University clears Kinder and Farmer

By DAVE TYLER

Notre Dame sophomore running backs Randy Kinder and Robert Farmer were exonerated in connection with an alleged dormitory incident involving a freshman student.

"We're glad this is over," Farmer said. "I'm happy to be able to return to school and get back to studying."

University officials are barred from commenting on disciplinary matters involving students by government regulations. "Federal law prohibits us from commenting," said as a general policy the University does not comment on student records, out of fairness to the student," said Assistant Director of University Public Relations Dennis Brown.

No details have been officially released on this incident, and no criminal charges have been filed.

"I'm happy to get back to studying," said Farmer.

Kinder and Farmer said that they were exonerated during a three-day hearing before an administrative disciplinary panel. That hearing concluded January 19, and the panel was expected to take up to two weeks to reach a decision.

The South Bend Tribune, however, reported yesterday that the hearing was reached Friday, and that the principals involved were notified of the panel's ruling Tuesday.

Kinder and Farmer said that they were cleared of any culpability.

"We're back in normal for both of us," Kinder told the Associated Press.

"I'm not under any restrictions that any other student isn't under."

"I'm really glad to get back on top of my schoolwork," Farmer said.

"I'm anxious to get back on track," said Farmer. "I'm really excited to be a normal student again."

Administration looks to election for cable advice

By GWENDOLYN NORGLE

Assistant News Editor

Students are going to have to respond on election day if they want their voices heard concerning cable television access in dorm rooms.

According to Assistant Vice President of Student Affairs William Kirk, "Students would have to show a significant amount of interest" on the referendum being included on the ballots for Student Body President and Vice President on February 8. The responses from these ballots will be one of the factors considered by the administration in deciding whether or not to allow cable access in dorm rooms, Kirk said.

Student Body President David Hungeling said that Student Affairs would use the information, but it will not be the only factor in their making a decision.

According to Hungeling, "If there is strong support, we'll be in a better arguing position. The more students respond, the better our argument is."

According to Kirk, the administration wants to find out if students would be willing to pay for cable access. The administration would like to measure "student perception" of the idea, Kirk said.

According to a draft of the referendum, which was included in a proposal voted on at last week's Student Senate meeting, the referendum is "being used by student government to gauge student support either for or against cable television access in every dorm room."

The results of this poll will be used by student government and presented to the administration.

The question on the ballot will read, "Would you support a $50.00 increase per semester to every on-campus student's room and board for cable television access in each dorm room ($100 per year)?"

According to Kirk, cost will be a major issue for the administration in determining whether or not cable access in dorm rooms will be provided. Although costs are still being considered, some plans have been decided.

"The fee would be across the board," Kirk said. "Students would not be charged according to room, due to the varying number of residents in each dorm room."

SMC CAMPS SECURITY GOES ON-LINE

By LAURA FERGUSON

When Saint Mary's students and staff prepare to enter the campus tunnel system they must remember one thing about their ID—don't leave home without it.

Since the summer of 1992 Saint Mary's has joined the trend of many other college campuses in implementing a card access security system.

The purpose of bringing the campus on-line was for personal security. According to Richard Chlebek, director of security, it was discussed for several years but the catalyst was the Campus Crime and Awareness Act of 1990. This act stated that institutions must provide a safe environment for community members.

Because Saint Mary's has so many facilities not only used by their own members but the Notre Dame Hesburgh Library, Cross communities as well, the College needed to find a practical approach for security.

"We didn't install a security system because there was a problem on campus; it was done so something would be accomplished Chlebek. "Many campuses have had a reactive approach but we hope that nothing will happen on (the Saint Mary's) campus. We don't want to deal with a tragedy."

Currently there are tentative plans to bring Regina Hall on-line next year, according to Chlebek. The system will be similar to that used in LeMans Hall in that it will allow access to academic areas but not to residential areas for non-students. If installed, there will be a card reader at the main entrance and the northeast door, but there is still discussion regarding a computer ID reader on the southwest entrance.

In addition, all stairwells will have readers and the elevator will have a system more similar to a card reader than the code access system currently in use in LeMans Hall. A total of 14 readers will be installed if the proposal is approved by the Board of Trustees this spring.

In the phase of the plan executed last year, gains for the year was to have multiple-purpose cable access system.
What kind of person are you?

You've probably seen these magazine quizzes: “Take this quiz to find out what kind of person you are.” Sociologists have always amused me, so I've designed my own, for entertainment purposes only, of course. But it might give you a new insight as to how ethical you are.

