Bishops vote to tighten control over Catholic colleges

By COLLEEN MCCARTHY

WASHINGTON

In an effort to maintain, preserve and guarantee the Catholic identity of Catholic higher education, the National Conference of Catholic Bishops (NCCB) voted overwhelmingly in favor of the proposed implementation of Ex Corde Ecclesiae Wednesday.

The nation's bishops voted 223-31 to implement the document originally issued on Aug. 15, 1999, by Pope John Paul II, which will have a direct impact on the way the 235 U.S. Catholic colleges and universities govern their institutions. It includes controversial mandates that the majority of trustees and theology professors are Catholic "to the extent possible," according to Bishop John Leibrecht of Springfield, Mo., chairman of the Ad Hoc Committee on the implementation of Ex Corde.

"Ex Corde Ecclesiae does offer a constructive direction for the future," said Leibrecht. "It's not everything we need, but it's a step in the right direction."

In his opening remarks before opening the floor for debate, Leibrecht said he and his committee members tried to take into consideration comments of bishops during their final committee meeting on Tuesday night.

"Last night we accepted your suggestion we make sure we say how much we need and appreciate non-Catholic members of colleges and universities. We consider them full partners," said Leibrecht in response to concerns that the mandate would alienate theology professors and non-Catholic members of the academic community.

Questions of whether the increased role of bishops would threaten institutional and academic freedom were raised frequently throughout the nine-year discussion of the document. In a Jan. 30, 1999, issue of America, University president Father Edward Malloy and former Boston College president Father Raymond Smullyan generally disapproved of Ex Corde.

Many Catholic academics said the vote should be delayed to allow more time for dialogue on the implementation and, perhaps, to cut out some of its legalistic language. Ultimately, however, their efforts were for naught.

"I'm disappointed," said Karen Ristau, vice president and dean of faculty at Saint Mary's. She said the legalistic document was not the best way to bring the Catholic schools closer to the Church. "I don't think you ever build a relationship based on legislative acts."

University president Father Edward Malloy had repeatedly criticized the proposal for being too legalistic and was at the bishops' conference this week working to defeat it. After the vote, however, he pledged to focus on implementing the aims of Ex Corde.

"At its core, this process is about furthering the vital and distinctive mission of Catholic higher education, an aim which all involved can share," he said in a prepared statement. "The University of Notre Dame will maintain its close, cordial and constructive relationship with our local ordinary, Bishop John D'Arcy."

University asks licensees for full public disclosure

By TIM LOGAN
News Editor

In an unexpected move, the University asked its 235 licensed apparel manufacturers to publicly disclose the locations of factories where Notre Dame products are made.

Notre Dame is the 14th university in the country to ask its licensees for full public disclosure, which has become a leading demand of student activists nationwide.

William Boyce, chairman of the University's Task Force on Anti-Sweatshop Initiatives, said the move a reaffirmation of Notre Dame's strong stance against labor abuses in manufacturing licensed apparel.

"Public disclosure has become an important issue in the national debate to a lot of people," Boyce said. "I hope the request will demonstrate the University's commitment to the sweatshop issue."

In March, Notre Dame became the first university to hire an independent firm, Primavera House Coopers, to monitor conditions at licensed factories. It also created a task force to study the issue and recommended a policy to deal with labor abuses.

This latest request was a recommendation of that Task Force, according to Boyce.

Student activists praised the move, calling it a reversal of the administration's previous position.

"It's really happy," said Aaron Kreider of the Progressive Student Alliance. But at the same time, they asked the University to take an even stronger stance on the issue.

"Our administration likes to preach that Notre Dame is leading the fight against sweatshops," said Joe Smith of the PSA. "But in fact this decision puts us..."

A Different Route

So there we were: my roommate and I were packing in the rare, wonderful experience of eating dinner off campus last Friday night. We decided on a restaurant, which will go unnamed, that sells cold sandwiches and whose menu resembles a form of underground transportation.

As we ate our sandwiches, we couldn't escape our overwhelming feeling. It hit us when we walked into the restaurant — like a wave of hot air, suffocating our souls. This stifling feeling, we realized, was apathy — an utter lack of concern for whoever was in the restaurant at the time.

We had apparently interrupted break time for the two employees that night. As the only two customers in the place, we had broken up the roo-one-in-here-so-let's-talk-to-you situation.

Who works with such indifference? I'm so sorry for the 3-X, I had disturbed your break, but my roommate and I are hungry — make me a sandwich. And put a smile on that scowling face like breaking up the monotony of our everyday routine.

On the contrary, those of The Observer.

There's this stifling feeling, we feel, this sinking feeling, we feel, this apathy. It's as if to say, "I do not care if you're here. But hey, this computer is commanding a disproportionate amount of resources in violation of the 'fair share' element of the computer and network laws.

Beyond that, Dartmouth does not actively police the network, Taylor said.

"The main message we want to get out is that sharing MP3 files can get you into some pretty hot water with the law," director of telecommunications Bill Brawley said.

Dartmouth's computer and network policies indicate that access to the network is a privilege that may be revoked if a community member violates local, state, federal or school laws.

entirely negative, however. Law professor Gerard Bradley, a member of the Catholic Newman Society, a conservative Catholic group which has lobbied for a strict application of the document, supported the bishops' vote.

"I'm pleased with the result," he said, but he was unsure what its ramifications would be. "It's hard to say what it means to Notre Dame," Bradley said. "But I'm sure the result is not gratifying to Father Malloy." Bradley was not the only one who was unsure what the vote would mean for Notre Dame and Saint Mary's.

We have no idea what the implementation will be," Bradley said. "Everything is going to depend on the local bishops, and bishops are different." In the case of Notre Dame and Saint Mary's, O'Arcy has spoken out repeatedly on the need for a healthy dialogue between bishops and educators, and many feel such an atmosphere already exists there.

Still, the possibilities created by the implementation proposal worry theologians on both camps. "I'm concerned for the future of Catholic higher education because it may affect the future of Catholic women's colleges like Saint Mary's," said Joe Iaccobello, chair of the Saint Mary's religious studies department.

He said the vote may make it more difficult for the College to attract quality students and faculty. Others agreed that the main impact this vote could have on Catholic schools would not be in the way they operate, but on their academic reputation.

"The vote is likely to have more of an impact external to the University than internal," said theology professor Father Richard McBrein. "It's not going to be enforceable internally. I think Father Malloy would agree with that."

McBrein expressed concern that the mandate would lead the impression that Notre Dame is answerable to outside, non-academic forces. If that happens, he said, professors and graduate students in theology might stay away.

disclose the locations of licensee factories. University officials gathered this information in order to implement the monitoring system with PricewaterhouseCoopers, but they had no intention of publicly disclosing the factory locations for Notre Dame apparel.

"The University will use this information to monitor the licensees. There is no need to publicly disclose it," she said in February. "It is a matter of competitiveness for the manufacturer."

Hagane stressed that this week's move is not a reversal of that policy. As Notre Dame itself is not releasing the locations, it is simply asking its licensees to do the same.

"We don't think it would be appropriate to collect that information and then turn around and disclose it to the public," he said.

"As we continue to change our policies in the future, he said, as the Task Force will continue to debate the issue. The group will present the university president an expanded policy on the right to organize and a model factory monitoring policy.

Monitoring, not disclosure, Hagane said, is the most important part of code of conduct enforcement.

My sense is that public disclosure may not do as much as monitoring to help improve workers' lives, but at the same time, many constituencies have been calling for public disclosure to see what's going on. Hopefully we will continue to debate this in the Task Force."

Three of the largest manufacturers - Champion, Adidas and Gear for Sports - have agreed to disclose factory locations for Notre Dame apparel. Gear had agreed to do so earlier and Champion announced its decision for full disclosure this week.

Both of these companies will have a list of their factories published.

"We are providing all our college bookstore customers with the locations of our manufacturing facilities so that they can reassure their students of Champion's commitment to ethical workplace philosophies," said Michael Flateau, Champion's president and chief executive officer.

