Taking a handle on life

Diabetes management includes not only treatment, but a lifestyle for students

By JOSHUA BOURGEIOS Associate News Editor

In the fall of 1998, Libby Balbort sat in a science class and listened to the professor lecture on homeostasis and why humans need to maintain a stable blood sugar level. She learned that an unstable blood sugar level can kill brain cells.

Libby took what the professor said seriously and began to worry. All of a sudden, in a room full of Notre Dame pre-med students like herself, she felt alone.

"I was the only person worrying about it in that class," the Notre Dame senior said as she retold the story. Libby has to monitor her blood sugar level every day. The summer before she took that science class, while working in the west bank of Israel with a medical health team, Libby learned she has type one diabetes.

"When you’re a little kid, you just do it (take a shot of insulin)," Dan said. "I never questioned anything. Every day, I got knocked down."

"I didn’t know what it was. I was scared," Dan said.

"I throw in that "r was a typo," Dan said. He listed. "I didn’t deny it." Dan Adams has a different story. At age 5, he found out that he has diabetes. At such a young age, learning of his condition did not stir the same emotions as Libby and Mike experienced.

"When you’re a little kid, you just do it (take a shot of insulin)," Dan said. "I never questioned anything. Every day, I got knocked down."

McMullen admits true identity

By TIM LOGAN News Editor

For the last 20 years, William Nicholas McMullen has been living an odd sort of double life. This week, it caught up to him.

"All hell broke loose," McMullen said in a phone interview Thursday. "At first I was stunned and I wanted to deny it."

"It began in more than 20 years ago when he was applying for a factory job in New Bedford. McMullen, who had never attended college, was interviewing in an office stocked with Notre Dame memorabilia and hoped to impress his prospective employer. He was turned down for the job and badly needed the money, he said.

"Foolishly, I threw in that I was a graduate of Notre Dame," said McMullen. At the time, he did not mention playing football for the Irish.

The factory hired McMullen, but after several weeks his boss approached him in the plant, saying that he had looked through the University’s alumni directory but didn’t see McMullen's name. McMullen soon admitted to the fabrications, after several weeks his boss approached him in the plant, saying that he had looked through the University’s alumni directory but didn’t see McMullen's name. Saint Mary’s begins Master Plan finance proposal

By NOREEN GILLESPIE Saint Mary’s Editor

Although the Campus Master Plan kicks off its first two renovation projects this summer, Saint Mary’s has not established a formal fundraising campaign for the proposal. The Board of Trustees cleared $2 million for four initial projects, including the summertime Regina and Madeleva renovations. The funds also cover initial construction for the Welcome Center, scheduled for construction in the fall of 2000, and reconstruction of the Noble Family Dining Hall/Student Center.

Bonds which the College currently owns will finance summer renovations. This will allow projects to get underway quickly, said Keith Dennis, vice president for finance and administration.

A formal fundraising plan, however, is still in the early stages of development, said Richard Russell, vice president for college relations.

"We are very much in the get-ready kind of mode," Russell said. "We are getting organizational materials together and getting a handle on the scope of the project."

The fundraising campaign, which has no estimated start date, targets alumnae and key constituencies for the College.

"College Relations has begun contacting potential donors and has secured three major commitments for the Campus Master Plan. Those commitments will be announced at this week’s Board of Trustees meeting.

"While we’re not in campaign mode, we are finding individuals who are interested in looking at things project by project," Russell said.

SMC Pride

There hasn’t been much interest on this side of U.S. 33 this past week as Saint Mary's College has been celebrating Saint Mary’s Pride Week. Well, well, it seems you should be interested. I’ve heard the arguments time and time again. Notre Dame’s enrollment is about 10,000. Saint Mary’s has an enrollment of about 1,500. Notre Dame fields offers from the Big Ten. Saint Mary’s fields offers from the Michigan Intercollegiate Athletic Association. Notre Dame is a national school. Saint Mary’s is a regional school. Notre Dame plays football. Saint Mary’s, well, it doesn’t have that option.

What can Saint Mary’s offer Notre Dame?

For starters, Saint Mary’s offers academic opportunities that Notre Dame doesn’t. Notre Dame students have the opportunity to take classes in education, communication, dance and nursing. Saint Mary’s does for them.

Saint Mary’s also has wonderful facilities that are open to Notre Dame students. Saint Mary’s boasts the Moreau Center for the Arts, the only truly decent performance space on the two campuses. Saint Mary’s also has the beautiful Church of Our Lady of Loreto. You can’t find that at Notre Dame.

Saint Mary’s students can take advantage of similar opportunities at Notre Dame, taking Notre Dame classes and using Notre Dame facilities, but Saint Mary’s offers more than just classes and facilities to Notre Dame students.

Saint Mary’s provides us with an excellent vision of open administration and collaborative decision-making that is lacking at Notre Dame. In setting up the Campus Master Plan, Saint Mary’s took every care at all times to include students in the decision-making process that will define the future of the College. There aren’t many schools that would survey students about renovations and additions and then scrap the first plan when students didn’t like it.

Marthi Eldred, the president of the College, is much more open to student input than her counterpart at Notre Dame. She has an open-door policy for students who want to walk in her office at any time. She is often seen around campus.

Saint Mary’s also offers us a vision of women as leaders that is hard to see at Notre Dame and nursing.

Saint Mary’s has yet to have a woman as student body president. Is this just an industry at Notre Dame or is it headed by a man. The position of president of the University is not open to women.

At Saint Mary’s all the positions filled are filled by women. Nancy Midden provides dynamic leadership for Saint Mary’s students. Saint Mary’s also has the beautiful Church of Our Lady of Loreto. You can’t find that at Notre Dame.

You can choose to listen to the stereotypes if you want, but you’re missing out on some fantastic and wonderful opportunities to be found at Saint Mary’s College. My experience at Notre Dame would have been much, much poorer if not for my friends from Saint Mary’s.

So as Saint Mary’s concludes its week-long celebration of pride, Notre Dame students should take this opportunity to appreciate all that Saint Mary’s has to offer them.

Women of Saint Mary’s College, I commend you for your contributions to both campuses. Your pride in yourselves and your College is well-deserved.

THIS WEEK IN NOTRE DAME/SAIN'T MARY'S HISTORY

Wednesday, Oct. 8, 1969

Saint Mary’s Student Assembly accepted a constitution for a new organization, the Association of Black Collegiate Women of SMC. The purpose of this group was to establish a means through which black students at SMC can take a more active part in academic, cultural and social life on campus. It also hoped to improve communications among students of all races.

Outside the Dome

ANN ARBOR, Mich.
The week that many diehard football fans have been waiting for is finally here.

There is no need to mark the occasion with a quick glance at the scorecards. University of Michigan Diag is a vivid reminder of the 101-year rivalry between the Wolverines and Spartans.

It all began Oct. 12, 1895 when the Wolverines beat the Spartans, 30-0. More than a century later, the tension between blue and green is in high gear as the annual Michigan vs. Michigan State approaches. Both teams will head into this year’s contest with 2-0 records — the last time teams met had ended with undefeated records was in 1961.

"This is a great interstate rivalry," said Assistant Athletic Director for Communications Blake Madje. He added that the game is "for bragging rights," it has been sold out since the early '50s. "Both teams have been playing great and these kids know each other, which adds a lot to the game," he said.

Although kickoff doesn’t take place until noon on Saturday, fans of both sides have already started their battle off the field.

Bomb threats alert educators

AMES, Iowa

After five bomb threats in the Des Moines public schools last week, local school districts are trying their best to prepare for similar situations. "We all have a heightened sense of security and awareness from last year's experiences," Cindy Vellick, principal of Mitchell Elementary School, Ames High said. "We received several bomb threats near the end of the spring semester. Lori Morisssey, Story County Emergency Management coordinator, emphasized the need to prepare for all hazards. About 40 people from Story County have participated in a safety program sponsored by the Federal Emergency Management Agency dealing with multiple hazards schools may encounter. Morisssey said they have supported the program for about two years. Morisssey's job deals with any type of violence that may affect schools. We work very strongly with all emergency planning aspects," she said. "We try to make available to schools various videos dealing with the different topics." Nevada Community Schools also have taken numerous precautions.

Aldrin pushes Mars landing at MIT

CAMBRIDGE, Mass.

As part of the MIT/Harvard Mars Week program, Edwin "Buzz" Aldrin spoke Saturday on the feasibility of launching a manned Mars mission in the near future. Aldrin, the lunar module pilot for Apollo 11 astronauts and the second man to walk on the moon, focused on the methodology of putting men on Mars. He offered a number of concerns regarding the types of propulsion systems and launch windows that could be exploited, and the possibility of beyond-Terra-727-landing sites. By 2039, Aldrin told many anecdotes, focusing on the differences between the space program of the 1960s and today. A major example he used was the contrast between disasters and the amount of time it took to return to space following each disaster. After the Apollo fire, NASA launched again within a year. After the 1986 Challenger explosion, NASA waited three years before putting another shuttle into orbit. The conclusion he drew from this example was that the government would never again support the space program as it once did. Instead, Aldrin presented "space hotels" as a solution to the funding problem.
DeOliveira inspires personal, campus activism

East Timor native bears memory of death

By JOHN HUSTON
News Writer

Two weeks ago, Ezequiel DeOliveira found out that his sister, a nine-months-pregnant East Timorese woman, was missing. Her husband had already been found dead.

"That’s a consequence of the struggle," he said.

DeOliveira, 28, was born in East Timor and lived there until 1996, when concern for his own safety forced him to flee to England. He visited campus to speak this week.

Now he was 12 years old, he had been involved with activism in opposition to Indonesian military control of East Timor. He visited Notre Dame Tuesday night to speak about his experiences in East Timor and hopefully raise support for the East Timorese cause.

DeOliveira was 4 years old when Indonesia used force to overtaken East Timor. He, his father, his mother and seven siblings fled to the mountains, along with thousands of others, in order to avoid the violence.

In 1979, he and his family were forced to separate from his father. They surrendered to the Indonesian military and returned to their home.

DeOliveira’s mother was tortured daily, he said. A few years later, his mother and oldest sister were sent to a prison island, Atauro. DeOliveira and his remaining siblings stayed with their aunt.

It is not common, he says, for East Timorese children to be raised by both parents. DeOliveira and his remaining siblings have been taken care of by their aunt.

When DeOliveira was 18, his 12-year-old sister died of starvation.

This is also common, he said.

When he was younger he and his friends would play near Indonesian military bases to try to gather information that would help the East Timorese cause.

As he became older, he began activist work.

In 1993, when the Pope John Paul II visited East Timor, a predominantly Catholic country, DeOliveira and fellow activists organized an attempt to draw attention while the world’s eye was briefly focused on the small nation.

Unfortunately, it did not work as well as they had planned.

DeOliveira also helped organize an attention-getting demonstration in November 1991. He, his colleagues and supporters of their cause gathered in a church in Santa Cruz, Dili.

When the large crowd moved to a nearby cemetery to continue the peaceful protest, the Indonesian army fired on them, killing more than 100, including a New Zealander and two Americans. A television journalist caught the attack on videotape, which has widely circulated and became the world’s first real picture of East Timor’s struggle to continue the peaceful protest.

When DeOliveira returned home to East Timor, a prison island, Atauro. He was tortured daily, he said.

DeOliveira’s optimism for peace in East Timor is unrelenting. He attributes his dedication to the past three years which he spent in England.

"When I came to England and the United States I thought, ‘We’re supposed to live as free as this,’" he said.

"I’m quite sure that in the future, by working with people who love peace, freedom and justice, people in East Timor can live like human beings.

“We have commitment and courage,” DeOliveira said.

“This is a time for us to be happy,” he said. They have lost thousands of people, but through U.N. support, they will hopefully once again be free on their homeland sometime in the future.

"That is our happiness." Peace is not a sure thing, by any means. "It’s still very difficult, but I hope peace will come," he said.

Despite an unthinkable past, he still has a dream.

"I’d like to go back to my country. That’s where my roots are." DeOliveira feels his dream will someday be realized.

ND freshman to begin East Timor campus action group

By JOHN HUSTON
News Writer

Jim Madden, a Notre Dame freshman, is becoming an activist in a different way.

He is in the process of establishing a chapter of the East Timor Action at Notre Dame (ETAN at ND).

"I heard about East Timor about two and a half years ago," Madden said. "I was just really outraged — the level of genocide and the apathy through the rest of the world to let it happen ... I felt compelled to start something."

Last spring, Madden invited East Timor native Ezequiel DeOliveira to his high school in Massachusetts. Madden also worked with Massachusetts congressman James McGovern to increase awareness of the situation in East Timor.

"He was really supportive of our efforts back in Massachusetts," Madden said. McGovern personally visited Timor and was active in the House of Representatives with the issue.

Madden hopes to work similarly through the ETAN at ND group with Indiana Congressman Tim Roemer. The group also wants to raise money for missionary work in East Timor.

"Personally I just feel obligated to do this," Madden said. Creating that sense of obligation to work for peace and freedom is exactly DeOliveira’s objective.

DeOliveira said that he hopes the situation in East Timor will be resolved within the next three years, but whether or not that is a realistic hope is unknown.

British opposition leader William Hague hardened his Conservative Party’s stance against a more unified Europe on Thursday, ending an annual conference where Margaret Thatcher, idol of the party right, made an electrifying return.

