Wall Street and ND students connect at forum

By MALIN STEARNS

Any Notre Dame student who has ever dreamed of working on Wall Street now has a chance to get a little taste of Wall Street right here at Notre Dame.

The Notre Dame MRA Association is sponsoring an event for students to meet Wall Street professionals and learn about Wall Street firms, will take place in the Jordan Auditorium at the College of Business Administration, tomorrow from 10 a.m. to 3:30 p.m.

The event is part of a large event for Hard-working student with good interpersonal and communication skills will attend. According to Duke, "The forum is not just for business students. These firms are interested in students from all disciplines, from Arts and Letters to engineering." In order to facilitate the recruiting of Notre Dame students by Wall Street firms, organizers are compiling a Wall Street Résumé Book. Students who wish to be included in the book may submit resumes today to 102 CORA.

The forum's presentations will be divided into three parts. The first, an overview of the financial services industry, will begin at 10:20 a.m. "Financial Services Industry Overview" A series of overview presentations describing the financial services industry, will be given. The second segment, "Starting a Wall Street Career," will begin at 1:00 p.m. A series of brief "nutts and bolts" presentations will be given. The third segment, "Breakout Sessions," will allow faculty and students to discuss their career opportunities and their firms.

Pros not worried by Wall Street's Monday

By DEREK BETCHER

Many campus investment experts agree that Monday's record 554-point drop in the Dow Jones Industrial Average should not worry serious stock market investors.

A sampling of Notre Dame finance professors and financial officers unanimously agreed that the U.S. economy remains fundamentally strong, an evaluation which matches the Dow Jones Industrial Average's plunge being largely irrational.

"There's less to the story, perhaps, than meets the eye," finance professor Richard Sheehan said.

Professors shared the opinion that emotion — rather than fundamental economic disorder — triggered Monday's drop. Associate vice president for finance Scott Malpass, for one, thinks that market irrationalities began overseas when Hong Kong, formerly a regional pillar of stability, fell under speculative attack before eventually triggering Wall Street's troubles.

"That's when I started to be concerned that emotion was taking over," he said.

And if Hong Kong's financial troubles had not occurred, then Monday's Dow crash was just plain irrational, in the opinion of Malpass and Sheehan.

Economist John Maynard Keynes' famous "animal spirits" may have been responsible for the week's volatility.

Even the perceived level of volatility may be overstated, however. Professors cautioned that the public needs to keep a clear head and not worry excessively.

STORIN presents outlook on future of journalism

The traditional values that define journalism must be preserved and emphasized in order for journalism to survive in the 21st century, Matthew Storin, editor of the Boston Globe, declared in a lecture on Wednesday.

As Notre Dame's journalists-in-residence this semester, Storin addressed a body of students and faculty in L 292 DeBartolo Hall.

He was optimistic about the future of journalism and said, "The markets are very volatile at the moment, but not nearly as volatile as the public thinks."

"The media are beginning a new cycle of practitioners who are trying to take back the old agenda," Storin said, "This is a greater cooperation between print journalism and television stations, a need for public television and radio stations to step up local news efforts, and a re-structuring of journalism education to place a heavier emphasis on values instead of technique."

"The potential to do more is there," Storin said, "I think we are only just beginning to overcome." Storin admitted, "The problem of the cynicism, negativity and lack of confidence has invaded the press over the last decades. Watergate and television have made journalists more powerful," Storin said, adding that this power has evolved into a great challenge.

The Cost of Art Storytelling

I was going over the Viewpoint section before I even turned to the Viewpoint section. The columns that I start to read look like articles about stories, and I always look forward to the Viewpoint section because I feel like they are superb writers but they have a story for me to draw upon. They tell stories in a way that is different from tissue. The reader can see that the story isn't just a story, but a story that is about something. I come to a conclusion: most of those type of columnists have denied

Flowers subpoenaed in Jones case

Jennifer Flowers, who claimed she had an affair with President Clinton, has been subpoenaed to answer questions about her harassment lawsuit against the president. Flowers received the subpoena

Tuesday and is scheduled to give a deposition Nov. 14, said her lawyer, Biggs Burke. Burke said he cannot tell what Flowers would be asked, but noted that Flowers had tape recordings of conversations and any correspondence between Flowers and Clinton. Jones alleges in her $700,000 lawsuit that Clinton was then serving as Arkansas governor, exposed to her and asked her for oral sex in May of 1991. She was a state employee at the time and claims Clinton later used his influence to land her in a dead-end job, after she threatened to go to the authorities with her story in the hopes of damaging his career. Clinton denies the allegations and says he does not even recall ever meeting Jones. Flowers claimed during Clinton’s 1992 presidential campaign that she had a 12-year affair with him while he was governor of Arkansas. Clinton has denied Flowers’ claims as well.

Asian prostitutes demand health care

MANILA, Philippines

Asian prostitutes demanded better working conditions

Wednesday, telling an international conference on AIDS that they should not be considered criminals, just ordinary people who need medical coverage and other benefits. In a statement to delegates attending the 4th International Congress on AIDS in Asia and the Pacific the group said unsafe working conditions rather than prostitution itself caused the spread of AIDS. Khatimah Shahnaz, a homosexual from the Ivory Coast, said the fear of police raids on brothels reduced the time available for prostitutes to convince clients to use condoms.

"You need at least 20 minutes to negotiate condom use," he said, adding that many workers have been forced into the situation by poverty. "There is a lot of political pressure we think we like to sell our bodies. It’s not true." He also said prostitutes should not be subjected to rape, assault, extortion and other forms of harassment by the authorities. Only two countries — Taiwan and Australia — in the Asia Pacific region have legalized prostitution. Dana Santos of the Coalition Against Trafficking in Women said, "We don’t want to legitimize it.

Star Wars’ exhibit opens in D.C.

WASHINGTON

It seems like “a long time ago in a galaxy far, far away” that moviemaker George Lucas brought the Earth’s timeless myths of hero and villain, good and evil into their modern setting as Star Wars. Now, 20 years later, the National Air and Space Museum brings back together Luke Skywalker and Princess Leia, Darth Vader and the Emperor, R2-D2 and C-3PO, in a new, yearlong exhibit. “Star Wars: The Magic of Myth,” includes original props, costumes, characters and artwork from the three-film trilogy that took a hero’s journey from callow youth with a call to adventure until he reaches maturity and leadership — a trip Lucas said was inspired by Joseph Campbell’s book “The Hero with a Thousand Faces.” The movie’s goal was to open young people’s minds to space, Lucas said, and the exhibit can show them the many worlds of moviemaking also. The exhibit details both the mythical connections and the extraordinary sources of inspiration ranging from the American West to Japanese Samurai, Flash Gordon and Buck Rogers to German military uniforms and the feminine hero. Lucas disclosed Wednesday that the next chapter in the saga has been filmed and could be released within 18 months.

Muirhead noted that engineers last week suspected that temperature might be too cold for Pathfinder’s radio receiver to operate properly. As a result they sent a range of frequencies to the lander hoping the signal would get through and the Pathfinder transmitter could respond.

COBA grants showcase diversity

By REBECCA HAMMEL

"Generations" $150,000. Dame received grants from ND Bank totaling $150,000.

According to the program's mission statement, COBA established the Diversity Program in 1995 in order to "create a supportive environment where a diverse body of students, faculty, and staff learn to live, work, and excel as part of a diverse and global society.

The program's goal is to increase consciousness and sensitivity towards issues of diversity among students, faculty, and staff. The strategy devised at achieving this goal include the attendance of faculty and staff at various workshops and conferences, as well as a special lecture series over the course of the year.

The program plays a major part in helping us to accomplish our missions and goals being that the program is dependent upon funding from outside sources and is thankful to ND Bank and our other contributors for their support and confidence in our program," said Jennifer Crittenden, assistant director of the Diversity Program.

The organization subsists entirely through grants from outside foundations including Amoco Oil Company, Bank of America, CIGNA, Coopers & Lybrand, Ford Motor Company, General Mills, and Norwest Bank.

"Diversity is important in particular to companies, they are interested in creating a diverse work force," said George Duke, director of Corporate Relations for Development.

The Diversity Program also helps students make a successful academic transition into COBA. The program offers counseling, tutoring, peer mentors, student workshops, and the Mastering Techniques for Excellence in Business retreat, a series of workshops and presentations for the incoming business sophomores during the week preceding the start of the fall.

The program also guides students in the search for scholarships and internships, and will partially sponsor students attending the various corporations including Hispanic Business Association conference in February and the 11th Annual Conference on Race and Ethnicity in May.

The program attempts to improve relations among faculty, staff, and students through "mixers." In order to create a forum for the discussion of diversity issues within the classroom, COBA will offer two diversity courses: "Diversity Dialogue" and "Diversity in the Workplace."

According to Crittenden, the Diversity Program is highly unique and progressive among business schools of the nation due to the fact that it does not restrict membership to minority students. The program only requires that the student be enrolled in COBA.

"We are forging new grounds in the sense that we are all inclusive," said Crittenden. "We support and value the contributions of all faculty and students."

Crittenden said she plans to form a solid, quality program that may be imitated by other universities.

The program is important in the sense that it allows us to help better prepare our students for a more diverse society, and also we hope that we will be able to use the various corporations as a model for other business schools across the country," she said.

CITTENDON

Amid custodial senators and candy distribution, Student Senate managed to look past Halloween and consider three issues during last night's meeting: divestiture of funds, scholarships, and parking on the courts at night during the weekends.

The second resolution most directly concerns Student, Alumni, Keenan, Stanford, Zahn, and St. Edward's Hall residents, who have no laundry facilities in their dormitories. It resolved that the Student Senate urges the Office of Student Affairs to request that the Office of Facilities, Engineering and Maintenance develop a plan of action to ensure that laundry facilities be installed in the aforementioned dorms," the resolution reads.

Three issues underlie the request, according to Student Senate's drafters. Explained, first, adding facilities addresses a large issue between men's and women's dorms. Second, additional facilities would ease the burden on women's laundry facilities in the residence halls; and third, there is overwhelming support for the changes, Szabo reported.

This is a very good proposal," Keenan senator Matt Mamak told the senate prior to its unanimous vote of approval.

Assistant student body trea-turer Ryan Harding asked the senate's support in approving The Shirt project's coordinator, Tomko reported, "Food Services' budget... with a break of research and realized there was a lot of demand for pushing the project's end line." Underlining that commitment, Prentkowski shared a bevy of statistics to explain to senators why Food Services would agree to the expanded lunch time.

