HHH chief speaker at Indian Confab

by Bro. Patrick Carney

When the students return to the campus following the Christmas holidays, they will be joined by a newly appointed professor. No, not a Notre Dame professor, but Hubert Humphrey is vice-president of the United States and will be here to take part in the Indian Conference.

Humphrey's address in Steno Center at 7:30 p.m. on Tuesday, January 6, will highlight the four-day conference seeking to understand the plight of the American Indian.

All other activities will take place in smaller groups to allow for more interaction between the speakers and the audience. These other programs will take the form of either talks and discussions in the library auditorium or individual sessions in the classroom.

by Bill Kurtz

Chairman Bill Kurtz announced yesterday that he had contacted the heads of each department at Notre Dame, and that they would present their respective departments' programs on the first day of the conference. These programs would include talks, discussions, and demonstrations of Indian culture.

Summa collects $45million in two years; 40% earmarked for future development

This is the first of a two part series on SUMMA. It is written by Observer Staff Reporter Mike Money.

The feature in the full page of the project booklet read: "A comprehensive Program to generate $52 million in support for the Development of the University in depth and the achievement of its highest priority goals 1967-72."

For many current Notre Dame students, the public relations effort and the $52 million total is the full extent of their knowledge of "Summa--Notre Dame's Greatest Challenge."

But the project is much more than PR; its purpose is to ensure that the University is going in the next five years in the right directions, which are critical for Notre Dame.

SUMMA actually began in the late 1950's with the inauguration of a funding project supported by the Ford Foundation. The Foundation had a plan to encourage the field to set aside some of its financial resources for the support of Indian peoples in Washington, D.C.

The other end of the problem is represented by Snakey, who served as a member of Project Local Start for some time. An anthropologist, Snakey, an Indian, has specialized in labor relations and is noted advocate of "Red Power."

On either Tuesday or Wednesday of the first week of January, the committee hopes to have Louis Bruce, Commissioner of the Department of Labor, Washington, D.C., present the government's side of the story.

Mr. Bruce has said that he will be here if he doesn't have to leave. If he can't make it, he will send one of his assistants. It is hoped that the representatives of the Indian nations will be able to interact publicly with the men from the Bureau of Indian Affairs.

In an attempt to add a facet of the problems faced by the Indian which is often over looked, Fr. Hesburgh will speak on the topic: "Problems of Urban Indians." Mr. Snailker represents the American Indians United of Chicago and will consider the difficulties faced by Indians who are interested in continuing their education but who fear the main thrust deals with life on the reservation.

The weekend speakers will take part in the final two days of the sessions. These include Gene Crawford, Leonard Springer, John Dick, and Simon Otsary. John Dick is a Medicine Man who does not speak English. He has been given a grant by the government to teach Indians by their own standards.

Jim D'Aurora

Students who live in halls with- out the program will be highlighted by a special program. Discussion of topics and issues relevant to campus life will be held from 1:30 to 3:15 Saturday, under the direction of Peter Burke.

Jim D'Aurora listed the following major topics to be discussed:

1. The status of ROTC on campus.
2. The effects of the Co-ex program.
3. The positions and hopes of campus minority groups, particularly the Black groups.
4. New changes in different areas of student life.

The highlight of the weekend will come Saturday night when the Presidential dinner will be held in Stepan Center. This dinner, which will last from 7:30 till 10 p.m., will feature University President Theodore M. Hesburgh and Junior Class Pres- ident Barry T. Doyle as speakers.

A special Mass for Juniors and their parents will be held at 8:15 a.m. on Sunday in Sacred Heart Chapel. At this Mass, contemporary Masses will be held in selected hall chapels. A complimentary breakfast is scheduled from 9:30 to 10:30 in the North Dining Hall. A noted speaker, the Rev. The Rev. Carney of the university Board of Trust- ees and the SLC, will address the gathering.

D'Aurora said that accommodations can be arranged through the weekend's committee, and urges the juniors to take advantage of this. Parents will be able to select from seven events.
YAF members outline conservative philosophy

by John DiCola

This is the first in a series of articles about campus political organizations. Members of the Notre Dame chapter of YAF (Young Americans for Freedom), set forth the basic philosophy of the campus group in an interview last night. The members pointed out that, although the chapter shares the basic elements of conservatism possessed by the National YAF movement, the Notre Dame group attracts a different type of conservative.