In a keynote address, Hague said the Tories would veto a new European Union treaty, which covers the proposed admission of former communist countries, unless member states can opt out of most Europe-wide laws. "When we’re in government, the next new EU treaty must contain a flexibility clause or else I tell you there will be no new treaty," Hague declared.

Delegates cheered, waved Britain’s Union Jack national flag and sang "Land of Hope and Glory," a favorite Tory anthem, as Hague and his wife, Flora, made their way from the platform at the end of the 50-minute speech.

"Party pro-Europeans were dismayed, however. And the Tories also were divided over whether the Prime Minister Thatcher’s attacks on European integration and her plea for the release of former Chilean dictator Gen. Augusto Pinochet would help the party’s dire ratings. Pinochet, 83, has been detained in Britain for nearly a year fighting a Spanish attempt to extradite him on charges of human rights abuses during his 17-year rule, which began after he toppled an elected Marxist president in 1973."

Robins Cook, foreign secretary in the Labor Party government, said the Tories had "finally lost touch with reality." If re-elected, the Conservative Party would make British membership of the EU untenable, he said.

"In praising Pinochet and denouncing Europe, the Tories have shown that they are now a party of the right-wing fringe, more interested in indulging their prejudices than argu­ ing for Britain’s interests," said Cook in a statement issued in London. "Taking a tough line on Europe and opposing adop­tion of the euro, the new single currency used by 15 of the 15 EU members, are virtually the only policies on which the Tories outscore Prime Minister Tony Blair’s government in opinion polls. He came out and called us extremists — as if want­ing to keep control of our own currency is extreme," said Hague, stunned by Blair’s attack on conser­ vatism during Labor’s annual conference last week.

that he had played under that nickname at Notre Dame.

Word gradually spread around the plant that the new guy McMullen was the former Irish star running back, and the lie grew.

"One person told another person and another person," he said. One of those people who believed McMullen was the star tailback was his current wife, whom he met at that job and has been with ever since. Neither she nor their 10-year-old son knew the truth until this week.

McMullen said he had hoped to shake the moniker when he moved to California in 1979 to help raise the children from his first marriage. No one on the West Coast knew him as the former Notre Dame star. But 10 years later he decided to move back to New Bedford with his second, and current, wife to raise their son.

"We came back and I had forgotten about the whole issue," he said. "But it was still there."

People would ask McMullen if he was Nick Eddy, and, he said, he would say yes and leave it at that.

"I tried to downplay it as much as I could," he said. Then, five years ago, Kevin Gonshes, the football coach at Old Colony High School in Rochester, Mass., offered McMullen an assistant coaching job. After some hesitation, McMullen, who is knowledgeable in the sport, accepted and had to submit a brief resume. On it he included that he had been Nick Eddy, the tailback and Heisman Trophy candidate at Notre Dame. He has been coaching since then, but said that he imposed this week.

McMullen, 58, has been undergoing psychiatric therapy recently, and said he had planned to reveal his secret in August. Two other assistant football coaches on his team resigned over the summer, however, and he decided to keep it until after the season, when his revelation would disrupt the team less. McMullen was also worried about how an abrupt revelation would affect his wife and son, he said.

"Unfortunately," he said, "I came out before I got a chance to talk to them."

The real Eddy could not be reached for comment Thursday, but he told The Boston Globe that he has forgiven McMullen, and the confabulation caused him to tear up.

The two spoke earlier this week, according to the former coach and Eddy was understanding.

Former Notre Dame tailback Nick Eddy (No. 47) contacted officials last week after learning of William McMullen’s 20-year impersonation effort. "He was great about it," McMullen said Thursday.

Finance

The suggested campaign goal is $100 million. This includes about $70 million for current project costs for renovation and construction. It also includes $15-16 million for the endowment and for future upkeep and renovation of campus buildings. Another $6-8 million is slated for scholarships and faculty endowment.

The Board of Trustees has not formally adopted these figures, Russell said.

"This is a 10-year vision," he said. "The number that we're looking at is the funding for the total vision."

An implementation committee composed of selected Trustees will work on the future fundraising campaign.

They will meet as a group for the first time in coming weeks.

The campaign’s target makes timing important, said Russell. Many alumnae contributed to last year’s $36 million Susquehannock Campaign.

Because Master Plan construction is scheduled over a 10-year period, there is some fundraising flexibility.

"Because we are hoping to raise monies by project, there shouldn’t be a delay in construction," Russell said. "Some things can be delayed longer, others can’t. The sequencing could be influenced if we have interest by a donor in a specific project."

Dates for the project in early stages of planning, however, still remain unspecified.

"It could be a few years down, no one knows for certain," Russell said.

Pilarski: Money tears justice

By NELLIE WILLIAMS

Money can be an addictive "narcotic," that tears justice and faith apart, according to Jan Pilarski.

In her lecture "Economic Justice: Profit or Prophet?" the last lecture of the series on Catholic social concerns, Jan Pilarski discussed how money can be controlling and how faith relates to the economy.

"We need to make the connection between our daily life and our faith," said the director of Saint Mary’s justice education program.

Living in the wealthiest country on earth, "we believe the myth of abundance within ourselves and society," she said. People prosper in different ways but "the economy is not working for the poor."

"Too many lives are flat, empty, and one-dimensional," Pilarski said. "(As members of the middle - and upper-class), money provides us and holds us in forces that led us from God."

Money consumes time and personal values so that people are only concerned about what they want. When luxuries become necessities, people want more luxuries, Pilarski asserted.

"How arrogant and blind can we be to ignore the cries of the poor people wanting to do with us?" she asked.

For Pilarski, the biblical passage Deut. 24:11 motivates her way of thinking about money. She realized that people need to turn to things that give them life, not idols of money.

Pilarski also discussed John 2, the passage in which Jesus begins his public ministry and throws the marketplace out of the Church.

Siemens competition scheduled at ND

By LIZ ZANONI New Writer

This fall, Notre Dame will team up with Carnegie Mellon University, Georgia Institute of Technology, Massachusetts Institute of Technology, the University of California at Berkeley and the University of Texas at Austin to host high school students competing in the Siemens Westinghouse Science & Technology Competition.

John Tobin, vice president of the Siemens Foundation, said he wanted the competition to encourage students to "aim for the same high expectations in school work as we expect workers to demonstrate in our company, to reach beyond what's typically required."

Competing students will present their projects to a panel of judges, composed of Notre Dame faculty members from science and math areas, who will select one individual and one team winner. Students will be judged on their creativity, originality, academic vigor and clarity of presentation.

The scholarship prize for each regional winner totals $20,000 and each team group will receive $3,000 in scholarshipships to be divided among the team members.

Notre Dame's turn to host is Nov. 12-14. During the three day event, the 20 student competitors will participate in on-campus activities, tour Notre Dame's labs and facilities and view science and technology demonstrations, including an earthquake simulation.

In addition to the competition, Notre Dame, along with the other five universities, hopes to coordinate research internships for the winners.

Assistant provost Matthew Cullinan expressed the possibility that student competitors, having had the opportunity to investigate science and engineering at Notre Dame, might be interested in pursuing their education at the University.

Winners of the competition will be recognized at an on-campus banquet Saturday night which Noble Prize winner and physicist Leon Lederman will attend as the keynote speaker.

"Winners from each region will compete in the national competition. The grand prize is a $100,000 scholarship for the individual and $90,000 scholarship to be divided among the team winners. "The competition is unique because it reaches out nationwide," Tobin said. When the competition is over Notre Dame will have helped acknowledge and determine some of the "best and the brightest around the country."

The Siemens Foundation was established in 1989 to cultivate innovation, research and educational involvement in some of the most promising math and science students and teachers. The regional competitions begin Oct. 29 at Carnegie Mellon University and will end on Nov. 19 at Georgia Institute of Technology and the University of Texas at Austin.

The Siemens Foundation, a nonprofit organization established by global technology company Siemens, is awarding the million dollar scholarship to high school students who develop independent research projects in the fields of science, math or technology.

The Foundation is based on the belief that industry needs to make a continued effort to support education in these fields.

SMC offers depression screenings, advice

By COURTNEY BOYLE New Writer

As part of National Depression Screening Day Thursday, Saint Mary's offered free, confidential, professional depression screening and a lunchtime showing of the movie, "Depression and Manic Depression: Real Stories, Real Hope."

"Any screening is a successful one, if a student comes in and we are able to find the problem," said Kris Pendley, assistant director in the Counseling and Career office.

This screening is especially relevant on a women's campus. In a recent four-week period, reports signs of depression twice a week and she sees 10 men reports such similar statistics provided by counselors show.

At Saint Mary's, help is as easy as "picking up the telephone and calling 4565," said Pendley.

"We see more depression and anxiety than anything else in the Counseling and Career office," said Pendley.

Wolbrecht to accept Catt prize

By ALISON HEINZ

News Writer

Christina Wolbrecht, assistant professor of government and international relations at Notre Dame, will receive the 1999 Carrie Chapman Catt Prize for Research on Women and Politics this Saturday.

Wolbrecht and her co-author Kevin Corder, an assistant professor at the University of Michigan, are recognized for their ongoing research project titled "Women's Voting Behavior in the 1920s and Early 1930s."

Wolbrecht, who has long been interested in women and politics and teaches a class with that title, is particularly interested in women's suffrage. "In 1920," said Wolbrecht, "it doubled the size of the electorate."

Wolbrecht and Corder began their research more than a year ago. Research is quite extensive, and Wolbrecht said they expect to work on the project for several more years.

"The research involves a lot of digging, not just data we can look up," said Wolbrecht. "We have had to find election returns from the 1920s."

Wolbrecht's project is significant because it covers an area somewhat neglected in political research. "Even though women got the vote 75 years ago, and it seems like we should already know all of this. The fact is that we don't," said Wolbrecht. "There were no surveys back then."

Wolbrecht and Corder will receive the award this weekend in Des Moines, Iowa.
time I showed my friends they thought it was cool. Show and tell was easy for me.
Libby, Mike, and Dan are typical college students. Looking at them, it's not obvious they live with diabetes, but the disease structures and effects these students live and die by.
Dan told of how diabetes structured a seemingly ordinary day. He almost had to cancel a job interview because he didn't know if he would have time to get back to Keenan Hall to take his shot of insulin between working on the interview and meeting for the interview.
"With diabetes, your day takes a lot of planning. You always have to know where your insulin is and when you will eat. It's difficult when scheduling your classes because you have to make sure you have time to eat breakfast, lunch, and dinner," he added.
Mike agreed to have to have a 9-30 class just so that I know I'll wake up in time to eat breakfast," he said.
Scheduling and developing an eating routine is essential to diabetes because they need to eat regularly to prevent low blood sugar. I sometimes watch a specially designed machine that immediately analyzes blood samples.
"When I wake up in the morning, the first thing I do is check my blood sugar. I check it throughout the day. I prick my finger at least four times a day," said Libby.
Mike said that he has built up callouses because he checks his blood sugar so much.
Eating to survive To diabetes, eating is a necessity, and dieticians often organize strict diets for diabetics when they learn that they have a disease. "Eating is not pleasurable. It's a job and a chore. If I don't eat, I'll be sick," said Mike. "Fortunately, because I'm active, I'm on a 3,000 calorie diet. This allows me to eat some things that other diabetics can't. I'm Italian, so I love to eat 'chicken parmesean.'" Libby said.
Libby struggles with the balance between eating the necessary calories and trying to keep her figure.
"As a girl, the weight is an issue. I've put on a good 15 pounds since I had diabetes. I used to be very skinny, but I am forced to eat in order to maintain the blood sugar level." Libby Balbott, diabetic Libby added that high blood sugar has similar effects. It gets "nauseous, really hungry and extremely thirsty." When her blood sugar levels get high, Mike and Libby both said stress and finals are two causes of their high blood sugar levels. All three students learned that the key to diabetes is knowing one's limits and knowing how one's body reacts to different situations. Furthermore, they felt that the key to diabetes and living with it daily is to have a positive outlook on the disease.
Libby added, "There's no cure for the disease, so it becomes your life. We're in a culture that if something is broke, we fix it. It's not like that with diabetes."
According to Mike, diabetes has challenged him to change his personality a bit. "When I was first diagnosed, I was very defensive. That's my personality. I didn't want the special attention. I don't want anyone to pity me," he said.
Conference to explore implementation of pope's letters
By SAM DERHIMER

Cardinals, bishops and theological scholars from across the Western Hemisphere will visit Notre Dame for a three-day conference, beginning Sunday, sponsored by the theology department.
"Building A Culture of Solidarity: Challenges and Promises of Ecclesia in America," will be a working conference based on finding viable implementations in one of Pope John Paul II's letters, "Ecclesia in America," said John Cavadini, director of the theology department.

Through a series of lectures, discussions, and interactive discussions, conference attendees will explore such issues as the vocation to holiness, martyrdom, the secularizing of society, the family, Catholic social teaching, economic justice and interna- tional debt. There are such disparities of wealth and power in this hemisphere," Cavadini said. "There is a deep social injustice in many South American countries. By building a culture of solidarity, we are attempting to cross the boundaries of those disparities."
"If anyone can do this, it's the Church," Cavadini said. "This conference is focused on this. The Church has been for the whole hemisphere, as one America."
"God, as a transnational influence, is the only vision possible of pulling off such solidarity," said Cavadini. "Highlights of the conference include the keynote address, "Building a Culture of Solidarity," by Francis Cardinal George at 8 p.m. Monday, and a lecture, "Martyrdom in America," by Father Jose Sorbino of El Salvador with responses from Father Geraldo deRosa Chavez, also of El Salvador, and Robert Elberg at 7:30 p.m. Tuesday. The entire conference is open to the public. Cavadini said he is especially hopeful that students will show interest and participate in the conference.
"Any student can participate," Cavadini said. "I want this whole series to be completely student-initiated.
"The conference is part of the department's "Millenial Series," which will feature several different programs inspired by Pope John Paul II's address, "Building the Civilization of Love: Imagining the Third Millennium."