On Mondays, Wednesdays and Fridays, 2,100 students finish class at 1:45 p.m., just after lunch currently closes. Morrissey senator Matt Szabo explained the senate's frustration. Twelve thousand students get out of classes at 1:45 p.m. on Tuesdays and Thursdays. Three hundred to 400 students get grab-and-go lunches between 1:30 and 2 p.m.

Tomko and Szabo also relayed Food Services' concerns with recurring pranks in North Dining Hall. Truant students baking parmesan cheese to produce foul odors have caused $10,000 in damage to tableware and microwaves, the senate learned.

"That comes out of our room and board expenses... so tell our residents to cut their constituent's Tomko requested.

Senate also passed two resolutions originating from the Residence Life Committee.

The first resolution urged Security to limit Lyons Hall basketball courts more accessible for student recreational use by limiting fan parking and staff parking on the courts at night during the weekends.

The second resolution most directly concerns Student, Alumni, Keenan, Stanford, Zahn and St. Edward's Hall residents, who have no laundry facilities in their dormitories.

Yet cynicism and arrogance aren't the only factors contributing to the decline of the press, Storin said. He also attributed three other factors to a decrease in "readership, viewership, and listenership.

The first factor is the belief that there is less news now than there was a few decades ago.

"Now and exciting developments are occurring everyday, yet Washington, D.C., has become less meaningful and interesting," Storin said.

Secondly, Storin asserted that the increased access to news through technology has made classic news less read.

"Multiplicity of the news media has resulted in less readership," Storin said.

This diversification of the news media and the increase in access has also resulted in a "fragmentation of the information world," Storin explained, reminding the audience that the media market is made up of numerous television, cable television, and print news media and the increases explained, reminding the of resources each branch dwindled."

viewership.

"If a cable news program were to study the fairness of the media, The American Society of Journalists and the growth of public journalism movements.

The American Society of Newspaper Editors is a three-year project aimed at restoring the credibility of the press. The Freedom Forum has instigated a detailed study of the fairness of the media. The Committee of Concerned Journalists is conducting, "a set of national forums to discuss journalistic practices, and public journalism which attempts to solve community problems," Storin explained.

These four organizations and movements are only the beginning of the attempt to restore traditional values of journalism to the current press, Storin said.

Storin applauded the efforts of the University and its creation of the "Notre Dame Program in Journalism, Ethics and Democracy," which he said, "is the present generation who will determine whether journalism survives," Storin asserted.

Storin has served as editor in chief of the Boston Globe for the past five years. He has also served as executive editor of the Chicago Sun-Times, senior vice president of the Chicago Sun-Times, and deputy managing editor of U.S. News and World Report.

the Dow's current swings: A 550-point drop in 1997's surging markets, which significant, would pale in comparison to a similar total in an earlier era. The infamous Black Tuesday crash of 1929, for example, was a 30-point fall.

"Dollar magnitude doesn't matter as much as relative magnitude," Sheehan emphasized. "Sure, there's a lot more money being lost in today's volatility, but the pool is so much bigger."

Before surmounting to sensa-

The markets are very volatile at the moment, but not nearly as volatile as the public thinks," department of finance chairman John Affleck-Graves said. The financial system, he pointed out, currently enjoys health and can absorb short-term losses without ill effects. One-point-two billion shares were traded Tuesday "without a hiccup," Affleck-Graves noted, as the market enjoyed its largest incremental gain ever, rising 377 points. When sellers can find buyers that easily, he concluded, the market is functioning smoothly.

Notre Dame steady as stock market tumbles

By DEREK RTCHE River North News Editor

Notre Dame is an investor, not a speculator, and is therefore not affected by short-term fluctuations.

Furthermore, its holdings are spread across stocks, bonds, real estate and other instruments, he noted.

"Certainly, our position is very long term in nature and we favor equities, although we're very diversified," Storin said.

"The Notre Dame market analyst noted that crashes can present bargains in the form of devalued stocks, and strong, long-term investors can often realize gains by picking up discounted equities. In fact, private managers of Notre Dame's endowment have helped play a role in Tuesday's record 337-point resurgence.

"Several of our managers look at this as a buying opportunity, and we have been increasing our position," Malpass said.

"The second part is just the nuts and bolts information that students can use immediately," said Duke. "It will give them information about subjects such as interviews and internships."

In the final part, beginning at 2:30 p.m., each firm's representative will lead a separate session to discuss that firm's career opportunities and work environment.

Halloween spirit hits Saint Mary's students

By SHANA'E TATE

The Saint Mary's students displayed their Halloween spirit with the numerous activities this past week. The students participated in various events such as La Casa students trick-or-treating in LeMans Hall to the Murder Mystery in Haggar Parlor. Last evening, scary music coming from the Nolaske Family Dining Hall did not scare Saint Mary's students away. The dining hall had everything from caramel apples to frosted sugar cookies. The majority of the staff working last night wore festive costumes.

"It was a nice to have something different other the normal cafeteria food. It was fun to see everyone getting in the Halloween spirit," said Sybil Sullivan.

The Saint Mary's Student Activities Board sponsored many events this past week, beginning Monday, SAB posted the first clue to its Murder Mystery. The question to answer was "Who killed Teresa Marcy?" A total of three clues were given and yesterday the killer was revealed.

"We [SAB] had a lot of fun planning this event. Our committee has helped out in many ways and we worked well together," said Nicole Kramier, SAB tradition co-chairwoman.

"I don't think any of the suspects did it (murdered Teresa Marcy). I think my RA did it," said Michelle Johanson. However, the so-called murderer was revealed to everyone as "Evelyn," the dining hall checker.

"I am very happy a lot people came to the event. We put a lot of time into the planning and Saint Mary's is taking advantage of SAB," said Anne Parente, SAB tradition co-chairwoman.

The winners of the murder mystery won a variety of gift certificates from surrounding area restaurants.

SMC explores environmental racism

By COLLEEN McCARTHY

Calling attention to the problem of another and lesser known kind of racism was the purpose of a video and the ensuing discussion on environmental racism that featured Saint Mary's faculty and students. The video, "Environmental Racism," chronicled and described the ascent of the movement that focuses on the dumping of toxic waste and pollution specifically in minority areas. The video argues that these areas benefit less from government clean up efforts. Reverend Brother Mark Miller, S.J., said the video was 20 pages in term "environmental racism" in a 1987 report on the subject.

The video also featured several works of literature that have been published on the subject, including "The Poisoned Well," "In the Dark of Night," and "Deep South." The video also mentioned the work of Mary McCarthy, a novelist and the Washington, D.C., author, who received a priest in 1969. After his ordination, he continued his writing. McCarthy is taking advantage of an effort to stop the building of the radioactive waste incinerator in the area, which created a grassroots movement says that toxic waste landfill in Warren County, a predominantly African-American area. Protesting were successful in stopping the dumping of the toxic waste but focused attention on the issue of pollution in minority communities, which created a grassroots movement that spread throughout the nation, the video said.

Another example of a community battling environmental racism was that of Kettleman City, Calif., a city that is 95 percent Mexican-American. The Cerithal Waste Management company sought to build a toxic waste incinerator in the area, which is largely agricultural. But was stopped in its attempts when citizens mobilized in an effort to stop the building of the incinerator, the video said. The company gave up its fight to build the incinerator but only after much controversy and a lawsuit had been filed.

Following the video, Maria Oropeza, interim director of the Office of Multicultural Affairs, gave a talk on the subject.

"We need to remember that the issue of environmental racism is not a new one. It has been occurring for the centuries," Oropeza said. She added that environmental racism affects everyone because people interact with these communities in many ways, including buying the produce farmed in the areas where the toxic dumping is occurring.

Speaking next was Joe Miller of the psychology department. Miller sought to emphasize that environmental racism is a multi-racial and multicultural effort.

"The movement says that toxic waste dumps should be targeted to minority communities and the video is an effort to stop the building of the incinerator," Oropeza said. "The corporations are taking the path of least resistance by targeting minority areas."

Tysus Jackson, a junior at SMC, said, "I believe this is environmental racism. These people don't have the choice to move out of these areas, and this is what these companies prey on."

Carroll to speak on Catholicism

By BYvelleona Neece

Special to The Observer

James Carroll, a novelist and author of a recently published memoir entitled "An American Requiem," will speak on American Catholicism in the 1950s and 1960s tomorrow at 4:15 p.m. in the CCE auditorium. Carroll was the subject of controversy last spring when his article in the New Yorker argued that the Catholic doctrine of papal infallibility and 'absolute' Church teachings about Jesus and the salvation were central causes of the Holocaust.

Carroll was born in Chicago in 1943 and raised in Washington, D.C., where his father, an Air Force general, served as director of the Defense Intelligence Agency. He was educated at Georgetown University before entering the Paulist Fathers' seminary at Catholic University in Washington, and was ordained a priest in 1969. After his ordination he served as a chaplain at Boston University for five years before leaving the priesthood.

Carroll's lecture, which is free and open to the public, is sponsored by the Catholic Center for the Study of American Catholicism.
Called From Among Us
The Appointment of Bishop-Elect Daniel R. Jenky, C.S.C.

On Tuesday during the week of Fall break, Pope John Paul II appointed the rector of the Basilica of the Sacred Heart and the co-rector of Fisher Graduate Residences, Daniel R. Jenky, C.S.C., as auxiliary bishop of the Diocese of Fort Wayne-South Bend. In that capacity, Bishop Jenky will be rector of St. Matthew's Co-Cathedral in South Bend. In addition, he will have many other responsibilities with the diocese and as the newest member of the National Conference of Catholic Bishops. He will be ordained a bishop at St. Matthew's Cathedral on December 16, 1997.

Like my brothers in Holy Cross, especially those of us who have worked side by side with Dan in our ministry at Notre Dame, and like Bishop Jenky’s family and many friends, I am thrilled about his appointment. He will be a wonderful bishop, just as he has been a remarkable Holy Cross priest whose life-giving ministry has benefited and been welcomed by thousands of people.

Our new bishop is first and foremost a man of prayer. People on our campus have come to know him during his nineteen years as rector of the Basilica as a preacher whose homilies are as down to earth as they are challenging calls to deepen our personal commitment to Christ. You could often see him praying in the Basilica, reading his breviary as he participated in this traditional prayer for the Church and God’s people which is a priest’s responsibility and privilege, and worshiping Jesus Christ during the Friday afternoon periods of Eucharistic Adoration in the Basilica.

He is also a person who loves the Church, and treasures his membership in the Congregation of Holy Cross which he has served well since he entered the community at the age of eighteen.

Bishop-elect Jenky is among the brightest and most personable members of our community. He is a great friend of many of us. To sit with him at meals at Corby Hall has always been a special pleasure! Although he remains a Holy Cross religious, even after his ordination as a bishop, we will miss our daily contact with him on campus.

