Faculty senate meets

Recommendaions for curriculum change, and an explanation of the new University Forum were presented to the faculty Senate last night at its first monthly meeting in the Center for Continuing Education... (Dr. Frans, Associate Professor of Biology, composed the report for the Senate.)

The forum was proposed by the University Curriculum Committee which is composed of student, faculty, and administration members. The report calls for the adoption of a new semester calendar to end before Christmas. It asks that all classes meet only twice a week for seventy-five minutes and that Saturday classes be omitted...

The committee feels that one can accomplish more in two meetings than in three," Walsh said. "For one thing, role will only have to be taken two-thirds as many times," he commented facetiously.

Walsh said that the genius of the University is to make the educational process more flexible than it was. It must realize that a University, as well as any other business, has to be run realistically. If he thought that money was scarce, he said. He also added that students are expected to devote their full attention to their work - not merely to appear to be present. He hoped that students would not come to class only to see the other students. He also emphasized the importance of attendance and the need for a regular attendance record...

Five blacks are re-admitted

Fr. Edgar Whelan, a Black counselor, explained the problem concerning the admission of the three students. He said that the administration has put the responsibility of the institution or no tutoring for many of these students. There is evidence that the three students whose records were dismissed had trouble in their freshman year, and there was no follow-up by anybody. In general, the freshman year counseling office was responsible for handling the special problems that a black freshman faces. McFarland returns

Dr. Stewart, Special Assistant to the President for Planning and Analysis, pointed out some of the special problems that face a black student at Notre Dame, which is 98% white and 97% Catholic. He cited almost half of the black students here are of Catholic background...

The problem is that we have an elastic attitude in the admissions office, when we admit what we call 'high risk' black freshmen who then ran into an inelastic atmosphere. There has been no anoculating factor to cope with the curricular and ethical demands of the college classes, Stewart said.

"We hope to change some things," he continued, "so that those 'high risk' students will go through 'course of development' so that, through a less intensive atmosphere they can gradually fit into the mainstream of academics. For example, for a social science student, or science could be postponed until some time in his sophomore year. Some of these special problems and we then throw culture...

Black counselor

The recent addition of Mr. George C. Seabrooks to the Freshman Counseling Office is expected to improve the counseling service available to the 29 black freshmen. Mr. Seabrooks is a black psychologist with ten years experience in counseling blacks in the Philadelphia and Washington ghettoes...

McFarland had no qualms about expressing his feelings on the issue. "We need some of these guys to think things over for a year," he said. "We, hell, you can think of a guy for a year with Uncle Sam breathing down your neck, unless you want to do you thinking in Silicon Valley. This large number of dismissals probably reflects a larger policy consideration that there were only 66 blacks at Notre Dame at the beginning of last year. The freshmen were dismissed for academic reasons in the fall, first semester, and one freshman transferred schools in October. Where there were only about 80 dismissals for academic reasons at the end of last year, the fact that seventeen of the thirty dismissals were going to be dismissed is especially significant."

WASHINGTON (UPI) - Senate Republi

His Senate colleagues elected the 58

Immediately after the vote, Pres

Law students are taking clients

Actual clients are taking the place of books for many University of Notre Dame law students.

As the nation's oldest Catholic Law School celebrates its centennial, its curriculum has been redesigned to put students into a real lawyer's environment, according to Dean William B. Scott.

Lawless. Under a rule passed in July by the Indiana Supreme Court, Indiana law students can now try cases in court under the supervision of a practicing attorney, and many Notre Dame law stu dents are now finding clients in legal aid, public defender and county prosecutor offices.

In addition, Notre Dame law students try both trial and appellate court cases in South Bend courthouses before realistic panels of judges and juries. Also, courses in areas such as domestic relations, estate planning, corpo rate law, labor law, and administrative agency practice are con ducted on a clinical basis in which students prepare and see through cases exactly as an at torney would.

The Notre Dame Law School's new curriculum is tied to experimentation within the school and to a wide range of elective courses from the University's graduate school offerings.

Within the Law School, courses in the areas of international law, anti-trust law, securities regulation, corporate planning, and ad vanced tax planning are new, and students are encouraged to explore such areas as psycholo gy, medicine, and modern social problems with Law School cre dit given for as many as three graduate school courses.