Champion and Adidas are the two non-voting, licensee members of the Task Force. Hagane said he would like to see all of the companies that manufacture Notre Dame apparel follow suit.

"Our hope is that all of our licensees will respond to the request positively, like Champion and Adidas have," he said.
Ex-Chinese soldier wins fiction prize

NEW YORK
Capping a ceremony hosted by Steve Martin and featuring Burt Reynolds, National Book Award judges on Wednesday night honored a writer grateful just to be in the United States. Ilia Jin, a former member of the Chinese People’s Liberation Army, won the fiction prize for his debut novel “Waiting.” Jin, who wants to thank America, the land of generosity and prosperity, "I wish this book would be read in China in 1985 and now teach at Emory University. "Above all, I thank the English language."

Baptist group proposes anti-gay marriage initiative

SACRAMENTO
The California Southern Baptist Convention pledged Wednesday to support an anti-gay marriage initiative going to state voters next year, and also condemned Democratic Gov. Gray Davis for signing gay-rights legislation. Proposition 22 would bar the state from recognizing same-sex marriages. It is on the ballot on March 7. The convention unanimously endorsed the initiative. "It’s a significant positive statement to reaffirm the sanctity of marriage," said Edy LeVox, president of the Evangelical National Baptist Convention. "Some people say this is negative, but I don’t see it that way. We need strong family values now with all the violence that goes on."

The endorsement of the two proposals came a day after the Georgia Southern Baptist Convention passed two churches for letting homosexuals serve as church leaders and for allowing a gay wedding at one of the churches.

Third-largest diamond ‘Merena’ draws $4.04 million

GENEVA
Mounted on a platinum ring and mysteriously named “Merena,” one of the world’s largest emerald-cut diamonds was auctioned Wednesday for $4.04 million. Sotheby’s auction house said the diamond is the third largest emerald-cut diamond in the world. The diamond was bought by a private North California collector, a woman who wished to remain anonymous, Sotheby’s said. She purchased the gem the “Merena Diamond.” Though the auction house said the reason behind the name was unknown The $5.11 carat stone is the third-largest finest White emerald-cut diamond ever to appear at auction, Sotheby’s said.

IRA supports peace agreement

BELFAST, Northern Ireland
The Irish Republican Army said Wednesday that it “unequivocally” backed the Northern Ireland peace agreement, and agreed to appoint a go-between to negotiate disarmament. The statement came after the Ulster Unionist Party, which had insisted that disarmament precede setting up the local parliament. It also represented the most dramatic move yet in a choreographed series of reciprocal conciliatory comments and pledges this week from those involved in the rescue talks, which were mediated by a former United States Senator, George Mitchell.

The IRA has maintained a cease-fire for more than two years to support the role of its political wing, Sinn Fein, in peace talks. But today it made its belief in the accord explicit. "In our view," the organization said, referring to the April 1998 accord, "the Good Friday agreement is a significant development and we believe its full implementation will contribute to the achievement of lasting peace."

Officials look to crew member in query

NEWPORT, R.I.
A crew member apparently alone in the cockpit of an EgyptAir jeline said “I made my decision now” just before the autopilot was disengaged. The plane was diving, the pilot disengaged the autopilot and spoke just before the flight data recorder crashed into the Atlantic.

The focus of the investigation has shifted to the backup co-pilot amid indications that he was at the controls just before the plane crashed into the Atlantic. Although there was no sign of any technical malfunction, it is too early to say the crew played any role in the crash. 31 crash that killed 217 people, investigators said.

The federal law enforcement official, speaking on condition of anonymity, said the Arabic words uttered by the crewmember in the co-pilot seat have been translated to: “I made my decision now. I put my faith in God’s hands.”

The official said the crewmember, who would not name, was believed to be alone in the cockpit at the time and spoke just before the Flight Data Recorder was turned off.

Earlier, another source close to the investigation said Egyptian airline tentatively identified Capt. Gameel el-Batouty as occupying the co-pilot’s seat and uttering a prayer just before the autopilot was disengaged. El-Batouty, a 59-year-old co-pilot, faced retirement from the state-owned airline early next year.

The source said the identification came after the airline officials listened to the cockpit voice recorder, one of two “black boxes” recovered from the crash site 60 miles off Nantucket Island.

In Egypt, relatives angrily denied that el-Batouty had sent money home because he planned to commit suicide, describing him as a loving father of five.

College president Father Donald Monan called the threat Ex Corde posed to Catholic universities "institutional and academic freedom." Leibrecht addressed these concerns:

"The bishop's role is one of relationship, not control," he said.

Ex Corde will be implemented one year after it is reviewed and approved by the Holy See. The bishops will then engage in dialogue to determine development procedures for implementation of the mandate. Much of the 90-minute floor debate focused on one of the most controversial aspects, which calls for theology professors at Catholic colleges and universities to receive a mandate from the local bishop to teach.

The theologian has two commitments to teach so not only on the mandate teaching not only with the mandated, but out of baptism," Leibrecht said. "Through the mandate we are publicly recognizing the theologian as a teacher in the Church."

Theology professors have a "commitment and possibility to teach authentic Catholic doctrine and to refrain from practices that do not teach anything contrary to the Catholic Church."

"There is a tremendous unrest in my heart, I believe this mandate will create a pastoral disaster. The tension between theologians and church leaders now is the greatest I've seen in my 36 years as a superior in the Catholic Church," said Weakland. "Therefore, because there is so much distrust that exists between the Church hierarchy and theologians, this is not the right time to pass this document. It will lead to a lot of bickering and public disputes where only the Church will be heard."

In response to concerns that bishops would implement the mandate in a "heavy-handed" manner, Leibrecht said steps will be taken to safeguard the process.

During the one-year period, the document is approved, time will be spent in dialogue with colleges and universities, and the mandate will be fully implemented for implementation of procedures.

"Bishops need theologians and theologians need bishops," D'Arcy said Wednesday. "There is a need for continued dialogue and reciprocity in the relationship."

Throughout the nine-year period during which the U.S. Catholic Church has looked at Ex Corde, D'Arcy said he has maintained dialogue with college and university presidents, boards of trustees and theology faculty of the academic institutions in his diocese.

"I have had extensive dialogue with the presidents of Notre Dame and Saint Mary's," D'Arcy said. "The question arises that perhaps there is not enough dialogue between bishops and theologians but I have been privileged to have much dialogue with professor John Cavadiha, head of the Notre Dame theology department, and I hold him in the highest esteem."

D'Arcy said he was in favor of the mandate and didn't believe it would limit academic freedom, a concern of many in the Catholic higher education. He was concerned, however, that floor debate on Wednesday morning focused too much on the mandate. He said he had "anxiety that the mandate is seen as an end, but it is really a means."

"I highly endorse the goal of the mandate," he said. "It uses the word 'reciprocity' in the document which is what is essential. Both bishops and theologians serve the word of God, but in different capacities.

This is why we need continued conversation."

There is a need throughout the process of implementing the mandate to protect the freedom in academia while also protecting pastoral freedom, D'Arcy said.

Sometimes we make academic freedom without parameters as in the secular world, but the Catholic Church does have parameters and as Catholic colleges and universities, these parameters apply," he said.

D'Arcy said the process for a professor receiving a mandate will not be a witch hunt or intensive inquiry or questioning.

"The committee has gentled this significantly," he said. "The document just says that the professor should be teaching in communion with the Church."

"I hope this step will bring us to more communion, not less," D'Arcy said.

Bishop John D'Arcy Fort Wayne/South Bend diocese

WASHINGTON

Despite concerns that juridical elements in Ex Corde Encyclical will create a wider divide between bishops and theologians, Bishop John D'Arcy of the Fort Wayne/South Bend diocese said the document should increase dialogue between the two.

"There is a need for continued dialogue and reciprocity in the relationship."

"The committee has gentled this significantly," he said. "The document just says that the professor should be teaching in communion with the Church."

"I hope this step will bring us to more communion, not less," D'Arcy said. "The link between bishops and theologians depends on mutual respect and friendship and both have to understand this mandate to make the relationship work."

