Growing up in different Third World countries, Notre Dame senior Cara Garvey was not shocked by the conditions at a refugee camp in western Turkey where she spent her summer. She was shocked, she says, is the apparent apathy from the rest of the world, and the refusal by the United Nations to admit that genocide is taking place in the region.

"It's basically genocide in the middle of Europe — ethnic cleansing. They (the Serbs) aren't going to stop until every Bosnian Muslim is killed," Garvey said.

Garvey, 21, spent the summer working for the International Rescue Committee, an organization in eastern Turkey that helps improve villages and assists with Bosnian refugee camps. Arriving in Turkey in May, Garvey spent the first few weeks working at the organization's office and writing two papers, both of which were used in the 15th-century United Nations Emergency Management Program.

"I wrote one paper on the Kurdish refugees (from Iraq) and another on the general refugee policies. I didn't know it then, but they both would be used to train others in how to deal with refugee situations," Garvey said. From the main office, Garvey then went on a two-week tour of Turkey before arriving at the refugee camp in western Turkey.

"It was very frustrating for me, I had no idea how to teach, and there were some who could speak a little bit and some who could speak quite a bit of English. I couldn't speak their language at all," Garvey said. "Garvey lived at the camp with more than 3,000 refugees in conditions she described as "not bad.'" They lived in small pre-fabricated houses shaped like tents," she said. "Living conditions were bad, but these people are Europeans — they are used to living in this way. Most of them are humiliated at the way they are living now."

Arrests were common and the Bosnian Muslims "as great people," Garvey said. "The refugee situation is very difficult, situation," she said.

Garvey told of one woman who asked her to help find her son and husband. When Garvey told her she was only a college student and unable to help, the woman began asking Garvey why Americans just sitting there? When they make it stop," Garvey says she does not understand herself.

"We have an arms embargo against the Bosnian Muslims, but the Bosnian Serbs are wearing the Serbs with weapons. They have a free hand," Garvey said.

She also said that she does not see an end in the near future for the conflict. "It's not going to be how you look, and many of the refugees hoped they might be able to return home soon," she said. "But now news reports say the fighting is worse than ever before."

Although the experience was difficult and frustrating at times, Garvey said it was something she would definitely do again. "I made a lot of great friends, and I learned a lot. I grew up in Bangladesh, so I was already used to poverty, but this summer was my first time I saw poverty in my eyes again. It makes me realize how good we have it."

Garvey had the opportunity to go because her father works for the United Nations Development Foundation. "It's a place where most of that opportunity are out there for anyone who is interested in doing foreign work," Garvey said.

"You just have to look," she said. "There are these places which have internships and would probably appreciate more help doing what they do.

"After her summer experience, Garvey said she would like to do similar work next year."
Parents find that nannycam background checks are needed

A random sampling of private investigators shows more have been developing part of their practice to investigating nannycare providers in recent years. At the same time, a number of these agents have cropped up to help working parents make the right babysitting choices or to keep tabs on sitters after they are hired.

"There are more requests for nannies than there are nannies available," said Dana Friedman, co-president of the Families and Work Institute, a New York-based non-profit research firm. "Most (nanny) agencies don't do a good job screening ... because most of them are just looking for bodies."

Hundreds of nuclear bridges at risk

A jury awarded $34 million to the ousted president of Dart Group Inc. Tuesday in the latest twist in a messy and publicly family fight for control of the book, auto parts and real estate empire. The U.S. District Court jury decided Haft had been fired without due cause by his father, 73-year-old Dart Chairman Herbert Haft. "I won't be going back. There's too many problems there," said Robert Haft after the trial. "I'm going to start another business or be associated with another one."

The two-week trial was one of a number of legal fights among members of Dart's wealthy Haft family, whose holdings are estimated at between $550 million and $1 billion. Robert Haft's jury award, reached after about three hours of deliberations, granted him exactly what he had sought: breach-of-contract damages of $18.8 million from Dart Group, $12.5 million from its Crown Books Corp. subsidiary, and 100,000 shares of Crown, valued at $2.3 million. His attorney, David Henzerling, said he expects Judge Sue Robinson, who presided over the trial, to declare the additional $1.5 million in Crown stock in a related action. Attorneys for the Dart companies declined to comment.