Tom Thrasher, an active member of the Notre Dame YAF, indicated that the YAF image tends to appeal to those people who are most active in presenting their philosophy. So much so that, on the national level, the members of YAF tend toward the extreme right.

"The Notre Dame Chapter of YAF, in its makeup, has avoided the extremist types," Thrasher said. "A good number of our members are people who believe in their conservative philosophy, and are able to intelligently defend it," he added. Thrasher pointed out that people ranging from the moderate to the far right would be comfortable in the ND Chapter. Chris Wolfe characterized YAF as a group which can take a good critical look at itself. Wolfe feels that organizations such as SDS or the older ASP "are really unable to see how pretentious and ridiculous they look, while YAF can look at itself with a sense of humor."

Wolfe went on to relate some of the political beliefs held by the YAF and applied these ideas to the campus situation.

"We believe that the government is not a necessary evil," Wolfe stated, "but it has limitations, and that once those functions are exceeded, it tends ever more toward tyranny."

He went on to say "Our campus chapter is characterized by a dislike of the attitude of arrogant liberals who believe that they have an absolute right to determine the course of the University in educational, moral and other areas."

"We especially oppose the tendency of those who try to impose their judgement and ideals on the rest of society." Thrasher attempted to explain why YAF has not been very active on the Notre Dame campus recently, in this way.

"The problem of a conservative organization is that it does not tend to initiate things, it tends to react to the activities of other groups rather than take bold, creative action."

"We have been seminarizing about YAF's seeming inactivity, according to Thrasher, is that many members of the group believe that "the primary objective of the student is to become educated, and because of this, they tend less than liberals to be activists or radicals."

Exempt Membership increase

Although YAF experienced a drop in membership during the summer, bringing their present membership to approximately twenty-five active members, they expect an increased membership in the second semester. The rise is indicated by a number of interested students who will be invited to join YAF in a short time. The YAF hopes to increase their membership to almost seventy five students.

YAF in Student Government

Thrasher pointed out that YAF is very much involved in student government, with members of the Student Senate also YAF members. Thrasher said, "It has been my experience in student government, that conservatives are more responsive to the majority of people who don't get involved in government. It has been my experience at Notre Dame that the men who are called conservative around here have been more representative of the students of Notre Dame. I think that the radical left, being in office for so long, have encountered the problems of those who held office for too long a time, and have lost touch with the student body. They tend to represent their own strong convictions rather than do what the student body of Notre Dame would like to see done. The conservatives, because their beliefs are held by others, and because of their philosophy, are better representatives."

Tom Mignanelli, another member of the Notre Dame YAF, added "In my opinion the majority of people who are liberal enough are not concerned enough with the individual student, and are content to solve their own problems, these moral and political problems, which do not affect the student, which do not involve the students."

More Active Role

Glen Crow somewhat summed up the basic feelings of the YAF, saying "If feel that the YAF should be an activist organization. It should be vigorously pursuing its ideals and philosophy in every aspect of campus life. I don't feel that it is enough to sit back and react to situations that come up. We feel that we have to seize and hold the initiative."

To release first Juggler today

Emphasis on poetry in first issue

The first issue of The Juggler, Notre Dame's literary magazine, will be delivered to subscribers today and tomorrow. The record sixty-four page issue has heavy emphasis on poetry, but also contains artistic photography, fictional prose, and some book reviews. Emphasis in subsequent issues will be placed on fictional prose instead of poetry.

The Juggler, in accordance with the rules governing campus publications also announced the formation of their publications board. Dr. John Mathias and Mr. Thomas J. Jemidle, both of the English department, and John Zimmerman have been named to this board.

The Board met earlier this week to decide policy for the 1969-1970 Juggler. They defined their responsibilities as primarily one of reviewing each issue after publication, and giving advice for subsequent issues. This board also handles the naming of new editors, and can change editors who they feel is inadequate.

The University rules stipulate that an administrator must sit on the publications board of every student publication. Since The Juggler was unable to find an administrator, their publications board chose to sit this stipulation. They had asked an administrator, and he refused.

They have been selling subscriptions for this year's three issues for $2.00. Two hundred subscriptions have been sold thus far, and The Juggler plans to continue selling reduced price subscriptions for subsequent issues.