 Archbishop Rembert Weakland Milwaukee archdiocese

Archbishop Rembert Weakland of Milwaukee was one of few who spoke during the floor debate to voice concern over the mandate, citing the fragile relationship that currently exists between Church leaders and theologians.

"There is a tremendous unrest in my heart. I believe this mandate will create a pastoral disaster. The tension between theologians and church leaders now is the greatest I've seen in my 36 years as a superior in the Catholic Church," said Weakland. "Therefore, because there is so much distrust that exists between the Church hierarchy and theologians, this is not the right time to pass this document. It will lead to a lot of bickering and public disputes where only the Church will be heard."

In response to concerns that bishops would implement the mandate in a "heavy-handed" manner, Leibrecht said steps will be taken to safeguard the process.

During the one-year period, the document is approved, time will be spent in dialogue with colleges and universities.

"There is a tremendous unrest in my heart, I believe this mandate will create a pastoral disaster."

D'Arcy supports Ex Corde

WASHINGTON

The chair of the group that drafted Ex Corde said the document will create a wider divide between bishops and theologians, Bishop John D'Arcy of the Fort Wayne/South Bend diocese.

Archbishop Rembert Weakland of Milwaukee, who disagreed with the mandate, said the document should increase dialogue between the two.

"The committee has gentled this significantly," he said. "The document just says that the professor should be teaching in communion with the Church."

"I hope this step will bring us to more communion, not less," D'Arcy said. "The link between bishops and theologians depends on mutual respect and friendship and both have to understand this mandate to make the relationship work."

D'Arcy emphasized that throughout the implementation process of Ex Corde and discussion of how to implement the mandate, he plans to remain responsive to college and university faculty.

"I will try to have conversations with theologians and explain to them, listen to them, and dialogue with men like that and women like we have who love the church," he said.

"The link between bishops and theologians depends on mutual respect and friendship and both have to understand this mandate to make the relationship work."

SMC opens new tennis courts for students, athletes

By KATIE MILLER

After six weeks of construction and approximately $125,000, the new tennis courts next to Angela Athletic Facility are ready for use. "They were ready for use about a week and a half ago," said facilities director John DeLee. "They are in great shape and ready to go."

Originally, there were three tennis courts next to Angela and four next to Regina Hall. Moving all the tennis courts closer to Angela, said DeLee, "is needed to play a match. Six courts are needed to play a match," he said. "Now everyone can be on one court."

Assistant athletic director Gretchen Hildebrandt agrees that the new tennis courts and their location have much to offer students and the tennis team. "Having first-class tennis courts will improve practice, practice times and quality of play," she said. "The team will not have to go to Notre Dame to practice. They will be able to practice at times that are best for them rather than work around another team’s practice times."

"In addition to the new tennis courts, the team will rely on the new coach, freshmen and returning players for a successful season," she said. The new courts will improve quality of play, competition and team spirit according to team captain Katie Vales. "The old tennis courts were cracked, making it hard for play," Vales said. "When we played a match, half the team would be playing at the Regina courts and the other half at Angela. With the new courts, the team will be together. It will be much easier for us to support each other."

"The new tennis courts will attract more teams, improving our competition," Vales said. "We will start playing on them after spring break."

Saint Mary’s was among 405 colleges and universities nationwide named to the 1999 edition of “The Templeton Guide: Colleges that Encourage Character Development.” The guide notes that the guide is intended to inform the public about progress in these areas at colleges and universities. CFAI was a prime reason Saint Mary’s was honored, according to the Foundation.

The guide notes that the CFAI programs “support” a model of intellectual development that is at once collaborative, value-based, intellectually rigorous and practical.

Specifically, the guide cites three CFAI programs: Student Independent Study and Research (SIST), the CFAI fellowship program for faculty, and the Farrell Mentor Partnership for new faculty. It’s a kind of center that puts support and responsibility back on all the wonderful minds at Saint Mary’s,” CFAI director Patrick White said.

“Our real emphasis is to get people to collaborate.”

SIST involves both faculty and students working together in intensive research projects. Its purpose is to give faculty and students a responsibility for growth, in an equal partnership. The CFAI Fellows receive support for their study and research, and in turn share their ideas and results with the community.

In addition, the CFAI also offers faculty research, teaching and seed grants, the CFAI Fellows Program, and the Collaborative Study and Research (SOSTAR) Program. The college stands among 45 other colleges included in the Faculty and Curriculum Programs section of the guide.

Inclusion in The Templeton Guide is a nice distinction for the the college, which confirms what we already know - that what we already know - that Encourage Character Development is a prime reason Saint Mary’s is working hard and well to develop character, as well as intellect,” White said.

WHAT COULD PARENTS WEEKEND POSSIBLY HAVE TO DO WITH THE THANKSGIVING HOLIDAY ANYWAY?
Jim Lies, C.S.C. [Lies.4@nd.edu]

Oh, you think you have it all figured out simply from reading the title. You think this article is about something as simple as being thankful for your Mom and Dad at Thanksgiving time. Although that may ultimately be what this article has to say, it is actually much more nuanced, and, may I say, more sophisticated than that.

We are well nigh upon Parents Weekend. Mom, Dad, sibs, and Rover may already be enroute! It’s a weekend during which we host our parents instead of them always hosting us. It’s an opportunity to welcome them to the home that they have, in many ways, made possible for us, and that we have, or are beginning to, claim as our own.

Do you think it’s mere coincidence that Parents Weekend falls only days away from Thanksgiving Day? Well, I’m not sure either, but it sure seems to make a lot of sense, doesn’t it? I mean what two events are better companions than hosting our parents and the day upon which we give thanks to God for the blessings we have known in our lives.

We often speak of the Notre Dame Family. In fact, we so often speak of it that I fear the power of the image may be lessened. Nonetheless, the reality is, it isn’t only you who became a part of Notre Dame when you enrolled for that first class. There was something more that happened. Mom and Dad’s years of love and care had moved you to a place beyond the shelter of their home, but not beyond the shelter of their hearts. Their participation in this place is wrapped up in yours; their membership in this family is wrapped up in you.

All of us, students, parents, faculty and staff, the entire Notre Dame community, have much to be thankful for in these days. In the same way that families throughout the country gather on Thanksgiving Day to give thanks, I think it makes sense that we should gather. Although wrapped up in a football weekend, it is no less an opportunity for this Notre Dame Family to gather and to give thanks for the many blessings that we as a family have known.

One of the most significant ways that we, as a Catholic community, can give thanks is through the celebration of the Eucharist. The very word, "eucharist," means "thanksgiving" in Greek. I have long thought that no visit to this campus is complete without partaking in the Eucharist; I risk offending some by saying that it is more important even than that which takes place in the stadium on six Saturdays in the fall.

Oh, I’d like to take credit for the fact that Parents Weekend falls days before Thanksgiving, but I cannot. Perhaps credit is due to someone, or maybe it’s just coincidence. Whatever the reason, let’s not miss the connection. Join me in giving thanks to God this weekend for the blessings that your family has known in the persons of your parents, and join me, too, in thanking God for the blessings that this larger Notre Dame family has known.
Black family settles, given $2.55 million

Associated Press
BUFFALO, N.Y. - The family of a teenager, who was killed by a dump truck on her way to her job accepted $2.55 million Wednesday to settle a lawsuit accusing a shopping mall of racism for not letting certain city buses drop passengers off on its property.

Cynthia Wiggins, 17, died in 1995 while crossing a busy seven-lane highway outside the Walden Galleria in suburban Cheektowaga, where she worked at a fast-food restaurant.

The Wiggins family filed a wrongful-death suit against mall owner Pyramid Cos. after it was revealed that the mall did not allow buses from predominantly black neighborhoods to drop passengers at the mall.

The family also sued the regional transit agency — the Niagara Frontier Transportation Authority — and the truck driver.

The family, represented by Johnnie Cochran Jr., was seeking $150 million.

On Wednesday, in the middle of the trial, a settlement was reached under which Pyramid will pay $2 million, the driver $250,000 and the transit agency $200,000. Ms. Wiggins' 4-year-old son will receive the money.