Pan Am Club meets; continue long tradition

One of Notre Dame's lesser known traditions will begin its 61st year Thursday evening in the Student Center.
Little do non-Latin American know of the PanAmerican Club, which has been in continuous existence since at least 1908, is probably among the oldest organizations on campus. In 1908 the grandfathers of today's members formed the "La Raza" club, which soon became ND's forte in soccer and fencing teams.
Between games and meets the old timers did their best to keep long Indiana winters with various social activities. But with a membership bailing from widely scattered sectors of an area twice as large as the U.S. (Alaska included), the club could hardly remain a simple geographics club.

To fulfill its extracurricular function of forming Latin America's elite of the future, the PanAmerican club will this year be concentrating on the idea of hemispheric solidarity. Exhibitions and lectures on the emerging Latin America are being planned. The club will continue to publish its Spanish Literary Magazine "Pirahua," organize masses in Spanish, hopefully sponsor a campus radio show featuring soft Latin sounds, and attempt to integrate some activities with CILA.

Facenda asked the senate to see that the three faculty mem

Commissioners approved at SMC

by Jeanne Sweeney

Junior Karen Schultz and sophomore Julie Dwyer were approved by the Student Assembly this week as commissioners to sit on a subordinate board which meets with the Board of Trustees.

The approval took place at the weekly assembly meeting at which the senators also approved five other officers. Karen Schultz, who is the president of the junior class, will represent the students on the Student Policy Committee of the Board of Trustees. Julie Dwyer will represent the student on the Student Development Committee of the Board of Trustees.

The board will meet with the students twice officially during the year, but Miss Dwyer hopes they will be able to meet the board informally at other times, "for a free exchange of ideas."

On the Academic Affairs Council, which is an advisory council to the President, Mary Noorzyar will represent the student body. This council is involved with any major changes which might take place in academic policy.

Miss Noorzyar was a member of the ad hoc committee of faculty and students last year which decided to place students on faculty and administration committees of the college.

Eileen Donoghue, a senior, was approved as a member on another academic committee, the Academic Standing Committee.

This Committee is concerned with academic probation, study days, exam schedules, and possibly pre-fall courses.

On the Community Relations Board, which is largely involved with resolving disputes between students and faculty, or students and administration, is senior Mary Osmanski.

Miss Osmanski, who was sophomore class president and chairwoman of the Steakers Bureau of the Student Development Committee last year, said that "our aim as a community relations board will be to bring our community together as a better operating and cooperating body in all areas of college life."

Other appointments that were approved were Public Relations Commissioner, Diane Smellgrove, an off-campus junior, and a Student Assembly Secretary, Amy Phimister, who is a junior.

Notre Dame co-operates in research

Notre Dame is one of 48 universities which have formed a consortium to foster cooperation among universities, other research organizations, and the U.S. government for the advancement of space research.

Purdue and Indiana Universities are also members of the consortium. Notre Dame is the only Catholic university involved.

Called the Universities Space Research Association (USRA), the consortium expects to acquire, plan, construct, and operate laboratories and other facilities for research, development, and education associated with space science and technology. USRA has submitted a proposal to NASA for the management of the Lunar Science Institute in Houston, now under the direction of the National Academy of Sciences. The existing contract between NASA and the Academy is scheduled to expire this fall.

The Lunar Science Institute is designed, to provide, among other things, conference and study facilities for university scientists visiting Houston to work on lunar materials brought back by Apollo astronauts and on other aspects of lunar science. The scientific facilities of the Manned Spacecraft center, including the Lunar Receiving Laboratory, will be available on a cooperative basis for Institute scientists to use for their research.

Purdue lottery results today

Bob Pohl, Student Union Services Commissioner, has announced that the results of the Purdue lottery for the Houston trip will be available today between 1 PM and 4 PM in the Student Center. Winning ID's must be presented by those claiming tickets.

