasing power that large employers have had in generating lower rates.

But the number of hours an employee must work per week to count in toward the figure may vary, depending on whether the insurance company's test for health alliances, as it is if the student employee figure will be included in the composite figure for coverage. Or if the figure will include only traditional, regular employees.

Notre Dame currently employs 3,200 regular full time workers, 400 regular full time workers, 3,200 regular full time workers (adjunct and research professors), 7,800 regular part time workers, and 200,000 part-time workers, according to Mullins. Those figures combined for the 1992-93 school year are in excess of 10,000 W-2 forms last year, he said.

While Mullins is kept from determining the benefit plan that Notre Dame currently has for its employees, he is most likely to work at least 20 hours a week. A question determined that those workers who--not including those hopes for the health alliances--will extend benefits to the 3,000 regular full-time workers, 173 regular full-time workers and more than 4,000 non-regular part-time workers. As of August 1992, Mullins said, those workers are not covered.

According to Mullins, the University and its employees independently of the alliances, said Mullins. But no health care policies are more favorable suits the needs of the University and its employees independently of the alliances, said Mullins.

Seniors are behind the eight ball

If you are a senior, if you will be a senior, in one two, you are once a senior, if you in any way have any association with a senior on this campus, you understand frustration.

But the process of getting a job involves mass frustration. And so, to quell their frustration and answer their questions, seniors take the Career and Placement plunge.

Career and Placement, located at the end of a long hallway in the basement of Hesburgh Library (for those of you still trying to find it), is a fantastic service. Fantastic if your years at Notre Dame have enabled you to figure out exactly how to spend the rest of your life. Career and Placement is here for those focused seniors. Before you start talking, have the twenty dollars and proclaim, "Gimme a job!"

However, if you are an Unsure senior trying to decide what you want to be when you grow up, come this way. There is an alternative service as informative, reassuring, and frustrating as Career and Placement does not exist; The Eight Ball™.

Yes, this physical black toy-wonder manufactured by Tyco could easily replace the advisors, book publishers, lists supplied by Career and Placement. The Eight Ball™ is ideal for seniors because they seek definite answers to their special circumstances.

Before you ask the orb your deepest query, there are a few rules: Do not attempt to drink the liquid contained inside of The Eight Ball™. Prolonged use of The Eight Ball™ can lead to mental retardation. During your interview for a job, do not taunt The Eight Ball™.

"Here is the start to the biggie, "Will I get a job?" Shake the ball, stare into the circle window, wait for the blue bubbles to clear away and read your fortune.

You feel good. You love this hand-held advice source. "A good baby, talk to me baby, talk to me," Well.

Next question, "Will my job be something I want to do?" Shake it again, hold your breath and read, "Do not question the answers." Shaken, not stirred, you grab your dwindling hopes and say, "I will make as much money as I can to live on my own and not at my parents' home for the next seventeen years?" This is it, your dream job.

Okay. So maybe The Eight Ball™ is too honest. Granting that The Eight Ball™ is not going to coddle a senior and hold his/her hand. The Eight Ball™ just tells what it sees.

You may be frustrated with The Eight Ball™. You want to hurt it against the wall. Guess what you can do with that with The Eight Ball™. You cannot do that with an advisor or prospective employer.

Go ahead and check it. But, that will be the end of The Eight Ball™ and you won't be able to ask too many questions. There will be no more toys for you. You will have to act like an adult. You will probably have to don a suit, print a resume, and interview.

I'm not bitter, I'm just a senior.

Three dead, two wounded in Fort Knox training center shooting

Fort Knox

A man went on a shooting rampage today at a Fort Knox training center, killing three civilians and wounding two others, authorities said.

A man described as a suspect in the shooting later wounded himself at a Veterans Affairs Medical Center in Louisville, a homicide detective said. All five shooting victims were civilian employees at the Army base, said Army Spc. William Lurwick.

The Army did not give any other information about the shootings or a possible motive.

Fort Knox officials issued a bulletin for a man whose address was listed in nearby Radcliff.

The search for the gunman later led to the VA medical center in Louisville, more than 15 miles away.

"The man who was found here in a bathroom is a suspect," Lurwick said.

Spike Lee objects to defense of Danson

Spike Lee thinks Whoopi Goldberg is confused in defending boyfriend Ted Danson's blackface routine at a recent Friars Club charity roast. Danson created an uproar earlier this month at a Fort Knox training center, chief homicide detective for the Fort Knox Police Department said.

The victim called on the United States to help Turkey solve trade between the neighboring countries.

"There's just no way she can defend what transpired," Lee, a filmmaker who often focuses on racial issues, told an audience Sunday at Colby College. "There's just no way she can defend what transpired." Talk show host Montel Williams quick the orb, "Well, duh, Club over the skit. Mayor David Dinkins line."

The vast majority of married Americans don't cheat on their spouses, a sex researcher says, disputing claims that about 50 percent of married or previously married Americans have cheated on a spouse, estimates Tom Smith of the National Opinion Research Center. Perhaps 3 percent to 4 percent of husbands and wives have a sexual partner outside their marriage in a given year, said Smith, director of the center's General Social Survey. "There are probably more scientifically worthless 'facts' on extramarital relations than on any other facet of human behavior," Smith said Monday in a report at an American Enterprise Institute seminar.

Turkey says embargo hasn't hurt Saddam

WASHINGTON

The U.N. embargo against Iraq has hurt the Turkish and Iraqi people but not Saddam Hussein, Turkey's prime minister said Monday. But, if the embargo had hurt Saddam Hussein as much as it has hurt us," said Tansu Ciller in remarks at the National Press Club. Ciller said that Saddam, "in a sort of mysterious way, is becoming a hero in that region." The American-educated leader called on the United States to help Turkey solve economic problems from the embargo, including the closing of an oil pipeline and an end to lucrative cross-border trade with the neighboring countries.