None of the defendants and local NAACP President Frank Cochran was disappointed that a settlement was reached.

Shore promotes activism at Hesburgh Center

By JOHN HUSTON
News Writer

Bill Shore wants to change the way people view social service.

Shore, founder and executive director of Share Our Strength, a national nonprofit organization that supports anti-hunger and anti-poverty efforts, spoke Wednesday afternoon at the Hesburgh Center for International Studies.

"The question is not 'Do we have the solutions?'" Shore said. "The question is 'Do we know how to make these solutions affordable?'" We have developed solutions but we have not been effective in getting the money to the market.

Ordinarily, nonprofit organizations receive government grants or hold fundraisers to accumulate the funds with which they operate. Shore decided that instead of being a 're-grantor,' Share Our Strength would have to create money on its own, through corporate sponsorships, licensing and cause-related marketing.

Share Our Strength was not merely formed to create and distribute money, Shore said.

"We also want to do community organizing," recently, Community Wealth Venture, Inc., was created to counsel corporations, foundations and nonprofit organizations that are interested in creating wealth for the community. Called a "for-profit" subsidiary, the group reinvests money, earned through business- world means, into Share Our Strength, allowing them to "focus on a different set of issues," Shore said.

Share Our Strength has raised more than $82 million since it was founded in 1984, but Shore said the group hasn't made a dent in poverty yet.

"There are more people who need assistance today than when we started," he said. "Ultimately, I think we're going to have to think very differently with how we treat social problems," Shore said. "I think we've got to change people's perceptions of this work."

Shore's new book, "The Cathedral Within," addresses this problem, applying a metaphor of cathedral building to social service.

"I think there are a lot of lessons to be learned from the cathedral builders," Shore said.

For research on the new book, he visited various sites, including the Duomo Cathedral in Milan, Italy. The structure took 513 years to complete, and Shore noted that the builders knew they would never see the finished product, "but it didn't detract, it enhanced their workmanship."

"One of the things that many of us have been given in the opportunity to serve ... to do something very powerful that extends the reach of the community," he said.

Shore is a former legislative and political director for Senator Gary Hart and chief of staff for Senator Robert Kerrey.

Family's inspiring tradition of service

I got a message in the mail today. Not that it wasn’t to be expected. It said, “Kevin, in three to five minutes on the column you are writing for now.” And there was a page attached listing the purposes and goals of what I’m going to write about.

So here I am, calling us all to service and action for a more just and humane world, inviting the Notre Dame community to share reflections that Challenge Observer readership to engage in ongoing conversation and action pointed at social concerns, critically examining structures and institutions that maintain or create unjust systems, and encouraging everyone to respond to my reflections.

I’m not going to accomplish this by writing about inspirational three-legged squirrels, awe-inspiring Indian summer, or Walter Payton’s divine intervention in a certain Green Bay Packer defeat. I’m going to accomplish some of these goals by telling everyone a short story of mine. Being the youngest of seven children and the fifth member of my family to attend Notre Dame, I’ve learned a lot from the experience. Last summer in Waupaca World, Illinois (Aurora) I had the opportunity to be a volunteer in nine weeks at Hesed House, a multi-dimensional facility for the poor. I worked in the kitchen, a clothes closet and municipal incinerator and kept in touch with other organizations that provided a food pantry, an interfaith soup shelter, a warm meal, and companionship for the homeless. As part of the Summer Service Project, I lived in a building that used to be Aurora’s municipal incinerator and kept in touch with people with a respectable and accommodating Notre Dame Alumni club. I shared my trials and tribulations with a wonderful friend, Eileen Huie, and many other dedicated service workers, while I took time out personally to reflect journalistically. While I had certainly read about the homeless before, I have not experienced them first hand. My year abroad prepared me for living in foreign environments, but it certainly didn’t prepare me for the dose of reality that accompanied my roller coaster experience.

Through constant interaction with the homeless, I learned that THEY exist. Yes, the marginalized, the forgotten and the impoverished are out there. And they are waiting for all of us to be "blessed" with the spoils, talents and gifts bestowed upon them by God to give back. Not because they want it. Not because they expect it. And not even because they’ve "earned" it, but because they need it.

One person that needs our help is Carl Jones. You see, Carl had a tough time being a father, brother and special figure at 10 years of age. He could only discipline his four younger siblings, demand that they listen to their mother and wash and put them to bed so many times. He could only question and reprimand his 10-year-old peer’s attitudes and disrespect for elders over a certain period. The time to help this child may have come and gone for he was forced to choose between his mother and his aunt in a confrontational altercation in the Hesed House parking lot only weeks after I left.

Two other children that need our help are Jordan and Michael. Moctezuma. But that chance has probably passed too. She had neither the money or time to see a doctor, and thanks to a health care system that should have, but didn’t prevent their mother’s death, they are all alone in this world with no true parental figure. No longer will they have someone tolerant of their poor behavior and love them through every moment of their fighting.

Fortunately, we can prevent cases like these, and luckily, all of us at Notre Dame have a great opportunity living in our laps. Over 200 students at Notre Dame had the chance to experience a project similar to mine this summer. And I’m positive that they have stories just like mine. I’m sure someone else got to hear their own Jones family member ask them, "Kevin, what else do you do?" or "where Eileen at?" I know someone else got to hear their own Marisol Montezuma smile like nothing happened after you just overheard her yell at Jordan and Michael for an hour straight in their bedroom which shares a wall with your dorm quarters. I bet someone else listened to a lonely and abused woman as she expressed her difficulties with paying her sick son’s hospital bills, and I’m certain they held her as she cried about her homeless shelter living conditions. Moreover, it’s sad to say that someone else has been driven to serve people in need like I have.

Summer Service Projects, and other projects focused on insuring social justice, can be found all over campus. I challenge you and your classmates and faculty to discover them and make a difference. For oldest family members, this is a great change. I couldn’t proudly write you this article today and boast about my brothers and my school record for the number of Summer Service Projects in a family, if my oldest brother, John, hadn’t started the tradition. If you’re not the oldest, there’s no law against making an impact on other family members or friends and starting a tradition. Those projects are a special opportunity for all individuals of the Notre Dame community.

My incentive for writing this article is the possibility of someone else sharing the gifts of a Summer Service Project like I have. My hope is that someone else will have a child or adult in need and ask them to push them higher on the swing of life like so many asked me. My desire to spread the news about a rewarding opportunity has its roots entrenched in the soil of this University’s mission statement. It is up to you to let your classmates in Notre Dame community, to act upon the injustices of the world.

Consider this request to make a more humane world your own personal letter addressed to you...

Church is wrong about sexuality

I want to thank those that came out to support our program during "Friday Night Live." I thought it was a great event to give everyone an opportunity to see the energy that our basketball program wants to inject into the Notre Dame community. We need your support, and you showed us that you are willing to take a step forward by showing up and making a lot of noise that night.

I need a favor from you! I need you to be our sixth man! By showing up and making noises in fervor with your high level of energy and creativity, you can help raise the level of our play, while making it a difficult place for our opponents to come. This will greatly aid in giving us that home court advantage that Digger Phelps' teams used to enjoy back in the '70s and early '80s. You make a difference. You also make a difference in recruiting. When we bring prospects on campus, we agree and they see a rowdy student section, it excites them to think about being a part of such a fun environment again. You make a difference. You can make a big difference in Notre Dame basketball. I ask that you take another step closer in supporting our program. I promise we will not let you down.

Support WRC for academic freedom, community conversation

This letter is regarding "WRC opposes the Catholic mission," Sean Vincke (Nov. 17, The Observer).

Although I graduated from Notre Dame in 1990 and have only been on campus for my siblings' graduations, I am shocked and appalled that the kind of groundless, ill-informed commentaries are being published in The Observer. I assume that it is still the main source of information over lunch for students as it was in my day.