Einstein memorial statue sought

He reshaped the most fundamental ideas about time and space. Relatively speaking, however, Albert Einstein is underlined in the town where he worked. Professor Melvin Benardes thinks it's a shame that Princeton has no memorial to Albert Einstein. At a Borough Council meeting last month, however, only one of the six council members showed any interest in an Einstein memorial. "There's just one 'E' on the banner," Benardes said. The number of E's is understated because of the opposition of residents who believe Einstein, a more controversial scientist, is not a suitable memorial. Nonsense, says Benardes, who points out that Einstein posed for a portrait bust in 1952 that was the basis for a 21-foot statue that now stands outside the New Jersey Assembly. The National Academy of Sciences in Washington, Einstein died in 1955, more than 20 years after he fled Nazi Germany and joined the physics faculty at Princeton. Benardes, a professor of public health at Temple University who lives in Princeton, saw the portrait bust as a statue after two French tourists asked him for directions to Einstein's house. He realized then how little there was to show that Einstein lived in Princeton.

Space shuttle detours to California

Space shuttle Discovery and its six astronauts cleared through clear skies to a flawless desert landing Tuesday after an 11-day mission that included the first uncrewed spacewalk in a decade. Two days of storminess at Cape Canaveral forced NASA to bring the shuttle to California for the second time this year. The last diversion was in April when bad weather also interfered with a Florida landing. NASA pressed to find a landing site for Edwards because the detour costs $1 million and takes one week to ferry a shuttle cross-country atop a jumbo jet. While in orbit, a $25 million laser machine aboard Discovery bounced about 2 million light pulses off clouds and Earth's surface for as long as 10 days. The shuttle crew also released and later retrieved a satellite that focused its instruments on the sun's corona, or outer atmosphere. Astronauts spent several days maneuvering an 82-foot boom in front of Discovery's steering jets to measure the damaging effects of shuttle exhaust. The information is needed before Atlantis docks with the Russian Mir space station next year. The first uncrewed spacewalk in 10 years was conducted last week by astronauts Mark Lee and Carl Meade.

Nuclear reductions on hold

By ROBERT BURNS
Associated Press

WASHINGTON

Concerned that Russia might re-emerge as a military threat, the Clinton administration has decided against substantial new reductions in the U.S. nuclear arsenal, Defense Secretary William Perry said Tuesday. "The most important reason to be concerned about the future is that Russia still has about 25,000 nuclear weapons - many more than enough to threaten our national survival," Perry said.

Perry said the United States already has reduced its arsenal of strategic, or long-range, nuclear arms to 8,000 as set by the first Strategic Arms Reduction Treaty, even though that treaty has not yet officially entered into force. A second START treaty, not yet ratified by the Senate or the Russian parliament, would reduce U.S. and Russian strategic arsenals to 3,500 warheads each.

Some private defense experts have recommended large additional cuts in the U.S. arsenal, first to 2,000 warheads and later to as few as 100. Some also advocate destroying, rather than just storing, warheads that are taken out of service.

The main rationale for continuing to reduce the size of U.S. and Russian nuclear arsenals are to lessen the chance of a nuclear accident or attack, and to encourage other nations to give up their weapons or forgo making more.

But in a policy address to the Henry Stimson Center, Perry indicated that a lengthy administration study, dubbed the Nuclear Posture Review, has concluded that it's too early to consider substantial new arms reductions and that the U.S. military must be prepared to reverse recent arms cuts in an emergency.

planning stages, and Chernenko hopes to "improve student involvement" this year through increased publicity.

Preliminary ideas for Halloween and Christmas activities have been introduced, but nothing has been officially decided as of yet.

