THE INDEPENDENT NEWS PAPER SERVING NOTRE DAME AND SAINT MARY’S

Deadline passes without airstrikes

SMC poised to examine future development and improvement

Team to evaluate mission achievement of University

By KATIE MURPHY

Editor's note: The following is the first in a five-part series examining the issues that face Saint Mary's as it celebrates its 150th year and looks to the future.

As Saint Mary's launches into a year-long celebration of 150 years since its founding, it also enters a year where defining the future of the College and the paths it will take is crucial.

Setting forth themes of "Honoring Tradition, Pioneering Change," engineering a new form of governance for the College, and revealing a two-year-long-range planning report are the ways in which Saint Mary's will continue to examine its future path.

In an academic institution we are constantly improving on ways to do what we do best, provide a superior education for women," said College President William Hickey.

In order to do this, goals must be explored and developed by the entire College community, according to Hickey.

Defining these goals was a major task of the Long Range Planning Committee (LRPC) which will continue to examine the College's mission for approval at the April meeting.

The committee's report is currently undergoing cost and priority analyses by the Faculty Assembly which the Board of Regents requested after the proposal was formally considered at the first time at which the College was at a significant stage.

Along with the LRPC's goals, Saint Mary's is examining what it will mean for the College to be sponsored by the Sisters of the Holy Cross, but no longer the Holy Cross College. The College and the Board of Trustees will be the same entity.

"One area we are looking at very seriously is the definition of sponsorship by the Sisters of the Holy Cross," Hickey said.

"This is an opportunity to examine the relationship between the community of Saint Mary's and the College and the Sisters and to determine how things might be different in the future."
Poll shows support for Church

A large majority of Roman Catholic priests and nuns in this country agree with the church's opposition to abortion and homosexual actions and would renew their vows, according to a poll published Sunday.

But about half of those surveyed dispute Vatican teachings on priest celibacy, and its opposition to birth control and the ordination of women, the Los Angeles Times found.

Eighty-seven percent of priests and 88 percent of nuns surveyed said they would renew their vows. While 59 percent of priests said the church should ordain priests, only 15 percent said they would marry if they could.

Forty-four percent of priests and 57 percent of nuns favor ordaining women, although 89 percent of nuns said they wouldn't seek ordination.

Pope John Paul II's performance garnered approval from 74 percent of priests and 70 percent of nuns in the poll.

Ninety-one percent of priests and 79 percent of nuns considered abortion always or often a sin, and 80 percent of priests and 72 percent of nuns said they would oppose church-sanctioned marriages between homosexuals.

Forty-four percent of priests and nuns said birth control is seldom or never a sin.

Fifty-eight percent of priests and 65 percent of nuns said Catholics may disagree with some church teachings and still be considered faithful. Twenty-one percent of priests said they frequently offer advice to Catholics that conflicts with church teaching, the poll found.

Farrakhan Sees Jewish 'Conspiracy'

Nation of Islam leader Louis Farrakhan told an interviewer that he sees conflict between Jews and Muslims as evidence of a Jewish media conspiracy to destroy him, and said that although the Holocaust was wrong, blacks have suffered one 150 times worse.

In an interview shown Saturday on CNN's Black Entertainment Television, Farrakhan spoke of the media's response to a full-page ad in The New York Times bought by the Anti-Defamation League of B'nai B'rith.

The A.D.L. took out the ad last month to publicize an anti-Semitic speech made by Farrakhan aide at Kean College in New Jersey. The ad prompted news stories about the speech and pressure on Farrakhan to repudiate his aide, Khalid Abdul Muhammad.

Farrakhan condemned Muhammad's state­ment that Farrakhan and his aides were "repugnant" and pariah to him and all Muslims.

"I can't believe the day will come when we'll support a man who does such a thing," said Farrakhan. "But mañana, tomorrow, he's going to be a hero. He's the man who's going to save the Jewish people from the Japanese."

Crowd upset when Michael fails to sing

Michael Jackson fans who paid up to $1,000 a ticket for five minutes of his time, when their hero appeared, but boomed when he refused to perform solo. "I would pay $1,000 to see Michael Jackson," said one disappointed Carla Davenport of Pacifica, Calif., one of the 12,000 fans who attended Saturday night's "Jackson Family Show." "He still has loads to give, we're just disappointed he didn't perform," said her daughter, Lori. "All we wanted was one song."

Jackson did perform one song, but not alone. He joined his siblings for the show's 5-minute finale, "If You Only Believe." The audience was thunderously loud when he sang one phrase consisting of several words. It opened an hour late as the fans, who paid $50 to $1,000, laboriously filled Madison Square Garden.

The show's 5-minute finale included a half-dozen Michael Jackson videos and live performances by his siblings and their offspring.

They Said It...

Here's what American Roman Catholic priests and nuns said in a recent poll about the church and its positions:

— Priests (2,087) — Nuns (1,049)

Percentage who would renew their vows:

- 87% — 88%

Percentage in favor of ordaining women:

- 57% — 44%

Percentage in favor of same-sex unions:

- 74% — 70%

Pavarotti gives recital at the Met

Tenor Luciano Pavarotti returned to the Metropolitan Opera, where he has sung more than 50 times on any other stage for a beautiful recital on Sunday. With the excellent pianist and accompanist Leo Magiera, Pavarotti went from old Italian art songs to arias to Neapolitan songs for encore.

Pavarotti is a superstar, but he is foremost an artist. His tones are beautiful, open and warm, the warmth seeming to radiate from inside his soul. He also shapes the music with artistry, conveying the emotion in the words. Some singers lose the top notes or the middle voice becomes scratchy, because a singer must move through the middle voice on the way to high and low notes. Pavarotti has neither of those problems. He was in excellent voice on Sunday, sounding rested and unstained all through his range. For his second song, Pavarotti chose an aria from "Orfeo and Euridice." Several in the audience called out — often in Italian — "Viva Pavarotti," an aria to which Pavarotti brings special vocal beauty.

Fumes from body fell doctor, nurse

RIVERSIDE, Calif.

Mysterious fumes apparently coming from a patient's body knocked out a doctor and a nurse and forced a hospital to close its emergency room, authorities said Sunday. "It appears to be something coming from the body itself," Wessfeldt said. "We are trying to get back­ ground before we approach the body. We don't want to put more people at risk." Coroner's officials were consult­ ing doctors to figure out what happened, and an autopsy was pending. Wessfeldt said he was unaware of any similar cases. The 31-year-old female patient, whose name was not released, had been undergoing home chemotherapy treatment for cancer. While the patient was in cardiac arrest Saturday night at Riverside General Hospital, the doctor and nurse drew a blood sample, noticed white crystals in the blood and said it was colorless and odorless. The first two hours consisted of a half-dozen Michael Jackson videos and live performances by his siblings and their offspring.
Students began their campaign for student senate positions and class offices today at 12:01 a.m., according to Dyan Rohol, election commissioner. Listed alphabetically by district, the following students are running for student senate positions.

Delta, one, South Quad, candidates are sophomore Brian Foley of Fisher and junior Brian McCarthy of Alumni.

Clinton delays airstrikes for now

By RON FOURNIER
Associated Press

WASHINGTON

Bill Clinton

President Clinton spoke Sunday that Serb military leaders either moved or surrendered enough of their artillery surrounding Sarajevo to make NATO air strikes unnecessary at this time.