I am first of all delighted to learn that a women's resource center exists and is even in LaFortune! Mr. Vincke, however, would apparently like this center to be turned into some kind of pre-training center for one of the two Vatican approved lifestyles for Catholic women: celibate nun (or lay missionary) or married wife and mother. His attack on the center for rightfully recognizing that women are whole persons with many facets, including problems related to sex and pregnancy let us not forget the campus problems of binge drinking and thetaken) is a shallow attempt to promote a viciously narrow and demeaning limitation on women's mutual support through information.

Secondly, experience of a small-class university should have taught Mr. Vincke better than to impute the views of a NOW group to the organizers of the center. Anymore than the discovery of "Mein Kampf" in his own dorm room should brand him a Nazi. In these days of the defense of Notre Dame's academic freedom, the Notre Dame community should band together to ensure that all members of the university be protected from censorship of expression and information.

There's more to basketball players than 'thug' uniforms

I am writing to The Observer in response to the Inside Column "Bume Thugs and Basketball." After reading the column, I was thrilled to see that an editor of the paper finally showed some intelligence and wrote something worthwhile and open minded. I totally agree with the idea that certain uniforms worn by basketball players create less intelligent and more belligerent players.

I don't think that The Observer has ever printed anything as remote­ly as grounded and clearly as this column.

The associate sports editor, Mike Connolly, wrote this editorial and I was looking beyond his immaturity and ignorance to come up with his conclusions. In the second paragraph, he comes right out and states the obvious saying that, "all the teams that wear them (the certain type of uniforms) are a bunch of thugs." I could not agree with him more. The amount of violent crimes that college basketball players are involved in is alarm­ingly higher for players who wear the "thug" uniforms. Not only that, but the dimb­er players in college basketball thrive on teams with those uniforms. The low graduation rate for some schools, this example was the University of Cincinnati, has everything to do with the uniforms and nothing to do with the academic policies of the school or the recruiting practices of the coaches. It is obvious that Mike Connolly knew all of these facts when he wrote his column because he did an out­standing job informing people of the effects these uniforms have on the players who wear them.

Lastly, I would just like to share my feelings on the broader topic that the author addressed in the last paragraph of his column. Everyone knows that, the way you dress and the way you carry yourself says a lot about the kind of person you are. I am just glad that he had intelligence to figure it out. I do not know many people who have clothes and per­sonality are good judges of the quality of a person. There is no need to meet the person and get to know them and find out what they are really like. An individual who is dressed in good clothes is a better per­son than someone who is dressed in bad clothes. The logic is easy to see and it is almost obvious. E Z

Placing your views in an editorial is no excuse for igno­rance. I find it very hard to believe that someone who prides himself as the associate sports edi­tor would actually write a column with as ignorant views as that. I can only hope that the whole inside column was just a big joke because there is no other good explanation for it.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Church is wrong about sexuality

In Nov. 21, I attended the speech given by Cardinal Arinze. I was both heartened and saddened by his words. He spoke quite convincingly on the topic of soli­arity with the poor and defended the dignity of the per­son against the tyranny of the contemporary economic order. Cardinal Arinze made it clear that to be a Christian means helping our brothers to establish decent and worthy lives. This entails fighting against those forces that are antibiologically personal liberty and the stability of our­social systems. The global economic order is a primary force for destruction and pain in this world, and therefore our duty is to do what is in our ability to end this unjust system.

I was saddened, however, by his implications regarding homosexuality and birth control. He said that in his col­aboration with other religious leaders, he has found much agreement on these matters. He implied that most religions find these to be sinful and accordingly condemn them. One needs only to look at statistics from the United Nations and other reputable sources to find the justifica­tion for birth control—a desperately needed measure in many parts of the world, not so much to keep down popu­lation, but to stem the spread of disease and reduce the burden on families and societies short of resources needed to sustain new life.

Regarding homosexuality, a letter to the editor appeared in The Observer on Wednesday that echoed what the Cardinal's sentiments were implied to be. John Bergema wrote, "Why should homosexuality be singled out as the one tendency toward sinful acts which we should celebrate? We don't celebrate our tendencies toward sin. Instead, we struggle against them... and sometimes getting the help of trained professionals, hope to attain healing and wholeness to reach a state where our desires are for the right things." The suggestion that homosexuality is a tendency toward sin is simply wrong—the Catholic Church is wrong. The implication that people with such "tendencies" need "professional help" suggests that the author believes a gay person can be converted to heterosexuality—the "right thing." This is a position the Church does not even support. Both the positions on birth control and homosexuality stem in large part from a belief that sexuality is a reproductive process primarily. The Church acknowledges unity and love as important ele­ments of sexuality, but ultimately the argument against homosexuality relies on the fact that it is not reproductive and therefore sinful. The matter is not one of all or noth­ing. If we believe there are other purposes for sexuality than procreation, we can see the goodness of all loving relationships, and understand the necessity of birth con­trol. In regard to the former, if the ultimate message of Christ is love, then acceptance of all loving relationships is required of Christians, and ANY attacks against relationships are also an attack on Christ's message. With these thoughts in mind, every day that I'm at Notre Dame getting less of a Catholic, but yea a better Christian.

Mother-daughter story is anything but complete

By JULIE HAMILTON
Assistant Scene Editor

Many teenagers as well as adults may relate to the scenario in the film, “Anywhere But Here.” There are 15-year-olds living through the arguments, the agreements and the confusion that Anne (Natalie Portman) experiences. Then there are adults that may reminisce about the same picture's heart and soul the viewer can't expect too much.

Joan of Arc was the 19-year-old French girl who was summoned by the heavens to become the new king of France. She is level headed and conscious of many necessities which her mother overlooks or dismisses. An endearing trait that make matters worse, the central theme continues to nag her conscience. For a movie that devotes so much time to a character's psychology, Joan remains a mess as a drama.

As Joan, it's a miracle Jovovich compels the audience to see as that of Joan's messages from God, and Dustin Hoffman shows up as her conscience. For a movie that devotes so much time to a character's psychology, Joan remains an enigmatic mess. When Hoffman appears on screen, he looks just as shocked to be there as the audience is to see him.

Fortunately for Besson, Hoffman is given much to work with, and one can assume he's all current for new agents.

A crop of wartime gadgets such as catapults and boiling lead, along with a few quality backdrops are the lone bright spots in otherwise drab recreations of medieval warfare.

Mr. Smith goes to church in ‘Dogma’

By MATT NANIA
Scene Movie Critic

Few comedies have as stake the very fate of humankind, but "Dogma," by writer/director Kevin Smith, is not your usual comedy. It is an imaginative and surreal adult fable bursting with wild ideas, fantastical creations and boisterously funny characters.

In this self-reflexive, satirical, fantastic ("Clerks," "Mallrats" and "Chasing Amy"), humorist ("Clerks," "Mallrats" and "Chasing Amy") and irreverent ("Clerks," "Mallrats" and "Chasing Amy") film, the audience is reminded that Smith's penchant for satire and irreverence, even in the face of prohibiting themes, is rooted in his approach to religion. The film seeks to provoke thought and stimulate discussion, much like its predecessor, "Chasing Amy." Nonetheless, the amazing cast gives the film its profundity. The chemistry between old friends Affleck and Damon is perfect and each actor brings his own unique perspective.

"Dogma" is his attempt to deal with his own faith wavers, but he is a practicing Catholic who still longs for answers. Damon, surprising­ly, has a great gift for comedy (at one point he sings the theme song from the late TV series "Martin") and Affleck convincingly runs the gamut from a thoughtful admirer of humanity to a demonic hellspawn who casts his lot with Loki and Bartleby. Damon, however, struggles at times with his character's spirituality.

The genius of Smith is that he takes some seriously solemn subject matter and turns it into one of the funniest films of the year, without coming off as cheap or shoddy. The film is a comedy of ideas, certainly a type of passionate argument. And the key to it is Smith's treatment of religion as more familiar and sacred, something so much a part of his life he can joke about it and pick at it, zero in on its flaws and quirks and its flaws and quirks and its flaws and quirks.

"Dogma" is as its best when it goes on the flights of satirical fancy that have characterized Smith's previous films ("Clerks," "Mallrats" and "Chasing Amy"); perhaps no other filmmaker pens such entertaining, though often self-conscious, dialogues. Struggles with faith are conveyed through the en­ergetic and often poignant exchanges between his characters.