It was also announced that all of the losers' checks have been voided and destroyed. Pohl explained that the number of losers' checks made sorting and return impossible.
Union tickets

The move by Student Union Director Donald C. Holliday and Associate Director Tito Trevino to release fifty additional tickets for the Purdue lottery which were being held on reserve for Student Union personnel is the first step in rectifying basic inequities in Union policy.

In past years the Union's policy in the Social 4 commission has been prone to financial abuse and misuse of funds both by unscrupulous Union members or by Union members who were just not qualified to handle the amount of funds that go through the Union.

Clark and Trevino have promised to run a tight ship this year. All indications currently point to the fact that they have surrounded themselves with individuals who profess that same philosophy.

The fifty tickets had been set aside for recreation of Union personnel. Rather than to go through the lottery like the rest of the students, Union members could be assured of a ticket if they wanted it.

Clark and Trevino felt that such a system was unfair to the rest of the Student Body. We agree with them.

The rationale for the practice of reserving tickets also stems from the fact that Union personnel are not reimbursed for their work. Preferential ticket sales were one means of compensating them for all the work that they put in.

The shuttle bus

A number of changes have been made in shuttle bus service this year but by no means can they all be labelled beneficial.

The most blatant error in the new bus policy is the charge of ten cents for riding the bus after 6 p.m. The shuttle bus is doing so mainly for social reasons. Such reasoning holds little after six o'clock is doing so mainly for weight.

The ten cent fare should be eliminated immediately. We support student groups both at St. Mary's and at Notre Dame which are lobbying to see it removed.

The increased service, provided by the addition of another bus was long overdue. But a closer examination reveals that not much foresight was in planning when the second bus would run. Currently it supplants the first bus only during the day so that there is a bus running between the two campuses every fifteen minutes. But if the second bus continues to run only during the day service will continue to be plagued by the same problem that it encountered last year. Namely, overcrowding on nights when there is a lecture on one of the campuses and overcrowding on weekends.

Changes should be made in the procedure of reserving tickets to prevent the exorbitant cost to the Union. It is often complicated to use the Union's and should be used as the Union sees fit.

But the tickets to away games are sold to the Union by the football ticket officers. They cannot be sold away to faculty and others. Students should have equal access to them.

The Observer
The Beatles have a new record. The album, Abbey Road, came to me, by way of WSN-D, in a plain white envelope, no jacket, no explanation, just a new Beatle album, one disc, one eighteen cuts. I have not been able to comment on our times that I found it nerve wracking to listen to an album with no jacket, hence no pictures and no liner notes. It's very hard to pick up the mood the first time through. This is really a difficult record all the way through. It proves almost conclusively that the Beatles are geniuses at the craft of rock music and that George Martin's production work is among the most masterful around. The album is interesting, ingenious, as all hell, magnificently performed and superbly put together. Unfortunately it has a difficult time getting off the ground.

Much of the trouble comes from the same quality that makes the Beatles so great — they're a superb group, even if the individual members are often surprised in personal virtuosity. Abbey Road is almost encyclopedic, in its use of sound. Everything is there, practically every instrumental and harmonica riff in the medium of rock. The sounds merge and pop out of everywhere: Fazekas, electronic, country and western, straight rock, everything comes together. The attention to explanation, just a new Beatle album, one disc, one eighteen cuts, sometimes in striking ways. The attention to sound is overwhelming. Listen especially to the guitar in "You never give me your money," and the way it sounds like chimes, or like an orchestra or anything. "Because," that seems to happen between bars, electronic, a perfect object of admiration.

The difficulty is that sometimes all that perfection gets in the way of the song, drains the life out of it. The attention to sound is overwhelming. Listen especially to the guitar in "You never give me your money," and the way it sounds like chimes, or like an orchestra or anything. "Because," that seems to happen between bars, electronic, a perfect object of admiration. "Because" is a parody of mass communication. Parody is pleasant, of course, but eventually you want a bit more substance.

The album starts out with "Come together" a post-Mahindra voodoo chant with severe chord changes, shoehorned in, the end is strange. Part of the appeal is the words, about some cat with "feet down below his knees" gotta be good looking "cause he's so nice" nice nicely. But Harrison's "Something" is one of the best tracks. The music is charmingly chapped up, but it still hangs together with good vocal stuff working over some more soundtracks strings. The lead work is done beautifully, too. "Maxwell's Silver Hammer" is a little light music

"Oộtops' garden" is Ringo's song. It's pleasantly strange. It's replaceable. It has that to it with other pleasantly insane songs on the album.