But the president emphasized that could change if the Serbians backslide.

"Despite the significant events of the day, we must remain vigilant," Clinton said in a statement read by Press Secretary Dee Dee Myers. "All parties should be aware that the ultimatum stands. The deadline has not been extended. Any heavy weapons in the exclusion zone not under UN control are, and will remain, subject to air strikes.

"NATO and the United Nations will continue to monitor compliance extremely carefully."

Myers acknowledged that "a handful of weapons probably are not yet under UN control, but they will be soon.

"Clinton's statement said any weapons in the zone not under UN control "should be."

If they aren't, "then, they will be at risk," said a senior administration official speaking on condition of anonymity.

There were an unusual number of shifts at the White House for a Sunday evening, but the atmosphere was calm with no outward sign of any activity as the deadline approached and then passed.

The president had dinner in the family quarters.

The Clinton administration insisted all day that NATO would hold to the open-ended ultimatum, subjecting Serbs to air strikes after 7 p.m. EST if they did not withdraw their heavy weapons from around Sarajevo or put them under control of the United Nations.

"The deadline will stand," Clinton had said after church.

But later Sunday, administration officials signaled that strikes were not likely, saying poor weather over Sarajevo made it difficult to determine Serbian compliance.

Administration officials said it would be at least Monday before an assessment could be made and any bombing orders could be given.

The Pentagon said Sunday night that it had received no new orders to begin air strikes.

The day ended without any fresh sign of movement or agreement, but there was some optimism there will be.

U.S. peacekeepers would work Sunday night to get a clear idea of the situation by Monday morning, Rose said.

"So far, both sides have complied almost wholly with what we've asked them to do," despite problems with weather and breakdowns, he said.

He added he was "reasonably optimistic we will come to a peaceful end to this terrible war in Sarajevo."

As of 7 p.m. U.N. monitors had visited 32 of 41 Serb gun sites identified, said Brig. Gen. Andre Soubrès, U.N. commander for Sarajevo, which had pulled out of 23, and U.N. monitors had taken control of five more and were in the process of taking control of another four.

Serbs had regrouped 225 weapons in night locations under U.N. control and the Bosnian army had turned over 41 weapons, Soubrès said.

Bosnian Serb leader Radovan Karadzic had said the Serbs would meet the NATO deadline. More than half their weapons had been withdrawn, he told CNN Sunday, adding his forces didn't plan to use those in other parts of Bosnia, where there is still fighting.

NATO and the United Nations faced the choice between accepting Bosnian Serb pledges not to use the remaining guns or bombing them and risking both an escalating war in the Balkans and frosty relations with Moscow.

McAdams, former Yugoslavia. Will this fragile coalition of countries hold together when the question of removing remaining forces is raised? Will the United States and try to avoid the embarrassment it felt last summer as a similar bombing deadlock came and went with no American retaliation? What role will NATO play, any it tries to define its role in Post Cold War Europe?

The West, particularly the U.S., has committed itself to some very tough positions, by treating Bosnia almost like an ally," stated McAdams. "We've accepted the idea of a free Bosnia and a Muslim state. That could cause more problems down the road. Balkan conflicts have a history of exacerbating, and if this one continues, the repercussions could touch off strife between two NATO members like Greece and Turkey."

A lasting peace, according to McAdams, will only come when the big powers, the United States, England, France, Germany decide that a secure Balkan region is in the best interest of the world. While the United States may be able to supply food to people under siege, only these countries can supply the necessary military and financial resources to bring the fighting to an end and help expedite stability.

For now, though a glimmer of hope is all that the people of the former Yugoslavia and the world have to go on.

"The first step has been taken," said Mark Perry. "The second isn't going to be so easy. A semi-state of peace in Sarajevo is better than a thaw in South Bend in February."

However, Perry added, "The U.N. was never there. The artillery may be moved and put to use elsewhere. The coming days and weeks will reveal much, but for the first time in a long time, there's reason to hopeful."

Farmers take precautions to avert rare hantavirus

Associated Press

Bob Sharer has spent 35 years farming just outside this Hendricks County town without thinking twice about mice.

"You'll go in there and there'll be lots of mouse droppings. I used to just brush 'em away," said Sharer, waving his arm at his large white farm house. "But now I'll disinfect first."

Not anymore.

Sharer started worrying about mice in January after his neighbor John Mitchell died of a rare viral disease. Now he even wears a respirator when cleaning.

"It was scary, but I don't know what you can do about it," said Charles Fishler, who works for Murrain Excavating.

Although deer mice are found in most of the country, until recently all confirmed cases of the disease had been west of the Mississippi River. Mitchell and a case in Florida were the first exceptions.

Publicity and rumors about the hantavirus case had died down some until about a week ago in Hendricks County. Then "the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention reported the virus had been found in four of 26 rodents trapped near Mitchell's Clayton home."

Public officials warn that those tests demand precautions, not panic.

"It holds down to common sense. In the past we've been cavalier about rodents. We need to look at all rodents as infectious," said Mary Lou Fleissner, epidemiologist at the Indiana Department of Health.

"No more rodent testing will be done," Fleissner said.

The CDC has been advised that if the virus has been found in one location in the state, it should be presumed present everywhere in Indiana, she said.

"There are reasons to take precautions, but that doesn't mean we need to hope up, re­­treat and breathe nothing but filtered air," said Robert Waltz, state entomologist with the Indiana Department of Natural Resources.

"It's scary, but I don't know what you can do about it," said Paul Simon, D-Ill.

But with a showdown debate scheduled to begin as early as Tuesday, Simon also questioned whether opponents, led by Senate Appropriations Committee Chairman Robert Byrd, D-W.Va., had the votes to defeat it.

"I don't think Robert Byrd has the votes to stop it," Simon said on NBC's "Meet the Press." "An Associated Press survey of the Senate's 100 members last week showed 60 of them saying they support or would probably support the amendment. Twenty-seven said they would reject or were leaning against it. Twelve senators said they were undecided. Only Sen. Ted Stevens, R-Alaska, not­­ed Byrd, that if the virus has been found in one location in the state, it should be presumed present everywhere in Indiana, she said.

"It's scary, but I don't know what you can do about it," said Charles Fishler, who works for Murrain Excavating.

Budget amendment has support for vote in Senate

WASHINGTON

Backers of a balanced budget constitutional amendment have enough support to assure a vote in the Senate but not necessarily by the two-thirds majority to pass it, the measure's chief sponsor said Sunday.

"We have 60 votes to block a filibuster; I don't know that we have the 67 votes to pass it," said Sen. Paul Simon, D-Ill.

But with a showdown debate scheduled to begin as early as Tuesday, Simon also questioned whether opponents, led by Senate Appropriations Committee Chairman Robert Byrd, D-W.Va., had the votes to defeat it.

In the preliminary self-study, Williams' committee discusses the evaluation of academic programs using alumni surveys. Part of the NCA's visit will address these methods to assess the effectiveness of its academic mission.

Team members will meet this week with faculty, students, and members of the administration and the Board of Trustees. At the end of the visit, the NCA will present their suggestions and evaluations to University President Father Edward Malloy, Provost Timothy O'Meara, and Williams. "It's an attempt to be judged by our own peers and see how we can become more excellent," said Williams.