Oktoberfest Walk/Run raises more than $400 for breast cancer

By MOLLY McVOY
Assistant Sports Editor

Saint Mary's Oktoberfest Run/Walk was more that just a race this year, with proceeds going not to the College but to support breast cancer awareness. Co-sponsored by the Student Nurses Association and Saint Mary's Athletics, Thursday's event was attributed to successful turnout and support of the event next year, but what organization it will support has not been decided.

"I think it went so well because it was during Pride Week," she said. "It was advertised more than ever, and it was for a charity — breast cancer awareness."

The race covered 3 miles, with a 1 1/2-mile walk. The winner of the 3-mile race was cross country coach Dave Barstis, finishing with a time of 16:32. The cross country team won in the event, followed by basketball and swimming. The Nurse's Association, residence advisors from residence halls, and the social work club also competed.

Mexico floods, mudslides kill 131 in remote villages

Associated Press

TZITZIATLAN, Mexico

With dozens of people believed buried alive in mudslides, rescue workers struggled Thursday to reach remote towns in southern and central Mexico, where flooding brought on by more than a week of rain has killed at least 131 people.

Government officials said the death toll was certain to rise as reports come in from towns now cut off from the outside world.

Flooding sent rivers courting over their banks in 10 states across the southern and central portions of the country. More than 157,000 people have been forced from their homes.

In Mixan, a village in the mountains of Puebla state about 105 miles northeast of Mexico City, a mudslide buried 15 homes and a school. Ten people escaped but at least 46 others were believed trapped in the mud, said Juan Francisco Ponce Salas, an official in Pantepec municipality, which includes Mixan.

The school was empty on Wednesday at the time of the mudslide, Ponce said Thursday. Another Pantepec official, Luis Francisco Díaz, appealed for assistance.

"We need help urgently since we, with our hands, can't do anything. We need equipment to get out the people trapped under the mud," he told the government news agency Notimex.

President Ernesto Zedillo, who flew to Mexico on Thursday from Canada, ordered the military to do whatever it could to assist flood victims and set up relief stations.

President Zedillo also ordered the army to fly to Mexico on Thursday from Canada, ordered the military to do whatever it could to assist flood victims and set up relief stations.

"The army should act as quickly as possible," Zedillo said.

In Villahermosa, the Tabasco state capital 410 miles east of Mexico City, hundreds of people sought safety on their rooftops Thursday, many for a second straight day.

Some families were removed by soldiers in launches, others built makeshift rafts.

"We are facing the most severe flooding in 40 years. We need to be on constant alert and evacuate homes as soon as possible," Civil Protection Chief Rurico Dominguez said Thursday.

"We will not put lives at risk," said Rurico Dominguez, civil protection chief in Villahermosa.

· We, the undersigned faculty and staff of the University of Notre Dame and Saint Mary’s College, regret, disapprove of, and protest the decision of the President of the University to suppress all advertising submitted to The Observer by GALA* and OUTreachND.

The President acts inappropriately, as if he were the publisher of a putatively independent student newspaper. Worse, since his policy rejects advertising from GALA and OUTreachND in advance, without regard to the propriety or the educational and informational value of specific copy, it is arbitrary and discriminatory. The President’s action threatens the credibility of The Observer as an independent newspaper.

Trump considers presidential run with Reform Party

Associated Press

WASHINGTON Real estate tycoon Donald Trump announced Thursday that he was forming an exploratory committee to help him determine if he could win a presidential race as a Reform Party candidate.

He said his first choice for vice president would be Tareq Salahi.

"The only thing that could interest me is if I could win. I'm not talking about the nomination. I'm talking about the whole megillah," he said in a telephone interview from New York, where he plans to build the world's tallest residential building and where he lives in a marbled penthouse in a Fifth Avenue tower bearing his name.

Trump planned a dinner Thursday night with Minnesota Gov. Jesse Ventura — the Reform Party's leading elected official, Ventura, a former wrestler who won the governor's office in a 1998 upset, is trying to find a candidate he can back in what is shaping to be a fractious nomination fight.

"Do I like him for the Reform Party?" Ventura said, when asked about Trump's announcement. "It depends if he likes the Reform Party."

He said he was not ready to make an endorsement in the 2000 presidential race.

Trump, a billionaire, said that unlike traditional exploratory committees, his would not raise money. "The good thing about this is I don't need the money," he said. Instead, it will provide political advice. Trump refused to identify his advisers but said he will decide whether to pursue a race in several months.

During an interview taped for broadcast on CNN's "Larry King Live," Trump said Ms. Winfrey, the talk-show host, would be his first choice for running mate. The two have not spoken about it, however. "I feel she'd do it, she'd be fantastic," Trump said. "I mean, she's popular, she's brilliant, she's a wonderful woman."

Trump's announcement gives a fresh stir to an already topsy-turvy presidential race. It is also sure to raise questions about the future of the Reform Party and its potential impact on next year's election.

Pat Buchanan, concerned about the commitment of Republican front-runner George W. Bush to conservative ideals, is widely expected to bolt from the GOP late this month to seek the Reform nomination. His campaign refused to comment on Trump's announcement.

Meanwhile, former Connecticut Gov. Lowell Weicker, a Republican-turned-independence, is considering running for the nomination of the American Reform Party, a splinter group. In addition, Ventura himself could launch a campaign despite earlier denials, and there has been talk of a candidacy by actress Cybill Shepherd.

The party's nominee will get $12 million in federal campaign funds.

A CNN-Time poll taken in July suggested Trump would be a long-shot for the presidency. He had 7 percent when matched against Bush and Vice President Al Gore, the Democratic front-runner.

Trump cited a different poll. "The National Enquirer ... did a poll and said I'd win the election," he said in an interview on NBC's "Today." The tabloid surveyed 100 people.

UPS to stop some handgun shipping

Associated Press

ATLANTA United Parcel Service plans to stop shipping handguns via its ground service, instead forcing customers to use the more expensive air service—a cost tutors and manufacturers will be forced to bear, consumers.

Atlanta-based UPS, the world's top package delivery company, says handguns are attractive to thieves and easy targets in the company's fleet of brown trucks.

"We are taking this step as a responsible corporate citizen," UPS spokesman Norman Black said Thursday. "This is the best way for us to add security to the movement of these weapons.

The new rule goes into effect Monday. The company will continue to ship long guns, rifles and shotguns by ground because those guns are more difficult to steal, however.

Black said "hundreds" of handguns are stolen from UPS each year.

"Our attitude is that even one such instance is too many and we just had to find some way to improve the security around these shipments," he said.

UPS's Next Day Air service is a separate, more controlled system where packages are handled by fewer people and stay in the system for only one night, he said.

Black said he did not know what percentage of the gun market UPS shipped, but industry leaders say the company handles about 75 percent of guns sent from manufacturers to distributors and nearly all firearms shipped from distributors to dealers.

UPS's biggest competitor, Federal Express, has restricted guns to its Priority Overnight service for the past 20 years, said spokesman Carla Boyd. Airborne Express, an express carrier, restricts gun shipments to air, said spokesman Tom Brustein.

The Postal Service will not ship handguns unless they are being sent to a law enforcement agency or among gun dealers and makers.

RFI is the only company that accepts guns for shipment on the ground. Supervisor Portia Moomich said the company does not ship very many guns but officials are discussing what affect the UPS decision will have on their business.

"We are re-evaluating what our policies are because safety is first and foremost in our mind," she said.

Bradley proposes annual aid to working families

Associated Press

PETERSBURG, N.H. —

Painting an American portrait of stressed-out parents and deserted kitchens tables, Bill Bradley proposed on Thursday a $2.6 billion annual help to families — everything from preschool and child care, to community colleges and a new army of senior-citizen volunteers.

"What individual families cannot build on their own, we can all build together," the Democratic presidential candidate said, as a new poll released Thursday that showed Bradley with a narrow lead over Gore in New Hampshire. A second poll had the two Democrats in a statistical dead-heat.

A national CBS News poll out Thursday showed Gore had the support of almost half of likely voters in Democratic primaries. Bradley has gained strength in polls in recent months, but has had the support of a third of likely voters in New Hampshire.

Respect Life Week a time of worship

Maybe you haven’t heard that this is Respect Life Week on campus. Or you may dismiss it as a knee-jerk attack on abortion from the fever swamps of the Radical Right. The reality is different. Let me try to explain.

Since Roe v. Wade in 1973, legalized abortion has delivered a body count of at least 40 million—excluding the uncountable abortions by injection, pill, intrauterine device, etc. The Court will not uphold any law which effectively prohibits any abortion. The technology of early abortions by pill and other means, moreover, is moving abortion beyond the reach of the law. In 1997, the Supreme Court upheld a law prohibiting assisted suicide. But the Court allows the states, in effect, to permit intentional killing of supposed¬-alive fetuses by withholding food and water or by “terminal sedation.” How can the law determine, except in an extreme case, whether a physician’s decision to sedate a patient is intended to relieve pain or to kill? Like abortion, like euthanasia is becoming a private choice, beyond the reach of the law.

The American Hospital Association estimates that 70 percent of all the deaths in hospitals in this country are those of Dr. Norman Fost, director of medical ethics at the University of Wisconsin, called “planned deaths.” Planned killing is a response to the shortage of workers to support the elderly, the retarded and the disabled. This shortsight is a result of contraception and abortion.

In the “culture of death” the intentional infliction of death is accepted as a problem-solving technique. Right now, 3.565 people are on death row in the United States. About 300 more are sentenced to death each year. To empty the death rows would require the execution of one person every day for 60 years. The state has authority to impose the death penalty. But that authority can rightly be exercised only if it “is the only possible way of effectively defending human lives against the unjust aggressor.” (Catechism, 1997) no. 2267. That penalty can no longer be justified for reasons of deterrence or retribution but only to protect others from this convicted criminal. The criminal is guilty while the victims in abortion and euthanasia are innocent. In all three, however, John Paul II insists that God — not the individual and not the state — is in charge of the ending as well as the beginning of life.

Abortion, euthanasia and the wholesale use of the death penalty are symptoms of a culture that has lost sight of God as the Lord of life. “We are facing,” said John Paul, “[a] clash between good and evil, death and life, the ‘culture of death’ and the ‘culture of life.’ We are all involved in it with the responsibility of choosing to be unconditionally pro-life.”

The Respect Life effort makes that choice. While it seeks to prohibit abortion and euthanasia and to restrict the death penalty, it offers positive alternatives and help to women contemplating abortion or who have had an abortion to single mothers and to the disabled or terminally ill. It reminds us that, as John Paul put it, “not even a murderer loses his personal dignity.” And it is not afraid to address the root evil of contraception. If, through contraception, you make yourself, rather than God, the arbiter as to whether and when life shall begin, you will make yourself the arbiter of whether and when it shall end through abortion, euthanasia or the death penalty.

The entire “culture of death” is based on the idea that there is such a thing as a life not worth living and that the decision on that point is for us rather than God.

NSMRC Right to Life includes effective outreach to single mothers, to the Women’s Care Center and to Hospice of St. Joseph County. But the basis of the Right to Life effort is Eucharistic Adoration. “Through Jesus,” said John Paul, “man is given the possibility of ‘knowing’ the complete truth concerning the value of human life. From this source he receives the capacity to ‘accomplish’ this truth perfectly.” The Church and the world, he said, “have a great need for Eucharistic worship. Jesus awaits us in this sacrament of love. Let us not refuse the time to go to meet him in adoration, in contemplation full of faith and open to making amends for the serious offenses and crimes of the world. Let our adoration never cease.”

We suffer from the scourge of having the 60s and 70s generations in power. But, like an oil slick on a river, this, too, will pass. One of the Pope’s recurrent themes is that “God is preparing a great springtime for Christianity, and we can already see its first signs.”

Respect Life Week, run by students on their own initiative, is one of those signs.

Professor Rice is on the Law School faculty. His column appears every other Friday.

We can learn a lot from Hairman

Each football season contains a lottery of friends who return for a visit. While my roommate Jim was lucky enough to avoid my accounting, but happy that I ran his freshman year roommate. While all of my friends are unique in various ways, my roommate was unusual in his hair, thus earning the name Hairman. His hair grew a foot and a half out on each side. He wore underwear which led to a nickname. He would constantly talk about it, thus earning the name Hairman. His hair grew so long that he had to wear it in a bun. During the early summer, my roommate was making plans to attend the original Woodstock in 1969. Last week, 30 years later at Notre Dame, it felt like we had only been gone for summer vacation.

Thirty years ago, Woodstock was an event that just happened. Having grown up in suburban Atlanta, I did not live as close to the New York location as my roommate lived in Connecticut. So while I watched the television as the first night was airing, my roommate during the early summer, my roommate was making plans to attend this great rock festival.