Moscow

Russia plans to continue dumping low-level radioactive waste at sea, despite promises to Moscow's repeated promises to halt the practice. Japan disputed assertions by Russia that it gave advance warnings of the dumping and that it is unimportant.

A Russian ship dumped more than 237,000 gallons of liquid waste — more than enough to fill an Olympic-size swimming pools — into the Sea of Japan over the weekend, just days after President Boris Yeltsin agreed with French President Francois Mitterrand that such dumping was harmful. The dispute threatened to undo much of the goodwill generated by Yeltsin's recent visit to Tokyo, although environmental officials said the Russian president was not informed of the dumping in advance.

Alumna encourages to have family, career

By JENNIFER LEWIS
News Writer

Gloria Ybarra, came back to Saint Mary’s yesterday after 18 years in encouragement to women they can have both a family and a career. In her lecture "One woman’s path from Saint Mary’s student to lawyer, judge, and mother,” Ybarra, a Saint Mary’s graduate of 1975, described her plight from motherhood to judicial work.

Ybarra will be speaking again on Wednesday, Oct. 20, in Haggar Center.

Ybarra went to a large urban high school in Arizona. She was the senior student body president and a honor roll student. For personal reasons, Ybarra spent her first two years at Arizona State University. A friend told her about Saint Mary’s, she looked into it and decided to apply.

"In order to help others I needed to learn," Ybarra said.

While at Saint Mary’s, Ybarra participated in student activities. She was a government major and intended to go to law school. Her senior year she received a scholarship to Notre Dame Law School, which confirmed her interest in law.

A professor told her to apply to a "dream school," a school that was within reach, and a school that she could definitely get into, which was Harvard, Notre Dame, and two other colleges in Arizona, she got accepted to all of them. Ybarra felt a great deal of loyalty to her home state, however her choice was Harvard.

"I felt a really strong responsibility to lay the path, not only for my Saint Mary’s women, but for all women," Ybarra said. "What I gained there was access and lots of open doors."

After graduating from Harvard she was offered two jobs in Washington D.C., declining both of them. Ybarra returned home seeking a career in politics. Soon after her return, she got married, and decided to get pregnant. She went off to the side and worked in a small firm in Arizona.

Ybarra said she was getting impatient waiting for her chance in the courtroom, so she transferred to a U.S. State Attorney. After a year of practicing law she switched to the drug enforcement department. At the time Ybarra was in her late twenties, married and a woman in a three. Three things not in her favor at a male dominating agency. She was on call for four years 24 hours a day.

"They all didn’t look like Don Johnson," Ybarra said, "but some of them did.

In 1984, she began applying for a judicial position. It was necessary to have practiced law for five years and to be over the age of thirty. Ybarra barely made both of the requirements. She applied six times and was asked to be interviewed three out of the six.

"I was too young, too brown, and too pregnant," said Ybarra in response to her first interview.

She was asked whether she was planning to have any more children and if she could handle being not only a judge but also a wife and mother. Her favorite question was "who is going to take care of your husband?".

She said she could have easily answered them of discrimination, considering they could not ask male applicants these questions. "I think it’s important to ask those questions, even though I wanted to," she said.

On October 18, she was the youngest judge ever to be appointed, in addition, she was eight in a half months pregnant. Three weeks later all kind of law, including criminal and domestic relations, she said.

One night she went out to dinner with her children, and began to explain her schedule of the week. Her oldest son replied, "You the only mother that doesn’t pick up us at school."

"I think it’s important to relate to students that they can benefit from a volunteer program," said Gibbs, a 1992 graduate from Trinity College in Washington D.C.

Gibbs has been on the campuses of Notre Dame and Saint Mary’s on a three-school tour talking about her experience as a case manager at a homeless shelter. Gibbs has been personally and professionally as a transition from college to postgraduate volunteer work.

"I am so impressed by the number of students who are interested in volunteerism," Gibbs said. "Volunteering is a way to practice faith in a concrete and lively way, according to Sister Betty Smoyer, a campus minister at Saint Mary’s."

"A particular benefit is the chance to live together with men and women in a community that is spiritually based," Smoyer said.

Gibbs visited the campus to invite the Notre Dame and Saint Mary’s communities to offer their gifts talents, and services to people in need, according to Smoyer.

"It flows from the very heart of the mission of Catholic colleges and universities," Smoyer said.

"Students can get more information about the program through contacting Sister Betty," Gibbs said. "It’s a campus Ministry, or by writing to v . Notre Dame Mission Volunteer Program.

employees chose to accept its health plan. The University's current package is a flexible benefit program that offers four insurance packages, allowing for employees to choose the best health insurance program for single or family needs, said Mullins. Faculty and staff may choose from two HMO (health management organization) options, a combined $300 single and $600 family deductible program, and a combined $600 single and $1200 family deductible program.

Note Dame is self-insured, meaning that it uses an insurance company purely as a third party administrator to pay claims according to the University's benefit design. Due to its size, it is most beneficial for the University to be self-insured, as it grants both the participant and the employer more flexibility in benefit programs, said Mullins. Note Dame is the largest employer in the area, and as so can negotiate the preferred rates because of its self-insured status, he said. But, effective Jan. 1994, the University will modify its employee coverage offerings.

The reasons for this change are to be in a better position to be responsive to the national changes coming with Clinton's plan, to ensure maintenance of a quality program, and to stabilize the cost of insurance, said Mullins. Under the new plan, the University will offer a choice of an implemented PPO (preferred provider program) with the option of the two deductible choices or a partner HMO program, according to Mullins.