He is a man of intelligence, who is well read and who has spent countless hours in the confessional, in the pulpit, at the altar and in individual sessions of counseling and spiritual direction.

What will happen to our brother on December 16 is that through ancient rites and traditions of the Catholic Church, many of his fellow bishops will place their hands on his head as a sign of his being chosen for his new office in service to God’s people. He will become one of a privileged and blessed few who are chosen to be intimate collaborators of the Holy Father. With his brother bishops, and with priests and lay people, he will work conscientiously to build up God’s Kingdom and proclaim the Gospel of Jesus Christ.

He will participate in the long and unbroken line of apostolic succession by which the first men Jesus Christ chose to continue his mission through their ministry are succeeded by others throughout human history.

This awesome call will be symbolized when fellow bishops hold the Book of the Gospels about his shoulders. It is powerfully reminiscent of the cross which was placed on the shoulders of Jesus Christ. Bishop-elect Jenky will ordain many men, most of them, I hope, fellow members of the Congregation of Holy Cross, to take up the ministry of priesthood. His ordination represents another link in an unbroken chain which represents the promise Jesus made to be present always among his people, especially through the celebration of the sacrifice of the Mass, through sacramental ministry and through a continuation of the preaching of the Good News.

Bishop-elect Jenky’s appointment is a sign of the Holy Father’s confidence in him. It is also an effective way in which the Pope has provided Bishop D’Arcy with an assistant bishop and the people of the Diocese with a spiritual leader who is a good person and a committed priest.

Congratulations and best wishes always, Dan. It will be my privilege to mention you by name at every Mass I celebrate in our diocese during the Canon of the Mass when we pray “for our bishop, John, and his assistant bishop, Daniel.”

Thank you for your willingness to serve the Church and God’s people as you begin your new service of apostolic ministry.

Saint Mary's learns about service

By COLLEEN NUGENT
Assistant Saint Mary's News Editor

Last night, Saint Mary's College held an informational session on community service availability within the South Bend area. LeMans Lobby was the center of attention, where representatives from various community service programs came to the College to encourage students in their efforts on helping the less fortunate within their own society.

The newly hired director of the Community Service Department at Saint Mary's is Sister Linda Kors. Kors' goal is "to encourage students to become more culturally aware of the differences that exist within our own communities, including that of South Bend."

Nearly 20 local agencies were present at the event, providing various handouts to inform the students. Although the program is in its first year, there are many high expectations for the student turnout. According to Kors, orientation weekend produced a large number of current freshmen interested in participating in service-oriented programs. Nearly 150 students showed interest in volunteering, and Kors is optimistic that if the freshman turnout rate is high, then the entire student body will also have a successful turnout rate.

"Sign-up sheets were located throughout the lobby," stated Kors. "We have high hopes for the success rate for this program."

Head Start, Story Book Festival, and the SURF Office are just a few of the many places where students can volunteer.

"The sisters of Holy Cross hold a deep interest in volunteering," stated Kors. Kors stressed that this was a good time for the volunteer and service work to be emphasized, because of the new president.

"President Marilou Eldred," Kors said, "is going to the faculty from various departments to seek possible internships with the classes for students of all backgrounds."

Future ideas to further this idea of community service internships would be that of working closely with the faculty members and seeing where community service could be applied to academic studies, regardless of subject area.

Three ideas Kors believes would be extremely beneficial in incorporating service-oriented activities into the curriculum at Saint Mary's are finding the various heads of the departments, what they do within the departments, and determining how they could work together with the South Bend community.

Clinton and Jiang debate human rights

WASHINGTON

In a spirited exchange over Beijing's rejection of democracy, President Clinton and his Chinese counterpart today sparred over the Tiananmen Square massacre and the country's human rights policy. Clinton urged "full room for dialogue, dissent and freedom to worship."

Standing firm, Jiang Zemin said his country believes in "non-interference in each other's internal affairs." In a remarkable back-and-forth at a White House news conference, Jiang defended the 1989 crackdown against pro-democracy demonstrators in Tiananmen Square. Calling the protest a "political disturbance," Jiang said the action was necessary to preserve "social and political stability."

A stern Clinton replied: "I think it should be obvious to everyone that what we have a very different view of the meaning of the events in Tiananmen Square. I believe that what happened and the aftermath and the continuing reluctance to tolerate political dissent has kept China from politically developing the level of support in the rest of the world that otherwise would have been developed."

Both leaders said they discussed in great detail specific cases of jailed dissidents. "I am the president of the People's Republic of China, not the chief judge of the Supreme Court," Jiang said.

UN gives go-ahead for sanctions against UNITA

Associated Press

UNITED NATIONS

Frustrated with delays in the Angola peace process, the Security Council gave the go-ahead Wednesday for air and travel sanctions against the former rebel movement UNITA.

The resolution, drafted by the United States, Russia and Portugal, deprived UNITA's failure to meet with its obligations, including disarmament and integrating them into a national army.

The sanctions, which also include the closing of UNITA offices abroad, go into effect Thursday.

The council also unanimously accepted a recommendation by Secretary-General Kofi Annan to keep about 3,000 U.N. peacekeepers in the southwest African country until Jan. 30. The council also expressed "grave concern" about the presence of Angolan government forces in the Republic of Congo and called on all foreign forces to withdraw immediately.

In Washington, Sen. Jesse Helms, chairman of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee, denounced the sanctions against UNITA.

Instead, resolutions should have been imposed on the government instead, for the "blatant" intervention in the Republic of Congo, he said.

The resolution banned all flights that depart from Angola or arrive in Angola, except for those locations designated by the Angolan government. That measure is aimed at preventing UNITA from purchasing weapons and then flying them into territory it still controls.

UNITA earns hundreds of millions of dollars by exporting diamonds and uses much of the revenue to buy weapons.

UNITA is also prohibited from purchasing aircraft, parts, flight insurance and engineering services. Aviation equipment may enter Angola only through government-approved entry ports.

The U.N. sanctions committee must approve any exceptions for humanitarian deliveries.

The sanctions were approved in August but suspended to give UNITA time to fulfill demands under 1994 Lusaka peace accords, which ended two decades of civil war.

In 1993 the Security Council imposed arms and all embargo on UNITA but with little effect. A 1994 peace agreement was signed in Lusaka, Zambia, to end a conflict that devastated Angola after independence from Portugal in 1975.

IU expels Zeta Beta Tau for racy scavenger hunt

Associated Press

BLOOMINGTON, Ind.

Indiana University expelled a fraternity Wednesday for sending pledges on a scavenger hunt for photos of "2 chicks kissing" and "any funny-looking Mexican."

"This action is not taken lightly," said Dean of Students Richard McGar. Adding that the expulsion was the harshest punishment available was necessary to show the behavior won't be tolerated.

The Zeta Beta Tau chapter was earlier suspended by its national headquarters. The chapter president had apologized and asked fellow students to give the historically Jewish fraternity another chance.

The Oct. 15 scavenger hunt required new fraternity members to search for 22 items, including photos of "2 chicks kissing (less clothes, more credit)," a midget, and "any funny-looking Mexican."

Police found the list when they arrested nine pledges on charges of stealing a street sign. McGar has not determined when the fraternity could apply to come back to the campus.

Kaczynski papers admit violence

Associated Press

SACRAMENTO, Calif.

In papers found in his Montana cabin, Theodore Kaczynski admitted committing "non-bombing acts of violence" prosecutors said in documents filed Wednesday.

The government did not say what the acts of violence were. Justice Department spokesman Leesa Brown said she could not release any information.

A federal law enforcement source who spoke on condition of anonymity, however, said the acts were serious and have never been made public.

Defense attorney Qin Denir said the prosecution was referring to "some acts of vandalism which we don't feel have any place in this trial," and that Kaczynski committed when he was much younger.

"Mr. Kaczynski is on trial for allegedly committing four acts involving the placing of bombs," Denier said. "These vandalism acts are irrelevant."

The government filed the documents Wednesday in an attempt to use Kaczynski's writings as evidence that he was responsible for bombings he has not been charged with and that he intended to hurt people.

Such evidence could help counter a possible insanity defense. Kaczynski's lawyers have indicated they may argue that he suffered from paranoid schizophrenia.

"The defendant's decision to put his mental condition at issue makes highly relevant his admissions to committing the non-bombing acts of violence," said the brief by prosecutors Robert Cleary and Douglas Wilson.

The papers found in cabin when he was arrested in April 1996 "contain express statements of the defendant's intent to kill and the reasons why he sought to kill," prosecutors said.

"The admissions show the incremental development of the defendant's intent to kill and thus tend to show that his intent grew out of defendant's hatred and antisocial propensities," the brief said.

Baghdad bars Americans from U.N. teams

Associated Press

Baghdad, Iraq

Iraq today barred Americans from U.N. weapon inspection teams and gave them a week to leave the country. Hours earlier, the United States warned Iraq against flouting U.N. resolutions aimed at forcing Saddam Hussein to destroy weapons of mass destruction.

The Revolution Command Council, Iraq's main decision-making body, also said it is asking the United Nations to stop using U.S. reconaissance planes to monitor compliance with the resolutions on eliminating the weapons.

There was no immediate comment from the United States.

Deputy Prime Minister Tariq Aziz said Iraq wants the Americans out until the United States "reconsiders its oppressive policy and its aggressive behavior to the people of Iraq, and its policy of espionage and intervention."

In a statement to the official news agency, Aziz said there were 700 Americans working for the U.N. Special Commission, which supervises the elimination of Iraqi weapons and the monitoring of its arms sites.

The commission now has 100 foreign employees in Baghdad, according to the United Nations.

Ten of the 40 weapons inspectors in that group are American. Iraq's ban also affects the American deputy chairman of the commission, Charles Duelfer, and the chief of operations, Lt. Col. John Moore.

"This is completely unacceptable," the British Foreign Office said in a statement. "It is not for Iraq to dictate who should be in U.N. teams.

The weapons inspectors are trying to verify whether Iraq has complied with U.N. orders to destroy long-range missiles, as well as chemical, biological and nuclear arms.

The Security Council ordered the weapons destroyed at the end of the 1991 Persian Gulf War and has refused to lift economic sanctions imposed after Iraq's 1990 invasion of Kuwait until Iraq complies.

The Iraqi statement, however, does not appear to be a fresh rejection of the no-fly zone also imposed at the end of the war. The United States and its allies patrol the zone, and U.S. planes also provide aerial photos to U.N. weapons inspectors.

Nizar Hamdoon, Iraq's ambassador to the United Nations, said Baghdad's order would bar Duelfer from visiting Baghdad on Nov. 7. He was to accompany the Australian chief inspector, Richard Butler.

