McGovern wants faster withdrawal

WASHINGTON (UPI)- Senate Republican Leader Hugh Scott said yesterday that, barring a catastrophe, President Nixon would not replace troops he withdraws from Vietnam — even if the Communists step up the fighting.

Scott assured the Senate Foreign Relations Committee the withdrawal process was "irrevocable." But opponents of the move waged their toughest attack on present policies yet – suggesting Nixon planned to leave a residual force in Vietnam of up to 300,000 men.

Scott told the committee that if North Vietnam increases the force in Vietnam of up to 150,000, Nixon planned to leave a residual force in Vietnam of up to 300,000 men.

He said the Vietnamization policy, in which local forces take over the war as Americans leave, was "a political hoax designed to screen from the American people the bankruptcy of a needless military involvement in the affairs of the Vietnamese people.

McGovern’s assertions were challenged by two Republicans.

CHARITY IS ONLY BENEFACTOR

The Mardi Gras Committee is counting on profits from the Kickoff Party and the concert to bring the fund more respectably closer to the $30,000 makin.

Though the raffle is fighting for its life, the rest of Mardi Gras programs are healthier than ever. Though there been rumors that the big weekend would be cancelled next year, only the raffle seems at this point at danger of getting the axe.

"If anything goes, that (the raffle) would be the first to go," said Vecchi.

The raffle is the single most costly item in the Mardi Gras program, this year’s prize list costing $11,500. Vecchi felt that an hour or two and the money “simply not worth a program that only breaks even.

The raffle would be retained, however, if more patrons could be found to donate prizes. This year, nothing was donated outright, with the Union offering only a 10% discount on clothes and a near-cost-price tag on the raffle car as their only, breaks on prizes.

South Bend Draft Union provides counseling

by John Simone

The South Bend Draft Union, a counseling service for those seeking information on the draft, has opened on 526 Hill Street.

"Our purpose," said James Engl, the founder of the South Bend organization, "is to provide information and assistance on the four basic alternatives to the draft: deferment, resistance, Canada, and conscientious objection."

"We will provide information on these points and on what the draft represents, how the government takes control of our lives and how to gain back control of our lives," he added.

Engl said the draft service was set up because "no draft counseling on campus is available this year to my knowledge." He added that the Union caters to the individual's problems.

Although it has been in existence for five or six months now, Engl said that his efforts have not been entirely successful.

We also intend to contact various alumni interested in necessary university improvements.

We are now beginning to circulate a petition asking all those who "favor the creation of a Chancellor-President structure and the serious consideration of Father T. Hesburgh and Willis D. Nutting to fill these posts" to join us. These petitions are being posted on the main bulletin boards in O'Shaughnessy and Niehoffland Hall and the Engineering and Business buildings, as well as in both dining halls.

For faculty and students interested in actively joining the campaign, we urge you to contact either Bob St.John or Frank Hoffman.

For second-year students interested in actively joining the campaign, we urge you to contact either Bob St.John or Frank Hoffman.

Army ROTC Two-Year Program

The Army now offers college students the opportunity to earn a commission in the United States Army after only two years of participation in Army ROTC Training.

The Two-Year Program is designed primarily for junior college graduates and for senior college sophomores who have not taken Army ROTC during their first two years of college. However, the program also is open to any student who will have completed all requirements through the sophomore year at the time of enrollment and who has a minimum of two years academic work remaining (undergraduate or graduate).

If you fit into one of the above categories and are sincerely interested in serving your country and fulfilling your military obligation as a commissioned officer in the United States Army, you are invited to apply for the Army ROTC Two-Year Program.

Prerequisites for Enrollment

In addition to being a graduate of a junior college, or a student in a four year college who has completed all requirements through the sophomore year, you must meet the following prerequisites:

1. Be physically and mentally qualified.
2. Be of sound character.
3. Be at least 17 years old.
4. Be recommended by a Board of Officers.
5. Successfully complete six weeks of summer camp training in lieu of the Basic ROTC course normally taken as a freshman and sophomore.

YOU WILL RECEIVE A TAX FREE SUBSISTENCE ALLOWANCE OF $50 PER MONTH.

IF YOU JOIN THE PROGRAM, YOU WILL BE A STEP AHEAD FOR THE REST OF YOUR LIFE

University Forum

The University Forum embarks on its maiden voyage tomorrow and whether or not we reach the promised land depends a lot on the foresight of its participants.