Twelve people comprise the evaluation team, which has risen from almost zero percent to more than five percent. With no numerical goal set, the College is targeting to increase the number of women of color and women from different ethnic, religious, and socioeconomic backgrounds, Hickey said.

In addition to increasing diversity on campus, Hickey said that the College must develop the Multicultural Affairs and make it a more visible force on campus.

"We're just beginning to dress multiculturalism, we have a long way to go," Hickey said.

Increasing financial aid support and the financial strength of the College will have to continue, according to Hickey, if Saint Mary's wants to see diversity and its other goals become a reality.

"If you don't have resources you can dream as much as you want, but implementing these dreams is a much different story," Hickey said.

The best of the College's $36 million endowment is used for scholarships and the faculty development program. The goal is to double the endowment.

The College is also renewing its commitment to remaining a residential campus.

"The community as it exists in the residential environment has a unique mission," Hickey said. "It is critical to look at what community means, which means we have to constantly look at the community and work at it."

In addition, Saint Mary's will also look to remain a teaching institution, which is what the success and reputation of the College has been built upon. "We're committed to teaching and our recognition as one of the best colleges of our type comes from this faculty/student interaction," said Hickey, who sighed Saint Mary's current ranking in U.S. News and World Report as a sign of the College's continuing strength in this area.

"Interaction beyond the classroom is what makes Saint Mary's College different from other institutions," he said.

This interaction will continue through consistent work on the recruitment of professors committed to teaching and through continued faculty development programs funded through the endowment.

Through continued development in the areas that have gained Saint Mary's national recognition, a new plan of governance that responds to the continuing trend of a decreased number of people entering religious orders, and a self-study, the College is actively working to plan for its future.

"We are constantly defining what it means to be a residential Catholic institution for women and what programs we can develop to better this mission," Hickey said. "We want to better our goal of being a community of people all working together for a common goal."
Storm hits Southern California
By ANH BUI
Associated Press

MALIBU, Calif. - Rivers of mud cascaded down coastal canyons and closed the Pacific Coast Highway on Sunday as yet another storm swept heavy rain across fire-scarred Southern California. Heavy snow clogged mountain highways.

Roads flooded by water as much as two feet deep made driving treacherous and at least three traffic deaths were blamed on rain-slick freeways. Flowing mud briefly trapped a handful of Malibu residents inside their homes, and a motorist had to be rescued after his car became mired in mud in Las Flores Canyon.

Several homes were damaged by the mud, although a precise count wasn't immediately available. No evacuations were ordered and no injuries were reported. On Feb. 9, rain-driven mudslides damaged 22 homes in areas stripped of vegetation by a Nov. 2 fire that charred 18,500 acres of the Santa Monica Mountains. In all, more than 20 autumn fires burned across 200,000 acres from Ventura County to the Mexican border and officials have warned that Malibu and other fire-scarred areas face repeated flooding with each rainfall.

About two inches of rain overnight loosened soil around Malibu despite frantic reseeding and sandbagging since the fire. Northern Ventura County received three inches of rain and one inch fell in downtown Los Angeles.

Mudslides coated roads in several Malibu canyons, said Los Angeles County sheriff's Lt. Michael Moore. Plows and bulldozers scraped muck from the closed Pacific Coast Highway.

A woman and two children were trapped in their Malibu home when a private bridge washed out, but they were rescued without injury, said sheriff's Deputy Kelly McMichael.

Two trucks removed cars stuck in the mud and residents sandbagged their homes against flowing debris. Road crews clipped and fell into thick goo as they tried to clear storm drains.

A thick wooden wall prevented a three-foot river of mud from entering the home of Lisa and Brian Anderson. But their garage was three feet deep in water, damaging two new cars inside. They had just finished clearing their house of mud from the Feb. 9 storm.

"All I'm waiting for now is for the Martians to come," Anderson said.

Between six and eight inches of snow fell above 3,000 feet, with eight to 12 inches above 6,000 feet, and more was expected during the night, the National Weather Service said.

Elsewhere in California, snow also fell overnight in the Sierra Nevada, with 20 inches reported at Mammoth, the weather service said.

Tire chains were required on most Southern California mountain roads Sunday. Interstate 5 was closed for minor rockslides on local roads, said the sheriffs department.

Traffic was backed up for more than seven hours over the Grapevine Pass in the Tehachapi Mountains north-west of Los Angeles, and the California Highway Patrol escorted Interstate 15 traffic through the Cajon Pass in the San Bernardino Mountains.

The Aliso Canyon fire area north-east of Los Angeles escaped flooding Sunday, while Laguna Canyon Road in Orange County had minor flooding.

Ventura County, parts of which also were hit by fire, had minor rockslides on local roads, the sheriffs department reported.

There were about 100 accidents between 6 a.m. and 7 p.m. on Los Angeles County freeways Sunday, compared with the usual 20 to 30 accidents, said highway patrol officer Bill Grunados.

Michigan residents aid quake apartment victims
By ANH BUI

LOS ANGELES - Hyun Sook Lee sat quietly, dressed in black, her fingers twirling the wedding ring on her hand, her downcast eyes brimming with tears.

Jim Eno sat alone across the church aisle, several rows back, his face shadowed by a baseball cap.

They and other residents of the Northridge Meadows apartment, where 16 people were killed by the Jan. 17 earthquake, gathered Saturday to accept financial help from residents of a Michigan apartment complex with a nearly identical name.

But when the money was offered, the earthquake victims proved that they could be just as generous.

Eno, who with wife, Durla, was killed in the quake, took the $850 he received and slipped the check into Lee's shaking hands. She responded with a hug.

Alan Hemstah, who was injured when the quake trapped him in his apartment, gave his $550 to Lee, as well.

Lee's husband, PII Soon, and her 14-year-old son Howard were killed in the quake. Her 12-year-old son Jason was seriously injured.

"She lost her entire family," Eno said. "I lost my wife, but she lost more...."

Slightly more than $2,000 was so moved by Eno's gesture she gave him her $550 check.

Still, a refugee who lives with her 84-year-old mother, lost also in the quake, but was happy to have survived.

"Just feel so lucky, you know," she told Eno.

The outpouring of generosity astonished the two visitors from Michigan, who had traveled 2,000 miles to present six checks for $150 each and three checks for $150 each to the hardest-hit residents and families.

"It just touches my heart that the help we're rendering them they're turning around and helping those who need it even more," said Eva Pieper, resident manager of the Northridge Meadows apartment complexes in Northville, Mich.

The 6.7-magnitude earthquake caused 61 deaths and an estimated $20 billion in damages.

Pieper and the owner of the Michigan complex, Elizabeth Stang, said their fellow sufferer in Los Angeles came by an eerie coincidence as they watched the earthquake damage on television. As Northridge Meadows residents went through the basic cleanup routine, Northridge Meadows residents went through hell.

"It was just too much of coincidence to pass up. Somebody was telling me something," Brooks said.

It was Brooks' idea to aid her building's unrelated near-namesake. Pieper donated 14 to 15 hours a day to the cause.

They helped in the quake zone for three weeks. So far, they have raised $6,300, with the promise of an additional $2,000, Brooks said.

Later, Pieper and Brooks visited the devastation at Northridge Meadows apartment complexes.