Many have criticized this year's Woodstock riots. Much has been said and written about those who attended the first Woodstock, but none of them would describe it quite as uniquely as the roommate we called Hairman. You see, Jim’s parental last name is Caruso. "Hairman," better known to his parents as "Jim," was a rock aficionado. He followed bands across the country. He would purchase beggars' songs to enhance his sense. Most importantly, he embodied the generation of the living and letting live.

Seeing the Hairman last week made me recall one early morning during my first fall at Notre Dame when he and I had stayed up late, sitting only in our underwear and talking about "things." Today it would be called "stuff," but the topics would be identical. Do you say "pop" or "soda?" What social group were you considered a part of during high school, etc. In that particular night we talked music, which led to Woodstock.

Jim has about 6-foot-3 or 4-feet-9 hair that curled into an Afro style that must have grown a foot and a half out on each side of his head by the end of our freshman year. He wore glasses that put Coke bottles to shame. In fact, his height was so bad that one day he mailed a Nordstrom mailer with only a Brooklyn accent for one of our male classmates from New York. This mail had a low voice due to smoking. He never walked in front of me while wearing the physical suit in Vietnam. During a conversation with him, he would constantly talk about his hair, thus earning the name Hairman. While we sat around that one late night in our undies, he stroked true to form. However, his friends soon learned to ignore the distraction and pay close attention to the content of his statements. That night I came away with an insight from our section "Hairman" that helped me develop socially.

Woodstock meant nothing to me in my junior year of Jim’s teenage years. He smiled incessantly while he spoke of his experience at a festival containing hair, music, and love. It was not so much the stories of drugs, sex, mud, and music that impressed me. It was his outlook on living with others and accepting others without judgment. And while he opposed the Vietnam War, he never said a personally derogatory comment about any individual who happened to support the war. My friend the Hairman now works with computers, sans music content of any kind or connection. It is funny how even Jim’s technological achievements can support his musical interests, he has not followed his first love. Life dictated that he be allowed to follow his heart’s desire only for a short period — the teenage years. But he taught me, by his example, without ever knowing it, about accepting others.

To me, the lessor Hairman taught me as a student are evident during the first few weeks of school at Notre Dame. Those early days of the school year are the most socially important for a student. The upperclassman can attest to how friendly everyone is and then how quickly everyone falls into a rut that they carry for the rest of the semester, if not the entire year. The second week was what the year might be like if everyone conducted themselves like they did during the first few days of the school year.

I suggest that students take a few moments each week to sit at a different place in the dining hall or speak to someone different in each class. You may be surprised at the end of the year at the number of friends you’ve made. It is an easy practice to begin, especially when you are having a bad hair day. Think of my former roommate, Hairman, and how you might be approaching someone who has such extraordinary experiences similar to the headlines Woodstock did my freshman year — experiences and lessons that will endure 30 years later at a football game.

Support group needed for eating disorder victims

In the past five weeks, a number of letters have been received regarding eating disorders. Thus far, almost every letter written on this topic has been published anonymously. One of the most horrible aspects of an eating disorder is the loneliness, isolation and fear of what it is like. In fact, it is precisely these symptoms that contribute to the silent and faceless nature of the disease.

I’d like to take this opportunity to break that silence. This is one of the scarcest things I’ve ever done, but I feel compelled to tell all the people currently suffering know that they are not alone. It is precisely because of this that I have stopped eating. I was 15 years old. I was one of the lucky ones and was able to escape from this disease on my own. To this day, my parents are unaware of what I went through.

I regaled my control of my life almost five years ago. There are days when I have to force myself to eat, and there are times that I begin to think that life was better then. Sometimes I feel myself beginning to slip backwards, and it is scary. At times like these, it would be wonderful to be able to talk with others dealing with the same issues.

I’d like to step forward and add my support to the members of the Notre Dame and Saint Mary’s community struggling with eating disorders. I agree that more support needs to be available for students suffering alone. While the counseling center does offer help, as pointed out by Dr. Uze in his letter from Oct. 1, the options offered there are limited.

I would like to see a support group offered, not only for those currently dealing with eating disorders, but also for students in various stages of recovery. As an alcoholic, recovering from an eating disorder takes a very long time, and every step of the way can be a struggle. I believe that there should be a way for students in all stages of a disorder to gather and support one another. Knowing that others have gone before you and talking with them about the recovery process can make worlds of difference.

Irish Guard disappoints fans

Hurrah for the home team! The Irish football team won a thriller last weekend against Oklahoma. The worldwide PR image of the Fighting Irish is once again secure as another exciting victory adds to the great history of Notre Dame football.

Unfortunately, the famous Irish Guard lost a smaller image encounter with one aluminate his 11-year-old son and his two adult guests. This incident won’t make the record books. It adds nothing to Notre Dame’s storied history. Sadly, it diminishes the University’s image in the eyes of a young boy and a 50-year-old man, who, until Saturday, had never visited Notre Dame.

We were walking from Sacred Heart Basilica along a sidewalk that led to Bond Hall, the site of the Irish Guard’s pre-game concert. One of my friends was to my right, and my son and the other friend were behind me. Our football team had already assembled on Bond’s steps. Suddenly, we heard one of the Gentlemen of the guard exclaim, "Move!"

I stopped, my son turned, and my son and the other friend were behind me. Our football team had already assembled on Bond’s steps. Suddenly, we heard one of the Gentlemen of the guard exclaim, "Move!"

"Move!"

My son is 6-foot-4 and much smaller than my own. I addressed one of the guards at random and was told, "I’m not the one to take this up, sir."

"Gentlemen of the guard, remember who you are and what you represent! You are ceremonial and should add class and dignity to the greatest college band in the world. I challenge you to discover less forceful ways to announce your presence to people in front of you who do not want to be disturbed.

My guest had never seen Notre Dame before and stated, “I will never view the Notre Dame Band in the same light again.” My son is not too crazy about the Irish Guard either. I wonder if the next incident will involve a child much smaller than my own.

I sincerely hope not.

There is a crazy phenomenon that transpires certain Saturdays in the fall here at Notre Dame. It starts early in the morning. Areas known usually as parking lots morph into some sort of glorified block party. Cars everywhere open their hatchbacks to become mini-picnics. Soon the crowds gather and the people swarm. The smells of burgers and beer saturate the air. Random shouts of “Go Irish!” can be heard every now and again, and there is a surprising amount of ridiculous windsocks being flown in the air.

What is this twisted ritual? What is it all for? The answer is relatively simple: This is Notre Dame football. Despite what the ticket may read, the real game starts at 8 a.m. sharp.

What exactly is it about standing around in a parking lot for hours on end that gets hundreds of people up and out of bed Saturday mornings? The football team’s record? Not likely. The beautiful weather? That doesn’t seem right either. The free beer and open opportunity to consume it excessive-said student steps out and heads over to the mystical Turtle Creek apartment complexes for kegs and eggs. It is an activity for fans of all ages, even wee tots.

Kegs and eggs is one among many traditions upheld here at Notre Dame. Not just a catchy name, some hosts do in fact offer eggs to their guests, as well as beercakes and other popular breakfast items. Even so, although the presence of eggs at these get-togethers is sometimes overlooked, the probability of there being a keg is pretty high.

Walking down any given alley at Turtle Creek, one may see students playing drinking games such as cups, or doing keg stands, all to the beat of the Victory March being played on a nearby stereo. What better way to end a hangover and pump up team spirit than to get drunk once again?

“Only at Notre Dame,” said senior Katy Fallon, “would people get up at the crack of dawn so they can puke before high noon.”

Not everyone saves the post-consumption activity for before the game. Arriving at the Michigan State football game, a young man lone can only assume that he was a freshman was walking through the stadium with the help of two of his friends. It did not take long for onlookers to realize why he required such assistance. For as it happened, he vomited not once, not twice, but three times in the course of two of his friends proceeded to walk through the mess.

“It was disgusting,” said prospective student Laura Kirkvold, who witnessed the event. “I would be so embarrassed.” May it also be noted that one girl did in fact slip and fall in this young man’s lunch.

How was it that this boy became so intoxicated before 2 p.m.? It used to be that alcohol was something kept very hush-hush, and those “bad” enough to drink it underage did so late at night so they wouldn’t be caught. But it seems today that getting trashed mid-day is part of the football experience. And it isn’t just students, either.

The first tailgating Irish fan interviewed for the purpose of this article was a grown man who insisted that his name was Sammy Schnapps Jr. Schnapps had driven an hour and a half from his hometown in Michigan for every Notre Dame home football game for the past 17-20 years.

He said that at each game, he and his friends host “Only at Notre Dame would people get up at the crack of dawn so they can puke before high noon”

ilgating away Saturday

ers across South Bend use ND football to have some fun in the a.m.

The next group of Irish fans interviewed happened to be the friends and family of Ed Lawton, the dentist of the Fighting Irish. Lawton has been hosting tailgates for the past 20-some years. "It’s a part of the game," said Schnapps. "We have a great time doing it."

No one would question that Schnapps was having a great time supporting the Irish as he stood there conversing with friends. But perhaps one could question whether or not he made it to the actual game and/or remained conscious the rest of the day. This type of alcohol-induced team spirit can be found at many pre-game tailgates, but not all.

"It’s a part of the game," said Schnapps. "We have a great time doing it."

Looking around the tailgater, one could see older people everywhere mingling, eating and talking about the upcoming game. The team spirit seemed genuine here, and after speaking with Lawton for some time, this was proven to be true.

The following tailgater held an even mix of students and parents. Hosted by Annie Cooley and her husband Doug, it was the happening place to be if you like M&M’s and talking to parents. The Cooleys are the parents of senior Dan, and they have been coming to every home game this year to support their son in his position as second manager of the football team.

"It’s a good time to get together with family, friends and students’ friends," said Mr. Cooley. "We can get to know the students’ friends on a personal basis as well."

Not many people were walking away from the Cooley tailgate slurring their words or looking to get sick in the middle of a crowded stadium, although many did enjoy a beer or two among friends. The outcome of any given tailgater can usually be attributed to the personalities of those present. Certain types of parents react well to their children being publicly intoxicated, while others do not take it so well. Certain types of students are scared of parents, while others could care less. It is just as easy to enjoy a nice pregame party without turning into the stereotypical drunken Irish fan, as it is to embody this persona wholeheartedly.

Still, there are those who veto tailgating all together. Many justify this behavior with the reasoning that they "just can’t drink like that so early in the morning," while others would rather just sleep.

Some are completely against the entire idea of tailgating and are sick of everyone pestering them to go out and participate. Some people don’t understand the point of standing around for a few hours when it is expected that they should stand throughout the entire game.

True enough, the four-hour game is hard work for students showing their spirit in the student section. Few will openly admit it, but there are plenty out there who spend a good portion of the game fantasizing about how great it would be to sit down, even for just a second. There has even been rumor of students pretending to tie their shoes just to spend a minute off their aching feet. So it is understandable that there are some students who choose to sleep in and rest as long as possible for the grueling event.

It is sometimes in students’ best interest to get some sleep, seeing as how sleep is often times hard to come by in college. Besides, all too many of those who claim that they pre-party to get revved up for the game end up passing out long before kick off. If this is the case, what is the point of claiming that 9 a.m. keg stands are for team spirit?

So, as yet another football Saturday approaches, it is time to make some decisions. Can you spare the sleep? Can you spare the brain cells? Are your parents going to be in town?

Take all of this and more into consideration when planning your day. Football weekends at Notre Dame are hard work, but when executed correctly, they prove to be worth the effort. So good luck and please, watch your step in the stadium.
NEW YORK — This is the reason Joe Torre insisted the New York Yankees keep Andy Pettitte.

Pettitte, once again proving he’s at his best in the biggest games, took his turn in closing down Texas as the Yankees beat the Rangers 3-1 Thursday night for a 2-0 lead in their AL division series.

Just a week earlier in the fourth, ending the Rangers' postseason hopes, he had a 2-0 lead in the ninth inning at left-banister New York nearly dealt away at the July 31 trading deadline.

Ricky Ledee’s tiebreaking double in the seventh off Rick Helling and a bases-loaded walk to pinch-hitter Jim Edmonds in the eighth put the Yankees one win away from the AL pennant in their 3-0 sweep of Texas in the opening round of the playoffs.

The World Series champions will try to finish it Saturday night at Texas when Roger Clemens and Pettitte go head-to-head.

No surprise, it was Pettitte who put them in position to advance to the next round.

Pettitte almost missed out on this party when the Yankees came close to trading him to Philadelphia more than two months ago. At that time, the left-hander was struggling at 2-8 and seemed distracted, possibly by his father’s heart problems back in Houston.

But Torre, with help from general manager Brian Cashman, convinced owner George Steinbrenner not to pull the plug, and the deal fell through.

Stienbrenner agreed, and challenged Pettitte to “show what kind of man he is.”

Ever since, Pettitte backed up his manager’s confidence. And against Texas, he looked better than ever.

But Texas, he won the clinching fifth game of his first-year World Series and the crucial game 5 of last year’s Series against Atlanta.

Pettitte gave up one run in six innings, walking none and striking out five.

Every Yankees infielder rushed to the mound to offer congratulations to Pettitte when Torre brought in reliever Jeff Nelson. Pettitte received a standing ovation from the crowd of 56,366, a stark contrast to the rude treatment the fans gave him earlier this year — and he responded with an enthusiastic wave of his cap.