Public sales for the first issue of The Juggler will begin exactly after Christmas Vacation. They will be available for 75 cents per issue from hag representatives.

WASHINGTON (UPI) — The Senate voted over the administra- tion’s opposition Wednesday to give President Nixon broad-and unsought-authority to bar imports from countries which restrict their imports of American goods.

By a 65 to 30 vote, members approved an amendment to the tax reform bill despite claims by the Senate’s foreign trade bloc that it was arbitrary, inconsistent, unconscionable, and capable of destroying American jobs and lowering the U.S. standard.

On another front in the Sen- ate’s long tax battle, Sen. Albert E. Gore, D-Tenn., author of the proposal to raise the $600 in- come tax personal exemption to $1000, challenged Vice President Spiro T. Agnew to debate the is- sue with him. He accused Agnew of sporting “a rich man’s tax bill.”

Gore made the challenge in a UPI interview in response to Agnew’s criticism of the proposal as irresponsible and inflationary.

Work-study group labors 2 months to evaluate anti-racist programs

One of the core areas of urban studies is “institutional racism or institutional discrimination,” Thomas R. Broden, Director of Notre Dame’s Urban Studies Pro- gram said yesterday. A work- study group on this topic has been at work for over two months and has chosen as its first area for research the University itself, reflecting the belief that it would be inappropriate to examine other organizations be- fore having done so at home.

The group has embarked upon an analysis of the strengths and weaknesses of techniques to:

1. Expand minority representation in the student body
2. Expand minority representations on the faculty
3. Expand minority representation in administration
4. Expand multi-racial and multi-cultural dimensions of cur-rriculum.

The group will seek to deter- mine what techniques have been most effective in other institutions to achieve these objectives and will keep abreast of, and communicate with, the various persons and organizations on campus addressing these matters. From this should come a greater understanding of the strengths and weaknesses of various anti-racist approaches. Other organizations in government, business, labor, and church, will be studied later in the same way.

As with all Urban Studies Work Groups, all interested persons are invited to participate in the Institutional Racism and Discrimination Work Study Group. Contact the Urban Studies Office First Floor Memorial Library, Ex. 1112.

‘Caper’ urges reader to turn on by mixing pages with poison

INDIANAPOLIS (UPI) — One hundred copies or more of a potentially fatal magazine have been found in Indiana, an official of the State Board of Health said yesterday.

The magazine, “Caper,” invites readers to take a “trip” by dissolving any two of its pages in methyl alcohol and drinking the solution.

Cari Huber, of the hazardous products section of the state health board, said “100 copies or more of the magazine have been found in Indianapolis and South Bend. They have been removed from public display with the voluntary cooperation of newsstand dealers and distributors, Huber said.

Methyl alcohol is commonly called wood alcohol and could cause blindness and, “if not treated, definitely death,” Huber said.

“The same thing happened in 1964, Huber said “Its the same article and same pictures but the girl has a different name.”

The magazine, Huber said, invites readers to take the solution and experience a “trip,” viewing the pictures.

Huber said the magazine claims the pages are treated with a chemical. However, he said there is no such chemical as the one the magazine claims to contain.

Huber said he has no report of anyone attempting the experiment in Indiana, but “its still a potentially dangerous situation.”

Illinois Public Health Director Franklin Yoder said he considers “this an emergency when the printed word comes out with advice to take a poison.”

Yoder said there have been 150,000 copies of the magazine circulated in the United States and Canada “Consuming even small quantities can result in death.” Yoder warned.

Jamie's shabby little book wasn't always so shabby. His father had given it to him when he was still in bed from the explosion which had crippled him. The little book wasn't shabby then. In fact, it was quite handsome. On every page was a large colored picture. The caricatures were the prettiest of all.

He loved the shabby little book more than any of the few other things he owned. He loved it because it was about a small crippled boy who had no arms or legs. Whenever Jamie would prepare to read his book, he would turn to the last page first. On the last page, the little crippled boy clothing smiled happily. All the other people in the picture smiled at him too.

The last page was Jamie's favorite because it made him feel good. After looking at the last page he would turn to the beginning and tell the story to himself as he turned the pages and looked at the pictures.