The building, whose top two stories had collapsed onto the first story, is surrounded by a chain link fence and yellow caution tape.

Broken furniture and other debris are piled outside.

Along the street, a steady stream of gawkers, some with cameras and video equipment, peer and point.

"I don't know what to tell you, Pieper said. It's horrific. There aren't words that can describe this. People's lives are in rubble. Bits and pieces of their belongings, balconies destroyed. I don't know what to say."
Rebels appear for negotiations

By JOHN RICE
Associated Press

SAN CRISTOBAL DE LAS CASAS, Mexico

Ski-masked Indian rebels came out of the jungle Sunday to the city where their uprising started on New Year's Day, this time to press their demands for social and political change at peace talks.

Hundreds of Red Cross workers, civilian peace workers and military police armed only with clubs surrounded the 16th century Roman Catholic cathedral, where the talks will be held Monday in this city of 72,000 people.

The government's peace negotiator, Manuel Camacho Solis, and Bishop Samuel Ruiz traveled to the rebels' Lacandon forest stronghold east of the city Sunday morning and escorted their representatives to the talks.

At least 18 rebel negotiators, all wearing ski masks or bandanas to disguise their faces, arrived at the main plaza on Sunday in three caravans of Red Cross vehicles.

They sped into the plaza past a cordon of peace workers holding back tightly packed spectators, a few of whom cheered for the rebels.

Among the rebels was the group's spokesman, "Subcomandante Marcos," who appeared to have an automatic weapon strapped to him. Marcos waved briefly to reporters standing at a nearby platform, but none of the rebels made statements.

The rebels, Camacho and the bishop bumbled in the cathedral Sunday afternoon in preliminary discussions on technicalities of the talks.

In interviews published Sunday, Marcos said the rebels would not remove their ski masks.

"The important thing is that we are all here," Camacho said earlier. "If I have to sit next to someone with a machine gun ... when we are ready to keep his mask on, I will respect it. If they want to remove them, I will respect that too."

Earlier, Camacho said he would pay attention to all proposals.

In interviews published Sunday with the weekly magazine Proceso, the independent newspaper El Financiero and The New York Times, Marcos said the Zapatista National Liberation Army did not expect a quick agreement.

Marcos, who has kept his identity a secret, said rebels would lay down their arms only if profound changes were made in Mexico's political and economic system.

"What is at stake in Chiapas is no longer just Chiapas or even Mexico, but perhaps even the free trade agreement and the whole neo-liberal project in Latin America," he said, referring to the North American Free Trade Agreement and the region's market reforms of the last few years.

Marcos said the rebels want political autonomy for Chiapan Indians, the resignation of President Carlos Salinas de Gortari and the establishment of a transitional government until the August presidential election.

Several thousand Zapatista guerrillas seized San Cristobal and other towns Jan. 1, demanding overthrows of the government, free elections and improved treatment of the region's impoverished and long-neglected Indians.

They withdrew into the jungle a few days later after government troops moved in. More than 100 people died before the government declared a cease-fire Jan. 12 and began trying to arrange peace talks mediated by the bishop.

Camacho has insisted national political changes sought by the Zapatistas would not be on the agenda of the talks. But he left open the possibility that any agreements on local problems could have national implications.

He also made an indirect appeal for the region's entrenched interests — such as political leaders and ranchers — to be open to change.

The traditionally conservative ranching sector in Chiapas wants tougher government action against Zapatistas and their supporters, some of whom have seized ranch lands they claim should have been distributed to peasants decades ago under Mexico's land reform laws.

The rebels, who have flooded ranch land by seizing ranches earlier threatened to take up arms and fight the Zapatistas themselves — no idle threat in a state with a long history of paramilitary groups sponsored by ranchers defending their land.

On Friday, a group reportedly allied with local political and ranching leaders in Altamirano blocked an aid convoy and stole tons of food and medicine headed for a town sympathetic to the rebels.

Forty-seven Chiapas peasants and Indian groups issued a declaration last week supporting the Zapatistas and vowing to "promote the takeover" of lands, public buildings and city halls.

Discover body may be that of abducted woman

DENVER

Searchers were looking more than a week for a woman who was kidnapped and raped, then re-abducted after she briefly escaped, but it only took a civilian using an "intuitive" approach one and one-half hours to find what appeared to be her body on his own.

Friends and relatives of Rhonda Maloney waited Sunday for confirmation that the body was hers. "They have not had any confirmation but it is pointing towards it, it is pretty sure it is," said friend Norma Jasenski. One man was arrested. Law enforcement agencies referred questions to District Attorney Bob Grant, who said he would have no comment until Tuesday.

Maloney, 25, a cocktail waitress at a Central City casino, was driving home to Broomfield early Feb. 12 when a man ran her off the road and raped her, police say. She escaped and was picked up by a passing motorist, Jaycie Creazzo.

As they approached the Thornton police station, a gunman pulled alongside and shot Creazzo three times. Her car veered across a street and then was spotted by the police station lawn, where the gunsman pulled Maloney from the car. Creazzo was paralyzed from the waist down and is in a rehabilitation center.

The search for Maloney intensified Friday evening after a man picking up cans along a road found what was believed to be her body on his own.

That's when Loyal Burner, a resident of Aurora, looked at news media maps of the area where the purse was found and decided investigators were looking in the wrong place.

"I drew a map at midnight after I watched the news," Burner said. "The only route he could have went was on that road, it was obvious to me. It was analytical. It wasn't random," he said.

Burner also met a man dressed in the killer disposed of the body first, and then his clothes.

The best evidence of Burner's theory was a half of searching, he noticed aVia passenger on a nothin a road to Watkins, about six miles from where the purse was found.

Resident Assistant duties include counseling, enforcing, and listening

By JOHN LUCAS
Associated New Editor

Beyond the benefits of free room and board, laundry service, and parking, the biggest advantage of becoming a Resident Assistant is the chance to meet the people of the hall, according to several Notre Dame and Saint Mary's R.A.'s.

"Being an R.A. gives you a family in college," said Stine Senna, an Alumni Hall R.A., who knows many students who are from out of state. "It eliminates an awkward moment-as an R.A., people don't mind you asking them questions about where they're from, or how they're doing in the course "

Although the primary function of a resident assistant is to enforce the rules of DuLac, there is much more to the job than just looking for trouble, according to Paquella East R.A. Amy Stoeckl.

"The job is really more than just walking down the hall when you're on duty," she said. "You have to be there with an open door."

In women's dorms, residents are much more likely to sit down and talk with their R.A.'s as friends than in mens dorms.

"Even if they don't have a problem, people here just stop in to talk about their day," she said. "There's more of a stigma in guys dorms about going to an R.A. Here we're thought of as a friend first."

Men usually go to their good friends to talk about a problem and see their R.A. when they are in some kind of trouble, Senna agreed.

"There's more of a hands off approach here," Senna said. "We usually intervene only when necessary. I don't think I've ever had an upperclassman seek me out to talk."

When enforcing rules, it is important to be fair and impartial, with students, agreed LeMans Hall R.A. Kristin McAndrew.

"People are never going to like the rules, but if you're consistent and people won't dislike you for enforcing them," Senna said.

Sometimes, R.A.'s can look for violations too aggressively, and that causes problems, she said.