Texas got one more run it needed in the seventh after Tino Martinez led off with a walk and took Dick Chavez’s single. Ledee, a World Series hero last year but sent to the minors early this season, delivered a fly-ball double to right field for a 3-0 lead.

Pettitte shut down Texas in the eighth as he did in the seventh of non-postseason games.

The two teams return to New York for Game 3 Saturday night.

“Your guy,” Rangers manager Buck Showalter, “is always ready for the big pitch. He’s been a great player. I’ve been in the dugout before when the players were clapping for him.”

While many fans adore Pettitte as one of baseball’s best and most clutch pitchers, there are many who loathe him.

“I’ve never had a problem with him,” Texas pitcher Kenny Rogers said. “I’ve been in the dugout when they were clapping for him.”

NEW YORK — Don Mattingly is finally ready to take his place with other great New York Yankees as a member of the team.

Mattingly mostly has kept his distance from the Yankees since he retired following the 1995 season. Now, the former first baseman is ready to be an active member of Yankees management.

Mattingly began by throwing out the first pitch Monday night before New York’s playoff game against the Texas Rangers. He threw the pitch to former teammate Jim Leyritz and received a thunderous ovation from the crowd as he walked off the field.

“It’s a great honor to be asked to do this,” he said, standing there before taking the field. “I’ve seen a lot of guys throw out the first pitch. From Mr. DiMag to Yogi Berra. It’s a little uncomfortable being in front of that crowd.

While many fans admire Mattingly as much as Yogi Berra and the late Joe DiMaggio, he didn’t win penn­nats like they did.

Mattingly began his career in 1980. In just his second season with the Yankees, he made the World Series and won a wild-card berth in 1995.

In between New York didn’t make the playoffs, he enjoyed a stretch of non-postseason years similar to the first All-Star in 2011. When the Yankees retired his number in 2000, he said the team had “done me wrong.”

Mattingly was the most recent Yankees captain. He has cultivated a strong relationship with shortstop Derek Jeter could be the next.

Ali makes professional debut

• Muhammad Ali's daughter confident about match against Fowler

Associated Press

VERONA, N.Y. She's as tall as a tree and fit as can be, she plans to float like a butterfly and sting like Ali.

Laila Ali, the second-youngest of Muhammad Ali's nine children, will make her professional boxing debut at Turning Stone Casino on Friday night, and she promised to make the sweet science a sour time for her opponent, April Fowler.

"I'm going to knock her out," Laila said Thursday, her infectious smile lighting up a room full of microphones and cameras. "I'm coming to knock somebody out, not just to win. Tomorrow is going to be a very exciting day for me."

And, despite the calm facade she displayed, a nerve-racking one.

"It's a positive nervous energy," the 5-foot-10, 168-pounder. "If I wasn't nervous, I think something would be wrong.

The 27-year-old Fowler, who lost her first and only professional bout in March 1998, came dressed in black and what I've been trained to do, and when the bell rings you'll see what happens.

The fight will be held in a 2,600-seat auditorium, and 600 tickets were still available late Thursday. Providing room for the media promised to be more of a challenge than attaining a sellout.

Although the bout will not be televised or videotaped — Laila's wish to relieve some of that pressure — promoter Mike Acri said about 90 journalists from faraway places such as France, Germany, Italy, Sweden, Holland, Brazil, and Japan will be there to record the moment.

The significance of the moment was lost on the headliner of Friday's seven-round card.

"I know you guys are not here for me," said Donovan " Razor" Ruddick, who will fight journeyman Jose Ribalan in a 10-round bout as he continues his comeback. "She's taking all my press."

Laila said her mother, Veronica, the third of Muhammad Ali's four wives, would be there, but she was not sure whether Ali would.

"I would like my father to be here, but it goes two ways," said Laila, who operates a nail salon in Los Angeles in her spare time. "Even though he's my dad and he's around me and my boxing career, it makes me nervous because he is the greatest and I feel like I can't do things wrong."

That both of her parents weren't thrilled with her decision to box was not an issue.

"I'm totally fine with the fact that he doesn't really want me to box," said Laila, who will tower over Fowler in their four-round bout. "He'd rather me just go to school like I was going to. He doesn't want me to get hurt, but he never once told me not to box. I think my confidence will increase when I win tomorrow. I'm as comfortable as I can be."

Jagr leads Penguins in win over Devils

Associated Press

EAST RUTHERFORD, N.J. Jaromir Jagr had the go-ahead goal and two assists and the Pittsburgh Penguins gave Mario Lemieux his first win as an owner, defeating New Jersey 7-5 on Thursday night in a game that featured the ejection of Devils goaltender Martin Brodeur.

The game was the first between th teams since an injured Jagr rallied the bankruptcy ridden Penguins to a first-round playoff victory over the Devils in seven games.

While this game didn't have playoff intensity, it was nasty. Brodeur made the nastiest play, whacking the pesky Matthew Barnaby low on the back of his legs at 14:32 of the first period with the Penguins leading 3-1 on three goals by Alexei Morozov, his first career hat trick.

Referee Paul Stewart gave the usually mild-mannered Brodeur a match penalty for intent to injure. It does not carry an automatic suspension but Colin Campbell will hold a hearing to review the action.

Barnaby had to be helped off the ice but returned for the final two periods. The Penguins also played without their No. 1 goaltender. Tom Barrasso left early in the first period and was replaced by Peter Skudra, who made 18 saves.

Baltimore bags Miller after two years

Associated Press

Baltimore Orioles shortstop Mike Bordick said his team was "very, very disappointed" in manager Phil Garner's firing.

"We won't make the playoffs, but we had a chance," Bordick said. "We were better than we showed. I think anybody wants to see who they bring in. Sometimes a change is good, and sometimes the grass isn't always greener on the other side of the fence."

Bordick said Garner's firing wasn't a surprise, but he said it was "sad to see him leave."

Garner was fired by the Brewers in November 1997 after owner Bud Selig decided to make some changes.

Selig said Garner was fired because the team was not as good as expected and because the team had not made the playoffs in three straight seasons.

Garner was replaced by the Orioles' manager Mike Hargrove, who led the team to a 78-84 record in 1997.

Garner was then replaced by the Orioles' manager Jim Leyland, who led the team to a 79-83 record in 1998.

The Orioles are currently 36-51 and are in last place.

Bordick said he was not surprised by Garner's firing, but he said it was a "bittersweet" moment for him.

Warwick, Coles charged with theft

Associated Press

TALLAHASSEE, Fla. — Heisman Trophy hopeful Peter Warwick was indefinitely suspended following his arrest today on charges he and a Florida State teammate were allowed to use payphones for clothes at a department store by about $39.

Warwick and Laverrunes Coles, both Seminoles receivers, were charged with grand theft along with a Jillard’s clerk, 19-year-old Rachell Myrall. She was arrested of letting the two players buy $412.38 worth of clothing for $21.40 on Sept. 29.

At an off-duty officer saw what happened through a surveillance camera, police said.

Florida State coach Bobby Bowden said in a written statement that he was “terribly disappointed,” and noted Warwick is on schedule to graduate.

“He came back for his senior season instead of going pro and he has been such a hard worker and good leader,” Bowden said. “It makes this all the more disappointing.”

Florida State Athletics Director Dave Hart said Coles was kicked off the team because he already was on probation because of past problems, legal and academic.

Warwick will be allowed to practice with the team but cannot play at least until his case is resolved under school policy. He will miss top-ranked Florida State’s game against Miami on Saturday and possibly the rest of the season.

“Peter Warwick has been a good citizen here prior to this,” Hart said. “The door certainly is open for Peter to return.”

Mets, Cubs to open season in Tokyo

Associated Press

NEW YORK — Baseball finally made it official Thursday, announcing that the New York Mets and Chicago Cubs will play the first regular-season games outside of North America, opening next season in Tokyo.

The two-game series will be in the Tokyo Dome, home of the Yomiuri Giants, on March 29 and 30.

Both teams are then off until April 4, when the Mets play their home opener against San Diego and the Cubs play in the St. Louis Cardinals’ opener.

As part of the trip, the Cubs will play exhibition games on March 27 at the Yomiuri Giants and the Seibu Lions the following day. The Mets will play at the Lions on March 27 and at the Giants the next day.

Assuming financial projections are met, each player on the trip gets about $25,000.

This will mark the third time regular-season games are played outside the United States and Canada.

New York and San Diego played a three-game series at Monterrey, Mexico, in 1997, and the Padres and Colorado Rockies opened the 1999 season with a game at Monterrey.

Baseball’s first choice was to have the Mets and Cardinals open in Japan, but St. Louis declined. The Cubs agreed to the trip in mid-August, and details were worked out during the past two months.

The players’ association and the commissioner’s office still must agree to roster sizes and waiver changes.

Current rules call for teams to cut their active roster to 25 players by the first opener in the major leagues.

American League Divisional Series

Thome, Baines slam Indians past Red Sox

Associated Press

Cleveland By the time the Indians finished with Boston, the Red Sox had much more than an aching back.

Jim Thome hit a grand slam, Harold Baines had a two-run double and Cleveland completed a sweep of the Red Sox Wednesday as Cleveland moved within a win of sweeping the AL division series from Boston with an 11-1 rout of the Red Sox.

The Indians, who were the first team in 49 years to score more than 1,000 runs during the regular season, looked for a while like they might try to match that form Thursday.

Cleveland capitalized on Bret Saberhagen’s uncharacteristic wildness and scored 11 runs in a two-inning span to take a 2-0 lead in the best-of-five series.

The Red Sox, who lost Pedro Martinez to a back injury in Game 1, will turn to another Martinez, Pedro’s brother, Ramiro, to start their three-game series in Game 3 Saturday at Fenway Park. Dave Burba, a postseason hero for the Indians pitching out of the shadows last year, starts for Cleveland.

The Indians, who had lost eight straight to the Red Sox before winning Wednesday night, have won five straight postseason games against the Red Sox.

Pedro Martinez, who removed himself after four innings in Game 1, said the muscle strain in his back had improved, but that his path was uncertain pain and he planned to throw again on Saturday.

Even if he can pitch again, it may be too late for the Red Sox, who dropped to 1-17 since Bill Buckner’s infamous error in Game 6 of the 1986 World Series.

Thome made history with his second career postseason grand slam, capping Cleveland’s two-inning onslaught against Saberhagen and John Wasdin. His shot in the fourth off Wasdin gave Cleveland an 11-1 lead.

Thome, who hit a grand slam last year in the AL championship series, has 14 career postseason homers. His two-run double in Game 2 of the 1993 World Series helped put the Indians 3-2 in the sixth, and the Indians rallied to win the bottom of the ninth.

Pedro Martinez allowed one run and five hits in beating the Red Sox for the second straight time in the playoffs. He beat Boston in Game 3 of last year’s division series.

Saberhagen, who was on the disabled list last times this season, walked just 11 batters in 111 innings this season. But he walked three in the third inning when the Indians set a division series record by scoring six times.

Omar Vizquel hit a two-run triple, Roberto Alomar had a two-run double and Baines capped the inning with a three-run shot to right-center.

But Saberhagen, who didn’t work a better than a 13 starts and more than one in 20 of 22, wasn’t completely to blame. After Travis Fryman walked to open the inning, Sandy Alomar hit a slow grounder to shortstop that looked like a sure double play — but Fryman and Alomar were slow to throw.

However, second baseman Jose Offerman’s relay throw pulled Mike Stanley off the bag and the Indians were in business.

Kenny Lofton worked Saberhagen for a walk, and Vizquel followed with a triple to right.

Alomar then ripped a double to the same spot, and with Manny Ramirez on a fly ball before walking Thome.

Baines then put the finishing touches on the Indians’ biggest postseason inning with his third homer, the fifth of his career in the postseason.

Offerman’s two-out single in the third gave the Red Sox a 1-0 lead.

Mr. Martinez may start Sunday

Injured Red Sox ace could heal to pitch possible Game 5

Associated Press

Cleveland Take your time, Pedro. You may have the whole offseason to rest your injured back.

Pedro Martinez, hurt in Wednesday night’s opening-game loss to the Indians, plans to throw again Saturday. But unless his brother Ramon starts Boston to a win that day, the best-of-five series — and the Red Sox season — will be over.

Since Pedro probably wouldn’t pitch in Game 4, if there is one on Sunday, Boston would have to win then to force a fifth game in Cleveland on Monday night. If Pedro is healthy, he could pitch then.

His absence and the Game 1 loss may have affected Game 2 starter Bret Saberhagen Thursday’s 11-1 loss.

"The situation that we’re in, down 1-0 coming into this game, Pedro’s arm is bothered — didn’t want to go home-0-2," Saberhagen said.

Physically, at least, baseball’s best pitcher felt a little better Thursday.

"There is slight improvement today, but he does have persistent pain," said Dr. William Morgan, one of Boston’s team physicians.

"His condition status is day to day.

The Red Sox counted heavily on Martinez, the shoe-in for the AL Cy Young award, to win the opener. He led 2-0 when he left after being injured in the fourth inning and Boston went on to lose 5-2.

"We’ve never scheduled his availability and him to be available for Game 4, so it’s just really an issue," general manager Dan Duquette said before Thursday’s game. Manager Jimmy Collins, though, didn’t rule that out. And the Indians were treated Thursday with ultra-sounds and anti-inflammatory medication.

"You have to let it calm down a couple of days and possibly let him play catch on Saturday," pitching coach Joe Kerrigan said. That’s the doctor’s advice.