1. You find a mini-case of CD's in the parking lot and the case has been left. You:
   A) Return the CD's. After all, you’d want them to do the same for you.
   B) Do not return the CD's, of course. But it depends on whether you can locate a "dog book" fast enough.

2. A random person calls to invite you to an SVR or some other social function. You:
   A) Say, “Sure. I'm open to new experiences.”
   B) It depends on whether you can count on a "dog book" fast enough.

3. You are the last person to leave the floor of your organization's annual meeting. You:
   A) Leave and lock the door behind you.
   B) At least you’re consistent in your intention to return it.

4. You and a group of friends call a cab on a very hot night. You’re waiting when the cab pulls up, but another person who happens to be in a hurry is waiting behind you.
   A) Let the person with the broken leg go in your place. You’ll catch the next cab.
   B) It depends on whether the person broke his or her leg in a car accident or on an exotic ski trip.

5. Your best friend from Georgia Tech wants to come up for the weekend to visit you. You know it might be expensive to entertain them. You:
   A) Make plans to entertain them anyway.
   B) At least you’re consistent in your intentions to return it.

6. Someone has been out of class for a week. You:
   A) Ask who might have dropped it with intentions to return it.
   B) It depends on whether you can locate a "dog book" fast enough.

Tomb of Alexander

Archaeologists have found the tomb of Alexander the Great in the Egyptian desert, the head of Alexander's antiquities department said today.

"I do feel that this is the tomb of Alexander," Abdel-Halim Noureddin, chairman of the Egyptian Antiquities Organization, told The Associated Press. "All the evidence is there.

"We have dreamed about this for a long time," he said. "When you find it, you never quite believe.

Noureddin, one of the nation's ranking Egyptologists, spoke after visiting the site near the oasis of Siwa in the Western Desert.

Alexander, king of Macedonia, was one of the greatest generals of all time and one of the dominant personalities of the ancient world.

He led his armies out of Greece in 334 B.C., at the age of 23, creating an empire that covered much of Asia and spreading Greek culture throughout the Middle East and Asia.

He is believed to have been planning a voyage to sea areas around the world when he caught a fever and died at Babylon in 323 B.C. at the age of 33.

His burial place is one of the great unsolved mysteries of the ancient world. History has it that after the Macedonian ruler died in Babylon in 323 B.C. and was buried in Alexandria, Egypt, his body was moved to Syria and then to Egypt. But the burial place was never found.

Last weekend, Greek archaeologists looking for the site disclosed that they had found two limestone plaques near what appeared to be a large tomb at Siwa, 50 miles east of the Libyan border.

The plaques were written in Greek and recite a poem which says they had found their king's master's body to the tomb and buried it, according to newspaper reports.

CSC sponsors service projects

Volunteer work a unique opportunity

dents of all grade levels the opportunity to spend eight weeks of the summer performing community service in a variety of programs throughout the United States and the world.

Last summer over 140 Notre Dame students participated in summer service projects. The process includes completing an application, which can be obtained from the CSC, and then interviewing with Sue Cunningham, coordinator of Urban Plunge and Summer Service Projects, and a student who spent the previous summer in one of the service projects. Juniors are usually given priority because it is their last summer in school, but many underclassmen also participate.

Those accepted meet with Cunningham to discuss possible locations, interests, and the types of projects each would like to participate in.

Since it is volunteer work students are not paid, but generally they live with an alumni and his or her family, and transportation to the job provided.

There is also a $1500 tuition scholarship given by the Alumni Club and the James F. Andrews Endowment, which sponsors the project, and three credits of theology given to everyone who participates.

Anne Janson, a junior from Siegfried Hall, spent last summer in Sacramento, California, working in the Jane Lathrop School teaching learning-handicapped and severely emotionally disturbed teenagers. All of these children had been removed from their homes because of parental abuse or drug addiction, and many of the teenagers had been in trouble with the law.

Janson worked full-time either assisting in classes or actually teaching them herself. She remains in contact with some of her students and continues to volunteer.

"My summer service project opened my eyes to problems I didn't know existed, but it also opened my eyes to possible solutions," Janson said. Presently she is involved with organizing and interviewing candidates for this summer.

The program does not end when summer does. Everyone involved in summer service projects is required to keep an ongoing journal of their daily experiences, submit a paper, and attend a follow-up retreat with Don McNeill, director of the project.

With junior interviews already having begun, people still considering applying need to act quickly. Applications are required, which are due by February 8 at the CSC.