According to both plans, employees also have the option to not accept coverage. PPO membership entitles members to choose care from a list of doctors and to pay for single services as according to the choices of deductibles, according to Buton. HMO membership requires members to choose a primary physician for health management. Under the HMO, doctors may not bill for each service, but instead paid one flat fee, he said.

Haiti roundup

President Clinton skipped new sanctions Monday on military and police leaders he said were blocking the return of democracy to Haiti. Clinton also vowed to "vigorously oppose" efforts in Congress to restrict his ability to send troops to the stand nation.

Sanctions

Sanctions he imposed at 11:59 p.m. EDT Monday on Haiti's leaders of the United Nations agreement:

• Ban on supply of petroleum or petroleum products to Haiti, excluding small quantities for use in cooking or "essential humanitarian needs."

• Ban on supply of weapons and ammunition.

• Ban on supply of military vehicles, equipment and spare parts.

• Ban on supply of police equipment and spare parts.

• Freeze of assets abroad of Haiti's de facto authorities or "their agents."

Oct. 8, 1991: A worldwide oil embargo on Haiti is authorized by the U.N. Security Council. The effect of the embargo is to freeze of assets abroad of Haiti's de facto authorities or "their agents."

June 23, 1993: A military coup topples the de facto regime of Raoul Cedras.

Aug. 27: U.N. Security Council votes to impose a new sanctions Monday on military and political leaders of Haiti for their opposition to the return of democracy to Haiti. Clinton also vowed to "vigorously oppose" efforts in Congress to restrict his ability to send troops to the stand nation.

Alumnae Association is important for the furthering of our school," said Sanford, who has had many relatives attend Saint Mary's. "We need to understand where we came from and where we need to go."

Today's festivities will give students and faculty the opportunity to do so, as they will focus on the history and origins of Saint Mary's.

"It is a neat thing to see where our roots are, and to understand how we differ from Notre Dame," said Kiley Cible, senior class representative to the Student Alumnae Association.

Students will also be able to learn about the joint efforts of Mother Angela Gillespie and Fr. Edward Sorin to make Saint Mary's College the institution that it is today.

Peacekeepers fire warning shots in four unrelated incidents

By MICHELLE FAUL
Associated Press

MOGADISHU

U.S. soldiers fired at an armed group that approached their base Monday, and U.N. troops fired warning shots in three other skirmishes as a nine-day lull in fighting appeared to fray.

There were no signs the incidents were related. Isolated grenade, mortar and gunfire attacks over the past week or so have been tied to clans fighting in Mogadishu and have not appeared aimed at the multinational peacekeeping force.

This port on the Indian Ocean had been at its quietest in four years since militiamen of warlord Mohamed Farrah Aidid shot down two helicopters in a battle that killed 18 American soldiers Oct. 3. Aidid spokesmen said more than 300 Somalis died.

Outrage in the United States over the toll persuaded President Clinton to choose diplomacy over military force. Aidid called a cease-fire last week and released an American pilot and a Nigerian peacekeeper he was holding hostage.

A U.N. spokeswoman, Capt. Dawn Kilpatrick, said no one was injured when American troops opened fire as 10 armed Somalis approached their "Sword Base" in southwestern Mogadishu.

"They fired warning shots, and the Somalis...all fled," she said.

But journalists said up to four Somali men who appeared to have been wounded in the incident were being treated at Be nadir Hospital.

Kilpatrick said she had no reports of casualties.

Monday morning, Turkish soldiers guarding an entrance to the U.N. compound in southern Mogadishu fired into the air when people started throwing stones at them, she said. The crowd dispersed and there were no casualties.

Earlier in the day, a Somali tried to sneak into the U.N. compound through barbed wire. He fled when peacekeepers fired over his head, Kilpatrick said. Soon after, another Somali tried to sneak in at another part of the compound, with the same result.

Kilpatrick said a mortar round fired from near the southern neighborhood of Medina exploded Sunday night near the national stadium. No U.N. troops were in the area and there was no word on casualties, she said.

The peacekeeping force stopped ground patrols and cordon-and-search exercises to round up weapons after a land mine was discovered last month on the main 21 October road at the perimeter of the city.

Military convoys in Aidid-controlled southern Mogadishu have been limited to essential missions since Oct. 3.

Instead, the United Nations has stepped up aerial surveillance by U.S. helicopters equipped with radar and night-vision devices.

A group of U.S. reporters based with U.S. military personnel in Mogadishu was dissolved over the weekend.

SOPHISTICATED technology along with the rising expansion of the information superhighway has left many mass media carriers dumbfounded about their future, with one executive at Chicago's Ciccone, managing editor, telling The Associated Press, "We are the vandals of the future." The newspaper industry is one of these carriers which must change their ways in order to survive in the electronic age of media. Ciccone said last night at a dinner sponsored by the Society of Professional Journalists. The increase in accessibility of electronic news to the general public will force newspapers to abandon their reliance on advertisements and circulation as their main motive for sales and focus more on the world, he said. This trend may lead to "tailored newspapers," centering the focus of the paper on one central section. "It is the only way to keep a lack of focus has caused an enormous loss of circulation and a loss of advertising, according to Ciccone. Past high prices paid by advertisers based on circulation numbers will no longer exist, he said. A drop in circulation has resulted in advertisers turning to more specialized and direct mail in order to reach their target market more quickly and efficiently.

By one while hundred-year-old companies such as Peacock (Jewelry, Inc. in Chicago) folded because they couldn't continue their newspaper advertising. Avid, a direct mailing company was taking accounts and retailing revenues by one hundred and ten percent, while charging four times as much as newspapers," said Ciccone.