RHA helps coordinate residence halls, and was informed last night of a new rule handed down from the Office of Residence Life. All students participating in the dance must arrive by ten o'clock.

Other RHA activities tentatively include:

- A Halloween Party sponsored by SAB, which would feature pumpkin carving, story telling and a magician has been planned.

- A Wacky Winter Olympics, again sponsored together with SAB has been discussed.

"Plans for an Alcohol Awareness Week have been proposed.

"Students like the grade reporter," Kantor said. "They can see exactly where they stand - even at three o'clock in the morning - and plus they can make sure that I haven't made a mistake in recording their grades. Without the reporter, how could they see if I made a mistake?"

"It's really neat," Fitzpatrick agreed. "You can get an up-to-the-minute review."

"To ensure the privacy of every individual's grades, the reporter is designed so that each student can gain access only to his or her grades."

"We worked hard to get the privacy issue done right. That was a key concern," Kantor said. "But the system is as secure as e-mail."

"Mosaic can access text not only on campus, but also worldwide, which means that students and professors can get information from other campuses as well."

"I can get notes from the University of Florida, for example, and my notes were used at the University of Tennessee," Kantor said. "I was getting stories from students there."

"While the worldwide connections between bodies of information can be exciting, sometimes there can be disadvantages."

"If you know you can get the notes for a class or Hallows' computer," Fitzpatrick said, "there is some disincentive to go to class if you're pressed for time or just lazy."

Aircraft fired at during relief flight

The humanitarian airlift feeding much of Sarajevo was suspended today after an aircraft was shot at just hours after it resumed.

And in a forecast of another winter of war, residents of the capital were left without water, heat and in the dark again today due to Serb reluctance to restore utilities to Sarajevo.

The Serb-imposed cutoff of utilities persisted for the fifth day, prompting Lt. Gen. Sir Michael Rose, commander of U.N. troops in Bosnia, to meet with Bosnian Serb officials in their stronghold of Pale, east of Sarajevo.

With potable water, natural gas and electricity all originating outside the city, Serbs surrounding Sarajevo can choke them off anytime.

Monday that fighting had resumed around 45 degrees at daybreak today, underlining the dependency of city residents on Serb goodwill — wood and other fuels are next to nonexistent after the winter of siege, leaving most Sarajevans counting on gas for heating and cooking.

Lt. Col. Tim Spicer, Rose's spokesman, told reporters that Sarajevo was calmer than it has been since the weekend, when three people were killed and dozens wounded as government and Serb troops exchanged mortar fire.

The fighting apparently started with a government infantry attack supported by mortars inside in the city. That touched off retaliatory fire by besieging Bosnian Serbs, who targeted the city center.

U.N. officials said both sides violated the February agreement to keep heavy weapons at least 20 kilometers — 12 miles — from the city and warned Monday that they faced possible NATO air attacks if the shelling did not stop.

The exodus from the towns of Bijeljina and Janja showed the determination of ethnic Serb nationalists to force out the last non-Serbs who have endured more than two years of harassment and deprivation.

PARIS

Former Premier Laurent Fabius and two former members of his Cabinet will be charged this month with complicity in poisoning hemophiliacs who received AIDS-tainted blood products, justice officials said Tuesday.

Fabius, former Social Affairs Minister Georgina Dufoix and former Health Minister Edmond Herve will appear before the special Court of Justice of the Republic at separate hearings from Sept. 27 to Sept. 30, the officials said.

The court, created a year ago, is the only body with the authority to try ministers for crimes allegedly committed while in office.

The decision to charge the three follows two years of legal maneuvering by hemophiliacs and their families, who sought government accountability in a scandal that shook France's state-run health care system and contributed to the Socialists 1993 legislative defeat.

The scandal grew out of revelations that blood products contaminated with HIV, the AIDS virus, were knowingly distributed to hemophiliacs in 1985. About 1,200 hemophiliacs were contaminated with the AIDS virus as a result, and more than 300 have died.