Scholarship money increases

Special to The Observer

Undergraduate scholarship aid awarded by Notre Dame has more than doubled in the five years since scholarship enhancement became the University's top priority, according to a report from the Office of Financial Aid.

Prepared by Joseph Russo, director of Financial Aid, the report provides a preliminary summary of all student aid from University, government, and private sources for the 1994-95 academic year. The final report will be issued at the end of the fiscal year, June 30.

University-administered scholarship aid for the current academic year totaled $11.5 million, more than twice the $5.4 million distributed in 1989-90, the year Notre Dame's Board of Trustees established the long-range goal of meeting the full demonstrated financial need of all students.

"The trustees' continued support for the increase in scholarship resources is clearly reflected both in the dollars being made available and in the number of students being assisted," Russo said. "At the same time, we have a long way to go and will continue to concentrate on reaching the ultimate goal of meeting the full demonstrated need of our students."

The scholarship and grant assistance provided by the University includes funds awarded to Notre Dame Scholars — students who are this year's designated the most accomplished among each incoming class — as well as Holy Cross grants awarded primarily to minority students based upon their academic and personal records and their abilities to overcome economic or social disadvantages. With these and with all Notre Dame-based financial aid programs, demonstrated financial need is an essential consideration in addition to outstanding academic and personal records, Russo said.

Total aid for 1994-95 includes scholarships, loans, and aid from all sources — projected to be a record $92.5 million, a 5 percent increase from last year.

Other highlights of the report:

• In the freshman class, University scholarship funding is up 3 percent from a year ago to $3.5 million.

• Loans to students and their parents account for $32.6 million of the $36.7 million from federal assistance programs.

• Nonfederal financial aid, made available outside the University, for the first time, exceeded $5.4 million.

• Of the $92.5 million in aid distributed, about $57.7 million is going to undergraduate and $34.8 million to graduate students.

Little Sibs, Keenan Revue this weekend
By PEGGY LENCZEWSKI

Last night's Residence Hall Association meeting focused on announcing upcoming activities at Saint Mary's. The Keenan Revue will run this weekend at O'Laughlin Theater. Following the performance on Friday, RHA will sponsor a pizza party in Hagar College Center.

Elections for student body president and vice-president will be held on February 21. All students are encouraged to vote. According to RHA member Meg Courier, "Since the student body officers represent the interests of the entire student body, only by voting can the students truly expect to have their expectations met."

Also, Regina and McCandless Halls will hold a joint formal on February 10 at the Century Center, while Holy Cross Hall's formal will be February 11 at Holiday Inn. Finally, Little Sibs weekend will take place this weekend.

Security

Security management has worked on reducing the number of complaints and tickets issued. The security officers have worked closely with the building management to reduce the number of complaints.

One of the most significant changes has been the implementation of a card access system. This system allows students to access certain areas of the buildings using a card, which reduces the number of complaints about unauthorized access.

The card access system is also being used to improve safety in the residence halls. Students are required to present their cards when entering certain areas, such as the dorm lounges. This has resulted in a decrease in the number of complaints about safety issues.

In addition to the card access system, security officers are patroling the buildings regularly, which has also contributed to a decrease in complaints.

Overall, the changes made by the Security Office have resulted in a significant reduction in the number of complaints and tickets issued. The officers are committed to ensuring the safety and well-being of the residents and will continue to work towards improving the security situation in the residence halls.

Council designates funds
By BRAD PRENDERGAST
Assistant News Editor

Residence halls will receive a total of $3,000 from the Hall Presidents' Council general fund to use at their discretion, the HPC decided last month. By a 32-9 margin, council members voted to allocate $500 to each of the 25 dorms and to the off-campus residents. The money can be used for anything that benefits the students and is not prohibited by University guidelines, according to Rich Falerno, co-chairman of the council.

The council decided to make the allocations because it has more money than it can spend by the end of the school year, according to Falerno.

If the money is not used by year's end, University officials will have to consider the possibility of placing the remaining money into a contingency fund, where-by the council will be able to retain its claim to the money for next year.

Therefore, spending the funds is necessary if next year's council wants a similar-sized budget, according to Falerno.

"If (University officials) see that we're not spending the money that we're given, they'll be less willing to give us as much money next year," he said.

Current budget estimates show that roughly $36,000 was saved in the council's coffers. Of that amount, $2,000 have been set aside for the winners of the dorm-of-the-year contest, and the rest will remain in the council service fund.

With $13,000 now allocated to the dorms, $16,000 have yet to be designated.

Falerno raised the possibility of placing the remaining money into a contingency fund, where-by the council will be able to retain its claim to the money for next year.