"Iraq is in no way opting for any confrontation," Hamdoon, told reporters in New York. "We'll have to deal with the situation as it evolves." "Iraq's moves followed a Security Council threat last Friday to impose more restrictions, including a ban on some Iraqi officials traveling abroad, unless Iraq cooperates with the inspectors.

Earlier today, Bill Richardson, the U.N. ambassador to the United Nations, again warned Iraq not to flout the U.N. resolutions.

"There would be very negative consequences for Iraq if they continued this pattern of obstruction and disobeying U.N. Security Council resolutions," he said at U.N. European headquarters in Geneva.

The Security Council, which oversees the inspection program, was to meet later today to discuss the Iraqi decision, which was to take effect at 5 p.m. EST.

Richardson was not available for comment after Iraq's latest announcement.

The Iraqi council also said today that it will not recognize Friday's warning on the travel ban. But the council said it would continue to cooperate with the U.N. inspectors "in a manner respecting Iraq's sovereignty, national security and dignity."

Lawmakers support Iran opposition

Associated Press

LONDON

Lawmakers from 15 countries—Americans—have signed statements supporting the opposition to the Iranian regime, an organization, whose largest faction has been declared a terrorist group by the United States.

Several of the 2,000 lawmakers said they were surprised Wednesday at Washington's action against a group that they argue is fighting to end Iranian repression at home and terrorism abroad—and to institute democratic government and human rights.

One of them, Lennart Friid, a Swedish Liberal Party, said he believes the government has been "sloppy." He said the government has softened its position against dictatorial regimes in Iran, China and elsewhere to promote U.S. trade.

"That's the sad thing—you start with good principles and good foreign policy, and you end up with a trade policy and no ethical principles," he said.

Support from the lawmakers for a global initiative against Iran's Islamic government was announced at a seminar sponsored by the Paris-based National Council of Resistance of Iran, an umbrella body uniting Iran's diverse opposition groups.

Its largest faction, the Mujahedeen Khalq, which has fought since the early 1980s to overthrow Iran's Islamic regime, was designated a terrorist group last month by Secretary of State Madeleine Albright.

All assets of the 30 organizations on the U.S. terrorist list have been frozen and it is a crime to provide them with weapons or other tangible support to them.

The Mujahedeen Khalq, formed in 1965, originally struggled against the shah's rule and then backed Shah of Iran and was accused of killing some U.S. military contractors employed by his government in the 1980s.

Mohammad Mohaddessin, chairman of the National Council's foreign affairs committee, said the 2,000 parliamentarians who support the Iranian resistance "have shown that principles come before trade."

Support for the National Council's campaign against Iran came from more than half of the lawmakers in the U.S. House of Representatives, as well as from Britain's House of Commons and parliaments in Italy, Norway, Switzerland and Luxembourg. British Labor Party lawmaker Jeremy Corbyn said.

Lawmakers from Sweden, Denmark, the Netherlands, Australia, Germany, France, Belgium, Egypt and Jordan also backed the campaign, along with deputies from the Palestinian Authority and the European Parliament.

Celebrating the Dead, Mexican Style

Bernadette Pampuch

This week, while most people are busy feeding off little rubugas decked out in skeletons, goblin and witch costumes, I am looking for bread.

In the U.S., Halloween treats are M & M's, gum, apples, an occasional toothbrush from the overzealous dentist; next door, and, on a good night, an entire Hershey's candy bar.

Not to be confused with Halloween, El Dia de los Muertos, Mexico's Indian roots begin to appear all over store windows and homes in Mexico City this week. High Fashion designer, Jean Paul Gaultier, has carried through until the present day, this week vendors are selling papers with poems dedicated to the President of the Republic, top businesswoman and soap opera stars, each and every one accompanied by a drawing of a skeleton bearing more than a striking resemblance to the real person. The most famous symbol of the Day of the Dead is Katarina, a skeleton wearing a plumed hat and dress from the Victorian era.

While children in Indiana will be knocking door to door looking for candy, chocolate is being placed on altars in Mexico. Chocolate, another favorite of the Aztecs, is made into drinks or sweets and laid out next to pumpkin candy made from green pumpkins grown just for Day of the Dead. While skulls formed out of sugar are painted with the names of the dead, and everything is eaten or given away later, after the spirits have consumed what they need.

Much like the South Bend tradition of becoming ragingly drunk on Halloween at Senior Bar, drinks left on the altars in Mexico consist of the dead's favorite drinks. pellique (both alcoholic and pulque (both alcoholic) and a drink made from corn called aide. Most important is a glass of water because spirits are tired after their long journey to Earth.

Day of the Dead Celebrations are limited to homes, but extend out to cemeteries where loved ones are buried. Entire families spend the day cleaning and repairing graves, decorating tombs with flowers and lighting candles which will glow for an entire night. In the evening, mariachis and other musicians wander from gravesite to gravesite to play the favorite song of the person who has died. In another mix of indigenous and Catholic traditions, priests will say prayers with each family in the cemetery.

In South Bend, celebrating the Day of the Dead can be as easy as a simple prayer to a deceased family member or as complicated as constructing an altar. The huge Hispanic population of the city has brought with it some of the same Dia de los Muertos traditions, and in the past Notre Dame and Saint Mary's Alianza student organization has created altars and held prayer services at the Grotto and on campus.

For those of you who can't find bread as easily as I can just by wandering the streets of Mexico City, I suggest contacting one of the Mexican bakeries on the west side of town, or contacting Alianza to find out more about the Day of the Dead.

Sexual Frustration and the Days of Stir-Crazy

Oddly, I admit I’m exaggerating a bit; even during the coldest years I’ve never become gloomy. But one way or another you have to agree that with the worst of cold weather earlier this week comes the realization that the days of stir-crazy are upon us. I’m thinking about the days when you don’t feel like getting up and getting dressed and walking into an icy ethernet-smudged wind to go to classes where you cough, sneeze, and ultimately fall asleep learning nothing at all. Of course if you’ve been here a while none of this will come as any surprise to you. If you’re new it’ll sound like hell to you. If you’re new it’ll sound like hell to you.

A.P.A.’s Diagnostic and Statistical Manual of Mental Disorders (Group 1, are you listening?), it’s not something that’s worth making a fool of yourself over.

Mick Swiney

Talking Gays Into Being Straight (this series is also known as the "Magic Elixir of Heterosexuality" series and is sponsored by the Strake Foundation for Heterosexual Conservatism). However, much of Ashley’s arguments against homosexuality are based on a warped view of the nature of irrational sexual intercourse and the significance of the act in relation to a healthy marriage.

A.P.A.’s is not something that’s worth making a fool of yourself over. Whatever the case may be, it is here, it was here, and it was here that I started reading this article, and it will be here long after you’re done.

Come on, I’m sure you’ve been the t-shirt that reads: "SEX KILLS, COME TO NOTRE DAME AND LIVE FOREVER!" Don’t miss this mistake that sex does not exist on this campus. It lurks around every corner, skulks around the halls at particular times, and flutters through the minds of every young and healthy Notre Dame student at the most inopportune moments.

I’m obviously not talking about the act itself (which, incidentally, can get you expelled from this university). As far as the incidence of sexual activity is concerned, I have no statistics to offer you. After all, who’s going to do a study on it? The Dome? ("Have you ever had sex?"

"Whynot, Father.")

That’s why I’m talking about a much less measurable phenomenon: it can’t be put down in words, but it’s here, it’s stronger than the spirit of inclusion, stronger than popular affection for Ron Paul. In the absence of it, you're forced into hiding, but it thrives at this school.

People of this school have considered the issue of sex and have divided themselves into very distinct groups of people, all of whom think they have found the right answer.

The first of these groups consists of those who have decided, either for reasons of religious preoccupation or personal hygiene, to abstain from physical contact. They know very little about the ND monogamous relationship. They must often harbor a contempt for anyone who is willing to take a risk with their religious well-being.

The second group consists of people who pursue sexual activity with hedonist zeal, or who at least have no objections whatsoever to their fellow students. These people most often scorn members of the first group as antiquated and backwards, close-minded and conservative.

The last group is most prevalent among administrators, faculty members, and males and consists of those who have failed to qualify for the second group, and are thus unwilling members of the first. These "militant virgins" are the most barbaric of all because they are Frustrated by repeated attempts to "get something...to usually resort to date rape to gain membership to the non-virgin community."

To sum it all up: this is the way things are here.

Reparative Therapy for Homosexuals Is Ethical

In September, I gave a speech at Notre Dame describing a real need for a healthy community for people seeking homosexual orientation change. A professor at the University, E. Edward Manier, wrote me a letter saying my saying was "unethical." Professor Manier would be quoted as saying (1): "Childhood-Gender-Identity Disorder IS listed in the psychiatric diagnostic manual. To make children comfortable with their maleness or femaleness (and at the same time, reduce the risk of their growing up homosexual), is not something that automatically makes you a sex machine."

(2) The American Psychological Association does not consider homosexuality a disorder — but reparative therapy with homosexuals who wish to change is ethically regar- dable. A.P.A.’s recent "Resolution on Appropriate Responsiveness to Sexual Orientation" is in effect a cautionary statement, but it is not a condemnation of reparative therapy. In fact, the resolution clearly states that there is no evidence to justify the conclusion that reparative therapy is harmful.

As Executive Director of NARTH (the National Association of Research and Therapy of Homosexuality), I recently directed a study of over 850 individuals who report significant change in their sexual orientation. Besides significant reduction in unwanted homosexual sexual behavior and behaviors, past respondents also reported improvements in self-esteem, self-understanding, and relationships with others.

While therapy does not typically "erase" every future homosexual fantasy, it increases homosexual respon- siveness and greatly reduces homosexual temptation. For those clients who share NARTH’s conviction that homosexuality is inborn, a developmental disorder, such therapy can be beneficial.

Students at Notre Dame might be interested in learning more about the cutting-edge research that doesn’t get the exposure they don’t hear from their university professors. If they would like information that tells the other side of the story, they can contact me. I would be happy to welcome to write NARTH at 15652 Ventura Blvd., Suite 416, Encino, CA 91362. I have back issues of our bulletin. You may be surprised, indeed, at what you learn.

That homosexuality is correlated to gender-typical behavior is not a surprise to anyone familiar with the literature on male homosexuality and poor relationship with father...they may be a few different cases of poor same-sex peer relationships... that is gay gene” has been found... and that many studies show that change is possible.