"You've got to avoid the 'gun-slinger' mentality, where you're always going out looking for trouble," he said. "It's important to realize you are not been known to create trouble, as a fellow R.A. resident assistant admitted, citing one night when his girlfriend came into his room and closed the blinds as his neighbors promptly gathered outside his window to "Ge R.A. Go R.A., Go!"

"There are a lot of reasons for becoming an R.A. includig incentives such as free room and board, great room picks and stipends of as much as $6000 a year. Yet most people seem to choose to become R.A.'s because they think they'll love the job. Most R.A.'s interviewed said that their hopes have come true, as they have found being a resident assistant a rewarding, informative and enjoyable experience.

SACRIFICING PART OF YOUR SENIOR YEAR FOR THE DORM END UPS BEING THE HARDEST PART OF THE JOB, McAndrew said.

"Sometimes people take advantage of your time," she said. "A lot of the time they'll just come in and plop down in your chair without realizing that you have busy days too."

Tierney included among typical resi- dent assistant duties are acting as academic counselors, enforcing the alcohol policy, and ensuring that the dorms run smoothly. At Brown R.A.'s at other universities often face similar responsibilities, sometimes they're classes. The solutions are significantly different from those of R.A.'s at Notre Dame.

Some colleges require their R.A.'s to run a specific number of social, cultural and educational programs for the benefit of the students, such as at Georgetown University, where R.A.'s must provide two of each of these programs per semester.

Educational programs usually deal with issues facing college students such as sex education, nutrition and self image. Often, social and cultural programs are opportunities for R.A.'s to take their students out for some fun. A Georgetown R.A. noted that since the legal gambling age in Washington, D.C. is only 18, he has taken advantage of past social programs to take his students to

Students get cadavers by the slice

To aid students in often difficult task of dissecting cadavers in science classes, Orange Coast College Community has switched to using bodies that have been stolen from the deceased, and see in slices to allow easier view- ing of organs. Throughout the process of plastination, cadavers are dehydrated and injected with silicon, creating a specimen devoid of fluids and toxins that can be handled without the use of gloves. Associate Professor of Anatomy, Happier noted that the new process will make the cadavers more approach- able for students.

USC begins riot library

The University of Southern California, located at the site of the Los Angeles riots, has organized documents and artifacts dealing with the Rodney King beating and the events that followed, with the intention of beginning a comprehensive collection of works related to the riots.

Hackers attack Rice computers

After hackers recently caused the week-long shut-down of the student computer network and cut off ties to the Internet at Rice University, the FBI investigated the incident to see if there are any links to hacking incidents occurred at other schools. In response, every computer code at the university was examined to ensure the security of the sys- tem. Most material lost in the incident is restored from copies on disk and tape.

Anti-semitism increases on campuses

A study done by the Anti-Defamation League of B'hai Sherlock Holmes, At Saint Mary's, R.A.'s carry the same responsibilities for enforcing rules, but the focus lies more in trying to build rela- tionships and community around the dorm, according to LeMans Hall R.A. Kristin McAndrew.

At least four times a semes- ter, McAndrew organizes her section for a special event or program. Whether they go to mass as a group, or go to see "Schindler's List" together, the section becomes much closer, she said.

An added advantage of the SMC R.A. program that McAndrew was able to become an R.A. as a junior. Sometimes, even sophomores are accepted as R.A.'s in her hall.

"Younger R.A.'s can be more in touch with the concerns of underclassmen," she said. "You're really able to tailor your section to the interest and concerns of your section."

While there are many bene- fits of becoming an R.A., name- ly the $4000 of free room and board, the job is not all fun.

"There's not one major thing that's a disadvantage," Senna said. "But, there's a bunch of little things—like cleaning up after people who were throwing up, to missing out on things my friends are doing."

Sacrificing part of your senior year for the dorm ends up being the hardest part of the job, McAndrew said.

"Sometimes people take advantage of your time," she said. "A lot of the time they'll just come in and plop down in your chair without realizing that you have busy days too."
Modern conflicts: Primitive tribalism vs. modern ethnicity

Last week, while watching the opening ceremonies of the Olympics, a friend made a very perceptive remark that stood out to me. A group of Sami, a modern-day indigenous group whose cultural origins go back thousands of years, had just come out singing a traditional Sami song. They were dressed up in full Sami costume. My friend turned to me and she said, "Tell me they aren't a tribe!"

What she was referring to was the fact that in the United States and elsewhere in the Western world make a distinction between groups depending on where they are and when they are there. Groups in Africa, and to a certain extent in North America, are tribes. Tribes are supposed to represent the primitive, the pre-modern. They supposedly embody the primal, instant, violent connection to the earth that the modern world has overcome.

We talk about tribal conflict and war in Africa, or, in the case of Somalia, clan warfare. Some in the West seem to say that since it is only primitive killing each other, which is what tribalism is all about, then there is not much we can or should do about it. Perhaps, many say, we should just let the clans in Somalia go at it, since this is what they are.

People in Africa are represented differently in the media, too, as a result of their "tribal" heritage. A good example could be found recently in The New York Times when the founder of Nelson Mandela campaign, for the South African elections. Mandela was not shown wearing a business suit, which is what he wears most of the time. Rather, he was wearing traditional tribal clothes, which they were not even from is own "tribe."

On the same line, R. DeClereck was also shown wearing traditional African dress as part of his campaigning rather than his normal clothes (of course, there was no talk of the Africanamer "tribe"!). One wonders why the media feels the need to make some sort of supposed primitive connection rather than portraying people the way they usually look.

It is usually only Africans and Native Americans who are portrayed as "tribal." Other types of ethnic, religious, and other self-identified groups are portrayed as just that. Thus, in the United States for example, we have the Irish, the Protestants, the Catholics, the Mexicans, the Italians, etc. All of these groups are supposedly modern, enlightened, civilized — although in the past they have not been portrayed that way — and have "true" ethnic identities, whereas tribes are primitive, with identities which are not valuable or worthwhile. We never hear about the "tribal" conflict between Protestant and Catholic in Northern Ireland. We do hear about the "tribal" conflict between black and white in the United States, although being African-American, those who look different from the dominant ethnic groups in America were portrayed as "tribal," primitive, or less than human.

Most especially, we have not heard about the Serbian, Croatian, and Bosnian "tribes" fighting. They, after all, have ties to Europe and thus qualify as civilized groups, even when some of them are doing incredibly uncivilized things. In this instance, we have an "ethnic" conflict, as if using this word makes certain identities more valid than others.

"Ethnicity" is simply the way in which people identify themselves using such things as ancestry, an outmoded idea of "race," culture, language, and other identifying characteristics, many of which would be all invisible to the outside observer.

Before we start making distinctions between primitive "tribalism" and modern ethnicity, we should stop and think about where these identities — which seem static but which are, in fact, quite dynamical — are leading us.

In the past two weeks, letters expressing alternative views have appeared in The Observer. All of these letters are pro-alternative, anti-alternative, etc.

Music is universal. It is one of those feelings at one point in time, a general message to a group of people, sound, a form, an art form, a form of entertainment, a powerful communication medium, an emotion and so on and so forth. Music can drive, relax, bring out emotion, look into the heart, move mountains; it is rock, reggae, classical, Cuban, country-western, rap, Whitney, there it is, pop, and a child banging pans in the kitchen.