Specifics regarding the contingency fund have not yet been explored, Falerno said.

Two other points regarding the allocations were discussed at last night's meeting prior to voting. Heather Hughes, treasurer of Notre Dame's chapter of Habitat for Humanity, asked for the council for donations to help Habitat build a home in South Bend over spring break. However, the council can only give service organizations money from its service fund, because the majority of its funds comes from student activities fees, which must be used to benefit the students, according to University policy.

Also, council members briefly discussed dividing the $13,000 among the dorms according to student population.

But that idea was dismissed because the council decided that if it were to assign the funds based on anything but a flat allocation, then other factors besides population — such as a dorm's financial need — would have to be analyzed, according to Falerno.

Each dorms has until a tentative April 1 deadline to decide how it will use its $500. Falerno said.

Movements serve as a response to feminism

By NICOLE NIELSEN
News Writer

Michael Kimmel, professor of sociology at the State University of New York, addressed the issue of the gender gap and of New York, in his lecture "Men's movements in the 1990's: The Social Construction of Being Male." When asked why men have not become pro-feminist, Kimmel responded by saying "it is a question of power." There is a certain symmetry in the idea that men have all the power and women do not feel powerful, according to Kimmel. Men's view of the situation, however, is asymmetric, Kimmel said. "Men feel that their wives boss them around, their houses boss them around, and their kids boss them around." They do not understand it when women say that men have all the power.

"Masculinity has been misinterpreted," he said, stating that women have described it to be "the drive to dominate, the drive for power, and the drive to control." Kimmel contends rather that "masculinity is really about the fear of other people having power over us." Thus, "acting masculine becomes compensatory behavior so that we won't be seen as娘娘腔ly.

Kimmel pointed to three groups that have formed in response to feminism: the anti-feminists, the mythopoetic movement or the masculinists, and the pro-feminists. Within the anti-feminist movement, there are two subgroups: the traditionalists, and the men's rights group. The belief of these traditionalists is that "women and men are so fundamentally different that you cannot let women into the public sphere. They belong in the home." According to Kimmel, traditionalists believe that "women should have no access to higher education because their bodies would collapse" because of the biological and psychological differences between men and women. Kimmel stated that this was the theory behind the events that went on at the Citadel.

Last year, the formerly all-male Citadel military college in South Carolina was successfully sued by a female who was accepted for admission, only to then be turned away when the school administration learned of her sex. A federal court ordered her admission because the Citadel receives state and federal funds.

A group within the traditionalist movement is the Promise Keepers, founded by the best football coach at the University of Colorado. They believe that women's achievements have disrupted the natural flow of things. The "promise" made by men is that "they will respect their wives and be faithful if their wives agree to stay home with the children, not go to college, and not have a job," according to Kimmel.

The second group of anti-feminists is the "men's rights group." Kimmel said this group believes that "men's power is an illusion." This group talks about violence against men and a fear of false accusations. The recent movie "Disclosure" is an illustration of this prevailing attitude.

"Women hit men as much as men hit women," is an argument of the men's rights group. Kimmel pointed out that in this argument is that the group looks to surveys that ask questions like, "Have you ever hit your spouse?" The surveys fail to question who initiated it, how often it occurs, and how severe the abuse is, Kimmel said.

The second men's movement is the Mythopoetic or the Masculinists. This group "does not care what women do. They want places where they can be men together. They seek to develop manly styles of nurturing," Kimmel made reference to the Boy Scouts, and said that the organization was formed out of these ideas.

One problem with this group, according to Kimmel, is that they engage in many Native American rituals in order to "connect with the earth." In that sense, he sees them as racist. He says that white men cannot get this connection in our culture, so they dress up and paint their faces like Native Americans in order to experience it.

Finally, Kimmel discussed the pro-feminist group. In essence, "the pro-feminists support women in every area that women have found important."

As a supporter of the pro-feminist movement, Kimmel stated that "it is in men's best interest to support feminism."
Students respond to idea of cable

By GWENDOLYN NORGLE

Students will have the opportunity to let the administration know how they feel about cable TV in dorm rooms by way of the referendum on the ballot for Student Body President and Vice President on February 8.

 Asked how young people can curb teen pregnancy, how to get guns off the streets, and "Accessing the Future - The Need for Cable Television," which was published on September 29, 1994, the executive coordinator of the Board of Trustees Report Committee Larissa Hersczeg commented on the cost. Hersczeg said, "Never again will Notre Dame be presented with such a cost-effective opportunity at a time when student and faculty demand for cable service is so high."