Dots & Loops

Stereolab live in an alternate universe where every day is as stylish as a Jean Luc-Godard cinema film. Picture a gorgeous French woman in downtown cafe, sipping macchiato and pondering Sartre as she pulls out a pack of cigarettes from her Coach bag. This is Stereolab's world; beautiful, hip and groovy. Producing nine albums in six years, many did not think that the arthouse group's unique sound would remain relevant within an ever-changing musical landscape. Indeed, there were those who were ready to dismiss them as a klutzy novelty act. But alas, England's interminably cool band has proven their waywardness wrong with their most recent release, Dots & Loops, which has solidified their position as one of the most consistently innovative and exciting artists around today.

Their roots are still firmly planted in the "space-age bachelor pad music" of the 1960s, created by Mexican arranger and composer, Esquivel. Like Esquivel, Stereolab is constantly exploring new sounds and unconventional arrangements. Their previously trademark use of Moog synthesizers, driving chord progressions, and electronic devices oftentimes creates a dissonance, a harmony still exists.
Stereolab has always been melodic, subversively at times and overtly at others.

With Dots & Loops, the group continues to venture into new territories and showcases their ability to traverse multiple genres. "Refractions in the Plastic Pulse" is perhaps their boldest experiment to date.
Checking in at a brisk 17 minutes and 30 seconds, Stereolab essentially offer up five different interpretations of the same song. The first take echoes easy listening cocktail lounge music and conjures up images of a melancholy stroll along the left bank of the Seine. The second reworks "Refractions" into a bouncy, jazzy romp. Version three blasts off from bouncy, jazzy romp. Version three blasts off from bouncy, jazzy romp. Version three blasts off from the egregious atrocities currently occurring in Europe. If the emergence of oddly wack groups like Prodigy and the Chemical Brothers wasn't bad enough, the European media is currently declaring Roni Size and Reprazent's new album, New Forms, as the finest British creation since fish and chips.
Unfortunately for Roni and the gang, their music almost as bad as their spelling ability.

It should be noted that the group's relative lack of rave and acid experience gives him a distinctive disadvantage in reviewing this type of music, but as Kojak would say, "... that's the way the cookie crumble, baby." Some listeners might genuinely enjoy a frantic drum machine eerily surrounded by a bizarre, electronic sound blip, but those same listeners probably suffer from an acute mental disorder that has yet to be diagnosed. There are certainly some interesting elements in Roni's mix of techno and r'n' b, especially the occasional use of Earth and takes you on an interplanetary adventure.

The fourth rendition is an industrial influenced melodrama. Ultimately, the aural collage with a slowed down, R&B tinged, groove laden adaptation. Despite the divergent styles, Stereolab amazingly holds everything together in a seamless fashion. Also, one constant remains toothing it all, the alluring vocals of lead singer Laetitia Sadier and co-singer Mary Hansen.

Meanwhile, Stereolab reaches its finest graphicrossing moment on "Parsee," a song which exempli-plies the perfect marriage between current drum and drum n' bass and the type of Brazilian pop rejo larded by Antonio Carlos Jobim. Instantly exhilarating, "Parsee" is simply brilliant.

But it's not all fun and games for Stereolab, though the listener may think otherwise. Underneath many of the single-minded melodies of Faithless's new album, New Forms, there were undiscovered stars to be found.
Other notorious songs include Ash's "A Life Less Ordinary," which was a sort of auditory orchestrated song about a love affair. Lyrical Implosion's "Kingdom of Lies," and a3's, featuring Errol Brown's vocals, which is a love song to the Cardigans and Prodigy are tolerant.

Life Less Ordinary," is a twisted tale of an affair and is perhaps their boldest experiment to date.
This type of music certainly has its own unique niche in the world: Beauty, even Elvis Presley's classic, "Always My Baby." Some critics thought of this album proceeds in a typical pattern, which is most often the fault of pop. However, the combined effect of these events pales in comparison to the time: two hours and 15 minutes. Listening to the entire album in one sitting is a virtual impossibility.
In fact, the first female to accomplish this is more than welcome to treat DJ Spak to dinner and a movie.

Overall, this album was created for a particular audience who just cannot consider it a stunning and brilliant musical achievement. It is important, however, to recognize that this is not a hip-hop album.
The band has proven their naysayers wrong with their new film, "A Life Less Ordinary," a twisted tale of love and violence, that is so tightly knit in theme so diverse in genre that it leaves the listener completely astounded. "A Life Less Ordinary" soundtrack is like going up to a vending machine with all of your favorite candies in it and choosing blindly. You will be happy with your selection... regardless. Every song in this album has merit, some more than others, but all of them are really quite good.

While the critically acclaimed "Trainspottting" soundtrack was a culmination of predominantly British club music that seemed to capture the mood of heroin addicts, "A Life Less Ordinary" represents something much more American and a little more innocent. "A Life Less Ordinary" is a melting pot of rave and acid experience gives him a distinctive spelling ability. It is still fun and exciting without passing over the songs of this day and age of an album out of the ordinary.

However, Hook and Potts abruptly change direction on "Bruz Bum" and "Blue." These tracks sound more like "We Are the World" sing-alongs than anything which sees itself fit to inherit the exploratory legacy of Ian Curtis. But, don't despair. "Junk" and "Billy Bones" quickly bring this record to where it belongs: heavy on fabricated effects and light on organic substance. Father and son continuously trade off lead vocal duties on this record, and it works out just fine. Remaining tracks like "Teardrop," "Under the Stars," and "Sedona" could just as easily have been written for New Order, circa 1986. Maybe they will be some day. Summer and friends have always left the door open to recording together again, and Monaco's debut LP indicates that Peter Hook shows no sign of letting up.

Maybe it's unfair to David Potts to constantly compare Music For Pleasure to records by his father's previous band, but Monaco shamelessly milks the New Order connection at every opportunity. Thus, if you're a New Order fan, this record is a great trip down memory lane. For others, it is a good way to be indirectly introduced to one of the most consistently innovative hands of the last 20 years.

The final track is "Countdown to Zero," the first single from the band's forthcoming album, "Monaco." The song is a powerful statement on the state of our world today, and it ends with the words "We Are the World." This is a fitting end to Monaco's debut album, which is both thought-provoking and catchy. The band's ability to combine these elements makes them a force to be reckoned with in the music industry.

Green Bay’s Koochne unpacks from injury

The real test comes Thursday morning, however.
"I’d like to see how it responds, see if it’s worn tomorrow," Koochne said. "I want to see if it’s so sore that I can’t do anything or if it feels good."
Koochne underwent reconstructive surgery on his right knee to repair the anterior cruciate ligament on Jan. 9. He spent the first half of the season on the injured list and was ruled out for the playoffs.
Coach Mike Holmgren said Koochne will have to go through his own personal minicamp to make it back on the field for the team's stretch run.
"Yeah, it will take a couple of weeks. I would think, given the fact that his ligament is OK. Now, get in there and bang around a little bit," Holmgren said. "We’re going to have to set up some special things for him because naturally he wouldn’t get enough banging around in just our normal practice.
Koochne said he’s farther along mentally than physically.
"I feel pretty good. I just need some practice time," he said. "As far as my reads, I was pleased about that.
But Koochne said there’s one mental hurdle to conquer. "Oh, yeah. There’s a mental thing.
Koochne reads for six hours a day in the weight room, and mentally and was invigorated.
"I can’t do anything or if it feels good," Holmgren said."

Our students support these local United Way agencies; shouldn’t we?

You know the reputation our students have for sharing their time and talents in community service — and that reputation is well deserved. By graduation, more than 75 percent of our students have been involved in social service, many of them with the local United Way-supported agencies listed here.

But what about those of us — Notre Dame faculty and staff — who make our permanent homes in this community? Shouldn’t we demonstrate the same kind of support for these agencies that our students do during their brief stays here?

It’s so easy, really. All we need do is decide what we can afford to give — however much that is — then list that amount on our United Way pledge cards and return them.

Consider the impact: The agencies listed here provide emergency food, clothing and living assistance to people in crisis; day care, tutoring, and role models to children and young people; shelter to the abused; health care and support services to the disabled, the elderly and the ill; treatment, education and hope to the addicted; counseling and care to struggling families.

In overwhelming numbers, our students embrace these efforts, enriching these programs with their time and talents — and enriching themselves in the process of giving.

Can we do less?

Join our students on the United Way/Notre Dame team and pledge your support today.
Barkley leaning toward retirement after arrest

The Associated Press

HOUSTON

Charles Barkley, saying his young daughter was being harassed by schoolmates over his arrest in Orlando, Fla., told several Houston reporters Wednesday he is "leaning toward retirement." Barkley contacted at least two television stations — KHOU and KTRK — and also called the Houston Chronicle. KHOU said Barkley reported being upset with harassment his daughter was facing at elementary school in Phoenix.

Barkley also said he was upset that the NBA did not rule out suspending him for the Sunday incident in which he was accused of throwing a bar patron through a plate-glass window.

"Right now, I'm leaning toward retirement," the 11-time NBA All-Star told the Houston Chronicle. "If the league is not going to stand by me, then I'll just say thank you very much and move on."

Barkley could not be reached by The Associated Press on Wednesday night. NBA officials said in a conference call earlier Wednesday that the league would take no action against Barkley until there was some outcome in the Orlando case. Contacted late Wednesday, NBA spokesman Brian McIntyre said he had not heard from Barkley about any retirement.

Early last Sunday, Barkley was charged with aggravated battery and resisting arrest after he allegedly threw a bar patron through a window. Barkley told police the 20-year-old man, Jorge Lugo, had thrown a glass of ice on the basketball star and three women sitting with him. Barkley chased Lugo to the front of the bar, where an off-duty officer tried to intervene. But Barkley picked up Lugo and threw him through the window.

Rockets spokesman Tim Frank said Barkley's absence from practice was excused because of a family emergency. "He had missed practices because he was having a family crisis," Frank said. "When a family's involved, we always consider family as a major part of everybody's life."

The Rockets open their season Friday against the Cleveland Cavaliers. Teammates said they hoped Barkley would join them. "Everybody's getting ready to go," said Brent Price. "We want all the pieces in place. What's important is that he takes care of business."

In August 1996, the Phoenix Suns traded Barkley to Houston in a blockbuster deal. Barkley, who is in his 14th NBA season, averaged 19.2 points, 13.5 rebounds and 4.7 assists last season.

Orioles' Johnson on fire, may not return

Henry B. Thomas

The Associated Press

Baltimore Orioles owner Peter Angelos now has a reason to fire manager Davey Johnson, who may not be asked back for the third and final year of his contract.