The only manner that advertisers will stay with newspapers is by keeping the readers interested in the newspapers, according to Ciccone. For example, a central section which keeps existing grouped together could be the key in the future.

"We (the newspapers) will have to ask the readers want they want," commented Ciccone. "Do you want art or do you want stats on the Notre Dame, all of that. We'll give you the package if you ask for it," he explained.

Ciccone said that these "tailored newspapers" could cut down on disturbing information and allowing papers to cut down on minimal amount to advertisers.

There must be a clear definition as to what interest for the advertisers to reinvest in newspapers, he said. "The newspaper is not any high quality piece of writing."

"A two part series on just one sports story could be much more valuable than running a page long story," he said. "It's nuclear weapons in China every day," said Ciccone.

This is an issue that cuts from the smallest business to the largest corporation, re-reverses the IRS position on the tax treatment of hedges - transactions used by businesses to protect themselves from fluctuations in interest rates, foreign currencies and commodity prices.

Faced with an unfavorable and unanimous U.S. Tax Court ruling in June, the IRS said it is considering revoking its 20-year-old position that prevented businesses from taking tax losses of many hedging transactions.

The decision resolves potentially hundreds of disputes between the IRS and business and reduces potential tax collections by billions of dollars a year.

"The Internal Revenue Service agreed to a tax break for business taxpayers that could cost the government billions of dollars in revenue.

This one nation's largest banks lowered its prime lending rate a half-percentage point to 5.5 percent Monday, bringing the widely watched rate to its lowest level in more than two decades.

Other major U.S. banks didn't immediately follow the lead. Pressed by Guaranty Co.'s lead, but analysts expected they would follow. However, analysts who doubted the rate cut would nudge debt-wary consumers to pull out more loans, and in turn spur the Federal Reserve economy.

The prime rate is used to calculate the interest on loans to small- and medium-sized businesses. It also affects some consumer loans, especially home equity loans and credit cards.

People have been interested in paying down debt rather than increasing it, said Raphael Soifer, a banking analyst at Brown Brothers, Harriman & Co.

The rate cut could actually hurt some consumers, if it prompts banks to lower the interest they pay on deposits. Bob Heady, publisher of the Bank HR, said the banks could expect he paid on short-term deposits to drop by 15 to 20 percentage points in coming weeks.

While other interest rates have fallen dramatically, banks had become skittish about lowering prime. They reasoned that due to their prudence in the past, they wouldn't be able to retain enough loans to compensate for the increased profits on each loan.

In addition, banks worried until recently that inflation commission, Cup and Airport, the Federal Reserve's lower short-term interest rates.

Morgan Guaranty said in a statement Monday that it acted after considering loan demand, the banks' cheap cost of funds and new guidelines for continued low inflation.

Harris and Trust Savings Bank in Chicago, a medium-sized bank, and the Bank of Montreal's U.S. division, a large bank, followed the Fed's lead, but no other big banks took immediate action.

Dear Editor:

I am writing in response to William McDonald's letter, "Alcohol Awareness Week is purely a Puritan propaganda ploy," the Observer, October 14.

While a few of McDonald's points are sound, he takes others to an unfortunate extreme, and ends up laying too much blame in too many places where it simply does not belong.

His recurring emphasis is Puritan Fundamentalism, which he writes is lobbying not just against drinking irresponsibly, but drinking altogether. It is, is this really a bad thing? Personally, I do not drink, which will probably discredit me in the eyes of some. I did not write this, however, to damn drinking.

The vast majority of the alcohol consumption I see on this campus is, in fact, responsible, and I have great deal of respect for those students like McDonald who know their limits. But abstinence from alcohol should not be played off as something bad. Both drinking intelligently and not drinking at all are sensible options, and there is nothing wrong with either.

The purpose of Alcohol Awareness Week is inherent in its name, and the very fact that it is a week rather than a single letter was written shows that it is serving that purpose: informing people of the dangers of excessive alcohol consumption. If these "Puritans" wish to condemn drinking altogether, that is their prerogative, and they should not be chastised for that decision, just as McDonald should not be chastised for choosing to drink responsibly.

To blame these Puritans for the problems of excessive drinking, however, is oversimplifying the bounds. His contention that they force underage drinkers to do so "in secret" is ludicrous at best. First of all, those who are underage are technically breaking the law by drinking at all. So if SUDS officers raid parties and issue tickets, then they are justified in doing so.

Underage drinkers take that risk by "hiding their mugs" in the first place. Secondly, to retort, why is not drinking at all not an option? I'm sure there is a contingent of dry students like me who get along just fine without booze.

He also asserts that the government should lower the legal drinking age. This is a complex issue. Congress probably sees the huge problem that underage drinking is across the country, and not just the Notre Dame-Saint Mary's community, where it might not be as severe. Consequently, Congress is reluctant to equip those who have already demonstrated irresponsibility with such a powerful implement of destruction.

McDonald's views should be respected, and for many, his attitude toward drinking should be emulated. However, his universal damnation of alcohol abuse may be disagreed with.

Drinking can cause alcoholism, violence, rape and death. That is the intended focus of this Week. We are all entitled to our opinion on the issue. But we all should be aware.

Does legislation affect our social values?

Another way to show the oddness of Warner's reasoning is to turn it around. Is it true, for instance, that legislation designed to oppress American blacks would have no effect on racism?

Is it true that legislation designed to promote abortion would have no effect on people's biases towards the unborn?

Is it true that legislation designed to suppress Catholicism in the United States would have no effect on non-Catholics' biases towards Catholics?

Is it true that legislation designed to promote rape would have no effect on women?

If Warner thinks that legislation has no effect on social attitudes, would he support these types of bills?