According to the Board of Trustees Report, money can be saved by installing cable now since the University is in the process of working on the computer network. Installing cable and network wires at the same time would "save hassle," as well.

Hunegel agreed that Notre Dame should not wait any longer if it is going to gain cable access in dorm rooms. "The time is now," Hunegel said.

Flood waters continue to rise in Netherlands

By ABNER KATZMAN
Associated Press

AMSTERDAM, Netherlands

Dozens of Dutch hamlets became ghost towns Tuesday as tens of thousands fled surging rivers that threatened to breach dikes and flood farmlands. At least one person drowned.

Flood waters that killed at least 27 people in northwestern Europe earlier this week began to recede. But the flooding wasn’t expected to peak until Wednesday in the Netherlands, where most land is below sea level.

On Monday, about 15,000 people left low-lying farmlands of their own volition. On Tuesday, the evacuations were mandatory. Dutch authorities declared a state of emergency and ordered 70,000 people out of “polders,” farmland reclaimed over the centuries from marsh and river basins.

Highways north from the flooded areas were clogged Tuesday night after officials asked 100,000 more to leave the danger zones.

Dozens of Dutch farming hamlets along the Maas and Waal rivers were deserted Tuesday, residents fleeing with little more than the clothes on their backs. “The rest of the village has gone,” a teen-age girl walking with three children down the empty street of one village told Dutch Television. “But we still have some gifts with us and we cannot leave them behind.”

More than a hundred bunks rounded up people in the Himmelwaard, Wamel, Druten and Ooijpolder and took them to evacuation centers. Officials said the evacuation was orderly.

Tens of thousands of farm animals also had to be shipped out of the polders to keep them from drowning. Jan Roelofs, a crisis center spokesman in Nijmegen, said the dikes were “stable, but weak.”

But even one dike burst, some villages would be sunk in up to 16 feet of water. And water could submerge secondary highways and cut off escape routes.

“I have 6,000 chickens,” screamed one farmer over the telephone to the local crisis center at the Waal River town of Beneden-Leeuwen. “I am staying put. You don’t get me out.”

Dutch farmers prepared for the flood by shipping livestock to market early, since they wouldn’t be able to graze the animals on flood-damaged land.

The flooding was the worst since 1953, when the North Sea dikes in the southern Zeeland province burst, killing more than 1,800 people. The dikes that were threatened Tuesday were not sea dikes, however, but river dikes, and the threat to life was believed to be less extreme.

The first death from the Dutch floods was reported Tuesday, a 52-year-old woman who drowned in the Waal River village of Winsen, said Ruud Schelder, a spokesman for the crisis center in Nijmegen.

Thousands of acres of land were under water. But dikes that keep the river water out of the reclaimed areas were holding, with flooding primarily near the banks of the Maas and Waal rivers.

The long lines of evacuation vehicles evoked images of World War II, when residents fled Dutch cities that sustained heavy bomb damage.

One old man told Dutch Television he had left everything to take refuge in Nijmegen. “What else could I have done?” he asked. “I could have waited but then it would be too late.”

“My girl friend became hysterical... We packed up all our staff and left,” another person told the television station after reaching a relief center. “Everyone was on the road, there was traffic and you just can’t get anywhere.”

A thousand soldiers were brought in to assist in the evacuation effort and major Dutch highways were closed to all but emergency traffic to facilitate evacuations.

All canal barge shipping was halted in the area to prevent damage to the dikes.

Floodling, caused by the early melting of Alpine snows and heavy rain, wreaked deadly havoc elsewhere in northern Europe.

The official toll was 15 dead and five missing in France, at least four dead in Germany, five dead and one missing in Belgium, and one dead each in Luxembourg, Austria and the Netherlands.

KEEPING RESOLUTIONS:
Moving away from 'me'

Just like the start of the new year, the start of a new semester for many people, myself included, "turning over a new leaf" often times we tend to set unrealistic goals for ourselves, figuring that even if we only make it halfway that's better than where we were.

If you're anything like me, you've probably vowed to keep up with all the reading in your classes, to get in better shape, read a major newspaper every day, keep losing your keys, and the list goes on and on.

We buy brand new 1995 monthly and daily planners, new running shoes, and badly go forth to become better people.

The only resolution I haven't broken and everything to gain.)

While the desire is often there, strange, but if you don't know the keys, and the list goes on and is the little things that make the other's commitment to service based on the fact that the manner of service chosen may be different from one's own. Also, since Mr. McMahon brings Christianity into the whole fracas, I would ask him to read Matthew 7:1. For his benefit it states: "Judge not, lest ye be judged."