Fighting a losing battle

AIDS Ministries/ AIDS Assist struggles to increase AIDS education and awareness

By JENNIFER GUERIN

Accent Writer

In the director's report to a recent AIDS Ministries Committee/AIDS Assist newsletter, Michael Beatty states, "AIDS is attacking and infecting all of us. Complete and frank discussions are needed in all segments of our society. The question is not if but how we have to react."

Beatty's message is blunt, perhaps too blunt for some, "You can tolerate such denial and such stigma," said Kennedy, "but no one has to put up with a load like that, afraid to go for help, afraid to talk about it? How many families must be grieving silently, without support?"

Beatty and Kennedy have worked with students from Notre Dame to organize the NAMES Project, the AIDS education and awareness group which young people have so important the that they have support, and find hope and peace.

Beatty replied, "People can't ignore the virus on the medical level. They also have to combat it on a spiritual and emotional level."

Kennedy concurred, adding that she was glad AIDS Ministries/AIDS Assist was set up as an ecumenical venture. "Whatever people's belief system," she said, "it's terribly important that they have support, and find hope and peace."

"If you don't do continuing education, people will fall back into risky behaviors," he continued.

Kennedy told the story of a young man from Notre Dame who wanted to volunteer with AIDS Ministries/AIDS Assist, but in the course of his training discovered that he was uncomfortable dealing with the emotional aspects of the disease. "Some are just not ready," said Kennedy, who appreciated both the openness of the student and his willingness to get engaged in his work. "You must go at your own pace."

Kennedy, who has "journeyed" with nine people of different backgrounds and different faiths who have died of AIDS, sees the experience of the disease as a call to the Church to reflect on "the mystery, the responsibility, and the beauty of sexuality," as well as the many different dimensions of ministry.

Although it pains her to watch the statistics and the growing number of children, women and men who are infected with the virus, she hopes that "humanity may be growing towards a deeper sense of unity and responsibility for each other" through the experience of confronting AIDS.

The questions are many and often unanswerable, but the lesson that "every life is precious, and every death is a loss" is real, admitted Kennedy.

Kennedy is grateful for the response of the Notre Dame and Saint Mary's communities, and urges students to be open to living towards and praying in an attitude of acceptance.

Beatty agreed that for all age groups, in all areas of the community, education on both the medical and emotional aspects of AIDS will be a life-saving venture.
Treatting the soul: Anthropology professor
Press to lecture on the art of medicine

By BILL FEKRA T

Professor Irwin Press believes there is more to good health care than a solid background in science. A good doctor also has a strong bedside manner, according to Press.

"It is necessary to master the art of medicine in order to maximize the science of medicine," says Press, a teacher in Notre Dame's anthropology department.

In his lecture, entitled "Patients vs. Clinicians: How Culture Affects Health and Healing," Press will discuss his ideas about how doctors should interact with patients.

The lecture is being delivered as part of the Center for Social Concerns' Health and Healing Week. At the lecture, Press will discuss doctors and patients as two separate cultures which frequently clash when they meet, because each culture has assumptions and expectations of the other.

"Patients define their sickness as culture tells them to," said Press. He explained that when people feel sick, they often explain the symptoms away. For example, Press said that if someone blames soreness on playing basketball the day before, he or she does not feel it necessary to seek medical care because he or she has assessed a cause to the symptoms.

When a person does seek medical treatment, according to Press, it is often at the point where sickness and physical symptoms interfere with daily routines and responsibilities.

This leads to the behavioral and emotional aspects of sickness, which makes a patient feel like they are failing in their roles as worker, spouse, lover and other social contexts.

"It is necessary to master the art of medicine in order to maximize the science of medicine," says Press, a teacher in Notre Dame's anthropology department. "Doctors have certain assumptions about how patients should act," according to Press.

"Patients should not complain too much, they should be grateful for the care they are receiving. "

The body and soul of disease are inseparable," says Press.

Physicians often fail to see this emotionalism as an additional symptom that contributes to the disease, said Press.

"Doctors have certain expectations of patients," said Press.

"Patients are granted a certain amount of emotionalism, but if they talk too much about how their lives are affected by sickness, then suspicions arise that patients are 'acting out,'" said Press.

Press' prescription for this division between the two cultures is to sensitize physicians to the effects of disease on the personhood of the patient. He believes a focus on "bedside manner" will be more important as medical practices turn towards HMOs and other health plans.

Doctors with poor interaction skills will be fired from these programs due to patient drop-off.

Press originally began his research by studying aspects of folklore in medicine. In 1980-81, Press won a Lilly Fellowship and went to the University of Miami School of Medicine to observe doctor and patient interactions. It was during this fellowship that Press developed many of the ideas he is presenting in his lecture.

Press has taught at Notre Dame for 29 years, and has offered a course entitled "Cultural Aspects of Clinical Medicine," wherein students can observe doctor-patient relationships in the same way he did during his own research.

Press will give his lecture this Thursday evening at 7:30 in the Dooley Room of Lafortune.

University Counseling Center is there for Notre Dame students

By HOLLY BUCHAN

Being away from home and out of your own can be an exciting time. But at the same time, problems and concerns will inevitably arise. Where can students turn to? The University Counseling Center.

The University Counseling Center, in existence since 1967, provides assistance to approximately 800 students a year.

"We administer individual as well as group counseling to those coping with divorce in the family, alcoholism, eating disorders and many other concerns," said Patrick Uiz, director of the center.

The University Counseling Center hopes to project its image to students in two ways, according to Uiz.

"We would like students to realize that our services are open and very accessible to them," said Uiz. "Also, we are trained professionals capable of providing students with high quality service. They should not be afraid to take advantage of us.

The center also sponsors many workshops in conjunction with various clubs on campus who run continuously during the school year. Workshops which aim to dissolve racial prejudice and discrimination are among the issues of the workshops.

Staff psychologists Dr. Beverly Vandiver, who joined Notre Dame in August after graduating from Ball State University, said she believes her most important function is to interact with the student body, providing support to all who may need it.

"I am most interested in outreach and consultation," said Vandiver. She gives presentations on campus in order to fulfill her goal of meeting students.

Vandiver also works closely with cultural relations among students at Notre Dame. "I support cultural pride and strength," she explained. "All people do better when they feel good about who they are."

Vandiver emphasized that the counseling center is not only for those suffering from a crisis, but is also open to all those seeking support, such as in a time of adjustment. For example, freshmen may need help adjusting to Notre Dame when they first come to campus.

"I am interested in finding a way to be supportive which run continuously during the school year. Workshops which aim to dissolve racial prejudice and discrimination are among the issues of the workshops. Staff psychologists Dr. Beverly Vandiver, who joined Notre Dame in August after graduating from Ball State University, said she believes her most important function is to interact with the student body, providing support to all who may need it. "I am most interested in outreach and consultation," said Vandiver. She gives presentations on campus in order to fulfill her goal of meeting students.

Vandiver also works closely with cultural relations among students at Notre Dame. "I support cultural pride and strength," she explained. "All people do better when they feel good about who they are."

Vandiver emphasized that the counseling center is not only for those suffering from a crisis, but is also open to all those seeking support, such as in a time of adjustment. For example, freshmen may need help adjusting to Notre Dame when they first come to campus.