Isn't the whole point of legislation to express our institutional and social values? If so, then how can it not have an effect on those values?

Two ‘mediocre’ pieces condone homosexuality

Dear Editor: Two mediocre pieces (The Observer, Oct. 14) drew my attention and deserve a close analysis. The first is a light-witted column by Kirsten Dunne, which I contend supports gays, lesbians, and bisexuals. The second, and more asinine, is Kirsten Dunne’s column on Notre Dame, Oct. 7.

The common theme running throughout the front page piece was “tolerance” and the “Notre Dame Family.” Bowers claimed that “This makes no statement about morality.” This proposition is as ludicrous as it is false.

If “Today’s published statement...recognizes the need for openness...and support for...minorities” (The Observer Oct. 7) understanding, as apparently Bowers and the other Notre Dame faculty do not, that this is a lie, he cannot say people are guilty to a wrong.

What the published statement asks us to do is support that the opposite is wrong. Therefore, a “statement about morality” despite Bowers’s protestations, I find it fascinating that Professor Bowers does not recognize that words gay and lesbian in the same breath as family, wherewith its context.

Aristotle, the classical source for moral theology, was quite explicit in his Politics that the most fundamental unit of nature is the household, which consists of a man, woman, and eventually children. A real family - a family consistent with nature - requires a male and female. This, therefore, can be no procreation.

To be sure, by artificial means (i.e. adoption or genetic insemination) a “family” can be created. But the natural course of nature’s providence, but are “artifacts”, or “man-made”.

The legitimation of homosexuality is to denigrate the natural ground for the family itself, and to affirm both is to condone itself absolutely. When St. Aquinas speaks of the sin against all nature, not just human nature, he speaks of sexual lust which he calls the own annatari of crime” (Q.94. Art.3), “contrary to sexual intercourse, which is natural to all animals, is unlawful of which has received the special name of the unnatural crime.” That two “Fathers” who condone homosexuality is absolutely disgusting. It is, I believe, blunder worse than the crime.

One would suppose that a “Catholic” college, and especially its priests, would follow Rome in these regards. The papacy has been unequivocal in its condemnation of homosexuality.

While I do not advocate violence against homosexuals, or harassment, they should not be recognized in any way as a legitimate minority. Through their these “Fathers” have evidenced a blindness to the very grounds of natural law, and thereby the grounds on which the authority of the Church is in moral matters.

As for Dunne’s piece, she wants to “re-examine” what is “preconceived notions we accept little change, but it has also:” Again the theme of the “Notre Dame Family” is trotted out.

She is not “attempting to gen- erate about men, about homo- sexuals, or about anyone” though we live in a “homopho- bic world” of “blaming” people attempting to “cover up or gain approval of feeling that” bashers themselves might have.

Sexual intercourse is supposed to be kept in the confines of marriage.

Some heterosexual tendencies. I have several comments though.

The first is that I think homosexuality is unnatural and disgusting, it does not mean that I fear them. I have a natural revulsion at people who engage in unnatural acts. It does not follow that I feel pedophiles or fear to become one. Also, “homophobia” is a neologism and misnomer. According to the proper rules of English, “homophobia” should mean the fear of sameness which is at that, fear. It is, like many other terms, an attempt by liberals to redefine reality by ignoring nature.

Besides this, Dunne provides an absolutely incomprehensible method of interpreting the Bible. She claims that, “I do not contend that it has lost its (the Bible) validity.” I firmly believe that we must interpret it in light of the twentieth century, just as we do with other ancient writings.” Sorry, Dunne, but a philologist you aren’t. What does it mean to interpret an ancient text in “light of the twentieth century”? Whose twentieth century? According to modern Communist whose premises are set in the Communist Manifesto? Or should we go with the trendy deconstructionists? Postmodern? Classicist?

Besides this, what would it mean to understand, say, Plato’s Republic in such a century? That we would understand Plato better than he understood himself? It would seem strange that I, a mere law student, just because of the passage time can understand one of the greatest minds in the history of mankind, better than he understood himself? Wow, now it would seem everyone is a genius, or at least smarter than Aristotle, Aquinas, Plato... Regardless of any of the foregoing, the simple fact of the matter is that, as a logical necessity, the affirmation of homosexuality can only come at the cost of sexual morality.

Sexual intercourse is supposed to be kept in the confines of marriage. Homosexuals, because they can never form a real, natural family, can never become married before God, though they might before the Hawaii Supreme Court.

Such a lifestyle cannot be legitimized, let alone ecclesiastically legitimizing the non-marital sex of gays. And, homosexuals and their proponents point out, what goes for the heterosexual goes for the homosexual and vice versa. Thus to remain logically consistent, we would have to affirm the morality of the non-marital sex for heterosexual.

The legitimation of homosexuality is nothing less than the attempt to “liberate” people from the demands of moral virtue as an indiscernible ground for their happiness.

Both articles were banal, trite, and unprofund. Not surprising considering the issue which they attempt to defend. According Kriston Dunne, anyone who thinks that homosexuality is disgusting is a closet, repressed homosexual.

Gee whiz, what happened to the Oedipus complex? Do all of us secretly need heterosexual guys just after both our mothers and other guys? So we are really closet bisexuals? Spare us the psycho-blib-blib. Do we have to force not to generalize about men and other animals, you have done nothing but.

Catholicism does not exhaust Christianity

Dear Editor: The Federal Ministry’s advertisement (The Observer, Oct. 14) is intended to attract the attention of the Eucharist to Notre Dame’s spirituality. Father Tom McNamara writes for the Notre Dame student. He must watch for ways to make those who have been distanced from our church, and who may have no contact at all with our campus, feel more welcome into its sweetness.”