What is important here is not support for the manner of service chosen, but respect for one's choice. It is unfortunate that Mr. McMahon's "free thought" is warped in such a fascistic manner that he feels his viewpoint is apparently the only one of value.

Further, it stands a sad commentary that close-mindedness and aversion to respectful acceptance of differences pervades the viewpoints of this so-called "large population of students." When was such a survey taken? Such sweeping generalizations are the exact types of provincial ideas which are supposed to be quashed by continuing education and learning in a university setting.

I encourage Mr. McMahon to illustrate his bevy of generalizations with facts about U.S. "concentration camps." I further hope that he mentions the rape of Nanking by Japanese soldiers or the Biafra death march, or even the multitude of atrocities and crimes committed in Haiti before our much-welcomed intervention.

These events paint not propaganda, but the truth, something which is apparently unneccesary to Mr. McMahon's so-called "humanitarian" view of the world. For the rest of society, however, truth does have a value, as does an accurate representation and discussion of opposing viewpoints.

There is clearly a place on this campus for opposing ideas, and Mr. McMahon's attempts to remove ROTC are a veiled attempt to remove opposition. Who is the fascistic now?

LETTER TO THE EDITOR
Christians first, patriots second

Dear Editor:

This letter is in response to David McMahon's "No's No place for ROTC," and his myopically idealistic vision of the world.

Should the ROTC program be continued here at Notre Dame? David McMahon states that "There is no place for ROTC on this campus." Following Mr. McMahon's logic that ROTC "trains people to be good Christian killers." It is evident the concept of maintaining armed forces for "defense" is clearly beyond his understanding.

Moreover, anyone who equates "the SS, the storm troopers in Star wars, and the U.S. Army" cannot hope to maintain academic credibility in such a discourse. Yet, absurdities continue to be spewed forth throughout Mr. McMahon's letter.

For example, he writes of numerous invasions and "a glorious history of genocide against indigenous peoples." With this past work marking the 50th anniversary of the liberation of Auschwitz, it should go without saying that the U.S. armed forces helped stop genocide, not commit it.

Yet, if one wants to presume that the military is inherently a group of "killers" as Mr. McMahon claims, it is a credit to this university that it has taken on the mantle of training leaders to be Christians first and patriots second, as the plaque on Sacred Heart states? Surely it must be a credit to this university that it can do so without the assistance and scholar- ships provided by the program. Apparently Mr. McMahon, and for that matter Mr. Ozersky, come to this campus with a veiled attempt to remove ROTC candidates. This year, in addition to our resolutions to improve our own lives, maybe we can find time to brighten the lives of the people around us.

QUOTE OF THE DAY
Author John Molloy practically invented the "image" business and captured the dress code when he first wrote his book, Dress for Success, in 1975. Although the idea of dressing to create a certain look has remained a major reason why we wear particular items, some of the "rules" have changed over the years.

You thought dressing for a weekend night was difficult? Just wait until you are an upperclassperson and you are faced with the problem of finding the perfect interview suit that you can afford and look good in. Trust me, it is harder then it sounds.

One of the reasons that dressing for success can often lead to endless hours of shopping and frustration is, "There is so little literature available that addresses this issue for women," says Karen Kyle, Assistant Director for Career Development at Saint Mary's College.

Molloy can emphasize enough the importance of dressing correctly and doing personal research before interviewing. One of the first pieces of advice she offers students is to evaluate the way people are dressing in the industry and then dress on the "nicer" side of that.

In what are known as the creative fields, however, applicants have a bit more range in the correct attire to wear. For them, colors, patterns and textures need not follow the guidelines of a more conservative market, yet must remain within the boundaries that constitute a professional and serious image.

Manier instructs women to stay away from anything that is too revealing and too fluffy. And any hint of a sexual presence should be kept out of an interview.

The best fabric for your suit or dress should be wool or a wool blend. Wool has a richer look, is generally better tailored and will maintain its shape.

Generally, skirt hemlines should remain modest. Lengths that fall to the knee or just above the knee work for most industries. Keep in mind however that in the financial world, as Manier indicates, candidates should not stray too far away from the established image. The cut and color of a suit should be conservative and although wearing a dress is O.K., that student may be risking a job.

Still, whatever field you plan to enter, it is equally important to feel comfortable with what you are wearing. For students, "It can be difficult to feel at ease if they are not used to wearing certain items," says Manier.