In what Angelos calls "an infraction of serious proportions here," the Orioles fined Alomar $10,000 in July after Alomar skipped an exhibition game between the Orioles and Pittsburgh Pirates without permission. Angelos tried to talk to both his family and Alomar's Puerto Rico after the death of his grandmother, but ended up going directly to Puerto Rico because he could not get a flight back in time for the Orioles next day.

Johnson ordered Alomar to pay the fine to a scholarship fund run by Dr. Benjamin Carson of Johns Hopkins Hospital. Johnson's wife, Susan, is involved in fund-raising for the Carson Scholarship Foundation.

Johnson told The New York Times in Thursday's editions that Angelos had "not informed" him of Alomar's being fired, but that Angelos had told him that Alomar's behavior was "out of control." "He's got a good mind for the ball club," Angelos said Wednesday in a telephone interview with The Associated Press. "That's an obligation the manager has. There has been an infraction of serious proportions here."

Angelos now has a reason to fire Johnson's wife as a fund-raiser.

Detroit return wins streak snatched

DETROIT (AP) - Larry Murphy scored the tie-breaking goal 45 seconds into the third period Wednesday night and the Detroit Red Wings routed former teammate Vernon to return to Joe Louis Arena with a 4-3 victory over the San Jose Sharks.

Vernon was playing in Detroit for the first time since he was traded by Edmonton for the Conn Smythe Trophy as playoff MVP while leading the Red Wings to their first Stanley Cup championship in 43 years. Vernon, who earned the Conn Smythe Trophy scoring 16 goals and adding 18 assists during the playoffs, went on to sign with San Jose in August for two draft picks.

Murphy scored off a rebound during a goal-mouth scramble, giving the Red Wings their third straight victory after losing three games.

With the game tied 1-1, Palffy gave New York the lead with his sixth goal, a power-play goal at 3:07 of the second period. Smolinski scored for a 3-1 lead with 5:24 left in the period. Delvecchio completed the four-goal outburst with his fifth of the season.

But Angelos and Johnson, both strong-willed, have had their differences over the past two years. Angelos told The New York Times that he could not get a flight back in time for the Orioles next day.

Another rare accuracy in Brtalik’s article is his labeling of Pat Garrity as a “premier athlete or other athletes to follow.” Garrity is a role model in every sense of the word: a great player who performs well both in the classroom and on the ice. Let me introduce you to Steve Noble. The first three-year captain in the history of Notre Dame hockey, Noble is a star on and off the ice. As a Rhodes Scholar candidate who, when not playing hockey or doing community service, can be found in the Hesburgh Library, Noble maintains a 3.95 cumulative GPA. I find it interesting that Noble was one of the athletes who spoke out against these unsubstantiated rumors.

In unsuccessfully trying to make a point, Brtalik tarnished the reputation of one of our up-and-coming sports programs through meaningless facts exaggerated with unsubstantial rumors.

The captain of these “athletes with attitudes” is arguably the most prominent student-athlete on campus, renowned for his strength of character. As for the incident itself, Brtalik makes a mountain out of a molehill. Apparently, when non-athletes attend sporting events and taunt athletes in an attempt to break their concentration, it is viewed as witty and amusing. Yet when a fellow athlete does this it is unsportsmanlike? Why the double standard? If anything, the athletes should have more of a right to taunt one another than anyone else. And what of these cruel and malicious taunts? Brtalik taunts one another more than anyone else. Brtalik’s article is his labeling the Irish hockey team as nothing more than a joke. I think has been successful because it has shown an improvement year after year that will culminate in its breakout season this year.

"A Talk With George McGovern"
October 30, 1997
Notre Dame JACC – 7:00 p.m.

"BOOK TITLE: "TERRY: My Daughter's Life-and-Death Struggle with Alcoholism"
Written By George McGovern

The event will start at the JACC in the Homecoming Ballroom. The program begins at 6:00 p.m. It will be followed by a brief question-and-answer period.

"Good try, you always have Sunday to win" and "At least on Sunday you will finish at "300" that would not even be deemed until for a 2-ball game nonetheless a college women's soccer game. Brtalik should commend these players for attending the game and rooting on their fellow student-athletes instead of condemning them for saying two of the least offensive things I have ever heard on a soccer field.

I also find it interesting that Brtalik wrote about the alleged soccer incident a month after it occurred. Why the delay? Perhaps because when his column was printed, the hockey team was playing on the road at St. Cloud State and none of the players would have the opportunity to confront Brtalik or respond to his allegations. Or, maybe because the Oct. 17 issue was the last one until fall break, thereby allowing people to forget about it—that is, everyone except the hockey program and Coach Poulin.

Coach Poulin forgot about it three weeks ago, when he made members of the now men’s squad write letters of apology to the women at North Carolina and make the whole team suffer through various punishment drills.

Of course, Brtalik, who correctly pegged Poulin as a person with “a great deal of class, a great personality,” would have enough respect for the man to not bring up an indiscretion on the part of his players nearly a month after it became a moot point. It is all too appropriate that Brtalik states, “Trash talk also reflects poorly on the person who speaks it.” In unsuccessfully trying to make a point, Brtalik tarnished the reputation of one of our up-and-coming sports programs through meaningless facts exaggerated with unsubstantial rumors. Maybe Brtalik should realize that most people in the hockey team reflect on him.

Stone set to coach women's rowing

Special to The Observer

Martin Stone, women's crew coach at the United States Naval Academy since 1992 and coach of the Division II national championship team in 1994, has been named the first women's rowing coach at the University of Notre Dame. Rowing becomes a varsity sport at Notre Dame effective with the 1998-99 academic year, making it the 13th women's varsity sport offered and the 26th sport overall at the University.

Stone's leadership at Navy enabled the Midshipmen to compete both years in the women's crews at the Champion International Regatta. In '93, the Midshipmen finished 5-4, including a sweep of all races at the Patriot League Championship. Navy's first varsity boat also finished first at the Champion Intercollegiate Rowing Regatta.

Stone began in '92 by leading Navy's varsity eight to their first gold medal at the Dad Vail Regatta; the East Coast's largest crew regatta, that spring. Navy's second varsity eight also won a gold medal — and Navy earned the Soviet Trophy for overall team performance by women's crews at the Dad Vail for the sixth straight year.

Prior to taking over the Mid's women's program, Stone served as Navy's plebe lightweight coach in '91. He was the assistant rowing coach at Saint Mary's College in Moraga, Calif, in 1990, working with both the men's and women's programs and specifically coaching the varsity and novice women.

Stone is a 1989 graduate of Saint Mary's, with a bachelor of arts degree. A native of Santa Rosa, Calif, he rowed for four years at Saint Mary's, earning two letters in the heavyweight boat and one in the lightweight boat. Three times he was named the most valuable oarsman.

Women break ground as refs

NEW YORK

Lee Kantner and Violet Palmer, the NBA’s first women referees, aren’t worried about handling Charles Barkley, Dennis Rodman and the league’s other bad boys.

"We’ll treat them just like any other player," Palmer said during a conference call with Kantner on Wednesday night. "Confrontation is part of being a referee. If they cross a line they’re not supposed to, they’ll get a technical like any other player.

One day after being hired and two days before the start of the NBA season, Kantner and Palmer gave their first public reactions to their groundbreaking achievement.

Although they’ll be the first women to officiate regular-season games in a major U.S. professional sports league, Kantner was surprised the press gave the story so much attention.

"I’m really stunned by the response we’re getting," she said. "We just followed a path that was laid out for us.

Both women have officiated NBA exhibition games the last two years and worked NBA summer league games the last three years. They also have refereed women’s professional and college games.

"I think we and I were selected on our ability," Palmer said.

"We didn’t have to fight to get to this point. We’ve been given an opportunity, and we’re going to do the job to the best of our ability," Kantner said. She didn’t start out to be a trailblazer for women in sports.

"I don’t think Violet or I could say this was our intent," she said.

"But if one of the aftereffects is that women are given more opportunities, we’re obviously in favor of that."
Leffers leads lineup at middle blocker

By BILL HART
Sports Writer

For many years, the success of Notre Dame's volleyball team has hinged on the depth of its lineup. This season, one has to look no further than the middle blocker position, where there are six players vying for two starting positions. Fortunately, the Irish returned many experienced players for the position, including sophomore Mary Leffers.

Leffers, raised in Tampa, Fla., grew up in a very athletic family. Her father played football at Vanderbilt and was later a member of the Oakland Raiders practice squad. After leading her team to a state title and top-five national ranking during her senior year, she was named Gatorade player of the year for the Southern region.

In a recent match against Houston, Leffers' face was starting back at her across her net. "It was so much fun," she remarked on the reunion. "After the match, we chatted about it for quite a while. For the first two games, my sister was really nervous. After we won the first two games, I was worried about how she would feel if we won the third game and swept them." The Cougars went on to take the next three and win the match.

The Cougars went on to take the next three and win the match.

"Mary can change the complexion of a match and I think people saw that at times last season," head coach Debbie Brown said. "We need her to set the tone for us in the middle and she is the type of competitor who will do her best to make that happen at all times."

Despite having a relatively young squad in collegiate volleyball, Leffers has already made a place for herself in the record books. Currently, she ranks second in blocks per game and eighth in kills per game. Her career hitting percentage of .288 is on pace to be one of the most impressive matches of her career.

In a five-game win over Illinois State, she had 19 kills with just two errors to lead the team. She also had a career-best four aces against the Red Hawks while serving five straight points in the critical fifth game of the match. Three days later, she totaled 18 kills on .533 hitting in a three-game win over Boston College. "The next day, we turned in seven kills with no errors in a victory against Providence."

As a three-sport athlete in high school, Leffers and her teammates are not limited to volleyball. Last year, she guided her team to the Bookstore championship title and was named to the all-tournament squad.

This season, she will be in the lineup for the women's basketball team. "Last year, I thought about it," she said on her decision to play basketball. "But I'm a head coach and I think Mary has steadily improved since the first moment she's stepped on campus." Brown said. "Early in this season, Leffers owns a 309 season hitting percentage that would rank third in Notre Dame history. At this point in the season, Leffers is having some of the most impressive matches of her career."

"It's been a bigger decision," Brown said. "I think Mary has steadily improved since the first moment she's stepped on campus." Brown said. "Early in this season, Leffers owns a 309 season hitting percentage that would rank third in Notre Dame history. At this point in the season, Leffers is having some of the most impressive matches of her career."

"I think Mary has steadily improved since the first moment she's stepped on campus. I think Mary's a big part of that," Brown said. "Mary's been a bigger presence on the court this season," senior hitter Jaimie Lee remarked. "Her blocking has been tremendous, especially during the Houston match last week. She plays with a lot of emotion, which is important at this point in the season."
McCoy relishes opportunity to be role model

By SCOTT STRASEMEIER
Navy Sports Information Director

Houston Rockets forward Charles Barkley claims he is not role model. He has said over and over again that parents should be the role models in a young man's life or woman's life.