The potential of the group is unlimited. Made up of every segment of the community, alumni, trustees, faculty, graduate students, and administrators, the Forum will provide ample opportunity for each of them to express their feelings about the direction that they feel Notre Dame should be headed. The Forum will also provide a tremendous opportunity for all members of the community to confront our leaders about the serious issues that face Notre Dame.

There is much talk these days about the generation gap. Most people say that it results because of a lack of a lack of communication. The communication gap in turn is blamed for a myriad of evils. The Forum is a valuable step in trying to bridge the gap here at Notre Dame.

We hope that the participants of all groups will be honest about their feelings. The Forum should be no place for politics. Politics may have a place in organs such as the Student Senate or the Student Life Council since many compromises must be made in order to assure the passage of bills in a form that will be acceptable to all parties. What should be sought for in the Forum however is an airing of the true feelings of all groups of the community about campus issues. Notre Dame is a university community and perhaps if all sides of an issue are brought forth at a time when all segments can hear and discuss them we can reach intelligent rational conclusions, free of emotions, about the best course that should be pursued.

To argue that a frank presentation of all sides of the coin will produce unanimity about the course of action may be an exercise in unproductive wishful thinking—but if the idea can work anywhere, it can work at Notre Dame. There is a peculiarity about Notre Dame that doesn't exist elsewhere. Notre Dame's student's energies are motivated by new attitudes acquired through the constant interplay of personalities in the Notre Dame community. The education of a "Notre Dame man" are community and the subsequent creative dialogue.

A Notre Dame student's energies are motivated by new attitudes acquired through the constant interplay of personalities in the Notre Dame community. The education of a "Notre Dame man" are community and the subsequent creative dialogue.

It is on the basis of these university commitments that we find it necessary to seek the establishment of a chancellor-president structure at Notre Dame. As we view the years we have been associated with Notre Dame, it is clear that our President is more a member of the International community than our own:

From the beginning of his career, Hesburgh has made a remarkable impression on the Establishment. Beginning with the National Science Foundation, Hesburgh began getting invitations to sit on the board and act as adviser to more and more of America's most powerful private foundations and Government commissions. He accepted them with an appetite which can only be described as voracious. He is director of the Institute of International education, the Carnegie Foundation for the Advancement of Teach and the Woodrow Wilson Fellowship corporation. A member of the Letter

Open Letter to the Notre Dame Community:

From time to time it is necessary to make some very basic changes in the structure of a university community. Such was the case in 1967 when Notre Dame moved to create a governing board with equal priest and lay representation (i.e., "the Fellows of Notre Dame"), and also to give the newly formed "Board of Trustees" full control of the University. Out letter is concerned with an equally significant alteration: the creation of the post of Chancellor.

Admittedly the two features most heavily emphasized in the education of a "Notre Dame man" are community and the subsequent creative dialogue.

To spend half of the school year away from Notre Dame is the life-style of the most vital link in our academic community. This situation is amenable from both sides, Father Ted's and the community. Nevertheless, it is probable that extended and frequent absence from the university community makes it difficult indeed to carry on any sort of creative dialogue.

Clearly we do not intend to meddle with the election of our current President in the name of Notre Dame. We realize and appreciate these accomplishments and their value. With this understanding, we are actively seeking the creation of the post of chancellor, to which Father Hesburgh would be elevated. Broadly speaking his activities and duties would remain the same, with one exception: he would no longer be required to deal with matters of strictly internal concern. The President, then, would be an officer actively and constantly within the community.

It is our most considered opinion that this new position would best serve in such a capacity. Given his personal commitment to Notre Dame and his educational background as a whole one can expect and anticipate the type of reform we are seeking in regard to the structure of the University of Notre Dame as a community of scholars.

To strive for the ideal community is the goal of Notre Dame, it is our goal as well. Peace, Nurturing for President Headquarters

Return to the Midwest

Leaving to the shores of deux lacs again after semester break is not a trifling matter. Butterflies and dew, summer nights, and quietly quiet and happy-type days away from home. Only the clutter of books, and theimg of — F — from the windows of our hallowed halls, one heathen, indeed revolts, at the thought of his imminent return. Many strong words flow to the poetic pen. Others curse the flannel in and of South Bend, some in print. But being unable to exude such bitterness, and having observed the failure of Marilyn Becker's crusade in executing geographic, topographic, meteorological changes, I resolved to discover a new method of re-entry.