The decision to charge Fabius and the two other ministers adds a new political dimension to the scandal, which has until now been officially blamed on medical officials alone. Four lower-ranking health officials were convicted in 1992, and a new charge of poisoning has recently been brought against three of them.

Fabius, who maintains he was not consulted about distributing the tainted blood, said Tuesday he welcomed the judicial proceedings as an opportunity for "justice to accomplish its mission so that the truth is clearly established."

Herve also said he was pleased he will "finally be able to explain myself ... it will allow me to defend my innocence."

The victims' families have maintained that Fabius' government chose not to purchase U.S. technology to cleanse the tainted blood or to buy an American AIDS test to screen donor blood in order to favor a French test that was being protected at the time.

They also claim that any order to continue using the blood bank's contaminated stocks had to have originated, even if indirectly, further up the health-care hierarchy.

Eight killed, 30 hurt in Beijing street clash

By CHARLEN FU

BEIJING

Even with rising crime in China, a shootout in Beijing on Tuesday that left eight people dead and more than 30 wounded was highly unusual in a nation that keeps a tight grip on its citizens.

An Iranian diplomat and his son were among those killed in the early morning shootout on a major thoroughfare.

China has a strict ban on civilian ownership of guns and ammunition and harsh penalties meant to deter crime, including wide use of the death penalty.

Yet, the government reported a 20 percent increase in the number of serious and violent crimes nationwide in the first six months of this year.

Current economic reforms have made many Chinese richer. But they also have led to enormous leaps in crime, drug abuse, prostitution — and the most corrupt government since the Communists took power in 1949.

"China is becoming an increasingly anarchic society," said David Shambaugh, senior lecturer in Chinese politics at the University of London, who shot both at point-blank range.

The passenger appeared to have died, said the diplomat, who spoke on condition of anonymity.

After shooting the two men in the minivan, the gunman fled down the road, pursued by police with automatic rifles who shot him to death.

Officials at the Iranian Embassy said Yousef Mohammadi Pahlkani and one of his sons were shot to death.

Ireland asks for aid from US

By NANCY BENAC

WASHINGTON

A leader from one side of Northern Ireland's sectarian divide pushed President Clinton on Tuesday to increase U.S. financial aid to the troubled country as a way to help both sides live in peace.

John Hume, the Catholic leader who helped pave the way for the IRA cease-fire, said he told President Clinton that "the next stage has to be agreement among our divided people... and that the best assistance that I thought could come from the United States would be economic assistance."

Hume got no commitment from Clinton, but he came away with "no doubt whatsoever of the commitment of President Clinton to do everything in his power to assist us and he made that very, very clear to me."

A senior administration official, speaking on condition of anonymity, said the White House was studying proposals to increase aid to Northern Ireland that would "reach out to both communities and help with the unemployment problem." Among the ideas under discussion is some sort of task force on Northern Ireland, the official said.

Hume said he was hoping for a committee to examine "positive ways of helping, economically, Northern Ireland and the border countries which are the areas that have suffered the most from our troubles."

Hume met with Vice President Al Gore, and Clinton joined the meeting in session. The Clinton administration planned to consult Wednesday with leaders from the other side of the dispute.

Leaders of the Ulster Unionists, Northern Ireland's largest party and the group that gets the bulk of the pro-British Protestant vote, planned to meet Wednesday with Gore, congressional leaders and State Department officials.

The administration also is considering giving Gerry Adams, leader of the IRA's political wing, a visa to visit the northeastern United States.

U.S. Marines landed this morning in northern Haiti, expanding their peacekeeping mission to the country's second largest city. Curious civilians who came to the water's edge watched the show.

In Port-au-Prince, Haitian police fired shots in the air today to disperse a crowd of Haitians chasing a convoy of U.S. military vehicles. It was the first major disturbance since American forces took control of the Haitian capital.

At least a dozen police officers went into the crowd swinging clubs and several shots were fired in the air from automatic weapons, sending the exiled Haitian president's port and airport, then move inland to take control of two roads and two bridges.