Navy quarterback Chris McCoy has a totally different view than Barkley. He sees himself in a position where he can make a difference in young people's lives and relishes the opportunity. He knows that kids will listen to him because he is the starting quarterback at the Naval Academy.

"Athletes have more of an impact on how young people act and react to situations than anyone else," said McCoy. "Where I grew up there were not a lot of positive role models, even though there were a lot of good athletes. I wanted to be able to do something with my life and be a role model for kids to look up to."

McCoy found out at an early age that it was okay to be different, that he didn't have to do what everyone else was doing them.

"I just wanted to be myself and not try to fit in and do things that I didn't want to do," said McCoy. "I wanted to do things I could do in school and in athletics and try to encourage other young people to be themselves and do what they want to do."

"There is a lot of opportunity out there in the world and where I am from, in rural south Georgia, a lot of the people can't see past the next day. They don't think about long range goals and how things that they do now affect their future," continued McCoy.

Now that McCoy has become a success, he loves talking to kids back in Morris and in the Annapolis/Baltimore/Washington area. He enjoys going to schools and talking to kids about their futures and what they need to do to accomplish their goals.

"I have a responsibility as a midshipman and as an athlete to be a role model," said McCoy. "I can reach just one kid and turn his life around. He has said I have done will be worth it. It gives me a chance to give back to the community and to the sport I love to play."

Given McCoy's success at quarterback, kids listen to him with great interest and respect.

"They see me on TV and read things in the paper about how successful we are as a team, and kids respect that," said McCoy. "I think they have their attention, and once I have that attention, I try to get across to them that they can achieve anything they want to."

"I wasn't the smartest kid in my school or the best athlete. I was just an average person who worked hard and now look what I have accomplished. I have evidence that you can achieve anything you set your mind to because I have done it."

McCoy, who went to Randolph-Clay High School in Cuthbert, Ga., was the first Division I athlete in his school's history in any sport.

"That just shows you the importance and the mentality of the kids in that area on what was important to them," said McCoy. "They're not people who stressed education as much there, but my mother emphasized the importance of doing well in school at an early age.

"Since McCoy went to Navy, two other student-athletes from his high school have reached Division I status. Jerry Braswell is a star guard for the Wake Forest Demon Deacons and Roy Grady is a strong safety at the University of Florida. McCoy, without hesitation, credits his mother, Rosie, for everything he has accomplished both in school and on the athletic field.

"She was the rock of the family, the role model," said McCoy. "She taught me everything in life; she taught me right from wrong and put direction in my life. She always supported me and my brothers in everything we did. I can't say enough about her."

McCoy credits his father for teaching him about hard work and discipline, two things that have helped him get through the Naval Academy.

"My father was kind of quiet, he didn't say a whole lot," said McCoy. "He instilled in us the will to work and to do things right."

Neither one of his parents have been to Annapolis, though he expects his mother to come to the final home game.

"They really don't leave home too much, especially my father," said McCoy. "He is really reserved, a wilderness type person. He really isn't a big sports fan."

McCoy says he got the love of sports from his oldest brother, Danette, and younger brother, Larry.

"All we did was play sports all day. There was nothing else to do but play sports. We didn't have any leagues or anything like that to play in. We just played against each other," said McCoy.

"The Naval Academy is very lucky to have McCoy. It took a last second call from Navy coach Frank Hickson to stop McCoy from signing with Albany State."

"My principal, Jackie Hammond, had sent some film of me to Navy and when we didn't hear back from them, we assumed they weren't interested. Albany State was actually at my high school waiting for me to sign the national letter of intent when Coach Hickson called and asked if I would like to come up for a visit. I talked it over with my principal and mother and decided that I would like to visit. The rest is history."

Irish go head to head in Blue/Gold scrimmage

Hooperstake to the court in preparation for upcoming season

After a peek at the 1997-98 Notre Dame basketball team at Midnight Madness a couple of weeks ago, last night's Blue and Gold scrimmage gave Irish fans a better look at what head coach John MacLeod has to work with for the upcoming season.

Among the spectators at the scrimmage was 1997 Big East player of the Year Pat Garrity, who sat out with a sore arch in his right foot.

"Obviously, I'm happy with the chance to play," the junior said. "It's good to know the coaches feel comfortable to put me in and have confidence in me."

Although Jackson has not taken reigns of the Notre Dame offense quite yet, as Ibbie emphasizes that Ron Powlus is the starting quarterback, Jackson says he is ready when called upon for the minutes he gets.

"I've been in for a series, I try to go in as prepared as I can because it's not all the time I get a chance to play," Jackson said.

Davei explained that this weekend against Navy, his game plan concerning the quarterback situation will remain similar. Jackson will probably see Jarious Jackson is getting his snaps on Saturday in preparation to take over as the team's signal caller next season.

In Notre Dame's 52-20 throttling of the Boston College Eagles, for the first time in his career, Jackson played in a game that was not completely out of hand or just in short spurts of situations.

His performance was nearly perfect, going 3-for-4 for 56 yards, engineering two touchdown drives and scoring one of the second-quarter.

"Obviously, I'm happy with the chance to play," the junior said. "It's good to know the coaches feel comfortable to put me in and have confidence in me."

He's watched two full seasons and half of another from the sidelines on game day, and he's had his time at practice.

Now, junior quarterback Anthony Wyche, who worked hard to get his 19 points.

Sophomore Jimmy Dillon and freshman Martin Ingelsby were the floor generals, and both looked solid and appear to be able to fill the void left by Admore White.

Dillon finished with six assists and eight points, while Ingelsby showed the ability to hit the open shot, nailing two three-pointers on his way to 14 points and four assists.

"Martin and Jimmy did a good job pushing the ball," MacLeod pointed out. "They were some of the bright spots."

The teams played two 20-minute halves with a running clock in the second half, which held the scoring down as the score at the break was 45-36.

"Overall we're not in basketball shape yet to sustain a 40-minute war," MacLeod said.

Although MacLeod's top gun, Pat Garrity, was seen in street clothes because of a foot injury that has caused him to miss about six weeks of practice, the Blue squad was not concerned yet, and last night's game forced others to step up their play and look to pick up the slack.

"Actually it was good for us to play without Garrity because they can't be looking to him as a crutch, and look to No. 53 to bail us out," MacLeod said. "So Phil had to step up and Antooni and Martin had to step up. We had a lot of rough spots; we had some good spots."

One of those good spots was junior center Phil Hickey, who netted a game-high 25 points and 14 rebounds. The only true center on the roster dominated things in the paint with his superior size.

Also leading the way offensively was senior Derek Manner with 15 points for the upcoming season.

"We needed a game between our first halves with a running clock in the second half, which held the scoring down as the score at the break was 45-36," MacLeod said.

"Sushi is an ancient Japanese culinary tradition and art form—one that we are proud to continue, right here at Martin’s. Prepared fresh daily right before your eyes, sushi is unique, healthy and delicious! We offer several varieties of sushi including the California Roll (with shrimp, avocado, cucumber, and spicy sauce), and the Vegetarian Special (with cucumber, avocado, and carrots) to name a few. A not-so-secret fact about sushi is that the word means ‘seasoned rice’. The rice, blended with fish and vegetables, is wrapped in a delicious sheet of toasted seaweed (nori) and sliced into bite sized pieces. It can also be easily prepared for vegetarian tastes."

Many options and sizes are available, such as the Traditional Caesar Salad, the Broiled Chicken Caesar, and the Shrimp Caesar, all available with The Works.

The Irish offensive line is coming off a season-best 526 total yards last Saturday against Boston College.

"It ain't broke, don't fix it," is Bob Davie's new motto. After success against Boston College, he has decided to stay with two quarterbacks, which appears to be working for his team.

"I think we go into it with the same plan," Dave said about his quarterback calling. "I'd like to see Jarius play in the first half, get a series or two in the first half. I think it's pretty much the same plan. It obviously worked well."

The duo of Ron Powlus and Jarius Jackson threw Boston College for a loop last week. By continually rotating quarterbacks, the Irish offense once again become a formidable opponent. Notre Dame racked up 526 yards of total offense last weekend.

The two combined for 323 yards in the air. Jackson saw limited playing time but completed 3 of 4 passes for 56 yards. His counterpart had a successful outing, completing 18 of 31 for 267 yards and two touchdowns. Powlus connected with Raki Nelson on a 44-yard pass to post the day's longest reception. Nelson, who had six receptions for 110 yards, will get the nod this weekend, filling in for the injured Malcolm Johnson at the split end position.

The ground attack had a strong showing, chalking up 203 yards. Autry Denson led the way with 81 yards and a touchdown. "I think we're continued to run the ball better," Davie said. "You know, when you watch us on tape, you can see that the offensive line is more in sync with what we're doing. We're not tippy-toeing quite as much. We're a little bit more in sync with calls and the adjustments."

Despite the improved performance against the Eagles, the Irish still remain concerned about the lack of scoring in the third quarter. Thus far this season, the team's opponents have scored a total of 31 points, while the Irish have scored a meager 13.

"The third quarter continues to be a concern although we broke through it a little bit Saturday," Dave said.

In the third quarter, the Irish relied on a 20-yard field goal by Scott Ceniga to post some points on the board. With a majority of offensive aspects coming together, the Irish plan to build off their last performance, but the team still realizes a lot of kinks must be worked out in order to make it a well oiled machine.

Kurt Beadle will start for the injured Brad Williams at defensive end."

IRISH ON THE OFFENSIVE

The wishbone offense. No three words in Webster's dictionary bring about more fear and anguish in the psyche of the Notre Dame defense. Indeed, just the thought of facing an option running game is enough to make Bob Davie quiver.

"When you play a wishbone team, the thing that's so different is just the rhythm of the game," said Davie.

"They keep the ball for extended periods. So what it does, it causes your offense to panic a little bit because they don't feel like they're going to get many possessions."

In past years, the option running attack has not agreed with the Irish defense. Last season, Beau Morgan shredded the Irish for 183 yards as Air Force marched into Notre Dame Stadium and shocked the home team.

This year, Army, led by its lightning-quick quarterback Ronnie McDade, came within an eyelash of pulling off a similar upset over Notre Dame. Only a "career saving" tackle by Ivory Covington on a two-point conversion attempt kept the Cadets from victory.

Thus, despite a 33-game winning streak against Navy, Dave and the Irish have plenty of reasons to be worried. The biggest comes in the form of quarterback Chris McCoy. McCoy enters Saturday's contest having rushed for an astounding 2,090 career yards, a 4.5 average pace against Army, a NCAA record by running for touchdowns on three consecutive games in the first quarter against Rutgers.