I thought that the chief part of this task would be accomplishing what Vatican II hoped and that McNamara mentioned: making our prayer honest. I believe that an honest prayer and liturgy at Notre Dame and St. Mary’s lack consistency and candor.

One area of inconsistency has to do with the reception of communion. Catholics receive communion at Mass; our CCD classes and (past principal) have liturgy at Notre Dame and St. Mary’s lack consistency and candor.

Is the Mass a meal we share to exclusion of a sacrifice we offer?”

Dear Editor: I’m sick and tired of people like Andrew DeKever (The Observer, Oct. 15) insulting me just because my father gradu­ated from Notre Dame. He and others with this view seem to think I just walked into the Admissions Office, showed them a copy of my father’s diploma, and registered for classes.

His remarks make apparent his beliefs: ‘Real’ people are better because some of us are illegitimate or children of wealthy parents, we did no work in high school which warranted admission to this University, and therefore he is more worthy to be here than we are. This view is appallingly ignorant.

I’m not one to flaunt my high school achievements, but I’m proud enough of what I accomplished to recommend qualifi­cations against anyone’s time they want.

Office of Alcohol and Drug Education encourages students to be responsible when drinking

By MATT FOLEY
Accent Writer

Unless you’ve been asleep or dead this week, you probably know that there is an office on campus concerned with educating us about alcohol and its effects on our lives. The Office of Alcohol and Drug Education, perched in the Mezzanine Level of LeFortune Student Center, is charged with just this task.

A Shaky Beginning

The office evolved from the University Counseling Center’s desire to better meet the needs of the student population. The department was designed to address the need for education and awareness about alcohol in the community, according to Sally Coleman, a psychologist at the University Counseling Center. As a corollary to that mission, the Office also handles the concerns of the Office of Alcohol and Drug Education’s main mission-to educate. Toward this end, the Office offers several programs for the students designed to emphasize the dangers of abusing alcohol. These are designed to engage the students in a dialogue and facilitate good decision-making about alcohol use.

Finally, the third focus of the Office of Alcohol and Drug Education is the intake evaluation of cases. When students get in trouble with alcohol, they are referred to the Office of Alcohol and Drug Education by their parents, Friends, Students, Affairs, or the courts. Typically, the student is in the office because of a flagrant first-time violation of the alcohol policy or a second offense of the same policy.

The real problem is in students not thinking.” said Pogue. “We just want to work with people on making better decisions.”

On the rare occasion that the student needs counseling for serious alcohol problems, the Office refers that person to the University Counseling Center or to a counseling agency in their home area.

In the future, the Office of Alcohol and Drug Education hopes to make its services available to a wider audience with greater effectiveness.

Events planned for the future include a DUI Awareness Month during December and future non-alcoholic alternative activities for the student body.

From Referral to Education

The branch of the Notre Dame community concerned with transmitting this message consists of four members: director Mark Pogue, secretary Arleen Davis, consultant Gina Kigar, and student assistant Sean Trimmer. Together they strive to educate the campus about the other side of alcohol—the side usually not seen in glamorous beer ads. In this effort, there are three specific goals involved in achieving awareness.

First, the office provides a well-armed resource for people looking into topics pertaining to alcohol and its use. Pamphlets abound in and around the office, and all of the information is free for the taking. The office also provides each of the incoming freshmen with a personal copy of the Daily Dose, a booklet with articles and statistics showing the ramifications of alcohol abuse, as well as guidelines for responsible use.

The second goal of the office is also the one that gets the most attention. As any Notre Dame student knows, the Office of Drug and Alcohol Education remains vitally concerned with its main mission-to educate. Toward this end, the Office offers several programs for the students designed to emphasize the dangers of abusing alcohol. These are designed to engage the students in a dialogue and facilitate good decision-making about alcohol use.

Finally, the third focus of the Office of Alcohol and Drug Education is the intake evaluation of cases. When students get in trouble with alcohol, they are referred to the Office of Alcohol and Drug Education by their parents, Friends, Students, Affairs, or the courts. Typically, the student is in the office because of a flagrant first-time violation of the alcohol policy or a second offense of the same policy.

'Challenging Students'

As any organization takes on the personal-traffic fatigue of its leader, the Office of Alcohol and Drug Education revolves around Mark Pogue. In coming to Notre Dame, he brings the experience of directing the Alcohol-Drug Information Center at Indiana University, his alma mater. He entered this line of work because he “always wanted to be in a position to help people,” and he likes “working with students and young people especially.”

His greatest satisfaction comes from “helping people get out of a jam, or keeping them from getting into a jam.” He also enjoys “challenging students and being challenged by them.”

Pogue is optimistic about the response of the student body to the efforts of his office. He feels there is “a growing number of students who don’t need alcohol to have a good time.” But of course, there’s still room for improvement.

“We need more things to do,” Pogue said. “But we are starting to do things where alcohol isn’t the focus.”

Now, two years after Pogue’s arrival, the campus seems to be putting the resources available in the Office of Alcohol and Drug Education to good use.

The Office now receives more attention from the community, according to the Office’s long-time secretary, Arleen Davis. “This year they call us, instead of the other way around,” she said.

Still-life painting lost its popularity in the beginning of the century. It revived in the 1960’s and 70’s with the creation of pop art and photo realistic Pop artists have little interest in the work as such but the presence of an object contains a social or political message. In photography the artist wants to achieve representations which she produces. "A painting is the first step in creating a painting. She then shoots approximately 40 to 50 pictures. For the first project, she found a rectangular mirror which make complex optical distortions of the fabrics. By double this, Sloan creates a tension between real and illusion. This allows Sloan to create interesting perspectives of the varying perspectives, which he captures with his oil paintings. Sloan takes objects which are simple and classic in design and transforms them into paintings which capture the spirit of everyday life.