Though Smith hasn't made great strides as a visual stylist, his scripting is better than ever. Not only does he present his usual rants on sex and pop cul­tures (including an amusing treatise on John Hughes' 1980's teen flicks), but his approach to religion walks an amazingly slender tightrope. It's worldly without being cynical and irrever­ent, but it does lack respect­ful.

Unfortunately, the film's scale prevents it from achieving the intimate character depth of Smith's previous films. "Dogma" will not be amused by what Smith calls a "parable" and "a trifle of a film." The lampooning of Catholic images and the diatribes against church doctrine (Jesus is said to have been black and God is represented as a woman) will surely offend some viewers. Yet, at the core of this indulgent exercise in spirituality is a deep faith in God, Jesus, salvation and basic goodness. Even when he is steeped in toilet humor, Smith's eyes look toward heaven. "Dogma" is one of the most pro-religious (and, specifically, pro-Catholic) films in recent memory. Though there are well-timed jabs at the Church, it is clear that Smith embraces the Catholicism he's satirizing. In fact, it is so exclusively Catholic that some viewers may find themselves left out in the cold.

Kevin Smith is indeed a practicing Catholic and "Dogma" is his attempt to deal with his own questions of faith. It is less an attack on the Catholic Church than an open letter, albeit a comical one, to the American Catholic community, provoking discussion. Ultimately, "Dogma" is about the renewal of faith and, despite the packaging, that's a message everybody can use.

PROJECT WARMTH

Give away your coat... and Share the Warmth!

In 1997, 13.3% of the United States population, or 35.6 million people, lived in poverty.

In the spirit of National Hunger and Homelessness Awareness Week (Nov. 15-19), please offer prayers for all those suffering the pain of hunger and the plight of homelessness.

Visit the homepage of the National Coalition for the Homeless at http://nch.arl.net to explore social action opportunities on these issues.

SHARE THE WARMTH AND SPIRIT OF NOTRE DAME!

THREE weeks still remain to participate in Project Warmth! Do not miss out! Please help make our collection numbers soar with your donation. With your support, a record number of persons in our South Bend/Mishawaka community and beyond will receive an invaluable gift this winter: a warm coat!

EVERYONE can participate!

Please welcome our new collection sites, Decio Commons and the J.A.C.C. (2nd Floor next to ticket office)

TALLAHASSEE, Fla. — Peter Warrick almost certainly won't win the Heisman Trophy. In the eyes of Florida fans, though, he's already won the Heisman. Warrick was arrested after paying $21.40 for more than $400 worth of designer clothes from Dillard's.

Warrick said he expects a lot of ridicule Saturday, when Florida State plays Florida. "I've just got to go in there and keep my head straight," said Warrick, who has caught 62 passes for 844 yards this season despite missing two games. He caught a touchdown pass and threw for another score in Florida State's 23-12 victory last year over Florida. "You can't hear anything there," Warrick said about noisy Florida Field. "We've got to go there and stay focused and not worry about the crowd.

The Dillard's shopping bags are likely to be everywhere in Gainesville.

"There is always going to be one in the crowd, or 20 or 30, or 100 or 1,000 or 10,000."

TALLAHASSEE, Fla. — Peter Warrick almost certainly won't win the Heisman Trophy. In the eyes of Florida fans, though, he's already won the Heisman. Warrick was arrested after paying $21.40 for more than $400 worth of designer clothes from Dillard's.

Warrick, who was kicked off the team, and Warrick are both on probation after plea agreements that included restitution, court costs and community service.

"It's not like he shot the president," reads the back of the $14.99 shirt — a play on Warrick's first comments after the investigation became public. "It's not like I killed the president."

The Florida Book Store has sold more than 1,000 of the shirts, which are available at other Gainesville stores.

"They basically flew out of our racks," book store manager Sandy O'guren said. "It was probably our biggest seller ever.

Warrick said he expects a lot of ridicule Saturday, when Florida State plays Florida. "I've just got to go in there and keep my head straight," said Warrick, who has caught 62 passes for 844 yards this season despite missing two games. He caught a touchdown pass and threw for another score in Florida State's 23-12 victory last year over Florida. "You can't hear anything there," Warrick said about noisy Florida Field. "We've got to go there and stay focused and not worry about the crowd.

The Dillard's shopping bags are likely to be everywhere in Gainesville.

"There is always going to be one in the crowd, or 20 or 30, or 100 or 1,000 or 10,000."

Women's Lacrosse

Delano, Kinnik sign with Notre Dame

Special to The Observer

Women's lacrosse high school seniors Kassen Delano and Andrea Kinnik have signed national letters of intent to attend Notre Dame, women's lacrosse head coach Tracy Coyne announced Monday. The two will join an Irish women's lacrosse program that has no seniors entering the 2000 season.

"Both Andrea and Kassen both come from championship programs that were ranked No. 1 nationally at some point in their career," said Coyne, who recently was named head coach of the Canadian national team for the 2001 World Cup. "They have the kind of experience that we need. Andrea has the flexibility to play midfield attack or midfield defense and has good size and speed. We are excited about her ability to come in and spark the transition game. Kassen is a good Inside player with solid stick skills. She reads the games really well and has been well coached."

Delano, a native of Alexandria, Va., comes to Notre Dame from St. Stephens and St. Agnes School, the same high school as Irish junior Lael Stephens and Catalina Ojanguren.

Coyne has played defensive wing and midfield during her three years and scored a multitude of goals for the Wildcats, leading the team with 12 points and grabbed six rebounds. Her rim-rattling dunk with 5:56 remaining gave Kentucky a 63-64 lead and brought the game out of their seats to punctuate the win. With Kentucky leading 38-26 with 3:43 remaining, Saul Onyekwe had 11 points and eight rebounds and Desmond Allison had 11 points and seven boards.

A smothering Wildcats defense, which mixed in liber­ally stutters, the Wildcats got balanced scoring and rebounding from up and down their lineup. Jamal Magloire had 11 points and nine rebounds to lead the Wildcats, while Zimbabwean prince Lael Stephens had nine points and eight rebounds and Desmond Allison had 11 points and seven boards.

Kentucky advances in NIT

Associated Press

LEXINGTON, Ky. — No. 14 Kentucky took control with an 18-4 run midway through the second half and cruised to a 67-50 victory over Penn State on Wednesday night in the first round of the Preseason NIT.

With the season-opening win, the Wildcats advanced to face No. 16 Utah in the second round of the tournament, to be played Friday at Rupp Arena.

Coming off the bench, freshman big man Marvin Stone enjoyed a sensational debut for the Wildcats, leading the team with 12 points and grabbed six rebounds. His rim-rattling dunk with 5:56 remaining gave Kentucky a 63-64 lead and brought the game out of their seats to punctuate the win. Trainers aid sidelined athletes, offer advice for future

By KATHLEEN O'BRIEN
Associate Sports Editor

For an athlete, nothing is more disappointing than being told he or she can't compete.

"It's frustrating because you want to help your team. But you just can't," senior football player A'Jani Sanders said. "It bothers you on your mental aspect, especially when you've been a starter and you know that you're probably the best person at that position."

Yet the constant strain on their bodies, particularly the danger arising from collisions in contact sports, can frequently send players to the sidelines with injuries and illnesses.

When a Notre Dame varsity athlete sustains an injury, he first sees an athletic trainer. If the injury warrants further medical attention, the trainer refers the athlete to one of the University team physicians, who makes the final decision regarding a player's eligibility for competition.

"As athletic trainers, we're in charge of any of the health care involved with the athletes," head athletic trainer Jim Russ said. "Anything dealing with the injury or illness of an athlete, we are the central point."

Because each team has trainers assigned to it, a trainer is often present at the time of injury. Consequently, the trainer is generally the first point of contact.

"The trainers are what we call the para-medics of the sports field," University physician Jim Moriarity said. "They're always there. We always try to defer to the trainers in their initial decision."