In this case, a student needs to attempt a balance between her personal style and that which the industry considers appropriate. An example of this could be walking in high heels. Although heels can often be very uncomfortable, in certain instances they can be replaced by dressy flats or low pumps if fitting. However, with a conservative suit, flats just will not do.

Being well-groomed is a must at an interview. Hair must remain off the face and try avoiding hair styles that cover the eyes. Although many people seem to be cutting their long locks just in time for interviews, Manier says, "You can have long hair, just be sure that it doesn't distract from you."

With jewelry use discretion. Wear nothing that dangles and makes noise. Again, remove anything that will divert the interviewers attention away from you.

Ensure of what to carry? Some say a small, leather purse that matches the color of your shoes is a good investment while others believe that a briefcase is more professional. Whatever you do, do not carry both! If it is necessary for you to carry some personal items with you, tuck them in a container inside your briefcase.

On the other hand, when dressing for an informational interview it is meeting where a person intends to gather information on a career field or employer the look is more casual because the job seeker is only asking questions.

Nevertheless, it is important to make a sound impression because that person may become a key player in the future. Here are some guidelines. Dress according to where you are meeting, and how well you know the person. If you have an appointment during the work day, dress more professionally because the person you are meeting with will probably be wearing a business suit. Moreover, if you plan to meet after hours the code is more flexible, a nice pair of pants and a vest would be appropriate.

To reiterate, always consider the industry you are interested in when thinking about what you will wear. When it comes down to it, dressing for an interview really involves your personal common sense. And because there is no set formula, the best question to ask yourself is "what statement is this outfit making about me?" Good luck in the future.

Do's & Don'ts

Do's:

- Power colors: Dark purple, red, and black. Just know what looks good on you. These colors are stronger and have a tendency to wash certain types out creating an unhealthy look. In blue you can not go wrong. However, in some fields, wearing blue may run you the risk of looking too boring or like everybody else. Consider where you are applying first.
- Sling backs with closed toes are appropriate. Check for scuffs and damaged heels.

Don'ts:

- Avoid overly long and brightly colored nails.
- Avoid high-tuned eye shadow and bushy brows.
- For blouse, avoid shiny fabrics, no satins or sheers.

Purdue prevails

Purdue outscored Indiana by 18 points Tuesday night, and near-perfect free throw shooting carried Purdue to a 76-64 victory over Indiana.

The Boilermakers hit 29 of 31 free throws, including 12 without a miss by Martin. Purdue (12-5, 6-2 Big Ten), which trailed only once, took a nine-point lead early in the second half.

After Roy Hauton's missed free throw snapped a string of 20 straight points by Purdue, Indiana pulled to 53-51 on a basket by Dave Hart and a 3-pointer by Brian Evans.

Indiana (12-8, 4-4) still trailed by only two before a basket by Martin and two free throws by Brandon Branley started a 12-3 run that put the game out of reach. The Boilermakers' biggest lead was 73-60 after two free throws apiece by Martin and Branley with just over two minutes to go.

The only other missed free throw by Purdue was by Matt Waddell with 16 seconds left. He hit one of two foul shots to give the Boilermakers a 76-64 lead, then Indiana's Steve Hart got the final basket.

UConn upends Miami, 82-57

By CHRISTINE HANLEY
Associated Press

HARTFORD, Conn. — Ray Allen made a school-record eight 3-pointers and fourth-ranked Connecticut bounced back from its first loss of the season with an 82-57 victory over Miami on Tuesday night.

Allen was 8-for-12 from long range and finished with 25 points for the Huskies, who set a school-record with 13 baskets from beyond the arc.

The Huskies (16-1, 9-0), who were 3-for-15 from long range in an 88-59 loss to Kansas on Saturday, were 13-for-36 on 3-pointers against Miami.

UConn extended its home winning streak to 26 and won its 14th straight regular-season Big East game, matching the record set by St. John’s in 1984-85.

The Hurricanes (8-8, 3-6) stayed in the game for about 10 minutes before the Huskies broke it open with their long-range shooting.

After Constantine Popa’s layup pulled Miami to 17-16, UConn outscored the Hurricanes 25-11 the rest of the half. The Huskies started the run with 3-pointers by Allen and Brian Fair.

Donny Marshall scored 10 points during the spurt, and Doron Scheffer’s 3-pointer gave the Huskies a 42-25 halftime lead.

Allen opened the second half with his fourth 3-pointer, and it was never a contest after that.

Rare feat in hoop game

Associated Press

BANGOR, Maine

Rare in hockey, shorthanded goals are unthinkable in basketball. Or are they?