What a difference a half makes. In Zahm’s case this was especially true, as the Rabid Bats rebounded from a dismal first half to defeat Alumni 7-0.

By defeating Alumni, Zahm all but clinched one of the four playoff spots up for grabs in the blue league. They did this with a solid defensive effort in the first half and an aggressive offensive attack in the second.

Sophomore quarterback Randy Swatland came out throwing after halftime, setting up the lone touchdown and throwing for two more, only to have them nullified due to penalties.

“We turned up the intensity in the second half,” said Zahm coach Dan Fitzpatrick.

“Swatland did a great job for us today. He took his time and stood his ground in the pocket.”

The only touchdown of the day was set up after a fumbling penalty by the Dawgs, giving Zahm a first down. Following two first-down passes to junior Peter Coursi, Swatland found junior Rick Rios down the sideline for a big gain to the 7-yard line of Alumni. From there Swatland ran around end on the keeper for the score.

“That penalty in the third quarter hurt us,” commented Alumni coach Paul Zaschin.

“When there are no turnovers, penalties make the difference.”

Zaschin went on to credit his whole team for a good game. The defense gave up no first downs in the opening half while the offense made strides only to be stopped by penalties or the Zahm defense, which pitched a shutout for the second week in a row.

Cavanaugh 13, Sorin 0

For the second week in a row, sophomore running back Mike Norbut captured all the attention as he lead Cavanaugh to their second win a row. Norbut finished a full day’s work with both touchdowns and a drive-killing interception.

Cavanaugh’s first scoring drive started at the Sorin 45-yard line after a bad snap on the punt gave them good field position. From there Norbut gut the first downs on option play and combined with a Sorin penalty, Cavanaugh advanced to the 15-yard line. After a short pass, the man of the hour bowled over a defender for the score and an early 6-0 lead.

“Today our whole offense was like a V-8, Dodge Ram Charger firing on all cylinders,” said an elated Norbut after the game. The now-winless Otters did have a scoring chance late in the third quarter as they had the ball at the Cavanaugh 13-yard line following yet another bad snap on the punt. However, two plays later, Norbut picked off Jeff Farragher’s pass after it was tipped by the defensive line.

“After the muffed punt our defense saved us and turned it around to set up the second score,” said Cavanaugh coach Tony Nowak.

After Norbut ran the interception back to about the 50-yard line, he proceeded to chalk up runs of 20 and 30 yards up to the Sorin two. Norbut then capped off his career day by scoring on the handoff to close out the game.

Fisher 14, St. Ed’s 0

In the final shootout of the day, the Green Wave of Fisher maintained their unblemished record as they dominated St. Ed’s in a 14-0 win.

The offensive aerial assault was lead by sophomore quarterback Jeff Biever, who showed flashes of brilliance at times. On the first drive of the day for Fisher, Biever hit junior Dan McGinty for what would be the first of his four catches. After a 20-yard run by senior Bob Ganz, it was time for Biever to go to work. Rolling right and under heavy pressure, he found sophomore Mike Carroll deep in the end zone for a 20-yard TD pass.

“We played real well on both sides of the ball,” said Biever. “For the most part, the offensive line gave me good protection.”

A lack of protection was what hurt St. Ed’s in a 13-0 loss to Fisher.

Fisher coach Chuck Hurley was proud of his defense for the way they were able to get to Rogers all day.

Top-ranked Morrissey finishes as lone 4-0 team in Gold League

By G.R. NELSON
Sports Writer

Top-ranked Morrissey (4-0) trampled Keenan 20-3 to clinch first place in the Gold League and complete an undefeated regular season.

Quarterback Scott Taylor paced Morrissey’s offense by passing for three touchdowns and 140 yards. Wide receiver Tom Fitzpatrick caught the first two touchdown passes on strikes of 25 and 30 yards, respectively. Justin Krueer continued his outstanding play, catching one touchdown pass and repeatedly rushing for long gains.

Morrissey’s defense yielded its first points of the year on Josh Tullis’ 30-yard field goal. Morrissey’s dominating defense still has not allowed a touchdown this year. “Once again, our defense played outstanding,” said Morrissey captain George Reider.

Keenan (2-1) had few highlights in their first loss. “We played with a lack of hustle. The ability of the team to come back, but they certainly are not overconfident,” said Reider.

Stanford 17, Dillon 6

With their season on the line, Stanford (2-1-1) put it all together and played its strongest game of the year to defeat Dillon 17-6 and clinch a playoff spot.

Stanford abandoned its high-powered passing attack and went to the ground game. “We knew we could pass, and now we have proved we can run,” said Stanford coach Chris Pollina.

Thanks to the strong running of tailback Lamar Guilory, Stanford had little need to throw. Guilory carried the ball 15 times for 120 yards, with many of those yards coming after initial contact.

When Dillon’s defense keyed on Guilory, Stanford gave the ball to either Pollina or John Mele. Pollina scored Stanford’s first touchdown, and Mele provided the clinching score.

Stanford received an emotional lift from the right leg of diminutive kicker Chad Smock. Stanford had failed to convert on an extra point all year, but Smock kicked two extra points and a field goal.

the first thirteen minutes of the final period, the Irish finally took the lead at the 13:24 mark. Ling passed to a open Ben Nelsen in front of Organ, and the freshman beat him for Notre Dame’s fourth goal. “We wanted to win, so everyone was crashing the net,” said Ling. “It was just a matter of Nelsen being open and he knew how to finish.”

A one-goal lead was all Louder needed for the victory. The defense did allow some scoring chances for Waterloo, most notably a flurry on two breaks, but Louder came up with the big stops.