Side one (which is all three things you just read about are) ends with "I want you (She's so heavy)". The song sounds like it should have been released in a bar with clips in their place and singing along. The words are mundane, but the song clicks. The vocal in "More" is Allinsson's, the guitar relaxed and swinging, and the two songs together very nicely. The whole thing slides into a ponderous, deliberate falseness about which is very effective but which ends abruptly. The Beatles are still playing jokes even when you think they've gotten down to some good hard trombones and such.

Side two does not display quite so much dexterity as side one, but the music is better. The construction of the side is unusual; there are two songs, then it runs together into a loose medley through the end. "Harrison's "Here comes the sun" is probably the best or second best cut on the disc. It's a very nice ballad, but the music is terrible. The construction of the side is unusual; there are two songs, then it runs together into a loose medley through the end.

"Because" is a parody of mass communication. Parody is pleasant, of course, but eventually you want a bit more substance.

The wait. It seems to have come that it's best. "Carry that weight" that it's best. "Carry" is a parody of heavy acoustical guitar work and leaves you to sit back while visions of Paul Revere and the Raiders two step through your head (yeah yeah yeah). Neither of the two is particularly great, but by the time the whole mess swings around to "Ruthless Woman" it takes off and flies.

"Golden Slumbers": "You're gonna carry that weight" keeps the life going. "Golden Slumbers" is a lullaby with a few structural problems that mean the vocal switches in tone and texture back and forth from the classical Beatles to the Feliciano chicken soul to the Tom Jones doing Ray Charles blues. It's nice. It's a song "'tis it as a springboard for "Carry that weight" that it's best. "Carry" is true with that "Yellow Submarine" vocal style and life bursting out the seams.

The record ends a success. "Carry" slips skillfully into a repeat of "You never give me your money" and goes into "The end" a collection of good musical bits including the classic Beatles 1967 catalogue of guitar stuff and that dull banana "Guda Deu Vida" drum riff. The virtuoso production techniques still pay off in the last half-side of the album. The end leaves you esthetically satisfied at last.

The wait for things after everything has ended; friend Beatles gives you the sound of science fiction, or at least that damned "Blood of the Dead" that the Beatles are wasting making trash palatable. Not even science fiction can still create hybrids also. Robert Heinlein proves that the genre is capable of nearly everything. "Because" is a parody of mass communication. Parody is pleasant, of course, but eventually you want a bit more substance.

Isolating Questions

Editor:

Mike Kelly's ROTC column in Monday's Observer succeeded, for the most part, in isolating the essential questions the issue raises at Notre Dame, i.e., the implications of Christianity for a Christian university in a militaristic society, and the question of opposing ROTC chieflly because it is a branch of military. It is on these two points that Mr. Kelly should be debated. The essential drawback in his defense of ROTC vis-a-vis Notre Dame's Christianity is his balking misrepresentation of Christianity itself. The "willingness" to allow other human beings to live their lives as they wish "without your interference" may indeed be a legitimate philosophy of life for some (though not for the soldier, it must be difficult to shoot a man without "interfering" with his life, but it hardly can be presented as the "heart of Christianity." A Christian is not so much interested in letting people alone as he is in "bothering" them, in helping them to see the truth so he has come to see in what he believes. Similarly, a Christian university must help its students in their search for truth, and must insure that the search is rigorous and diversified. As Mr. Kelly correctly insists, "the advocates of a Christian university should encourage every shade of opinion to express itself." It is just as unreasonable, though, to equate support for free expression of all opinions with support for such particular, and theologically shaky, opinions as the ones regarding Christianity with the violence performed by the military. Many of those who link the terms Christian and soldier probably do so because they regard the combination, as they do war, as a necessary evil. Is it by political or spiritual criteria that the Christian's participation in war is regarded as "necessary?" Is a man called to live the Christian life only when his life and his country are not at stake?