The alternatives were scarcely encouraging. An attempt at exalting the merits of home away from home was shortsighted when I could muster only the old Nebraska barrack grounds (as an unmatchable object of beauty and tradition) and the tremendous sense of civic cooperation here in South Bend. Though thoughts of the former created a lump in my throat (thinking of it now I can scarcely go on), I was forced to abandon this and several other alternatives as impractical.

Furnishing to a more promising angle my fertile mind gave birth to the idea of being creative, or inventing the so-called advantages of living outside of the great Midwest. Now I was on a modish one as I uncovered such Southern sethbacks as sunburn, tropical storms, and the presumed advantage of being so far away from home. George Wallace, Lester Maddox, and Strom Thurmond. Gathering momentum I set upon the fact the California would soon be only a memory and that the Midwest was a place to be first to be inundated by future tidal waves or sea attack (or for that matter the Midwest is a flood plain of the Mississippi). George Wallace, Lester Maddox, and Strom Thurmond.

But I really didn’t understand that the eastern businesses concerning the Penn Central Railway had purposely dirtied the windows to obscure the beauty of the Midwest down below. Rather than the usual perfunctory parables. His songs stand as music and if you tell, but he is writing songs not stories or parables. His songs may have stories to tell, but he is writing songs not stories or parables.

Gazing triumphantly out the window of the train that deposited eyes on nothing but grey dreariness. Struggling to hold back the tears I knew were soon to come, I took on a northern silence. In such a state my ears were barely able to pick up a remark on the desolate condition of the windows. Sighing, I thought the ship's of his voice and the roughness of his music it comes across.

"She believes that witches fly crazy 'round the moon, She believes an angel hides in the corner of her room, She believes the ship's come home singing from the sea,"

A song like Mississippi Bird could well become a classic for that very reason. In that song he is singing to a girl, who I am certain didn’t know you if I had lived my life in Tennessee...."

The second cut, Razor-Back Woman, is the only song on the entire album that demands an interpretation. It is specific for most people to identify. Stewart is singing about one particular individual woman and in particular in her region is too strong to be more than a description Stewart, however, is as safe from attack as the North Pole to be inundated by future loidal waves or sea attack (or for that matter the Midwest is a flood plain of the Mississippi). George Wallace, Lester Maddox, and Strom Thurmond.

"And just in time I might have never known you if I go into the world, Suzannah, will you wait for me? If I go into the world, Suzannah, I'll come back and tell you what I've seen."

Despite the personal meaning of his song, everyone can understand what is being thought of I here.

"Yet John Stewart is not out to air his laundry in public. He wants to share his life with the people who like his music. When he is happy, he wants you to be happy with him. In July, You're A Woman he sings a floating and careful song about a girl simply because she with him and he enjoys that. "I can't hold it on the road when you're sitting right beside me And I'm drunk out of my mind merely from the fact that you are here. And I have not been known as the saint of San Joaquin."

West Central Missouri was made just as soon now pull on over to the side of the road and show you what I mean."

"July, you're a woman, More than any one I've ever known."

It is difficult to translate the impression of John Stewart's music to mere prose because unlike someone like Bob Dylan, Stewart's songs are made up of words and the words themselves will seem cold and lifeless if you don't know the music.

"Stewart loves the people and he loves the music.

"She believes that witches fly crazy 'round the moon, She believes an angel hides in the corner of her room, She believes the ships come home singing from the sea,"

One song is sung just for other musicians who might be going through things that he's been through.

"I often get the feeling that I'm talking to the wind.."

And I'm believing that even when I've seen that someone picks up that I'm singing in this song."

A nice touch used in the credits shows how John Stewart prizes his fellow musicians. Rather than the usual perfunctory list of studio musicians on the back of the cover, they thank them all by name during the last cut, Never Going Back, dubbing each with a special nickname (I'd like to know the story behind the nickname "Bourbon-Beetle White"). After singing about how he's "never going back to Nashville" because of a girl who didn't wrong him, they thank all the Nashville musicians who played on his album, then he laughs and says, "This song is a lie: Never going back? Oh, I'm coming back! One day soon going back to Nashville!