Later in the day, they were expected to move further into town to locations by the Army barracks and several police posts.

The docks at Port-au-Prince, meanwhile, were quiet under sunny skies this morning. U.S. ships and helicopters unloaded more troops and materiel and street vendors opened for business without incident.

Slow down, you move too fast

"Where are we headed?"

"What's going on?"

It seems that everyone is always going, without ever really taking the time to examine where they are, the here and now.

I ran into a friend of mine the other day and instead of asking her where she was going, I said "Where are you?" She replied, "Never mind," I said, not really ready to explain myself. "What's going on?" I asked her. She replied, "Nothing." I guess when we ask "What's going on?" they figure that we really don't want to know what is going on, and we are just inquiring to be polite. They respond "Nothing, how 'bout you?" and we reply "Oh, nothing at all." So the matter has been settled that we both live essentially mundane lives which nothing ever happens.

Usually questions like "What's up?" or "How's it going?" are said in passing and no answer is expected. I suspect most people would be highly annoyed if someone launched into a speech about everything that's going on in their life right at that moment, about how they planned to play a little BBall around four, catch an early dinner and then launch into going on?" I think that they would want a synopsis of world events either.

Why? Probably because they are rushing to some place important. (Even though there is nothing going on.) They don't have time to hear the answer to "What's up?"

The thing is, we never take the time and ask ourselves, "Where am I right now? Is "Exactly where have I been?" or "What is going on around me?"

Sometimes, our lives get so busy that we find ourselves jumping in place, frantically trying to catch up with the daily changes which the world is rushing to some place, even seats. And sometimes we fail to notice the designated seating assignments on the top row, the ticket in our own backyard. All their work makes the planet we live on seem that much smaller.

Fact is that there is an incredible world out there swirling around us here. Just this past weekend, right on the planet of South Bend, we sometimes tend to isolate ourselves and lose touch with the rest of the world. We get so caught up in our little world that we forget about the larger one in which we live.

Just take a brief look at the world around us now. Everyday men and women are writing and communicating on new advances in medicine, transportation, and thousands of other fields. All their work makes the planet we live on seem that much smaller.

Just this past weekend, right in our own backyard, the United States narrowly averted war with Haiti. How many people really kept up with that story? Be honest. How many of us really keep up with the world outside of this campus?

Perspective. After the cold war ended, freed from the limitations of its bipolarism, the world was thrown into a tremendous era of change. We are the generation of that change. It is now our turn to deal with the ramifications of the dramatic, indefatigable changes which the world is undergoing every moment of every day.

Tradition conquers all at stadium, even seats

Dear Editor:

I can't believe people haven't figured this scheme out by now. In her letter on September 16, Katie Gorman complains quite a bit about not being able to get to her seat for the first home game of the season.

As a senior, I had hoped it would be well-known that no one sits in her proper seat for football games. It's a bit of a Notre Dame tradition: we all go camp out for tickets, we pay big money for the tickets (yes, we all pay $84 for the tickets), and we go to the games.

People fail to notice the designated seating assignments on the top row. The ticket is simply an admission to the game. That's what's fun about Notre Dame football games—the fact that you can go and stand wherever you want as long as you're in your own section. If you're a short person, I am sorry for you but the ushers that Gorman complained so vehemently to cannot help you in that aspect. They are there to make sure you don't hold up a sign or consume alcohol or smoke—things like that.

I am a transfer student and this is my second year here. After the first home game, I understood how the "game" was played. The "game" I refer to is trying to find seating close to your ticket designation. In fact, I myself was in the wrong seat at the Michigan game. As a transfer student of that space and came asked to move, so I did. No problem. I didn't run to the useless ushers and whine. So the next time you're in Notre Dame Stadium and can't get a seat, either ask the ushers to move over or cry about it—either way, deal!