Morgan said Martinez will start Sunday, but Boston’s team physicians.

"I have some improvement," Martinez said in a statement issued by the team. "I feel better already. I really feel pretty positive about it. Right now I feel looser. In a few hours after treatment, I’m hoping to even feel better."

The Red Sox hope he’s right.

Martinez was virtually unhittable late in the season and finished with a 23-4 record, a major league best 2.07 ERA and an AL-high 313 strikeouts.

"You don’t like to see one of your starters, premier starters, go down, but that is why you have a team," Williams said. "You have other good pitchers. They have won games."

But not nearly as many as Martinez. Saberhagen was second on the team with wins and had had only 10.

Belles look to boost record against Knights

By KATIE MCCOY
Sports Writer

The Belles volleyball team will try to improve its MIAA record of 4-1 as it travels to Calvin College to take on the Knights at 7 p.m. Friday.

"I think we have a very good chance of winning this weekend," senior Audrey Bill said.

Saint Mary's comes into this Friday's game with a league record of 3-1, losing only to Hope College.

The Knights are currently ranked fourth in the Great Lakes Region.

Belles have been playing well as a team, coach Mary Schutten said.

"When we play consistently," Saint Mary's head coach Randa Shields said, "we can beat any opponent. We win when everyone gives what they need to give.

"We still need to work on

Lakers struggle with offense

Associated Press

SANTA BARBARA, Calif. - Good thing Phil Jackson is patient, because the Los Angeles Lakers haven't yet found a rhythm in the new triangle offense.

Other than a brief half-court scrimmage Wednesday night, the Lakers haven't really played any basketball three days into training camp.

"They want to play, but we're not ready to let them play yet," Jackson said after Thursday morning's practice. "They're not up to that speed, they'll just form bad habits by playing right now.

So instead they drill while Jackson looks for signs that the players know what they're doing. He said the guards and wing players are showing flickers of recognition about where they should be on the court.

"Trying to recognize and trying to anticipate and having five guys in sync is real important for us," he said. "It was a hard practice and a long practice. They got fatigued out there.

The team took Thursday night off and will resume two-a-days Friday. Their first public scrimmage is Sunday night on the UC Santa Barbara campus.

"We probably couldn't have gone into a scrimmage situation, but with our focus being on the small things and the details of the game, we probably would've taken a step backward instead of continuing to stay on course," guard Derek Fisher said.

Jackson singled out Fisher as one of the most vocal in practice.

"Right now everybody's kind of tense because we don't really know what to expect," Fisher said. "I'm feeling comfortable out there and having fun and sometimes just trying to get guys to loosen up and just enjoy being here."

Jackson has made no secret of his preference for bigger guards, which would seemingly make the 6-foot-1 Fisher and 6-foot Tyronn Lue nervous.

"We'll be able to provide better defensive pressure as far as full court is concerned than some of the other guys we have playing guard positions," Fisher said of himself and Lue.

Other than Kobe Bryant, Glen Rice and Shaquille O'Neal playing at least 30 minutes a game, Fisher doesn't think Jackson has decided who's going to play.

"There'll be times where I'll play 20-plus minutes, there'll be times where I might play 18 minutes," he said. "It'll kind of be a game-to-game situation depending on matchups and how guys are playing."
Irish look for fourth straight win in matchup with Friars

By KERRY SMITH
Sports Writer

The Notre Dame men's soccer team looks to extend its winning streak to four tonight when they host Big East rival Providence in the first of seven conference games remaining on the schedule.

The Irish boosted their record to 6-3-1 with a win over Illinois last weekend.

They picked up the offensive tempo in their last three games—a good sign heading into a tough second half of the season for a team that struggled early on.

With eight goals in three games, the Irish found some recent success in finishing their plays inside the box and plan to ride that wave of momentum into their matchup with the Friars.

Defensively for the Irish, freshman Eric Braun leads the pack in scoring.

Netting five goals on the season, he is joined by senior forward Ryan Cox as the team's two repeat goal-scorers. Braun earned Big East Rookie of the Week honors earlier this week for his offensive prowess.

Senior forward Andrew Aris has also come up big for the Irish attack—with one goal and four assists, he has been instrumental in keeping the Irish in control of the ball.

In the backfield, the Irish defense has been a consistent force throughout the squad's first 11 games.

Ayoked by senior goalkeeper Gerrit Short, the stingy defense has only allowed 12 goals and led the team to five shutout victories.

Short, who earned his second Big East goalkeeper of the Week honor earlier this week, enters into tonight's contest against a squad's spark on offense.

In 16 games the junior tallied seven goals for two assists, making him the team's leading scorer with 16 total points.

The Irish will need to contain him, along with forward Keith Dorsey and midfielder Michael Eisenhut, who delivered three goals apiece in order to come out on top.

Tonight's matchup with Providence ends Notre Dame's four-game homestand. The Irish are looking to finish the series with a win for a clean sweep before heading to Valparaiso next week.

Young squad opens season at ND relays

By NOREEN GILLESPIE
Senior Staff Writer

Most teams can look to returning players and their coach to provide stability and leadership for an incoming season.

With former two-year coach Jim Cook and 10 of last year's swimmers absent from the roster, however, the 1999-2000 squad was forced quickly to look to some new faces for that stability.

Young stability.

Heading into tonight's Notre Dame relays, the Belles boast a roster including five returning athletes, a new coach and a lineup that includes nine freshmen and two juniors who have never competed. Secondly, this is [the freshman class], according to Smith.

"Inexperience is going to play a role on two levels," said first-year Belles coach Gretchen Hildebrandt. "First of all, we have some freshmen and two juniors who have never competed. Yet many holes still remain to be filled. I think we're better than we were last year, and we're excited about this year."

Yet many holes still remain to be filled. I think we're better than we were last year, and we're excited about this year."

The first step towards this winning season will be taken tonight, as the Belles look to surpass last season's fifth-place finish. Combining an intensified training program, a younger squad and potentially faster swimmers, Hildebrandt's strategy in her first outing is not to place but to swim fast.

"I don't know if this is a realistic goal," Hildebrandt admits. "But the idea that we do have divers, that we're not giving 40 points to the other team ... it will be closer to 50/50." Freshmen Junci Kasabos and Jaclyn Kistner will man the board for the Belles. Both are newcomers to the sport.

"We're going to play a lot of pressure on us and we were getting tired and they were desperate," Reden'said. "Our defense I thought held up and this was a good learning experience for our younger players to learn what it's like to play in a close game on the road."

Notre Dame freshman Conor Dunlop took advantage of a poor shot by Jeff Ellison and led a 2-on-1 down the ice, before beating Blackburn to close the gap to one with 7:35 left to play.

The Irish, however, never made too many changes. With 1:20 left, Notre Dame tried to put home a loose puck in front of the crease, but the Irish came empty.

"We scattered but they did a good job of packing it in there," Poulin said. "They're a pretty veteran team defensive-ly and we really didn't generate a lot of offense. I was happy to be in it at the end of the game and felt fortunate we had a chance to win it." An empty net goal by Mike Gourie with 14 seconds sealed the victory for the Wolverines in a game that was diluted by penalties.

"Too many penalties in the game for both teams," Reden'said. "Because of the type of game it was it might have favored our power play at one point, but we gave up a shorthanded goal. Their power play started to click, but it was the type of game where you couldn't play shorthanded for very long against either one of these teams. It was a hard fought game at the ice level. Both teams really played hard and very physical with a lot of intensity."

Michigan and Notre Dame will go at it again tonight at 7 p.m. at the Joyce Center.

"We're a better hockey team that we showed today," Poulin said. "The good thing is that we've got a chance to prove it tomorrow. It's early in the season, but we want to set the tone for the rest of the year."

Keenan looks to keep perfect record against Keough

By KEVIN BERCHOU
Sports Writer

The Keough Knights will try to improve their season record to 4-0 and extend their win streak to 15 games when they meet the Keough Kangaroos Sunday.

Keough hopes to move to 2-1, while the Keough try to get last week's sloppy play out of its system.

"We're looking to get back to basics," said senior player/coach Dong Min. "We need to eliminate the mistakes and hope for a clean game."

Keenan will, as always, prove formidable.

Led by junior tailback Nick Costanzo and freshman quarterback Billy Ellsworth, the Knights' offensive attack has proved explosive.

Costanzo has scored in each of the Knights' three wins, and his long gains have worn down opposing defenses. "Costanzo has probably been the guy we've relied on," said Min. "He's been tough out there."

Ellsworth has also shown big-play ability, contributing in each of his teams' victories. "He has come along real well," said Min. "We're pleased with his progress."

Defensively the Knights will be anchored by middle linebacker Joe Klopp, who has been solid all season.

The Kangaroos will try to end the Keough win streak, a run now approaching legendary status.

"We're looking forward to the challenge," said Keough coach Wade Laffey. "It's a tough order. They're a real organized team. They have a real commitment to winning. We're going to come out and play hard. A win would be huge in the game." Junior quarterback Travis Alexander will lead Keough's upset bid.

"He's real steady," said Laffey of his team's signal caller. "He's a team leader."

Attempting to snuff out the Keenan attack will be a tough Kangaroo defense led by line- man Kevin McBee.

Dillon vs. O'Neill

The Dillon Big Red enter weekend play looking to extend a two-game winning streak and move to 3-1 on the season as they take on an O'Neill Angry Mob that has all but given up.

O'Neill, which fell to 0-2 after being shut out by Keenan last Sunday, has yet to score this season. The team is aware it does not stand much of a chance.

"We're just out there having fun," said O'Neill captain Drew Lais. "We really just don't care that much. We don't even practice."

Given the outlook of its opposition, it appears the Big Red will have little trouble in notching a third consecutive victory.

"If we play well, like we should, I don't think we'll have any trouble winning," said Dillon captain Jason Visser. "We've improved every week and I'm real pleased about that."

Dillon will be looking for quarterback Colin Conway to continue his solid play. It was Conway's long touchdown strike to junior running back Bob Redinnow that provided the winning margin last week against Sanford.

Redinnow has played particularly well thus far. "He's like lighting out there," said Visser. "He's been running wild this year."

Defensively the Big Red will be anchored by my middle linebacker J.P. Camarda, who has shown a knack for making the big play.

Alumni vs. Stanford

The Alumni Dawgs will try to remain undefeated as they face the Stanford Griffins on Sunday.

The Dawgs come off an impressive 20-0 win over Morrissey Manor, a contest that Alumni senior tailback John Dickas, to stop up and contain Dietrich. If Dietrich is allowed to run free, Sunday could be a long day for the Griffin defense.

If Stanford is to improve on its 1-2 mark, they will need their defensive line, led by team captain John Dickas, to step up and contain Dietrich. If Dietrich is allowed to run free, Sunday could be a long day for the Griffin defense.

Offensively, Stanford will look to move the ball by way of its potent backfield. Chris Heid, Curt Roberts, and J.C. Perez constitute a core of backs that might very well be the league's best.

VOLLEYBALL

Irish to take on two Big East rivals

By MATT OLIVA
Sports Writer

The Notre Dame volleyball team travels east this week end to take on Big East opponents Rutgers and Seton Hall.

The Irish will face Rutgers on Saturday, in New Jersey, and then travel in-state to face Seton Hall on Sunday.

The Scarlet Knights of Rutgers and the Irish square off as the only two remaining undefeated teams left in the conference. The Irish are 8-4 on the season and 2-0 in the conference, while Rutgers is 9-8 overall and 2-0 in the Big East.

Notre Dame has never lost a match to the Scarlet Knights (0-0). Last year, the Irish beat Rutgers in four sets and matches and will look to keep their streak alive and remain the only unbeaten team in conference.

The match will feature the Big East’s co-players of the week: Mary Leffers of the Irish and Lola Opadiran of Rutgers received honors this week by leading their teams to perfect starts in the conference.

Leffers collected 15 blocks and 28 kills while hitting a season high .510 in Notre Dame’s two conference wins. She also leads the conference in hitting percentage (.368) blocks per game (.191). Outside hitter Opadiran tallied 56 kills for a .622 kills per game average in Rutgers’ two wins. She and teammate Kera Carter are both averaging more than four kills and three digs per games.

Another perfect streak that the Irish will try to maintain is against Seton Hall. Notre Dame holds a 4-0 record against the Pirates and defeated them last year in straight games 15-7, 15-5, 15-10.

Seton Hall enters the game with a 1-1 record in conference, they are 10-5 overall on the season. They dropped a four-game match to Georgetown last weekend before defeating Villanova.

The Pirates are led by co-captain Jennifer Mumby and sophomore middle-blocker Paige Ellerton.

Mumby averages 2.31 kills per game while Ellerton is averaging 2.7. Defensively, Seton Hall is led by setter Kadri Krupa and senior team-best 2.83 digs per game.

The Irish will be looking for strong contributions from Kristy Kreher and Christy Girton. Both players have played strong offensively all year for the Irish and are sixth and seventh in the Big East in hitting average.

Football

the Irish faced fourth-and-goal with less than four minutes remaining. Williams led his team to the line and surveyed the defense. At the snap of the ball, he faked a handoff to Petrosante up the middle before taking a step to his right and pitching the ball to Lynch. Lynch scrambled to the outside and crossed the goal line for a 7-0 lead.

The historical significance of that touchdown hit Lynch as soon as he crossed the goal line.