Even with an extra skater for the final 1:18, the Warriors could not score the tying goal. Two consecutive saves by Louder at the minute mark preserved the victory. The game ended with the puck in Waterloo’s zone. This was quite appropriate, as that is where much of the action took place.

“The bottom line is we won,” said Schafer, who was not completely satisfied with the play of his squad. “We started the season on a winning note. We found some weaknesses (line changes and intensity throughout) out to work on. We’ll talk.”

One thing that definitely did impress Schafer and his staff was the performance of the underclassmen. He specifically praised the play of sophomore defensemen Davide DalGrande and Nelsen, who “looked like he had been out there before.”

Schafer also mentioned the performance of the penalty-killing team, especially their hustle. The ability of the team to come back from a two-goal deficit is another positive that came from Saturday’s game.

“Your first 20 minutes of practice," said Ling, "are the most important. We never have another two weeks to prepare for Western Michigan.”

Saint Mary's teams face Chicago as seasons wind down
Soccer travels to Chicago for last road game

By MARY GOOD
Saint Mary's Sports Editor

Today the Saint Mary's soccer team will board the team bus for the last time this season and head to Illinois to take on the University of Chicago.

The University of Chicago is expected to give the Belles a difficult game, as they were ranked tenth in the Great Lakes Region last week. Following this game the Belles have two home contests to finish off the season.

"We have played a lot of common opponents this season," said Saint Mary's coach Tom Van Meter, whose team is 6-5-1 on the season. Earlier this year Saint Mary's defeated Wheaton 4-3. Last week the University of Chicago beat Wheaton 2-1.

"Our record does not reflect our talent," said Van Meter.

Although the Belles were defeated by St. Joseph's College last week, they have been improving in practice this week, according to Van Meter. Saint Mary's has beaten University of Chicago the past five years and looks to continue their winning trend.

"It is the last week of our season and I hope we can continue winning in these three final games," said Van Meter.

The Belles have only one home game remaining after today's contest, on November 2 against Goshen College.

The Notre Dame hockey team opened their 1993-94 season on Saturday by defeating the Waterloo Warriors 4-3 at the J.A.C.C. Although only an exhibition game, it was important for the team to get off to a winning start to prove that they are capable of winning a good amount of games this year. The game also served as an opportunity for the freshman to get some game experience, and more importantly, confidence that they can succeed at the collegiate level.

Coach Ric Schafer and his Irish expected a physical style of play from Waterloo. The Warriors did not disappoint, as they offered every opportunity to hit. However, it was Notre Dame that took control of the game in the first period. The Irish kept constant pressure in the Waterloo zone. The defense was a major reason for such pressure. Led by captain Matt Dzieci, the Irish defenders frustrated most Waterloo chances and sent their teammates off on breaks, although they failed to convert.

Finally, after many quality chances, the Irish notched their first goal of the season at the 8:57 mark of the first period. Taking advantage of a Waterloo line change, goalie Greg Louder hit an open Terry Lorenz with a perfect outlet pass. The freshman then beat goalie James Schaefer at his best, according to Schafer. Despite the fact that Notre Dame controlled the first period, there were plenty of first-game mistakes that Waterloo failed to convert on. In the second period, though, the mistakes turned into three Warrior goals in a five-minute span.

The first two goals, scored by Mike White and Steve Woods, came as a result of sloppy line changes on the part of the Irish. Less than a minute after the second goal, Louder dove to grab a loose puck. It was knocked away and ended up in the net, as Waterloo captain Jason Mervyn took advantage of the empty net to give his team a 3-1 lead. Schafer quickly called a timeout to calm his shell-shocked group.

"All he said was for us to settle down, keep our heads, and stay in control," said sophomore Jamie Ling. "He also reminded us that we were capable of coming back." Apparently, the quick talk had a positive effect, as the Irish stepped up their level of play. After four minutes of solid skating, Notre Dame cut the lead to one on a goal by junior Carey Nemeth. He converted a loose rebound, allowing the Irish to jump right back into the game.

Except for a Notre Dame flurry in the final 30 seconds of the period, play was relatively slow until the start of the third period. The final stanza began with an Irish penalty. However, strong forechecking, especially by Jeff Hasselman, stalled Waterloo's scoring chances. A brief power play, with four players (two on each side) receiving penalties. The hitting intensity subsequently rose, and it was the Irish who capitalized.

On their sixth power play opportunity, Notre Dame finally converted. Lorenz scored his second goal on a wrap-around effort to tie the game at three. "Terry just found the net with his shot," said Schafer.

The Irish continued their pressure, forcing Waterloo to take penalties to prevent goals. Even though Notre Dame could not score, the defense greatly benefitted. Waterloo could not mount a substantial attack skailing a man down, as they were for much of the first ten minutes of the period.

After outskating Waterloo for the win, Notre Dame now sits atop the Golden Dome standings. With the win, the Irish have reeled off seven in a row, taking advantage of a particularly weak stretch in their schedule to improve to 15-3. BB

Irish volleyball looks for eighth straight win tonight

By TIMOTHY SEYMOUR

Eight straight wins in any sport is improbable, yet this is the mark the No. 13 Notre Dame volleyball team will try to reach tonight at 7:30 p.m. as it hosts lightly regarded Kent State at the J.A.C.C.

Beginning with its victories over Southwest Missouri State and No. 3 Nebraska in the Golden Dome Invitational back in September, the Irish have reeled off seven in a row, taking advantage of a particularly weak stretch in their schedule to improve to 15-3. Although only an exhibition game, it was important for the team to get off to a winning start to prove that they are capable of winning a good amount of games this year.