His mother hugged him and cried again. She knew the only place the crippled boy was splattered with mud. None of the soldiers noticed. The soldier pushed them outside to a crowd of people. There were other soldiers there with guns. Jamie's mother held him tightly to their house. He yelled at them in another language and pointed his shovel. The shabby little book made him mad at his father. But Jamie was only four and had no idea why he was so mad.

One day near Christmas Jamie hobbled to his mother while she was cooking dinner. He asked her if his father would be coming home for Christmas. Jamie's mother only cried. She picked him up and hugged him and cried. SheScarred Jamie and made him cry too.

Jamie liked that very much too.

On Christmas morning Jamie's mother gave him a new crutch. It was much better than the one he used. He walked with it and it made him feel good. He knew it was because his father cried for him and it made Jamie feel good too.

Jamie liked it very much. He gave his mother five flowers. His mother hugged him and cried again. She knew the only place the flowers grew was in a far away place where Jamie's muscles had happened. She put four of the flowers in a water and a white one in his long black hair. Jamie liked that very much too.

The same week Jamie was reading the last page of his shabby little book to his mother a soldier with a long gun came to their house. He stayed at home in another language and pointed his long gun at them. Jamie held his book and his mother picked up the soldier pushed them outside to a crowd of people. There were other soldiers there with guns. Jamie's mother held him tightly to her, crushing the book between them. Jamie began to whimper just before the firing started. Jamie's mother laid on top of Jamie, her long black hair with the flowers in it, that is. In fact Jamie's shabby little book lay next to his head. Its pretty cover was crumpled. The shabby little book was still opened to the last page. The handsome picture of the little crippled boy clothing with dirt was crumpled with mud. None of the soldiers noticed the book, which was printed in their own language.

Jamie's favorite rite of all was the last line because he knew his father would come. He said, "God bless us every one." But now a dark drop of blood from Jamie's mouth blotted out the words."
The birthday party

by Harold J. Taegel

They were all there. Angela, Hank, Jack, Missy, Dan, and Penny. They were together, as they were once every week, to put out the school magazine. In the short span of three months they had become a close-knit group with a spirit and an affection that conveyed to all around their joy in being together.

This was their last issue before Christ­mas and it was also Hank’s birthday. His first two years away at school weren’t the happiest for him. The close friendships he had made in high school were now discontinued for long months at a time and the only emotion that keeps coming through the keys of our typewriter is bitterness and regret. We are sorry. We did not want a negative column for Christ­mas. We want to thank the faculty and administration of St. Mary’s for what we got.

We’ve just returned from a class meet­ing. There we heard the real true story of our span of three months that banquet. There isn’t going to be one, you see. As far as we know, we’re having a Christmas buffet. We are not having a sit­down served dinner, a candlelight procession, the holly wreath, the blessing of the Christmas tree, a Christmas service in the chapel, a Mass and it was also Hank’s birthday. His brown eyes were strangely sad; she seemed quite alone. Hank asked her if she wanted to talk, but she answered that she just wanted to be by herself. A couple of times she made valiant efforts to forget momentarily what was troubling her and enjoy the party. But, each time she failed, and Hank saw her become continually lassier as the evening wore on.

Hank was especially fond of Angela, perhaps too fond of her. He hated to see her sad, and her sadness became his sadness. He tried to think of some witty comment, or some soothing words that might make her forget her troubles. But she was too lost in herself and he was too lost in himself, at the moment, to make any communication possible.

It was a very frustrating situation for Hank, because he didn’t know how to handle other people’s unhappiness. He was afraid if he said anything he might make Angela angry at him. And such a situation would be unbearable for Hank. So, he remained silent.

Angela had given so much pleasure and enjoyment to Hank, more than she was probably aware of. And now, Hank found himself not able to do the same for Angela. Oh, how he wished he had the power to save Angela’s mind of all her troubles. Oh, how he wished he could explain to Angela where he finds beauty, joy, and happiness in the world. Oh, how, if he did this, somehow, make her always happy and optimistic.

But, sadly, Hank realized that he could not do this for her. He would have to do it all for himself. She knows it will be a tremendous struggle for her just as it is for him. But, he also knows that if her effort matches her desire, she will find a beauty, joy and a peace that she never suspected existed.