But perhaps the most successful song on the entire album is the least likely. It is the longest song on the album and is half spoken and half sung. Mother Country is neither singing nor the traditional talking blues. It's just John Stewart sitting in a recording studio with some friends and singing about his country to him. About is the bitter anti-Americanism of the Jefferson Airplane and similar quasi-political music groups. Also missing is the flag-waving and mindless patriotism of many country-western songs. What there seems to be a man talking about an old lady who laid back at the turn of the century: "(They) was just a lot of people doing the best they could", an old photographer and a horse trainer he once named E.A. Stewart and his prize trotter, Sweetheart-on-Parade (Stewart's father was a horse trainer and despite the fact that he takes the trouble to spell it out, the word is a lie: Never going back?)

John Stewart's music is his way of saying to you, "That's all. It's that simple. John Stewart loves the people and he loves the land. This may be what everyone else is missing these days.

It's all just Nashville roots and California bloodlines.

Hamilton plans to aid Biafrans

The Observer obtained permission from MacMans, John & Adams, Inc., a national advertising agency, to reprint this message. It first appeared in the December 12 issue of Time magazine as a part of an experiment in communication sponsored by Time.

(According to MIAA, the message so effectively captured the mood of the nation, that there has been a flood of requests for the ad.)

"We are very pleased with the success of this ad," said Charles F. Adams, president of MacMans, John & Adams, Inc. "It was part of an experiment in communication sponsored by Time magazine. Time asked a group of agencies to turn their creative energy loose on any topic at all, except a product. We enjoyed the challenge."

Requests for reprints started coming in the day the ad appeared. By the day after publication, MIAA's proofing room had extended to 10,000. People from all walks of life, from all over the country, including Canada, responded. Universities, schools, students and teachers were particularly responsive.

The curious thing about the MIAA ad was that it solicited no inquiries, had no call to action, ran no coupon, didn't even include the agency's address. All it did was touch a nerve.

MIAA Bloomfield Hills Creative Director Ron Monchak decided to write an ad about America that would tell it like it is. Monchak's words hit home. Art Director Elaine Ohms's simple handling of the words, in her own handwriting, brought them into an even more personal focus.

"As I was brainstorming, I decided to work the ad the way he did, Monchak said, "'Quite frankly, I don't know. I just wrote it the way I felt.'"
Advocate Nutting for President

by Dave Fromm

Two students are leading a campaign to restructure Notre Dame's administrative framework to allow for a Chancellor and a President. St. Mary's junior Karen Grabowski and Notre Dame senior Steve Raymond, along with other students, are suggesting that Rev. Theodore Hesburgh, CSC, be appointed "chief administrative officer" as Chancellor.

They are further suggesting that Willis D. Nutting, Associate Professor, Emeritus, in the Department of History, be the post vacated by Father Hesburgh's elevation and have organized Nutting for President Headquarters.

A mimeographed letter explaining the campaign was distributed by Headquarters to faculty members yesterday morning and stated in part: "Clearly we do not intend to degrade the activities of our current President... Broadly speaking, his activities and duties would remain the same (as Chancellor), with one exception: he would no longer be required to deal with matters of strictly internal concern. The President, then, would be an officer active and constantly present within the community..."

Dr. Nutting knew nothing of the campaign to make him president until yesterday morning when he read the faculty letter. He said that at first he thought the idea was a joke. But when he realized the sincerity of the letter, he said that he felt highly complimented by what people were trying to do for him.

"You have no idea how astonished I am," he said.

A letter to the Editor, received by the Observer from Nutting for President Headquarters yesterday, is printed in full below.

Editor:

During the first week in February the members of the Notre Dame Board of Trustees have been contacted by the Nutting for President Headquarters in an attempt to gain support for restructuring of the administrative framework of the University to allow for a Chancellor and a President.

President Theodore Hesburgh, Chairman of the Board Edmund A. Stephen and the rest of the governing members of the University of Notre Dame du Lac have been requested to join us in creating the post of chancellor, and appointing Father Hesburgh to serve in this position as "the chief administrative officer." The new Chancellor would be responsible for all of the external relations of the University, while the post of President would be redefined to deal only with strictly internal affairs.