"When I crossed the goal line in the last series," he told Scholastic, "I saw their 47-game winning streak tumble."

The defense held the Sooners short on the goal line of their next possession and history’s longest winning streak was over. In addition to snapping the Sooners streak, the Irish also shut out the Sooners for the first time in 113 games.

The ‘50s were a rough decade for the Irish fans. After four national championships in the 1940s, the Irish were held without a title in the following decade. The victory over the Sooners, however, helped Irish fans remember that there still was a little bit of magic left under the Dome.

NOTRE DAME'S BEST KEPT SECRETS!!
By RACHEL PROTZMAN

To Babes, it's all about domination in the playing field. The Babah field, that is.

Breen-Phillips remains undefeated at 5-0 following a 19-0 slaughter of Howard Wednesday.

The Babes grabbed the early lead with a Katie Leicht touchdown. It was able to increase its lead with two more touchdowns by Erin West and Kelly Landers in the first half, the Babes' just 15 seconds before the end of the half.

"We played an awesome first half," said captain Katie Leicht. "We played really well on defense and offense, but we got sloppy and overconfident and suffered a bit of penalties in the second half."

Howard showed strong defense in the second half to keep the Babes from scoring again but were unable to pull off any scoring opportunities.

"Our defense ran with every game. We want to keep up that level," said Leicht. "We're looking to be undefeated going into the playoffs and we think we can do that.

We want to go all the way in the playoffs." "

Cavanaugh 13, McGlinn 6
Cavanaugh grabbed a 13-6 win over McGlinn Wednesday to give the Babes their best record to date at 4-2. Down 6-0 going into the second half, McGlinn's Pam Krugger grabbed a touchdown to even the score.

"Our defense played especially well," said McGlinn junior Jamie Glasser. "We just had a couple of breakdowns that cost us the points."

By the end of the half, the Babes were just too much for McGlinn defense. With just 40 seconds left in the game Meghan Myers scored a touchdown to give Cavanaugh the win, leaving McGlinn scrambling to score before the clock ran out.

"We had a chance to score at the end of the game, but we lost it," said Glasser.

The Shamrocks are now 0-3-2 and will play Howard Sunday. McGlinn's second touchdown, and the team now prepares for playoff action.

"We hope to work on fundamentals," said Chaya captain Melissa Tacey. "We're playing well and now we have time to fix the little things. We hope to make things happen in the playoffs." "

Pangborn 0, Badin 0
Both Pangborn and Badin stand at 1-2-2 after a scoreless in Wednesday.

Leading the Pfux defense was Erin Prouzek with an interception late in the game to keep Badin from scoring.

"We had good field position many times," said Pangborn captain Jillian DePaul. "But we were unable to execute our plays. We had the ability to get it in the end zone, but we just didn't capitalize.

In fact the Pffexes did get the ball in the end zone, but it was called back on a holding penalty.

"Our defense stopped them," said Badin freshman Amy Marshall. "They stepped up and didn't let them score."

Badin also had the lost scoring opportunities with an interception by Helena Pan at the end zone.

"We moved the ball really well this game," said Marshall. "If we would have had a couple more minutes, we would've been able to score and win."

Badin will face Farley Sunday while Pangborn will play HP.

Ratley leads Irish to first-place tie with Miami of Ohio

Special to The Observer

FRANKLIN, Ind.
Notre Dame sophomore Steve Ratley of Arlington Heights, Ill. held on to capture the first place honors while the Irish finished tied with Miami of Ohio in the 16-team field.

Following final-round action Tuesday at the annual Legends of Indiana Intercollegiate, the Irish held at the par-72, 7,044-yard Legends of Indiana Golf Course.

The final 16-team standings mark the first time in history of the Notre Dame men's golf program that an Irish squad has finished first in back-to-back tournaments. Notre Dame opened the 1999 fall season by winning the 24-team Air Force Invitational, which took place Sept. 17-19, and finished with a school-record score of four-over 868.

The strong start provides a huge boost to Notre Dame's hopes for securing the program's first appearance in the NCAA Championship since 1966. The Irish were in the running for NCAA bids during each of the past two seasons, but had to rally in the spring after sub par performances.

Ratley, who opened with rounds of 71 and 70 on Monday, closed with a 73 on Tuesday for a 214 total, edging Marshall's Aaron Williams (71-71-71) by a single stroke. The Irish junior Alex Kent, playing in a tie for sixth with Marshall's two-under 212 at the spring Marshall Invitational in the spring of 1998 while Connell also shot a two-under 212 at the Chick-fil-A Invitational last spring.

Current senior captain Todd Vernon matched that score earlier this fall at the Air Force Invitational. Their efforts are tied for the best Irish 54-hole score, in relation to par.

Notre Dame opened with rounds of 296-294 on Monday but trailed Louisville (298-291) just had a couple of minutes, we would've been able to score and win."

Erikson, Irish square off against Big East foe West Virginia

By MIKE CONNOLLY
Associate Sports Editor

Her teammates call her “Motor” and she plays like she’s the Energizer Bunny.

Flying up and down the field, Irish junior Meotis Erikson has put forth her best season in an Irish uniform in 1999 and is currently second on the team in goals and assists.

This Friday night, when the Mountaineers of West Virginia visit Alumni Field, they will learn that the Irish offense is no longer the “Jenny Heft Show” that it was in 1998 when Heft lead the team with 28 goals — eight more than her closest teammate. Erikson has responded from an injury that limited her in 1998 and become a solid counterpart to Heft.

“Over the last four or five games both her and Jenny Heft have been scoring goals for us on a regular basis,” head coach Randy Waldrum said. “I think they are a good complement because they are different kinds of players. Meotis is a little more of a target player that plays at the top of the box with her back to the goal. While Jenny digs a little more in and our and creates a little havoc because she is constantly moving.”

Erikson had a frustrating 1998 campaign. She was forced to sit out two and a half months prior to the season and still was not 100 percent during the season.

“It (1998) was very frustrating,” Erikson said. “When I came back, I played the whole season but I was still hurt so I had to sit out practices and I was never able to get very fit.”

Erikson’s fitness improved in 1999, according to Waldrum.

“Her fitness level is so much better now than it has been in the past,” he said. “I think she is a little quicker than she has been. So from a physical standpoint she is able to go for longer periods of time.”

Despite 1999 being Waldrum’s first year at the helm of the Irish, he is familiar with Erikson from coaching her on the under-20 national team. When Erikson played with the national team, Waldrum was twice a guest coach with the team.

With Erikson’s fitness at a high, Waldrum is now turning his attention to other ways she can improve her game.

“Now what we are trying to do is get her shot off a little quicker,” he said. “She is taking so many touches on the ball but she is definitely getting better as the year goes on.”

While Erikson leads the team with 38 shots, Waldrum wants her to get even more shots on goal.

“I think he wants me to take opportunities that he calls half-chances — situations where I don’t think I will get the shot off because of the defender or the angle,” Erikson said. “He wants me to take more half-chances because sometimes half chances go in. He wants me taking me looks.”

In the past, Erikson has tended to look for the perfect shot and the sure goal rather than just putting the ball on net. She is trying to break away from her past tendencies to get more shots on goal.

“I think I am kind of a perfectionist so a lot of the times I try to look for the perfect shot and a lot of the times you aren’t going to get the perfect shot,” she said.

Erikson will get two chances to put shots on goal this weekend when the Irish take on the Mountaineers on Friday and then travel to Pittsburgh to play the Panthers on Sunday. Both teams are Big East Mid-Atlantic division opponents and two wins would give the Irish a 6-0 divisional record and clinch the division title.

West Virginia stands third in the division with a 2-1 record while Pittsburgh is last in the division with a 0-3-1 record. Waldrum hopes that playing the Mountaineers first and at home will help the Irish pick up their ninth win of the year.

“I think West Virginia is having a good year,” he said. “It will be good to get them while we are fresh on Friday. Plus the fact that we have them at home will help us this weekend.”

Irish forward Meotis Erikson has emerged as a pivotal player on offense this season. The junior is second on the team in goals, assists and points.

Fifth-ranked Wolverines outskate Irish in 5-3 victory

By BRIAN KESSLER
Sports Editor

The No. 5 Michigan hockey team used two goals from Josh Langfeld to defeat Notre Dame 5-3 last night in front of more than 2,000 fans at the Joyce Center.

The Irish got off to a slow start and were outshot 15-5 in the first period. Michigan's Geoff Dollar put the Wolverines on the board 2:11 into the first with a power-play goal and Langfeld added a second midway through the period to give the Wolverines an early 2-0 lead.

"There's no question that set the tone," Irish head coach Dave Poulin said. "Three of their four goals, aside from the empty netter, were scored on power plays or at the end of them. We gave them all the offensive help and momentum they needed."

Poulin's squad grabbed the momentum 24 seconds into the second when captain Ben Simon took advantage of a 5-on-3 power play and beat Michigan goalie Josh Blackburn. The goal left Simon with 99 career points.

They picked it up, bang, bang and against you. I think they needed." Irish head coach Red Beresen said. "It was a big effort. The squad would not again come so close to the Irish goal on that afternoon. Early in the second quarter, the Sooners again mounted a drive that reached the Irish 40-yard line. Sooner quarterback Carl Dodd dropped back to pass but was sacked by Irish defensive linemen Dick Royer and Frank Kuchta and fumbled the ball. Dodd recovered the football only to have it go back in behind the net.

Despite the pregame hype and the Sooners' pinpoint passing, the Sooners lost to the Irish 5-3 on Nov. 22, 1957 edition. In much the same way that the team believed it could win, the students believed in their beloved Irish. Numerous pep rallies were held throughout the week, and when the Irish arrived in Norman, they found a telegram signed by 3,200 students urging them to victory.

No. 23 freshman forward John Wroblewski and No. 26 junior left wing Dan Carlson go on attack for the Irish in Thursday's losing effort. The squad will look to avenge its 5-3 loss to the Wolverines tonight.

Irish overcame adversity to beat Sooners with single TD

Editor's note: Notre Dame's journey to achieve designation as the 20th century's greatest college football team is marked by 10 milestones, one in each decade since 1900. The Observer examines these moments in a 10-part series that appears on Fridays.

By MIKE CONNOLLY
Associate Sports Editor

The Irish gave new meanings to the line "What though the odds be great or small, old Notre Dame will win over all" on Nov. 16, 1952, when they defeated the defending national champion Oklahoma Sooners, 7-0.

Rarely in Notre Dame history have the odds been stacked so greatly against the Irish than in 1952 when they traveled to Norman, Okla., to take on the second-ranked Sooners.

The Sooners were riding an 47-game winning streak and had defeated the Irish 40-0 the previous year. While Oklahoma was at the top of its game, Notre Dame, a 19-point underdog, was near the bottom of its — having dropped two straight games to Michigan State and Navy by a combined score of 54-12.

Despite the odds, the Irish relished the opportunity to take on the Sooners and challenge college football's longest winning streak — a record that still stands today. "We were glad they stayed undefeated during the year to that we could beat them," Irish halfback Dick Lynch told Scholastic magazine in the Nov. 22, 1957 edition.

In much the same way that the team believed it could win, the students believed in their beloved Irish. Numerous pep rallies were held throughout the week, and when the Irish arrived in Norman, they found a telegram signed by 3,200 students urging them to victory.

Despite the pregame hype and high spirits of the Irish, the Sooners came off in the first quarter looking very much like a defending national champion.

Behind powerful running and pinpoint passing, the Sooners moved the ball down to the Irish 20-yard line with little resistance. With the goal line in striking distance, however, the Irish defense dug in and forced the Sooners to turn the ball over on downs at the 13-yard line. The Sooners would not again come so close to the Irish goal on that afternoon.

Early in the second quarter, the Sooners again mounted a drive that reached the Irish 40-yard line. Sooner quarterback Carl Dodd dropped back to pass but was sacked by Irish defensive linemen Dick Royer and Frank Kuchta and fumbled the ball. Dodd recovered the football only to fumble it away again. The Irish powered on the loose hall this time, however, and Notre Dame's Nick Pietrosante recovered the ball.

Passes from Irish quarterback Bob Williams to Jim Colosimo, Royer and Pietrosante and a tough run by Lynch moved the ball to the Sooner 3-yard line. The Irish offense stalled at the 3, however, and turned the ball over on downs just one foot short of the goal line.

The defense held Oklahoma on the next possession and forced the Sooners to punt. Passing from deep in his own territory, Sooner Clinton Thomas managed only to put the ball at the Sooner 49-yard line. With great field position, the Irish offense went on the attack again.

A pass to Colosimo and runs by Frank Reynolds and Jim Just powered the Irish offense to the Sooners' 20-yard line. The Sooners defense once again got tough in the shadow of its own goal post and forced a fourth-and-six situation.

Irish must play error-free to win

By KATHLEEN O'BRIEN Assistant Sports Editor

With records hovering around .500 and each having played several games decided by a touchdown or less, the Irish (2-3) and the Sun Devils (2-2) appear to be fairly balanced teams.

A key stat for both teams is turnovers, as both rank in the bottom 10 Division I-A football teams in turnover margin. In Notre Dame’s three losses, it has had 11 fumbles — seven of which have been recovered by the opponent.

In Notre Dame wins over Kansas and Oklahoma, on the other hand, Notre Dame has only fumbled the ball once.

Notre Dame and Arizona State played for the first time ever last season, a game Notre Dame won in Tempe 28-9. Both schools were near the top of the national rankings in the early 1990s but have since gone downhill. Neither the Irish or Arizona State are ranked in the top 25.