Coach Mike Andreasen doesn’t think so. His Maine-Augusta team sank 11 baskets in the final 13:48 to overcome Eastern Maine Technical College’s man advantage and rally to a 76-74 victory.

So far this season, Sophomore center Katryna Gaither is averaging 17.2 points per game while senior Letitia Bowen is the rebounding machine with an average of 8 per game.

"Marquette is not as strong as we are on the blocks," McGraw said, "If we can exploit that advantage, I think we’ll win.'"

ONE STEP AT A TIME: Keith Kurowski is expected to leave the infirmary today. He has been recuperating there from strep throat and the flu after undergoing a 10-hour laser surgery to correct a mild heart disorder last Tuesday.

There is no timetable for his return to the team.
"The thing for Keith is to get him back on his feet, back in class and back in a normal routine," MacLeod said. "Then we'll worry about getting him back on the court."

As much as he'd like to need to articulate why he wanted the youngster so much. Until a letter of intent is signed, a coach is forbidden by the red-taped bureaucracy known as the NCAA from talking in public about that player.

Today, though, coach Lou Holtz is expected to do something that will probably not be heard for the next four years, praise the incoming players and explain why he has such high expectations.

This season, the expectations deserve to be very high, at least according to the gurus of the recruiting world.

More than a few are ranking Notre Dame incoming class as one of, if not the best crop in the land.
We'll find out tomorrow for sure. That is until we actually see them in Irish uniforms.

KIGHT TIME:
Defensive end Thomas Knight, after missing the fall semester and the 1994 football season due to academic difficulties has been re-admitted to the university.

Knight, a 6'4", 260-pound Memphis, TN native, was one of Notre Dame's mainstays on the defensive line during the 1993 season. He started just three games, but got the nod during the key Florida St. victory.

Expected to contribute heavily to Irish defense, he was declared academically ineligible before the season got underway.

Notre Dame expects to ink top class today

By TIM SHERMAN
Assistant Sports Editor

Besides your typical disciplinary situations and assistant coach transactions, the three months following the bowl game until spring football are usually periods of withdrawal for diehard Notre Dame football fans.

Today, however, they get a chance for a quick fix. It's the recruiting-news addicts' dream day, also known as National Signing Day. This is the day that all the efforts put in by the Irish coaching staff, led by recruiting coordinator Bob Chmiel, over the past couple of high school football seasons are rewarded.

The Irish are expected to announce the awarding of 25 scholarships to some of the nation's top high school talent.

In recent years, the period leading up to this day has evolved into a ridiculous circus of canarders, bearers, and just plain falsehoods. Speculation over who is leaning toward there, who can get into here, and what schools want what players is traded about much in the same way Hollywood gossip gets around. While Hollywood has Entertainment Tonight, recruiting fanatics have Scholastic Sports America, People and The National Inquirer have counterparts in Tom Lemming's Prep Report and Bluechip Illustrated. But unlike the rumors of Hollywood, the rumors of the recruiting wars have a definitive ending. Today is that climax.

Although most recruits have given a "verbal commitment" to the school, or in some cases around the country, schools, of their choice, today, that oral agreement is a contract. The prepsters sign their names to a "letter of intent" to attend the chosen school.

What is also significant about this day is that it is the first opportunity for the coach who received the good news can file his official commitment with the NCAA.

The Notre Dame women's basketball team looks to match their longest winning streak of the season tonight as they travel to Marquette University in Milwaukee, Wisconsin to face the newly-named Golden Eagles.

The Irish have won their last four games, and 9 of their last 10. Their longest streak thus far of 5 wins was broken by DePaul just before classes resumed for the semester.

Marquette promises to be a formidable opponent, as they advanced to the NCAA tournament last year and have been ranked in the top 20 several times during this season.

"This is big game for us," McGraw said, "its a game we really need to win.

"Marquette's scoring attack is most dangerous in its balanced effort. Three of the starters average 15 points per game and a fourth is close behind with 13."

"We want to slow it down against Marquette," McGraw said, "Try to play a control game."

Marquette has talent on the perimeter, hitting an average of seven three pointers per game. Most of those are shot by Lori Goerlitz, who shoots 38% from downtown.

"They like to run and shoot a lot of three pointers!" Coach McGraw said, "They're a team which scores a lot of points."

The Irish advantage is in size and strength of the post game. On Saturday against LaSalle, four Notre Dame forwards scored double digits. Carey Pool played strong with 11 boards and Roseanne Bolman came off the bench to score 10 points.

For in-depth coverage of national signing day, see tomorrow's Observer.