Do you often feel the cold beads of sweat trickle down your forehead, in anticipation of dread-filled days when exams are due? Do you turn to night since your mind is cluttered with sentence fragments, unclear thesis statements, and too many passive verbs? Saint Mary's student should fret no longer.

The Saint Mary's College Writing Center assists the student in her efforts to develop her writing skills, according to LeMans Hall senior tutor Jennifer Moore. "Mr. Moore said that Saint Mary's students may bring their papers to the center in any phase of the writing process. 'We work with students who bring in outlines, rough drafts, final drafts, or compositions. We even brainstorm for professors in lost writing ideas with students,' she said.

The center has been open for several years, much to the benefit of the students who put it to use. Holy Cross junior Joanna Finigan said, 'I use the center because they guide me in my writing. The tutors clue me in on how my paper could be better and where it doesn't need to be improved.' Finigan said that she trusts the student tutors in the center because they guide me in my writing. The tutors make sure that the student's work is not factored in, that it is a personal effort to work. Tea, coffee, and cookies are offered while students and tutors discuss papers. Moore reiterates the point that the student's work is not judged, but improved. The center is an open place to visit, which helps with the creative process, she said.

"Professors appreciate the fact that students use the writing center. It reveals that their students are taking initiative and making a serious effort to do well in the class," she said.

Although sessions usually last one hour, the availability of the sessions depends upon how busy the center is with respect to its schedule. Holy Cross sophomore Jennifer Lewis said, "From my experience, Sundays are usually busy at the center, so I'd advise students to make appointments in advance."

"Though the writing center employees prefer students to make appointments one or two days in advance, they accept short notice appointments if times permit," Moore said.

The writing center is also open on Sundays from 6 p.m. to 10 p.m.

Sessions usually last one hour. However, time available for the sessions depends upon how busy the center is with respect to its schedule. Holy Cross sophomore Jennifer Lewis said, "From my experience, Sundays are usually busy at the center, so I'd advise students to make appointments in advance."

OFF-CAMPUS

Of course they didn’t play at all last season. The 1994 women’s off-campus team did not play last year when no team was chosen to play a major role.

"We are a young team," said senior Julie Ehrman. "We are looking forward to having a complete season."

Two top players returning from last year’s squad included junior Melissa Mapes and junior wide receiver Shawn O’Shea. Along with Ehrman, both will show leadership this season. "We also hope to have a little fun this year," said Ehrman.

Lyons closed out the season on a rough note, losing to the Blitz 14-0. However, Mapes said she was pleased with the behavior of the team. "The score was kept, Ehrman thought the scrimmage helped.

"The offense seems to be coming together," said Ehrman.

Sorensen added that the defense, led by Stephanie Ready, who is a senior, will definitely be one of the strengths on this team.

"It did play really well," said Guerin. "We don’t think they’ll be able to compete in the big division this year.

"I didn’t play last year," said Guerin. "I was determined to get a team together in my senior year."

Guerin admitted that there was some split opinion among the players on playing for dorms or off-campus. However, others were able to find an outlet to play on the off-campus squad.

"If we’re really excited about the start of the season," said Guerin. "We’re looking forward to a competitive season this year."

The team is looking forward to a competitive season.

"Our ambition, spirit, dedication and teamwork have created a strong defensive line that plans to make use of their depth, after having an unusually large number of players try out and make the squad. The opposite side of that strength is that the majority of the numbers of players are young."

The predominantly young team will be inexperienced, a weakness which might present problems as the regular season opens. The offense will be led by running back Amy Granados, and the defense, led by Stephanie Ready, won’t be caught off guard. Last year Lewis lost only two key players, but they were having a young team. Senior defensive back and captain Tracy Cole is anxious to make it back.

="We’ve been practicing really hard and we are all ready for the season to begin," said Cole. "Their opener is this weekend versus Breen Phillips Hall.

"There are fewer questions on the defensive side of the ball with four starters returning from last year’s team."

Ending seniors Becky Carroll and Stephanie Ready and tackles Mary wells and Geanne Gadek, another that is expected to pose nightmares for opposing quarterbacks.