It didn't help matters when Murphy and Naticchia locked arms, sending Naticchia to the caucuses. But now the referee of a standing eight round to Murphy, which drew a chant of "Rocky, Rocky" from Murphy fans as it appeared it would take a monumental comeback to beat Naticchia.

Mr. Balboa would have advised the attempts by Murphy. His steady stream of jabs finally took its toll on Naticchia. The start of round three was delayed five minutes to stop the bleeding from Naticchia's nose.

Thanks to Naticchia's nose, the final round was bloody, with both fighters, the referee and most of the ring stained red. The ref gave Murphy another eight count at the midpoint, and the pair kept throwing at one another till the bell.

Fed up in the third round and he was bleeding, but I'm not sure how I did Murphy. Said "It was a great fight but he deserved to win. I couldn't stop him either."

Norbut starts fast, finishes a winner

By GEORGE DOHRMANN

One of the principle rules in Bengal Bout fighting is to start slow.

The trainers and veteran fighters remind each boxer entering the ring to take the first 20 seconds and feel out your opponent—to ease into the fight.

Those words fell on deaf ears before the third fight of the 16-pound division between Mike Norbut and Dave Sullivan.

Norbut's split decision victory was highlighted by a series of wild flurries from both boxers in the fight's opening minute. "Everything we learned went by the wayside," said Norbut, who has been detailing his preparation for The Bouts in a weekly segment for The Observer.

Much to the delight of the crowd the pair squared up for most of the first round in one of the few free-for-alls in the quarterfinals.

The third could have gone either way. Norbut landed a strong left early in the round but South came back with a flurry of his own, but fell short on three judges' cards.

Both fighters were short of energy in the final down, due mostly to their disregard for the advice of their trainers.

"At the end I could even throw any punches," said Norbut. "It took forever for the final bell to ring, and when it did I was just happy I had survived three rounds without getting my face punched in."

Next up for Norbut is a semifinal bout with impressive freshman John Christoforetti who dis­ manded Stefan Molina with a controlled attack.

"He's a good fighter," said Norbut. "Hopefully I'll listen to the advice and take it slow."

of a primadonna." Kleinschmidt's version is quite different. "He was hating me. He threw an elbow when I came out and I threw it back at him. We ain't getting punked by no one," said Kleinschmidt, who was held to 14 points, seven below his average. "I think he was frustrated that we were playing him so tough on Monty quite different. He was talking about was just worried about winning his financial situation, while I were playing him so tough on defense, just as they were playing me tough."

"He was saying how he was going to make more money than me. He was talking about his financial situation, while I was just worried about winning the ballgame," added Kleinschmidt.

The situation may have evolved out of another outburst by Williams just before his three-pointer. After Irish guard Lamarr Justice was thrown to the court on a hard foul by DePaul center Bryant Bowden, Williams came to his aid by putting Bowden in the chest. Bowden was called for an intentional foul while DePaul guard Peter Patton, who was named the game's MVP, held Williams back.

"It was my fault. I shouldn't have gone after him like that," Williams conceded. "I can't let big men do that to my guards. On the foul they slammed Lamarr to the ground and I let them know they could not do that to my teammates."

"Monty showed leadership in helping Lamarr," said Irish guard Keith Kuroski, who sparked the Irish off the bench with 16 points.

Whether Williams was still intent on protecting his teammates and demonstrating leadership during the altercation was unclear, Kleinschmidt remains to be seen, but it obviously cost the Irish in the end.

"It got heated, but I didn't think I should have drawn a technical. It's too bad the game ended this way," noted Williams, who finished with seven points under his average with 14, but he made his presence felt in other areas.

"We did a good job on Kleinschmidt in the first half," MacLeod said. "But he's got a lot of things in his game." Notre Dame got some good offensive balance of its own. Williams and Ryan Hoover each scored 17 and Keith Kuroski added 16.

After Williams ejection, Kuroski strapped the team on his shoulders for one final run. He scored four straight points, including a dazzling spinning layup to pull the Irish to within eight. But that's as close as they could get.

"We still had a chance with about four minutes to go, but we took some ill-advised shots trying to get into it faster than we needed to," MacLeod said. "That was about the end of it for us."

DePaul's job is to get the ball into the Blue Demons' hands during the alteration. While Williams and Kleinschmidt may have been concerned about winning the ballgame, Williams conceded.

"I've taken four charges in a game before, but I've never gotten four called before," he said. "My job is to get the ball to open guys and get some steals to get us going on defense. Today I was just able to hit some open shooters-3 from the field."

Paton also hit 9-9 from the line in the final six minutes to protect the Blue Demons' lead, built during the first few minutes of the second half. Leading just 31-26 at halftime, DePaul went on an 18-9 run to open a 14-point lead.

Noire Dame's offense struggled early in both the first and second halves. The Irish were scoreless for the first five minutes of the game and managed just five points in the first eight minutes of the second half.

"Leading with a solid defensive effort, DePaul can point to an 18-point performance from Brandon Parks and 10 points each from Brandon Cole and Lamarr Justice," said Kleinschmidt finished seven points under his average with

Slumping Irish icers fall behind early again, lose 8-2 to Falcons

By TIM SHERMAN

When the going gets tough, the tough get going.
At least that is what the cliché says.
Clearly, the going has been tough for the Notre Dame hockey team (1-11-2) in their past 14 outings. Thus far, the Irish have not gotten tough enough.

On Friday night, the Irish dropped their sixth consecutive game at the hands of Bowling Green by a score of 8-2.
As has been the case all too often recently, Notre Dame came out flat and fell behind quickly. Compounding that tendency is the fact that the Irish do not have the quick-strike offense that is needed to come back in these games.

In this game, Notre Dame found itself down 3-0 after the first period. BG’s leading goal scorer, Brian Holzinger, got the Falcons rolling with a power play tally at the 7:31 mark. Teammate Jason Clark added two more goals by the end of the period.

“We dug ourselves a hole,” said Jamie Ling. “It just kept getting bigger.”

The second period saw a change in net as coach Ric Schafer replaced Brent Lothrop with Greg Lauder in hopes of sparking the team. It worked, at least for a short time. Troy Casey took a pretty feed from Chris Bales and converted to cut the lead to 3-1.
That would be as close as the Irish would get, for three minutes later, Falcon John Helbring stuffed home a loose puck in the crease.
“We’re struggling,” said Ling. “Anytime you're struggling, it means you’re not doing the little things. That’s what has happened.”

With just 19 seconds left BG’s Sean Pronger lit the lamp. For all intents and purposes, that was lights out for the Irish.

Jay Matushak scored for the Irish in the third period, but that would be all. Three more Falcon goals accounted for the 8-2 final.

The loss definitely took some wind out of the team’s then-highest hopes for at least a short time.

“Anytime you go down 8-2 to a team like this, it’s hard to come back,” said John Heslin, a senior forward. “But we’ll regroup. We’re not done yet.”

Notre Dame will need to do just that if they are to avoid dropping their seventh straight game tonight.

Compounding the going has been the fact that Notre Dame has not faced a team of similar stature all season. The Irish have not played anyone other than each other in the past seven days.

Tonight the Irish will hope to begin another winning streak. The team saw their five game streak snapped at home last Thursday night, when they fell to the LaSalle Explorers, 75-85.