The Notre Dame Art Gallery is currently featuring a showing of two and one-half years collecting the materials for this show, which is scheduled to run until February 15.

better job of educating our alumni" concerning Notre Dame's goals and its place in American education; 2) the enthusiasm of the younger alumni who, though viewing the goals and request with a critical mind, have an increasing willingness to support an institution that can prove its worth.

"This questioning attitude is good," noted Mr. Frick, "since it forces the institution to think through what it is doing and to question its goals."

All this talk of millions, however, has a way of turning off many students, who may view the press releases as simply window dressing. "I would like to see more of the press releases than just money, however, it will be awarded to those professors of "special eminence."

On non-violence
In response to Tim Treanor's article of Monday, Dec. 8th, Dear Tim

"Belief in non-violence is based on the assumption that human nature in its essence one and therefore unfailingly responds to the advances of human kindness, which means on one level that one may love...the non-violent technique does not depend for its success on the good will of dictators..."

I enjoyed your article very much and would like to take this opportunity to talk with you for a second about what is meant by the "principle of human life." It means on one level that one may not kill other people in order to protect them, it means that evil is reversible and that freedom of the oppressed means little without the freedom of the oppressor; it means that there is nothing as important as my own life and yet nothing so much mine to give up for others if that need be.

Individual spiritual autonomy is quite a different thing from individual political or social freedom; the former is non-contingent, the latter, a blessing of course. You are certainly correct when you point out that in totalitarian countries non-violence...is a joke." I must ask to consider for whom it is a joke: the men of violence, men who all at times and places laugh at love as weakness, and whom their own hatred. But Tim, because some are blind does that mean we must all be; or must we take it as our responsibility to help those that cannot see. Non-violence is not a means for protecting nations; it is a way of sharing love.

Because others laugh at your worth, Tim, you do not have to do the same. I do not think that I am naive regarding the evil in the world, although of course I may be, when I claim that there is something quite wrong in the continuance of situations of nation's annihilation or maternal rape as warriors for personal barbarism and hate.

Neither do I overestimate my ability to change the masses. I only wish to speak to your letter and wish you peace.

Bender addresses moral issues in symposium

Should people who know that their offspring are likely to be deformed adopt children rather than have their own? If the day comes when biologists can "correct" the genes, what traits should be altered?

These are questions that the next generations will have to answer, Dr. Harvey A. Bender, professor of biology at the University of Notre Dame, told a symposium on "The Future Man" at Wheaton College Thursday (Dec. 11).

Speaking on "Man's Genetic Future," he explained that medical technology has outstripped the biological, permitting people with genetic defects to lead normal lives. For example, Bender noted that diabetics, who would have died in childhood 50 years ago, can now raise families, enjoy athletics, and die of old age.

"This is a wonderful thing," he said, "but it does mean that the genes for diabetes will increase in future populations."

The symposium, held December 11 and 12, also featured Dr. Duane Gish, associate research biochemist at Upjohn Pharmaceutical Company; Dr. David Bubry, psychiatrist and professor at Trinity Evangelical Divinity School; and Dr. Marvin Mayers, chairman of the department of sociology and anthropology at Wheaton.

The biological technology to cope with the increase of defective genes might include the ability to go into the chromosomes and correct the faulty material, Bender said, but this technique will certainly raise more questions than it answers.

"While we're changing the gene for diabetes, why not alter the material for a low intelligence or a bad disposition?" he asked.

Bender stressed that the questions raised by the genetic revolution are not only for scientists to solve, but for moralists, psychologists, sociologists, and a well-informed public.

"I am merely advocating taking the conscious responsibility for what we already do thoughtlessly—alter our future evolution and our future genetic makeup," he concluded.

Nader charges FAA laxity

WASHINGTON (UPI) Safety crusader Ralph Nader called Wednesday for a congressional investigation of the Federal Aviation Administration, saying it had failed to see that airliners are properly inspected and maintained.

Nader said the FAA had allowed airline maintenance to deteriorate to a point where it was jeopardizing both airline passengers and people on the ground.

Nader told a news conference the FAA simply "abdicated" its inspection authority to the airlines at a time when many of the carriers "have seriously undermanned and undertrained maintenance and inspection crews." He did not specifically list any unreported incidents where faulty maintenance might have led to an airliner accident, however.