"He's a dangerous player that can break a long run at any point in a game," said Irish linebacker Chris McCoy, "We cannot afford to let up against a guy like him."

A year ago, the Irish defense completely took McCoy out of the game, limiting him to minus 16 yards on 15 carries. However, it's important to note that Morgan was held to 46 yards against the Irish in 1995 before erupting for 183 just 10 months later.

"This system is made for Chris McCoy," said Navy coach Chuck Weatherbide. "He has great quickness and strength."

Irish Insider • THE MATCH-UPS

Quarterbacks

McCoy is one of the most dangerous in the land, averaging 4.5 yards a carry, and he has won a bowl game, something Powlus has never done.

Running Backs

There are few carries to go around with McCoy as the main threat. Tim Cannada has tallied 322 yards, but Denson is closing in on the 1,000 plateau.

Receivers

Although successful when they've gone to the air, Midshipmen receivers have caught only 37 passes this year. Meanwhile, Notre Dame's corps has been a bright spot this year.

Defensive Line

Navy is vulnerable to an aerial attack and the big play. San Diego State burned the Midshipmen for 371 yards on efficient 16-for-20 passing.

Special Teams

Rossum is awesome again, but Navy counters with Pat McGrew, sixth in the nation in returns. The adventures in placekicking give the edge to Navy.

Overall

Davie is in dire need of a win streak, and the team is coming off an impressive win. Navy is thinking upset and is looking to end its 33-game losing streak to ND.
Minor Contributions

By BETSY BAKER
Associate Sports Editor

Anyone who has seen junior linebacker Kory Minor in action during a game knows the intensity with which he plays. One look into his eyes is enough to make opposing quarterbacks wish they had listened to their mothers when they carried on about how playing the clarinet can be just as fulfilling as football.

What is so amazing about the 6-foot-1, 234-pound former USA Today defensive player of the year is that off the field, he is as approachable as a six-week old puppy.

Both on and off the field, Minor is the prototype of a Notre Dame football player.

Minor came into Notre Dame as an all-American everything, receiving accolades from all the major high school recruiting publications, and made an immediate impact for the Irish. He was recruited as a rush linebacker, but due to the fact that Bert Berry already occupied that position, in order to immediately use him, he was moved to drop linebacker. Minor started all but one game against Purdue as a freshman, racking up 47 total tackles and six sacks.

"It was really fun because during the whole recruiting process, I was told that if I came in and learned the system, I would have the opportunity to play and possibly start," Minor said. "I really didn't know what to expect, but actually, by the grace of God, I was put in an unfortunate situation where I was able to start and play, and I've continued from there.

Saying that Minor has "contributed" is an understatement. As only a freshman, he rated on opposing offenses to an extent that Minor said, "was ahead of me, that shaped the adaptability that fills in any possible voids left by his own defense. He is able to come up with the big play, but more importantly can always be counted on to do his job."

"Kory's a very talented football player," defensive coordinator Greg Mattison commented. "In every defense that is successful, you have to have a guy that is capable of making big plays, but still play within the scheme of the defense. Kory has that capability. He's the one guy that if you sit there on the sidelines and say, 'We need a sack,' or 'We need an interception,' or 'We need a fumble recovery, he's the guy you're hoping it will end up happening with, because you know he's gonna be in the position to do it.'"

His presence has been especially essential this year as he has been called upon by the Irish to lead an undersized and inexperienced defense. With a knee injury to Bobbie Howard, Minor was left bringing in the plays for the Irish defense, a difficult job considering his position as outside linebacker and the time he needs to set up after the huddle. However, as head coach Bob Davie and the rest of the Irish coaching staff knows, there are no two hands he'd rather put his defense in than those of Minor.

Thus far this year, those hands have brought in 56 total tackles, including 38 unassisted tackles and six for a loss. Minor continues to develop as a player, and with a year and a half left, the sky is the limit.

"I think over the last three years I've become more of an all-around player," Minor commented. "The drop-back position entails you have to do a lot more things than a normal position, and I think I've taken it on pretty well. I've learned to read offenses a lot more, understand defense a lot more, and know what the whole team is doing, and I really enjoy it."

Much of Minor's strength on the field comes from a bold and confident confidence he possesses off the field. Minor attributes the talent and success he has had in his life to a strong relationship with God and his family. These two relationships, especially as Minor and the Irish have both encountered unexpected adversity, have been essential this season.

"I think for me, a lot of praying (has) gotten me through this season. My faith is real powerful," Minor said. "My whole belief — in whatever happens, good or bad — is that God has done things for a reason.

Kory Minor has found his way into the middle of many defensive plays for the Irish as he is the only member of the linebacker corps with significant experience prior to this year.

In the end, Minor wants to be remembered for what he does off the field as much as what he does on the field. Although at the rate he is going, it will be difficult for anything to overshadow his onfield accomplishments, his outgoing demeanor and approachable attitude balance the athletic side of him.

One person he doesn't have to convince is Mattison. "Kory is a wonderful young man," Mattison said. "That's what makes him special. He's not only a talented football player, but he's a good person. I really believe that if someone can label you as a good person, that is worth everything. And if someone were to ask me, 'What kind of guy is Kory Minor?' I would say, 'He's a very good person.'"

That statement lies at the heart of Minor's goal for his stay at Notre Dame. "I want people to look at me and say, 'Besides being an athlete, he was a nice person,'" Minor said. "He took time to talk to you. He took time for the fans, to do autographs or take pictures. I just want people to see me as a person who goes out his way for other people."

Whether it is going out of the way to intercept an opposing quarterback's pass or going out of the way to help someone in need, Kory Minor will not be forgot any time soon.

Irish hope to continue dominance over Navy

In disappointing season, there is one streak left to salvage

In recent years, the Notre Dame football program has put together a number of impressive unbeaten streaks against a handful of its traditional opponents. In fact, before the final game of Lou Holtz's tenure at the University, the Irish had not lost to Southern California, Purdue, Michigan State, Pittsburgh, or Navy since 1987, when the Panthers knocked off Lou Holtz's second-year team in Pittsburgh.

The three longest streaks, 13 consecutive games without a loss to the Trojans, 11 consecutive victories over the Boilermakers, and 33 straight wins over the Midshipmen, had been achieved against Notre Dame's most frequent opponents. The Irish have faced each of those squads in every regular season since 1945.

As of the present moment, however, just two of the five streaks remain. By defeating Pittsburgh three weeks ago, Notre Dame extended its dominance over the Panthers to eight straight games, but only one of the three annual opponents has yet to bring its stretch of futility against Notre Dame to an end. That team will look to do so this weekend in Notre Dame Stadium.

Navy enters Saturday's showdown with possibly its best shot at stopping the Irish than Pittsburgh and Boston College were able to offer. And the Irish appear ripe for the picking.

Coming off its victory at Pittsburgh, Notre Dame turned in an appallingly sloppy performance at home against a mediocre Southern Cal squad. Now, following a blowout win versus another weak Big East foe, the Irish must guard against complacency, especially with the Midshipmen coming to town.

Navy has not come within 15 points of Notre Dame since the last Irish national championship season in 1988. However, the Midshipmen have averaged 23 points per game in their last four meetings with the Irish, and interestingly enough, that is the exact number of points that Notre Dame has averaged in its eight games of 1997. Navy, incidentally, has put up almost 30 per game this year.

Also, in just six games, McCoy has already racked up over 630 yards rushing and eight touchdowns. Add to his four touchdown passes and 693 yards through the air, and it is not hard to see why the Irish have plenty to worry about.

McCoy's numbers are eerily reminiscent of those of the infamous Beau Morgan. Coming into that fateful day in Notre Dame Stadium, he had rushed for 567 yards and six touchdowns in five games.

In the grand scheme of things, the time simply appears right for Navy to put the final touches on the destruction of the era of Irish dominance. An end to the monumental 33-game winning streak that Notre Dame currently holds would signal, once and for all, that the rebuilding of the storied Irish football program will soon be a necessity.

A win, however, could prove that some things are indeed still sacred, and that the 1997 season may not be a lost cause.

Gators look to tame Bulldogs

Boilermakers aim to extend incredible run

No. 14 Georgia
at No. 6 Florida

Are the Gators back on track, or has there been a shift of power in the Southeastern Conference? The Bulldogs hope that the latter is the case as they take aim on the SEC East Division lead when they face Florida in Gainesville on Saturday.

Steve Spurrier’s troops started to turn things back around with a convincing victory over Auburn two weeks ago, and now they have an opportunity to set things in the SEC straight with their third consecutive game against a ranked opponent. The Bulldogs were beaten by Tennessee for their only loss this season, but this weekend’s game is the one that they have had circled on their calendars since the year began.

Georgia has not come out on top of this matchup since 1989, and the Bulldogs have failed to hold Florida under 31 points in six of the last seven seasons. Don’t expect those trends to change this year.

No. 9 Ohio State
at No. 21 Michigan State

It was not too long ago that the Spartans were looking like potential 1997 Big Ten champions. With a loss against the favored Buckeyes this weekend however, Michigan State will find itself completely out of contention and in the midst of a three-game skid.

Northwestern and Michigan have made the Spartans look more than beatable in the last two weeks, and Ohio State has taken care of business against opponents that they have been favored to beat this season.

The Buckeyes did drop a tough decision to Penn State at home earlier in the year, but the Nittany Lions remain one of the few undefeated teams in the nation, and there are no signs that there will be a change in that regard anytime soon. This is a must win for Ohio State’s Rose Bowl hopes.

Tailback Sedrick Irvin and the Michigan State Spartans will attempt to snap a two-game losing streak when they host No. 9 Ohio State on Saturday.

No. 18 Purdue
at No. 12 Iowa

Since knocking off Notre Dame in their second contest of 1997, the Boilermakers have torn through the middle-range teams of the Big Ten with reckless abandon. This weekend, Purdue will up the stakes yet again, with what may end up being a season-defining matchup with the Hawkeyes.

The Boilers will be forced to leave the friendly confines of Ross Ade Stadium in West Lafayette, where they have simply dominated opponents. Iowa may be the class act of the Big Ten’s middle-tier squads, having suffered its only setbacks against powerful Ohio State and Michigan squads.

Those are also the only two ranked opponents that the Hawkeyes have faced this year, so there may be cause for optimism for Purdue. A win here would leave the Boilermakers just two home games away from the Big Ten championship. Purdue has scored 152 points in its last three outings, and Iowa certainly has nothing against scoring points, so expect a shoot-out in this one.