Mr. Kelly is not alone in contending that "ROTC-trained officers have traditionally been a liberalizing and intellectually-splitting force within the military." It would be presumptuous and unfair to question the sincerity of the advocates of this view, but it would be wise to challenge their judgment. For as liberalizing and as intellectually splitting as the civilian college ROTC graduates may attempt to be, their oath of allegiance marks them as members of the military willing to participate in war. And as much as wars are rationalized or perhaps justified, they are conducted by killing people, an activity which neither can be liberalizing nor intellectually-splitting.

Sooner or later, the leaders of this university must face the question of ROTC and Notre Dame in light of ROTC's link with this reality. For a whole lot of reasons, it might as well be sooner.

Interesting Statements

Editor:

Mike Kelly's column in Monday's Observer contained a few interesting statements.

1) "Heart of Christianity" is the willingness to allow other human beings to live their lives as they wish without your interference! I agree! Therefore I believe that the government would stop interfering with the lives of millions of Christian men by forcing them to serve in the military.

2) "The leftists on this campus have no moral principles that allow them to take this alternative (ROTC) to regular enlistment away from their fellow students" I agree again! CPA never asked that ROTC be thrown off campus. All we asked was that students take a longer and harder look at ROTC. We did this because we felt that the presentation of ROTC has been one-sided and that there were alternatives available to these students who wanted to wait. We also did this because some of us are personal friends with people who have tried to get out of ROTC and have not been able to do so. These are people who have changed their minds about serving in the armed forces but are required to stay in because of contractual stipulations.

3) If the gist of the entire column was the individual that the facts should not be coerced into accepting another's viewpoint then again I agree! However in May 1969 there were at least two men in Leavenworth prison, Daniel Amack and Kenneth Stulte, Jr., who were imprisoned because as members of the Armed Forces they made public or private protest to the government. Does this sound like an institution which respects the personal decision of an individual? I make no pretensions that the Army can be run efficiently if in every situation each individual makes his own decision. All I ask is that each individual understand that by serving in the military he is very possibly giving up his right to decide (to another person) about whether or not he should kill other human beings. Myself and many others feel we cannot give up this right.

Student Union

Editor:

Last night at Freshman Activities Night the Student Union displayed a lack of organization that has become almost typical during my time at Notre Dame. However, it was not the lack of organization that I found offensive last night, instead, it was the one part of the program that appeared all too well planned.

Mr. Jones, last night you alienated every political organization when that CPA member began to read selections from the paper in his hand, and calling for the Young Republicans to close their booth so everyone could listen to the CPA propaganda was more than unnecessary. I have never felt this way before, but possibly it was for the better that John McGlo lost last year. Although I may not agree with him, I've always found Fred Dedrick to be a politically fair person.

Shaffer is appointed to revision committee

by Mike Mooney

Updating the constitution of an increasingly urban Indiana will be the goal of Dr. Thomas J. Shaffer, associate dean of the Notre Dame Law School, who was appointed to the Indiana Constitutional Revision Commission. State Senator Allan Bloom, President pro tempore of the state senate and Indiana House Speaker Otis Bowen made the appointment in August.

The Constitutional Revision Commission comprised of representatives of Indiana's courts, industry, universities and county officials, will examine the state's 117-year-old constitution for possible modernizing revisions. The Revision Commission is currently in its opening stages.

Its proposals, once formulated, will be studied by the legislative general assembly and submitted to the people of Indiana for final approval.

Dr. Shaffer sees problems with the constitution on both the state-wide and local levels.

"The constitution builds on the supposition that a weak state government is a good thing," said the associate dean.

"For example, the governor cannot succeed himself; he has too little power for a modern government. The legislature only meets every two years for sixty days," he continued.

The constitutional problems on the local level center on an indecisive legislative policy regarding the cities.

"The constitution was written for a frontier, agrarian society- and simply doesn't work for a modern, urban state," Shaffer commented.

"The statutes of local governments build on an agrarian base; there are really no adequate provisions for a city, no contemplation of a modern metropolitan government."

The county and township are the dominant divisions of government in Indiana, both rural oriented and both with few considerations for the place of the city in local government.