The Sun Devils look to J.R. Redmond as a prime source of offense. A second-team All-American last year, Redmond contributes big-time in rushing, receiving and on special teams in return yards. The Irish shut down their opponents’ offense fairly effectively so far this season.

The Sun Devils’ quarterback, junior Ryan Kealy, is playing well, despite being in the midst of recovery from arthroscopic knee surgery on Sept. 7. Notre Dame’s opponents have averaged nearly the same number of passing yards per game as Notre Dame, with 213 compared to 237.

The Irish have done well on the aerial attack, with quarterback Jarious Jackson coming off his best performance this year. Against Oklahoma, Jackson became the first Irish quarterback ever to pass for more than 200 yards and run for more than 100 in the same game. Notre Dame can use big plays in the air but needs to overcome errors and be more consistent.

Jarious Jackson stiff-arms Oklahoma’s William Bartee in last Saturday’s win over the Sooners. Jackson looks to continue his stellar play against the Sun Devils.

The Sun Devils play tough defense against the pass, especially cornerback Courtney Jackson.

Notre Dame’s running game has been rather anemic this year, showing an inability to power the ball for the first down on key plays. The Irish rushed for less than 130 yards in each of their three losses, although sophomore Tony Fisher shows promise.

Notre Dame’s special teams unit swings back and forth between mediocre and disastrous. It nearly kept the Irish from beating the Sooners two with missed field goals, a dropped snap which resulted in a safety, a kick-off penalty, and a poor punt out of the end zone. Arizona State benefits from a proven punter and place-kicker in Stephen Baker, as well as the returns of Redmond.

To inch toward an even record, the Irish need to avoid turnovers, improve the play of special teams and manage the clock better. The Irish and the Sun Devils seek to prove to the nation that they are not in the middle of a down-swing in football.
Irons switches on at game time

Junior defensive lineman playing best football of college career

By BRIAN KESSLER
Sports Editor

Superman had a telephone booth. Junior defensive end Grant Irons has an imaginary switch in the locker room. At game time, he flips it on and becomes a man on mission to drag down a running back or put a lick on the quarterback. After the game, Irons turns it off and the amiable Grant emerges from the locker room.

"It's definitely a different personality on the field," the 6-foot-5 Irons said. "I look at it as a switch. I turn that switch on when I put the pads on and the helmet on. It's a different side of Grant Irons. When I'm on the field I'm intense, but when I'm off the field, I turn off the switch and I'm Grant Irons the person." It's Grant Irons the person that the student body has grown to love. And the feeling that the student body has surrounded itself with positive people, Irons said. "I'm here at a great university with great people and professors. I'm thankful that I'm at this great school dean David Link and Chris Zoric.

Grant Irons has an imaginary lineman playing best defensive scheme. "Grant is playing the best he's played right now," head coach Bob Davie said. "There's another level for Grant, I really believe that." After starting five games last season at linebacker, Irons was moved to defensive line at the end of the season to fit in with Notre Dame's new 4-3 defensive scheme. "It's definitely been an adjustment," said Irons, who bulked up to 275 pounds to fit the position. "At first I was reluctant to move to the new position because I was always comfortable playing linebacker from the up position. Now each week, I'm feeling more and more comfortable and enjoying the position." Irons not only adjusted to a new position, but also to a new role. "As an up close & personal WITH GRANT IRONS

 observer Staff Report

The Irish line backers have been quiet for most of the season because they have not spent much time on the field. Against passing teams like Purdue and Oklahoma, Notre Dame played a lot of defensive backs and fewer line backers. Thus so far in 1999, with the exception of a stellar performance by Anthony Denman and Tyrone Harrison against Michigan State, the line backers have not made big plays.

Against the always dangerous J. R. Redman and the Arizona State offense, the line backers will be tested by the run and the pass. They must stand strong in the Sun Devil assault if the Irish are to pick up their third win of the season.

EYE ON THE ENEMY

Versatile Redmond leads Sun Devils against Irish

By TIM CASEY
Sports Writer

Despite playing with an injured shoulder and an ankle sprain in last week’s 28-27 victory over UCLA, J.R. Redmond rushed for 185 yards and accounted for three touchdowns.

That kind of effort does not come as a surprise to Notre Dame defensive coordinator Greg Mattison.

"He’s a tough kid," Mattison said. "He’s a little banged up but he keeps playing. You’ve got to respect a back like that.

Redmond earned the respect of coaches and players in his last two seasons at Arizona State. A second team Associated Press All-American a year ago, the speedy Redmond has not disappointed this fall.

Thus far this year, Redmond has averaged 119.5 yards per game on the ground. Also a punt returner and pass catching threat for the Sun Devils, Redmond averages 139.8 all-purpose yards a game.

While most tailbacks are known to shy away from contact, Redmond is not afraid to run the ball between the tackles. "He’s not your typical tailback that just runs to the sidelines and outruns everybody," Mattison said. "He makes hard yards inside. But if he gets an opportunity, he can break away. He’s also probably one of the fastest backs in the country right now."

Redmond’s break-away speed was never more apparent than in a midseason game against Stanford last year. In that contest Redmond scored three touchdowns in the first quarter. Included among his scores were a 58-yard run and a 76-yard punt return. He had to leave the game due to a sprained right ankle and injured left toe, which hindered him the rest of the season.

Despite the injury, Redmond’s 155.8 all-purpose yards per game topped the Pac-10. He also led the conference in punt return average while ranking fifth in rushing.

Although the Irish face the likes of Tennessee’s Jamal Lewis and the wishbone attack of Navy in the coming weeks, Mattison said Redmond is as good as any of them.

"He’s by far the best back we’ve gone against thus far," Mattison said. "He’ll probably be the best running back we’ll play this year."

Bob Davey said Redmond has the skills to be a first round NFL draft choice in the spring.

"Redmond, without a doubt, is maybe the first running back to be drafted next year," Davey said at Tuesday’s press conference. "I don’t really know what else is out there. He’s definitely a first-round draft choice."

Redmond is not the only Sun Devil that concerns the Irish coaching staff.

Quarterback Ryan Kealy has rebounded from a sub-par 1998 season with a solid campaign.

The junior has completed 55 percent of his passes for 397 yards and a pair of touchdowns. Junior receivers Tariq McDonald and Richard Williams are Kealy’s main targets. McDonald ranks first on the team with 14 catches while Williams has 11 receptions on the year and two touchdowns.

ARIZONA STATE REVIEW

Flowers’ catch pushes Arizona State past UCLA

J.R. Redmond, Arizona State’s J.R. Redmond, shown here being tackled by Deveron Harper, rushed for 94 yards on 19 carries and scored a touchdown in last year’s meeting with Notre Dame.

Griffin, a third-stringer, came on after UCLA sacked Arizona State’s Ryan Kealy twice, forcing him from the game, and replacement John Leonard proved ineffective. Kealy, who has bruised ribs, was unable to finish for the fifth time in his last six starts dating back to last year.

Griffin threw a costly interception on his first attempt.

Ryan Nece returned it 11 yards to the Arizona State 31-yard line, and Griffin’s first field goal sent UCLA into a 24-14 lead 1:25 into the fourth quarter.

But Goodman took advantage when the Sun Devils got a break — safety Alfred Williams knocked the ball loose from Jermaine Lewis, and Solomon Bates recovered on the UCLA 14-yard line. Four plays later, Goodman threw to Redmond in the flat, and he scored easily with 8:13 remaining.

The Sun Devils got the ball back on an interception by Adam Archuleta, but Baker pushed a 44-yard field goal attempt left with 4:34 left. Griffin capped UCLA’s next possession with a field goal.

The Sun Devils went 80 yards to victory in four plays — an 11-yard Goodman pass to Tariq McDonald, a 20-yard throw to Todd Heap, an incompletion and the screen to Flowers.

Farmer moved past Kevin Jordan into first on UCLA’s career receiving-yards list. He finished the game with six catches for 148 yards and a career total of 2,651. His scoring catch was the sixth-longest in UCLA history.

No. 1 Florida State vs. No. 19 Miami
The Miami Hurricanes, back in the national spotlight once again, are hoping to get back on the right foot after two straight losses to ranked opponents. Unfortunately, traveling to Tallahassee to face the top-ranked Seminoles will not provide the Hurricanes with any relief. Miami's hopes for a top-10 ranking were partially destroyed by, ironically enough, Hurricane Floyd. Two weeks ago, a game against East Carolina was moved due to damage to the original playing field.

In the battle between the then-No. 9 Hurricanes and Pirates, ECU scored the final 24 points of the game en route to a 27-23 victory. The upset followed a loss the week before to No. 2 Penn State by the same score.

Top-ranked FSU, on the other hand, is playing in its first non-conference game of the season against a ranked opponent, after beating up on the likes of Louisiana Tech, North Carolina and wireless Duke. Last week against the Blue Devils, the Seminoles coasted to a 44-0 halftime lead, mostly due to three touchdowns by FSU's Peter Warrick, a possible Heisman candidate. Warrick has accounted for 600 yards and 42 points of offense in five games.

No. 6 Tennessee vs. No. 10 Georgia
The Volunteers travel to Knoxville for an epic battle with possibly the SEC's top two teams. Georgia has the nation's third-ranked defense, allowing just 265.8 yards per game, while Tennessee has the nation's eighth-ranked offense, averaging 411.4 yards per game. In last week's victory over Auburn, the Volunteers' defense held the Tigers to 133 total yards, the lowest total in Tennessee history.

Paul Bunyan trophy on line in East Lansing

A week after extending its winning streak to 10 in a win over Purdue, third-ranked Michigan travels to East Lansing for a battle with its archrival — No. 11 Michigan State. This year's battle for the Paul Bunyan trophy could be the deciding factor in who will take the conference title as both the Wolverines and Spartans sit atop the Big Ten leader board with identical 5-0 records and two conference victories apiece.

The Wolverine defense proved up to the task of containing a ranked foe on last week, when it held the then-No. 9 Hawkeyes back to a 29-17 win in Kinnick Stadium. The Spartans jumped out to a 24-0 halftime lead, but the visitors scored on five possessions, and later set a school record with 48.2 yards allowed per game.

The Spartan offense and defense are coming off a strong game against the Iowa Hawkeyes. In last week's 49-3 rout of Iowa, MSU scored touchdowns on each of its first five possessions, and later set a school record with six touchdown passes for the game.

An 86-yard kickoff return in the third quarter marked the only time the Hawkeyes were able to pass the MSU 40-yard line.

The Spartan offense is led by receivers Plaxico Burress and Gari Scott. Together, they have accounted for 606 receiving yards, more than half of the team's total.

In the last meeting between these two teams, the Spartans jumped out to an early 10-3 lead to start the first quarter before the Wolverines had five of the final six scores and held the visitors scoreless in the second half to pick up the win, 29-17.

Michigan State's Gari Scott (with ball) celebrates a touchdown in the 23-13 victory over Notre Dame. The undefeated Spartans face No. 4 Michigan in this weekend's marquee match-up.

Irish save best for end of season

Quarterback Jarius Jackson carries the ball in last Saturday’s 24-20 win over Oklahoma.

Irish need better play from quarterbacks

After their miraculous 28-27 nail-biter over UCLA, the Sun Devils should consider two pre-game coin-flips.

One, of course, would be of the traditional "This team kicks and that team defends that goal," variety.

The second would determine ASU’s starting quarterback.

Heads could be John Leonard. Tails could be Griffin Goodman. And if the coin somehow lands on its side, Bruce Snyder could go with Ryan Kealy since the odds of that happening roughly equate to those of Ryan actually finishing an entire quarter injury-free.

It wouldn’t make one bit of difference, because there isn’t some bit of difference between the two.

All struggle to complete 50 percent of their throws, are incredibly adept at completing passes to players on opposing teams.

When ASU wins, it’s rarely because of skill position play. If you’re a Sun Devil signal caller, your playbook cover likely bears a photo of the quarterbacks, themselves.

"Quarterback is the most intangible position in this game - never quit, always believe in your playbook cover likely bears a photo of the quarterbacks, themselves."

How 'bout it Bruce? It’s what’s known throughout this state as "The Trent Effect," a measure popularized - albeit not incredibly successfully - by the Tampa Bay Buccaneers.

They try to grind out as much yardage as possible on the ground, pass only when absolutely necessary and hope the defense can hold up to eke out a win.

It works for the Bucs because they have Warrick Dunn, Mike Alcott and one of the league’s best defenses. When it works for ASU, it’s because of the J.R. Redmond, the whole J.R. Redmond and nothing but the J.R. Redmond.

ASU football stops and starts with No. 11, the marquee- rated left shoulder won’t fully heal as long as he’s forced to carry his team on his back.

After an awesome 185-yard day that included scoring touchdowns from 2, 3 and 32 yards — in addition to a 3-yard touchdown catch — the tailback and true team player called what transpired on Saturday a "team effort" and commended his quarterbacks.

"I’m proud of all the quarterbacks' effort," Redmond said. "Quarterback is the most intangible position in this game - never quit, always believe in your playbook cover likely bears a photo of the quarterbacks, themselves."

The Sun Devils have a quarter-back in J.R. Jackson.

Jackson turned the Irish in tackles this season.

"I don’t ever remember what transpired on Saturday a "team effort" and commended his quarterbacks.