In the event that medical attention is necessary, an athlete sees either team physicians or community-based orthopedic consultants. The athlete must receive medical clearance to compete before returning to play.

"It would be the consultation of the doctors and the trainers involved," associate athletic director Tom Kelly said. "If need be, the ultimate decision would be Dr. Moriarity."

Requiring a University physician to approve an athlete to practice and compete is standard procedure across the country, according to Kelly and Moriarity.

This system of dealing with injuries is advocated by the NCAA, and has been dealt with in numerous court cases, said Moriarity.

Referring to doctors for the final decision on athletes' eligibility helps eliminate cases in which a coach might put pressure on an athlete to perform regardless of whether he or she is ready or not.

"I think there's always going to be a certain amount of tension," Kelly said. "Coaches want their athletes to be able to participate, but they're also concerned with the well-being of the student-athlete."

While some schools may have conflicts between coaches and medical experts over an athlete's eligibility, Moriarity says the relationship at Notre Dame is fairly smooth.

"Everyone always talks about coaches pushing their athletes to compete but we very rarely have a problem with that," Moriarity said. "I think of us as being in a partnership. We don't tell them how to coach; they don't tell us how to practice medicine."

"Women's basketball coach Muffet McGraw is pleased with the system," Russ said. "It's in place because the doctors have the expertise to make the decisions that the coaches don't have," McGraw said. "I think it's a great system."

"Occasionally, the parties involved are unable to agree on the treatment or the recovery time necessary for an athlete. That's a collective decision," Russ said. "It's not a decision that's made in a room without the athlete. It's not like it's a blind decision. If they object, we talk it through. It's open to discussion, some things are.

Senior cross country and track runner JoAnna Deeter, who is recovering from anorexia, has had conflicts with the medical staff. However, she also recognizes their attempts to consider her well-being.

"Conflicting judgments between the medical staff and me about my health and distance performance requirements could not be overcome," said Deeter.

"Although conflicts arise, I believe the University has the best intentions in each matter," Sanders, on the other hand, feels that the medical treatment at Notre Dame operates well.

"They got you healed. They got you out there and they don't rush you into anything either," said Sanders.

"We always maintain that the welfare of the student-athlete is paramount and everyone proceeds from that," Kelly said. "Everybody that I'm familiar with, the welfare of the student-athlete is the bottom line. That is something that is our guiding principle is the welfare of the students."

eating disorder, which Deeter thought had been sealed.

As a scholarship athlete, Deeter needed to receive clearance from the Notre Dame doctors to be allowed to compete. But as a recovering anorexic, Deeter had her own support system, including a psychologist, a nutritionist, trainers, doctors, coaches and her parents.

This fall, University physician's opinions conflicted with those of Deeter and her team. "There were just some conflicts that couldn't be worked out, some personality conflicts, some conflicts with me feeling like University Health Services was not working with me," Deeter said. "They definitely had my best interests in mind, but not in my mind, and not in my family's mind, and not in my other people's mind. "The conflict tried to be resolved the two weeks and just couldn't," she continued. "No one could come to an agreement, and I just felt like it was in my best interest to get the treatment I needed.

University Health Services wanted her to continue its method of treatment, while Deeter and her support team thought she no longer needed such an intense approach. They thought the current treatment might even threaten her recovery by bringing anorexia to the forefront of her mind when she had moved beyond constantly thinking about her eating.

"They wanted to continue more treatment, and I feel like I'm far enough along that I don't need that treatment any more," Deeter said. "And I felt like if I kept doing that treatment that it would push me back into anorexia."

"I was recovered from anorexia," she added. "But this incident was binging on pushing me back into anorexia and I didn't want to go that path. Running is not important enough to risk going back into anorexia. So that was the reason that I had to quit. They were forcing me to think about issues around anorexia that I didn't want to, that I wasn't helping me to continue my progress."

Team physician Jim Moriarty, M.D., said the University attempts to focus on the wellness of the individual, rather than just her athletic ability. Because of Deeter's eating disorder, doctors had to be careful how they handled the situation.

"We have very specific concerns for athletes with eating disorders, and we have a whole protocol we go through," Moriarty said. "We try to individualize cases.

"The physician has to make the medical decision, and a lot of times, those decisions are made with the athletes. Buss said, 'It's not like it's a blind decision. If they object, we talk it through. It's open to discussion: some things are.'"

Running for her life

Deeter has not competed for the Irish since mid-October, and she will not race with the rest of her team at the NCAA Championships next week. Deeter sees herself returning to the Irish for track, she said about a 5 percent chance of returning exists.

"That door has not been closed," JoAnna Deeter's return, "associate athletic director Tom Kelly said. "Clearly everyone wants her best interests at stake, and clearly she's a fine athlete, and everyone would love to see her compete."

Deeter attended the district meet in Terre Haute, Ind., last weekend, but she chose not to help her friends and teammates.

"It's truly disappointing," Deeter thought that I could win an NCAA Championship this year. I really did," Deeter said. "I really felt like it was pulled from under my feet. So it's extremely disappointing, but I said earlier, that balance is important in life. I did lose something that was dear to me, but I don't want this to happen to anyone else.

At districts, the team managed to qualify for nationals behind the performances of Klemmer and the Irish squad.

Deeter began displaying signs of an eating disorder during her junior year of high school. An all-state cross country runner and a four-time all-state track selection, Deeter developed her anorexia as an attempt to eat healthful and to achieve her optimal performance. It soon took on a life of its own.

"I strongly believe you tell you your optimal performance at the time of your death," Deeter said. "And I did it and I wasn't getting enough energy, because I didn't realize that it was taking me over."

Deeter's anorexia spiraled until she required hospitalization.

"It was a jump start, but I thought it was going to be the cure-all," Deeter said. "I defiintely wasn't cured the cure-all, obviously, because that was my senior year of high school, and I struggled until the middle of my sophomore year in college.

Although many people recovering from eating disorders prefer to remain anonymous, Deeter chose to go public with her story, appearing in YM magazine and the USA Today.

"I realized how important it was that people start recognizing this in their runners and recognizing it in the whole population," Deeter said. "People need to be informed - information about how horribel an eating disorder is and how much it can affect your life and how preventable it is. Not ever falling into it is the first step in prevention. "I also didn't want people to look at pictures and see how bad I want be to be like that," Deeter added. "I wanted them to realize that was not the way to go. But the whole recovery process, I wanted them to realize that was not the way to go."

Since her hospitalization, Deeter has continued to fight against anorexia, growing tougher in the process.

"I've been through very horrible things, but it's made me a very much stronger person," Deeter said. "You know, 'Whatever doesn't kill you makes you stronger.' That's a great quote."

A run-away winner

With the support of her family, friends, coaches, Deeter developed into one of the top female runners at the collegiate level.

For more than three years, Deeter experienced the way the (the coaches) balanced the success of the team with what was best for me as I worked through any recovery issues," Deeter said. "If there was any question, they chose that was best for me."

As a freshman, she placed third at the NCAA Cross Country Championships to capture her first All-American honors.

She was again one of the top Irish cross country runners at the All-American. That year, Deeter began to make her mark as well, performing well at the Big East Championship, the 3,000-meter run and qualifying for the NCAA Indoor Championships.

Coaches Joe Plano and Connelly recognized Deeter's potential early on, and believed she would succeed if she could overcome her eating disorder.

"She has all the potential in the world," Plano said. "She's an all-American athlete."

That same season, Connelly, the head of the Dame women's coach, told The Observer, "She's just a great competitor. She keeps driving herself to succeed. Obviously, she's been given a whole lot of problems."

Last year, Deeter had a break-out season and was named an All-American in cross country, indoor track and outdoor track.

By finishing 14th at the NCAA Cross Country Championships, Deeter placed the "Up" repeat cross country All-American in Notre Dame history.

"She told me she was going for 10,000-meter and more than three years, but that goes away so fast," Deeter said. "But if you're a leader, there's nothing better than that."