"There is no contemplation of modern urban government that crosses county lines and supplants county government," he added.

Dr. Shaffer estimated that currently Indiana is divided about "half and half" between urban and rural populations, a fact which may surprise many ND - SMC students. Currently the state lists four major population areas: Indianapolis, Gary, Evansville and South Bend.

One area Shaffer would rather see the state stay away from is Indiana's colleges and universities. He is not in favor of any legislation aimed at punishing schools for campus violence, preferring that state governments follow a "hands-off" policy towards colleges. The associate dean added that most of the pressure applied to universities comes mainly from federal-not state-sources.

Dr. Shaffer did not feel that the position on the Commission would drastically curtail his activity at Notre Dame. "I foresee full Commission meetings every two months," he said.

As an appointee to the revisional body, Dr. Shaffer represents the universities of Indiana. As a lawyer and educator, he is well suited to the task. Shaffer has taught at Notre Dame since 1963. From 1961-1963, he served as a lawyer with Barnes, Hickham, Panther & Boyd in Indianapolis.

The associate dean of the Law School is a member of the American Bar Association, the American Association of University Professors, and the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People.

Veterans provide Autumn strength for clubs

It's that time of year

NEW YORK (UPI) -- The Boston Red Sox didn't bother using any of the old household standards. Not this year. No more sugar coating.

They gave it to Dick Williams straight. That's usually the best way anyway.

"Joe doesn't know you until you tell him by the firing by the Red Sox didn't hurt that much. He's fishing. It hurt. It always does.

He's hurt Dick Williams and Dick Williams is hurt.

"I'm really not me," Olson said. "I'm just too in the middle of things, too much on the line, too much at stake."

"I think I'm coming back," he said. "I still have another year to go on my contract. At least I've been given to understand I'm outside track with a nod going to Buck for the Purdue opener."

Nobody can rightly say who is more to blame for this condition, the something to go on, it's a hot secret.

Only a few days ago I asked Dick Williams how things looked for him next year.

"I think I'm coming back," he said. "I still have another year to

"I think this means something to them," he said.

"It did, but obviously not enough for them to bring Williams back any time soon.

Sooner or later this trend will continue, and another manager will be hired.

Williams had to make a decision, and Dick Williams knew, even if it was a secret.

"This has to mean something to them," he said.

"It did, but obviously not enough for them to bring Williams back any time soon.

At 40, he is not ready to retire yet by any means. He's still the same guy who guided the club to the World Series in front of over 400,000 fans, and he's a cinch to win with another baseball job.

"I think I'm coming back," he said. "I still have another year to go on my contract. At least I've been given to understand I'm coming back."

The Red Sox statistician and Dick Williams was pinpointing to the club's total home attendance which was already more than 1,000,000.

CHICAGO (UPI) Notre Dame linebacker Bob Olson contributed more than just his ablity to tackle the football success of the Fighting Irish.

This week his "other" abilities were as important as his tackling in making the Big 10 Midwest Honor of the week.

"He displayed great leadership in a very tough situation, after we were behind 10-0," Irish coach Ara Parseghian said, "in keeping the defense together and stopping Northwestern.

After they got that lead, they couldn't score again.

Olsos, a 230-pound 6-footer from Superior, Wis., playing his third varsity season, was one of the main cogs in physically stopping the Wildcats.

"His blitz in the passing situations was extremely effective," Parseghian said. "He's very strong against the run, too, and he's so hard to block that he has leverage on the ball carrier. He was very instrumental in our goal-line stands when Northwestern had several chances, to score.

Statistically, Olson wound up with eight solo tackles and as-totted on four others, more than any other Irish defender. In addition he intercepted one pass and returned it 14 yards.

Where he stood out most bright, though, was when Northwestern quarterback Dave Shelcona, went back to pass. Twice the Irish forwards broke through and turned him for losses of 90 yards.

Three times Olson alone nullified the biggest losses and C ane those three tackles Shelcona lost 50 yards.

"It really wasn't me," Olson said. "I'm just too in the middle of things, too much on the line, too much at stake."

"I think this means something to them," he said.

"It did, but obviously not enough for them to bring Williams back any time soon."