Though the Scholastic, in its January 16th "Presidential Portfolio" conspicuously overlooked Willis D. Nutting, the Nutting for President Headquarters intends to wage a vigorous campaign to gain the post for Dr. Nutting, who is being retired after 35 years of teaching at Notre Dame. To gain for Willis D. Nutting the vacancy left by Father Hesburgh's elevation is the objective of the Nutting for President Headquarters: We have begun our campaign by directly contacting Notre Dame's 600 faculty members. We intend to continue our efforts by providing the students with as much information as possible about (1) the problems involved in such an administrative structural change and (2) the qualifications of Father T. Hesburgh and Willis D. Nutting for filling the positions of Chancellor and President respectively.

BLACK ANGUS

STEAK HOUSE

1516 N. Ironwood Dr. southeast of Convocation Center between South Bend Ave. and Edison Rd.

I used to come paralleling down the head wall, my skis used to click like castanets. I was the biggest thing in the Alps since Hannibal's pieces, but the medics recommend I go back to the beginning.

"The tibia—caught it on the cornice at Alta. Damn bad show."

I also load up on plenty of cigarettes. I don't smoke, but you've all heard of the TV guy, sitting in a chair with a busted ankle, waving bratty to his bulldog as they go up the T-bar in the Alps. You know where you place your own smooth cigarette when you come hobbling in and ask him for a cigarette. I usually carry a cartoon in case this happens to me.

If some wise guy happens to notice you've got one foot in the air the one day and the other foot the next, just look at him scornfully and say, "I think I know which tibia it is!" The only trouble is, the rest of the stay, DON'T SIT down.

The crutch also permits you, as the British say, "Jump the queue" at the chairlift. Nobody would keep an injured man standing in line, particularly if you smiled this wan little smile and say, "No, no, that's all right, I'm quite used to it. They've got the bone set temporarily! The fat won't be till tomorrow. They think they can save the leg."

But, as you know, I always come to June Mountain a few times a year to shake the smog and printer's ink out of my nostrils, and see the fire the trees and gush in the air of the golden country of the Sierra.

And, now, you're getting wise to me. I hold the record for hot wine consumption by guys on one leg at the June Mountain chalet, and, my pals, Dotti and Andy Oldfield at Boulder Lodge, KNOW I keep the plaster cast in the trunk of the car because, one day, I had to dash a hand to my head. "Now, Tom, are you going to write it on the toe area.

So, I decided I would actually get on skis. I had to brazen it out, because I had had in the June Mountain beginners' class. So, I rented equipment, and showed up in checking in with the young ski instructors.

Now, all ski instructors look like they should be carrying machine guns and chasing Paul Henreid over the Swiss border. I mean, they have to be brave because they were drinking-dorks as they got more valves and boiler-plate like some locomotives. They look as though they are doing their best to sink the hoolock of the Alps.

My instructor was no exception. He looked at me coldly as if it was something he had just captured in the cellar of a French farmhouse. "Name?" he said coldly. "Murray," I told him. "First name?" he said. "Jean-Clauide," I answered.

"Ever skied before?" he barked. I briddled. "Skied before?" I sneered. "Lanier! I threw the powder so high at Alta the meteorologists were convinced in six states thought they were tracking a blizzard. I was a forerunner at six Olympics and beat the eventual winner under three clocks. I'm FALLOW since you've skied, son.

His lip curled in an Erich von Stroheim sneer. "Then, what are you doing?" he asked me. "Do you take me for a fool?" He gave me a heartbroken smile. "Listen, Helmet—is it Helmet, ain't it?—I'm phosed out for the moment. Anesthesia, you know. Got it at Barratt, the Was Khas crashed into me. Or maybe it was one of the Kennedy's. I forget. It's beginning to come back to me in bits and pieces, but the medics recommend I go back to the beginning.

"Pierre, an hour ago, I took a flyer of sympathy from his face, but it was probably only the sun on his monocle. "Can you snowplow?" he demanded of me. "Tell me. I told him, "I'd rather ski."

He looked at me strangely. "A snowplow IS a ski maneuver," he instructed me. "Can you remember anything from your racing days?"

I thought for a moment. "Well, I'm a skier in the Veronique, my skis crossed, my eyes crossed. I crashed. I pounded my fist in the snow and started to sob. "If only I could remember!" I wept. "Me! The toast of two continents!"

But, as I told later, my hot meat coldly. "It's beginning to come back," I told a well-wisher. "My downhill ski is still a bit lazy. But I should be ready by Sapporo." I gave him my autograph prayerfully. "Remember," I wrote. "Skating is also mental."