Cornerbacks Diane Cook and Kelly Smith along with linebackers Kelly Hogerty and safety Laura Lewis lost in the playoffs, and despite having a young team, Senior captain Kirsten Noonan is looking forward to their opener is this week against Pasquerilla West.

"We believe our goal this year is to get back to the stadium and win it."

Although Badin lost many crucial players this year, including most of their starting players in the backfield, Noonan said she is looking forward to the 10 or 11 young players to gain more experience each game. She attributes this possible achievement to Badin’s coaches, two of whom have led the team for the last five years.

"Our practices have been great; we’ve added an extra hour to each day at night and we have an extra practice. Much of this is because of our coaches. They are awesome," she said.

Sutanek said that in addition to their coaching skill, dedication and speed on the field, Badin has the talent.

"We have a lot of pride that we are such a small dorm and we have such a great team for football and a lot of spirit," said senior Jill Sutanek. "Obviously our goal this year is to get back to the stadium and win it."

"I thought we played really well," said Guerin. "It showed us the areas we need to work on, but overall it was a good practice, a good challenge."

"I believe the team will once again be solid at quarterback and line before the season that Nicholas would step into the starting role for the team."

"She (Nicholas) has a great arm and is extremely tough," said Edmundson. "She will definitely be one of the strengths on this team."

"We have a lot of committed people who have played a lot. I think that is good for the underclassmen to have them to look up to," said Noonan.

"The women’s interhall football team is short on experience, they definitely are not short on talent, at least according to team captain Kirsten Edmundson and the coaching staff."

"We also hope to have a little fun this year," said Ehrman.

"Once again, we are all excited."
Saint Mary's volleyball loses 2-0

By JENNIFER LEWIS
Saint Mary's Sports Editor

Saint Mary's failed to defeat Concordia University yesterday evening dropping their record to 2-2. The Belles struggled with the first two games losing 3-15 and 9-15. Saint Mary's lead in scoring in the third game only one point to point and Concordia eventually tied their score. There was a mix in the rotation. Captain Sara Stronzcek called for a rotation check, but the referee was unable to hear her. Another teammate called for the same rotation check, however she did not have the authority to make the call. Therefore, Captain Anne Lawrence had to serve the ball. Consequently she served an ace and the Belles would have won the third game. Lawrence could have tossed the ball and let it drop. Requiring the referee to signal a new serve. Allowing Stronzcek another chance to ask for a rotation check, in which Betsy Connolly could have served.

“She was not focused out there,” said coach Julie Schroeder-Biek. “It was a frustrating game. It was no one's fault. We just showed signs of a young team last night.”

“We lost because of mix communication, not because of the absence of skills.” Saint Mary's consists of nine freshman and three juniors. “Lawrence, really came through for us during the game,” said Schroeder-Biek. “She had a steady game, keeping up the back row.”

Junior transfer student Kelley Prosser twisted her ankle during the game and did not return to play. As of last night Prosser was unable to walk on it. “Prosser has her head on straight,” said Schroeder-Biek. “I can't say her injury was a major role in the loss but she adds a calming effect to the team.”

Freshman Meg Kelly lead the team with twelve kills, three blocks, and fourteen digs. Stronzcek had six kills, twelve digs and fifteen assists. Starting setter Kelly Meyer had eight digs and only eleven assists. “We were not doing well as individuals,” said Schroeder-Biek. “Let alone as a team. "We were not ready to play," said Prosser. "I think we will be more mentally prepared for this weekends game.”

Holtz looks to Covington and Rossum for depth

By MIKE NORBUT
Associate Sports Editor

Lou Holtz is implementing a youth movement.

The Irish head football coach announced at his weekly press conference yesterday that numerous freshmen will probably see playing time in Saturday's game against Purdue.