In reply, the FAA said there "is no evidence of maintenance deterioration" in the nation's airline fleet. On the contrary, a spokesman said, FAA statistics show a decreasing percent age of accidents relating to maintenance problems.

TWA put a price on your head that even your parents might agree to pay.

We're out to get you home for the Holidays. Fast.

Which is something that your parents will probably enjoy too.

Something else they'll enjoy is our fares for students. (Students, that is, who are between the ages of 12 and 21 and who have youth fare to Hawaii.

Which doesn't mean you'll be flying second class or anything like that.

You still get all the great food and TWA features like movies and stereo music! But it won't cost you like it does everyone else.

And TWA flies to nearly all the major cities in the U.S., plus we have a special youth fare to Hawaii.

With all that going for you, there's only one excuse for not going home for the holidays.

Getting your hair cut.

Who needs Mount? We have Austin (42) Carr

There were a few things proved last night at the Convocation Center in Columbus when another Rick Mount. Second, Austin Carr takes a back seat to no one when talking about the outstanding guards in the country. Last night Mount scored 19 points of a possible 20 and the Buckeyes cruised to a 111-92 victory over Northern Illinois.

All right, let's go for an Athletic and Convocation Center scoring record as he hit 24 from the charity stripe for 34 of 43 points. People like the Chief Justice of the United States. Massillon High. Last year, he showed up at the Rose Bowl and the Irish will have to tighten up if they want to go to the Rose Bowl against Michigan. Probably 20,000 will be rooting for Michigan, 20,000 will be rooting for SC, and 60,000 will be looking for Bo. I can't believe that Illinois is the number one team in the Big Ten.

"You don't have to like that. Bo. You don't have to like that. Bo." Right, Bo. All right.

"Dear Bo,

All right, Miss Higginbotham, it's that time of the year again. Take a letter to What's-His-Name, that coach at Michigan. The one who's got a name than his name than the Hawaiian alphabet. Just sign it, "Dear Bo." All right?"

"Dear Bo,

Were you coming to the Rose Bowl, even though the aggregate score of the West Coast against Michigan is, Michigan, 146, Pacific Co. 13. SC is practicing mainly goal - line stands and kickoff returns.

"Since this is your first trip to the Rose Bowl, the first thing you have to do is go to the dinner, and get your name, rank, and serial number of the pras. One year, he objected to the band scuffing up the field at halftime, and implied his opponent that day would be in tough against Massillon High. Last year, he showed up at the Rose Queen luncheon without any players and demanded he be put on the board -18, although not the same as Carr, Jones, Pleick and company continued to pour in the points and the Irish lead balloons. The Buckeyes didn't take kindly to such treatment at the Convocation Center scoring record. Their names are A1, they might suggest."

"Your former mentor, Woody Hayes, always comes out here in a 2-3 4-5 6-11 Pleick 7-9 0-1 7 14

if you can score two touchdowns, Bo, the worst you can get is a Huskers, not only by little more than a whisker over newcomer Seymour.

The Bough Riders, certainly more useful as a football power in Hoosier schoolboy athletics, polled 10 of 19 first place votes from the panel of experts. The ball handling for games through last Saturday for the cream of the crop. Indiana town's history that Seymour was rated as prominently.

The Owls of coach Barney Scott drew the most votes from the board -18, although not the most points. Their total included only four first place nods.

The panel of experts tabbed no less than 35 teams as among the top teams the past two years, this was the first time in the board's history that Seymour was rated as prominently.

The second half was more of the same as Carr, Jones, Pleick and company continued to pour in the points and the Irish lead balloons. The Buckeyes didn't take kindly to such treatment at the Convocation Center scoring record. Their names are A1, they might suggest.

"Boilermakers for possibly two weeks or longer with an injured right knee sustained Tuesday night in a 100-64 victory over Butler.

Mount, who had injured the knee a month ago in practice, sustained a tendon injury in the first half of the Butler game. Purdue coaches were hopeful Mount would be ready for the start of the Big Ten campaign Jan. 3 at Iowa, if not sooner. Mount is the defending Big Ten scoring champion.

The Buckeyes, ranked 15th nationally and 2-1 for the season so far, are host Thursday to Idaho State. Other Boilermaker foes prior to the Big Ten opener include Dartmouth, Kent State and Evanston, in addition to action in the New York Holiday Festival Dec. 27-30.