Deeter is no longer sure whether a competitive racing career including finishing 4th-2000 Olympic trials, is in her future. "When I came here, I thought that if I can well, I would be happy, and as the years went on, I realized they're totally separate things," Deeter said. "I think to be able to do both, you have to realize that."

tor in the swimmers’ improvement this year, said senior captain Michelle Samreta.
"I think we proved ourselves as competitors in the MIAA," Samreta said. "We were more competitive in this meet than I’ve seen in the past two years. Other teams are going to notice this, and realize they can’t take us for granted."

Saint Mary’s won seven of 13 events, with several swimmers eclipsing season bests and recording times closer to end of the season goal marks.

Distance swimmers dominated the meet, with the pair of sopho­more Allison Leneskie and junior Olivia Smith capturing a 1-2 win early in the meet during the 1,000 freestyle.

Lowering her previous mark by nine seconds, Leneskie’s 1:10:42.29 and Smith’s 1:10:50.03 second place finish was enough to hold Albion competi­tors to third, fourth, and fifth place finishes.

Leneskie captured another win in the 500 freestyle, narrow­ly escaping Albion’s Katie Callan in the last 75 yards of the race, pulling a victory by over a body length in the race’s final moments.

"I watched her the first 15 laps, and knew she was getting tired," Leneskie said. "At 17, I pulled ahead, and just sprinted that last 50."

Other 1-2 team-ups for top fin­ishers included junior Colleen Sullivan and freshman Lane Herrington in the 200 freestyle.

Freshman Laurene Smith and Samreta captured another set of top finishes for the Belles in the 200 breaststroke, dominating with Smith’s first place finish in 2:38:76, followed by Samreta in 2:40:04.

Irish

Doeherty and the Irish have shown tireless commitment to reaching their potential as a team.

"I want to get better," he said. "We missed a lot of box outs last night; we didn't execute secondary break like I would like and we're going to get after it. If I have to I'll threaten them. It seems like the number 304 is in the back of their head. That's 304 crossings they did the day after the Marathon game and I don't think they'll want to do that Friday."

A win over Siena tonight would send the Irish to Madison Square Garden for semifinals of the NIT on Nov. 23. The Irish, however, aren't looking past the Saints.

"They're darn good," Doeherty said. "Paul Hewitt does a good job; they're experienced. A lot of the things they do well, we struggle with like the press offense."

"We can't look past Siena," junior Martin Ingelsby said. "They went to the NCAA Tournament. They have a lot of good players and like to play up tempo basketball. We have to go out there, stick to our game plan and hopefully play well."

Tip off is scheduled for 7:30 p.m.

Jamming the Joyce

A big crowd is expected to be on hand for tonight's game, but that won't change the effort the Irish put forth.

"A jammed Joyce Center can help us a lot with our defensive intensity and distracting them, no question," Doeherty said. "I hope we have a filled house, but if we have just 100 people there, we're going to play hard."

Shot heard 'round the world

Graves recalled some fond memories after draining the 15-foot jumper that lifted the Irish to victory.

"In your backyard with a wooden backboard and the rim bent to the right, and you've got you're one little spotlight at 11 o'clock at night. That's what I did," Graves said. "That's what everyone has done. You just count down. I was lucky to have the ball. I looked up at the clock at it said 5.7 seconds, I was 35 feet away from the basket, I had to do something with it. Michael Redd gave me my left, I saw the basket sneak up and I went off the screen and hit the jumper."

Priceless

Doeherty and the Irish were overwhelmed with words of encouragement after the win over the Buckeyes.

"When you get the win all of a sudden people take notice," he said. "Everyone today, the kids were talking about all the emails they got. I got 43 emails. I got faxes from Georgia and Kansas. Boy, it's exciting, but we've got to put that on the shelf. We've got work to do today, but I don't want to be a one hit wonder. I want to build on this and grow and ride this momentum into a win tomorrow."

"We wouldn't trade the feeling of his victory for anything."

"Coach Williams used to say, you could put a million dollars on the floor, but would you trade it for the feelings, the facial expressions and the enjoyment you got from those kids? No way. You can't put a dollar value on those moments in the locker room after a big win."

Graves and the rest of the Irish were at a loss for words.

"We really couldn't say anything," he said. "We were all just smiling the whole time. We knew as a team that we could go in there and compete. And if we can compete with anyone, we have a chance to win. The family atmosphere in the locker room is just unbelievable and that can take you a long way."

Twenty guys crammed in a small section lounge on the campus Student Affairs Office. Our eyes were glued on the television; our breaths were full of sweat, our mouths were silent. What had begun as the four of us watching head coach Matt Doherty's debut, not expecting to win, hoping to look respectable, slowly evolved into the scene that took place. The intensity was something that we hadn't felt in a long time, something that comeback wins over Notre Dame and Oklahoma couldn't provide.

Deeter races for her life

By KATHLEEN O’BRIEN
Assistant Sports Editor

When senior Irish runner JoAnna Deeter began her four years at Notre Dame, she had her sights set on winning national championships in cross country and track. But to attain her goals, Deeter would have to do more than achieve greatness on the track. She would need to continue along the path to recovery from anorexia nervosa, a potentially deadly eating disorder which she said had a "dramatic effect" on her life.

"It’s been a horrible thing," she said. "As a distance runner, you can fall into it really fast. You can really get into it really fast. It was seriously just a snowball effect."

Deeter thought that she had put anorexia nervosa behind her, only to have it brought to the forefront this season as conflicts arose between her and team physicians over her treatment.

"Basically, the medical team worked with JoAnna," associate athletic director Tom Kelly said. "At a certain point, there became an impassf regarding their recommendations. We met with JoAnna and her parents, and again, the bottom line was the medical team's advice based on her welfare."

Earlier this year, Deeter appeared well on her way to her best season ever. She brought home individual titles in the adidas/Notre Dame Invitational and the National Catholic Invitational, and showed no signs of letting up.

Then, her race toward a national championship, the first ever by an Irish woman runner, came to a crashing halt.

The first obstacle was a sprained foot arch in mid-October. But a minor injury morphed into a season-stopping, if not college-career-ending injury. Deeter was sent to physicians at University Health Services, who reopened a set of concerns about Deeter’s health.

"We were really excited about the first part of the season," head coach Gretchen Hildebrandt said. "As a certain point, there became an impass regarding their recommendations. We met with JoAnna and her parents, and again, the bottom line was the medical team’s advice based on her welfare."

"We went into one of the top teams in the country’s place and we won," sophomore forward Troy Murphy said. "It’s a great feeling, but we have to get prepared for tomorrow. We have to put forth the same kind of effort.

"We're coming off a big win Sunday night, but rewriting the past is not a squad that wants to rewrite the history books."

Having notorious luck at failing to notch victories in the MIAA conference the past two years, Tuesday’s meet made a statement that the 1999-2000 team is not a squad that wants to be left looking, said head coach Gretchen Hildebrandt.

The statement was well taken when the Belles started off the meet with three consecutive wins in the 400 medley relay, the 1,000 freestyle and the 200 freestyle, stepping up in a little more competitive manner than the Albion team was used to. Rotating leads at four different points during the meet, the Belles fell to Albion by only 14 points, leaving their final score at 128-114.

"I was scared of the whole meet. This team is a lot more competitive than I've ever seen them." - Keith Havens, Albion head coach

But even 14 points short, the score makes a statement, Hildebrandt said.

"We don't want people to be saying, 'This is Saint Mary's, we can take it easy tonight,'" she said. "I don't want coaches to talk up the meet and say, 'This is going to be easy.' We want swimmers to come out and swim their fastest against us. They're not going to take us as a joke. We're not.

Winning may not have been in the cards for the Saint Mary's swimming and diving team on Tuesday night, but rewriting the history books was.

When Matt Doherty took the head coaching job at Notre Dame last March, he promised to return Irish basketball to its glory days.

After one game, he has done just that. Notre Dame's shocking 59-57 victory over No. 4 Ohio State Tuesday night has the Irish fans eagerly awaiting tonight's showdown with Siena in the second round of the Preseason NIT.

"We went into one of the top teams in the country's place and we won," sophomore forward Troy Murphy said. "It's a great feeling, but we have to get prepared for tomorrow.