"We are going to work with two young corners, Ivory Covington and Allen Rossum," Holtz said. "Those are two freshmen we will play more. Corey Bennett will see a little bit more time at outside linebacker. Covington and Rossum will be working their way in on the side of senior Shawn Wooden, while seniors Tracy Graham and LaRon Moore will also be seeing time at the safety positions."

The possibility of youngsters in the game on Saturday excited the coach. "I think Ivory Covington and Allen Rossum at the corners are just good young athletes that have never been beaten so they are very, very confident," Holtz said. "A young player knows no fear. That is the thing we like about Ivory Covington and Allen Rossum."

Other personnel changes include junior Alton Maiden moving to nose tackle behind Oliver Gibson, and Emmett Mosley changing to tackle to support fellow sophomores Randy Kelder and Robert Farmer.

Notre Dame may be without the services of two of their captains this week.

While talkback Lee Becton will probably miss four weeks due to a hip injury he obtained in last Saturday's Michigan State game, offensive guard Ryan Leahy is on a day-to-day basis after missing last week with a knee injury. "The situation is such that Lee Becton is still on crutches," Holtz said. "They tell me four weeks. I would be more optimistic, but then again, I am not the trainer. Ryan Leahy is a waiting-to-see-type situation. In the event he can't go, then of course we will go with Steve Misevic again."

Misevic, a junior, performed well in his first start in an Irish uniform last week.

Recruiting Coordinator Tony Yelovich has reportedly taken an administrative position in the Notre Dame athletic office, but details were not discussed.

"This will probably happen very, very soon because the need is there and this is something that Tony wants to do," Holtz said. "He feels that it is in his best interest."

Offensive coordinator Dave Roberts will be handling the recruiting duties this season. A permanent replacement has not yet been decided upon.

Belles soccer set to face Wheaton

By JENNIFER LEWIS
Saint Mary's Sports Editor

The 3-2 Saint Mary's Belles will face a most difficult challenge this afternoon against Wheaton College, according to Shari Mateleski. Wheaton's team is the strongest in the Crusaders history.

The Belles have been working mostly on their defense in practice. They have also been working on their passing skills.

"There is a conflict between passing more and dribbling the ball more," said Tiffany Raczyński. "The coach definitely wants us to pass the ball more."

The Belles are suffering from recurring injuries.

"At one point in the season I didn't think we would have enough players to play," said coach Larry Patterson. "Rita Juster plays the entire game," said Mateleski. "She will definitely be a key player in today's game."

"I'm sure we will struggle early in the game," said Mateleski. "We just need to hold them long enough that we can get it together and weaken their defense them in order to have the clearance for attempt on goal."

Adkisson scores twice as Irish topple Titans, 5-0

By THOMAS SCHLIDT
Sports Writer

While talent and depth helped a team win, experience cannot be overlooked. Thanks to the intensity and desire of senior sweeper Kevin Adkisson, the Notre Dame men's soccer team defeated Detroit Mercy 5-0 last night.

The first half of the game was relatively slow and sloppy for the Irish, as some passes were going errant and players were slow to get to the ball.

The Irish got a break at 27:23 as a long shot from the midfield took a high bounce and slipped through goalkeeper Ryan Lenarcic's hands. Senior Tim Oates slipped behind Lenarcic and pushed it in for a 1-0 lead.

Except for having the lead, the Irish had done nothing to show any dominance until Adkisson stepped forward.

He had been yielding encouragement to the offense all game, and finally decided to take charge.

At 42: 24 after stopping a Titans attack, Adkisson stepped forward. "Kevin had a great game," coach Mike Berticelli said. "He is a motivated, driven senior. He is a role model to anyone playing soccer."

With the scoring drive by Adkisson, the Irish settled into their game plan and started to completely dominate the Titans in every aspect of the game.

Midfielders, senior Keith Carlson and sophomore Tony Capasso also added goals in the second half to seal the victory.

With the win the Irish even up their conference record at 1-1. Yet, more importantly the Irish looked prepared to enter a tough stretch of their schedule as they face No. 1 Indiana this Friday, and Wake Forest on national television next Wednesday.