The loss definitely took some wind out of the team’s then-flowering sails, but a total collapse of the ship is not likely to follow.

Following Thursday’s loss, the Irish stand at 16-6, and remain atop the Western Collegiate Conference with a 7-2 record in MCC play. Barring a collapse, the Irish will finish first in the MCC, and for now, remain the premier team in the conference.
Success in their remaining four games of the season will enable the Irish to enter the MCC tournament not only on top statistically, but emotionally as well.

Coming off a loss should not be too much of a problem for the Irish. In all but once case, Notre Dame has come away victorious the next night out. Tonight should be no exception.

The Cardinals are 7-14 overall, including a 5-2 mark at home. The team is led by six foot senior guard Jody Martin, who is averaging 19.2 points and 9 rebounds a game. Another tough player for Notre Dame is 6-1 sophomore forward Kristin Mattos, who averages 14.6 points and 5.3 rebounds per game. Mattos is also the Cardinals’ leading three point shooter, hitting 37.7 percent of her three point shots.

One problem that the Cardinals may present to the Irish is their height advantage. Louisville is a much taller team than most of the MCC teams, the Irish are used to facing. The Cardinals boast six players over six feet, while the Irish have just four such players, the tallest being senior Kristen Knapp and freshman Katryna Gaither, both of whom stand at 6-3. This may slightly alter Notre Dame’s game, but not in a big way.

The Irish will be led by leading scorer Beth Morgan. Morgan is coming off a 22 point performance in the LaSalle loss, and leads the team in scoring with a 17.2 points per game average. Junior forward Letitia Bowen, who averages 10.8 points and 9.8 rebounds a game, is the team’s top three point shooter, and center Tootie Jones is also playing well of late. The Irish have been a strongpoint for most of the season, and is a tallest element in the team’s success.

Following tonight’s game, the Irish will be left with three remaining games, all within their conference, before the start of the MCC tournament on March 5.
Women have 2-1 weekend

By KATE CRISHAM
Sports Writer

The third time didn’t prove the charm.

The 18th-ranked Notre Dame women’s tennis team fumbled their otherwise stellar weekend performance yesterday, losing 7-2 to regional foe Northwestern.

The Irish had defeated 16th-ranked Miami 5-2 on Friday, and Kentucky 5-4 on Saturday, before running out of gas against the Wildcats on Saturday.

Head coach Jay Louderback refused to blame the loss on the grueling weekend schedule.

“I thought we played best in a pressure situation,” said Louderback. “We also played well at times against Kentucky, especially at the end.”

The Irish dropped only two matches against Miami, sophomore Robyn Lord’s 6-2, 6-3 loss to Caroline Hora at number-three singles and senior Lisa Tholen’s 6-7, 4-6 loss to Rachell Viollet.

Sophomore Wendy Crabtree defeated Michelle Fry 6-3, 6-1 at number-one singles and sophomore Sherri Vitale defeated LaAnn Gutkin 6-3, 6-2.

Senior Christy Faustmann defeated Katy Fairweather 6-1, 6-0 and freshman Erin Gowan defeated Jana Lipkova 6-4, 6-0 to seal up the victory for the Irish.

In Saturday’s match against Kentucky, the Irish received double wins from Crabtree and Lord.

Crabtree defeated Sue Barli 6-3, 6-3 at number one singles before teaming with Tholen to defeat Erica Gianci and Sheri Bash 4-6, 6-4, 6-3 at number-one doubles. Lord defeated Gianci 7-5, 6-3 at number-two singles, then joined with junior Laura Schwab to defeat Bartl and Courtney Allen 7-5, 1-6, 6-1 at number-three doubles.

The luck of the Irish ran out in the match against Northwestern, however.

Crabtree was the only winner in singles, defeating Elissa Kim 6-3, 6-4 in number-one singles. In doubles, the 20th-ranked, number-one doubles duo of Crabtree and Tholen defeated Kim and Branaca Elsbury 6-4, 6-3 to provide the only win for the Irish.

Louderback hopes that the team’s disappointment over the loss to Northwestern will translate into increased motivation for the upcoming National Team Indoors.

“We have two weeks before the National Indoors,” said Louderback. “We have to work on our doubles, and keep competing against each other in practice.

“We’ve got to bounce back.”

Men’s Tennis coasts to easy 7-0 victory

By PHIL LANGER
Sports Writer

The 14th-ranked Notre Dame men’s tennis team simply took care of business this weekend by shutting out a tough and talented Wisconsin squad 7-0.

The Irish failed to lose a set in what many believe was their best showing of the year.

“It was our finest match of the season,” commented Notre Dame head coach Bob Raylitis. “We controlled the play in both singles and doubles. The players were able to set a tone that Wisconsin couldn’t counter.”

Fifth-year senior and emotional leader, both on and off the court, Andy Zurcher led the charge by beating David Ortiz 6-1, 6-1 at No. 1 singles.

In addition, freshman phenom Ryan Simme, No. 32 in the nation, beat Todd Koehler, 6-2, 6-1; sophomore Mike Sprouse defeated Jordan Richman, 6-2, 6-4; senior Todd Wilson beat Aaron Dubie, 6-2, 6-2; sophomore John Jay O’Brien defeated Brandon List, 6-3, 6-2; and freshman Ron Mencias beat Mike Goldstein, 6-3, 6-3.

The dangerous doubles trio was exceptional this weekend as seniors Andy Zurcher and Allan Lopez pulled out a 9-8 victory over Ortiz/Koehler, sophomores Mike Sprouse and Jason Pun remained undefeated by beating Richman/Malcom Thorne, 8-4, and Todd Wilson and Ryan Simme impressively defeated Dubie/Zuckerman, 8-1.

The next obstacle on the way to the NCAA championship for the 7-1 Irish is the National Team Indoor Tournament, held in Louisville Kentucky, where three top twenty teams anxiously await their arrival.

Bengal Bouts open quietly

By GEORGE DORRMANN
Sports Editor

Thugs and the unskilled needn’t apply. This is the Bengal Bout—boxing for the sophisticated Notre Dame man—minus the blue blazer.

The quarterfinals of the annual Bengal Mission Bout were surprisingly tame under the lights of Stepan Center Sunday. Just as DePaul would have scripted, there were skilled boxers between the ropes in nearly all 34 bouts, no controversial decisions, few low blows and only small puddles of blood.

"There were very few mismatches," said the top seed in the 150-pound division Dan Schmidt. "We had more boxers who knew what to expect and that resulted in a lot of close fights."

Eleven of the decisions were split and only four fights didn’t go the distance. The first few weight classes started with three Monty Williams is Notre Dame’s money player. But his finances may have gotten in the way during Sunday’s 73-63 loss to DePaul.

A verbal battle between Williams and DePaul’s Tom Kleinschmidt escalated into a full-blown economic discussion—earning both players a technical foul.

It was Williams fifth foul, forcing him out of the game with four minutes remaining and Notre Dame trailing 57-46. "I came into the game and he threw a little shove at me," Kleinschmidt said. "Then he was saying how he was going to make more money than me. I don’t know if he was frustrated or what."

Williams’ frustration was evident when he went after DePaul’s Bryant Bowden after a hard foul on Lamarr Justice. And when Kleinschmidt entered the lineup 20 seconds later Williams continued jawing to protect his teammates from what he felt was unnecessary roughness.
