Kunstler to speak here in Sunday afternoon address

by Bill Carter

In the last major event under the present leadership, the Student Union Academic Commission has scheduled a speech by William M. Kunstler for this Sunday afternoon. Kunstler served as defense attorney at the controversial "Chicago seven" trial last month, and is currently defending H. Rap Brown, who is on trial in Maryland. The lecture will begin at 1:30 and will be held in Stepan Center in expectation of a crowd surpassing the 2200 that turned out to hear Dr. Benjamin Spock.

Kunstler is scheduled to arrive shortly after one, deliver his speech and answer questions following the lecture. The Academic Commission has given press passes to all the local news departments and has already received responses from the Chicago press and most of the South Bend agencies.

Commission Director Pat McDiarmid described some of the problems he contends his organization had encountered in securing Kunstler's acceptance to speak. He said the Commission had tentatively contacted Kunstler in an attempt to have him come to Notre Dame to speak on March 8 but that the offer had fallen through when the lawyer was furnished to begin his work on Brown's defense earlier than expected.

"When that date fell through we started working right away on finding out when Kunstler would next be available," McDiarmid said. "But we ran into some immediate complications. We found out Kunstler would be in New York, and San Francisco areas.

The survey is the most recent project visiting relatives in the Sioux tribe.

The survey, which will take place over the Easter vacation period, will cover merchants in the South Bend, Chicago, New York, and San Francisco areas. The purpose is, according to Dow, to interest department stores, novelty shops, and psychic shops in the products of the Sioux tribe.

The goods are divided into three types: leather work, bead work, and the most expensive products, original wood carvings. An added problem which arises with the head work, Dow contended, is that it must compete with mass produced and thus less expensive commercial products.

The current survey will be conducted by members of the project visiting relatives in the aforementioned cities. The hope of Professor Dow is that the survey in the future will encompass up to fifteen cities.

The survey is the most recent step in a project which began when Professor Dow met Chief Red Bird at the University's Indian Conference and became fascinated with the man's goal to gain economic stability for a community which currently has 75% of its inhabitants unemployed.

Projecting ideas which may be undertaken in the future, Professor Dow talked of the possibility of a tourist service, and means (continued on page 3)

Business survey taken to help Indian business

Professor Frederick Dow of the Marketing Department and graduate students working with the Sioux Craft Project met yesterday with Chief Red Bird and other members of the Rosebud Reservation to formulate plans for an upcoming market survey. The survey, which will take place over the Easter vacation period, will cover merchants in the South Bend, Chicago, New York, and San Francisco areas. The purpose is, according to Dow, to interest department stores, novelty shops, and psychic shops in the products of the Sioux tribe.

Facility Senate adds students

by John Abowd

The Faculty Senate in its regular March meeting last night amended its by-laws to allow "two official representatives each from the Graduate Student Union and Student Government...speaking privileges on the floor of the Senate while in formal session."

The motion carried by a vote of 33-2, only one more vote than the 32 needed for passage. Since this is the first amendment to the by-laws of the Senate, Tiber said he presumed it would be effective "as of this minute."

Prof. Daniel Pasto of the Executive Committee introduced the report. Professor Joseph Tichen, Chairman of the Senate said that "student government" included whatever structures might develop from changes now being considered, specifically in the status of the Hall Presidents Council. He said he had consulted Student Body President-elect Dave Krashna regarding the use of the words Student Government rather than "Student Senate," as the resolution originally read.

The Senate also soundly rejected a resolution from the subcommittee on campus security presented by Prof. Robert Anthony calling for a parking fee of ten dollars per semester to be levied against faculty members in order to defer the cost of additional campus security. He contended that the present situation seemed unfair because students were required to pay 5.75 while the faculty parked free.

Prof. LeClair Belfo, from the Department of Finance, spoke against the resolution, arguing that faculty cars were not the victims of night time vandalism and the 4,000 dollars this fee proposed would be "a pittance in the bucket" in the $200,000 to $300,000 proposed for the (continued on page 3)

Sihanouk deposed

BANGKOK, Thailand (UPI)—Rightwing opponents bru­quedly deposed Cambodia's neu­tralist chief of state Prince Nondom Sihanouk yesterday evening. He was away in Moscow, Sihanouk warned the move could result in war with North Vietnam and vowed to return, even if it meant his arrest.

The official Phnom Penh Radio announced the Cambodian National Assembly had ousted Sihanouk, 47, naming him for the "political crisis" created by the presence of at least 40,000 North Vietnamese and Viet Cong troops on Cambodian territory.

Air travel and communica­tions with the Cambodian capital had been cut off shortly before the announcement. A correspondent for the Japanese Kyodo news agency reported that tanks and troops were moved in Wednesday morning, apparently before the ouster, to guard important government buildings in Phnom Penh.

The broadcast said Sihanouk was replaced provisionally by Cheng Heng, 50, a millionaire lawyer and national assembly speaker who had been acting as chief of state since the Cam­bodian leader went abroad.

The key figure behind the takeover was believed to be Gen. Lon Nol, Cambodian premier and armed forces commander, who has led the recent drive to oust Sihanouk.

Wednesday's takeover came only two days after Vice President North Vietnamese negoti­ators ignored a Cambodian government demand that their troops leave the country and demanded, instead, that Cambodia pay them reparations for damages done to their embassies by anti-Communist Cambodian mobs that sacked the embassies during three days of riotous demonstrations.

In Washington the White House had no immediate com­ment on the situation in Cam­bodia. "We're watching the situ­ation very closely and have no comment on it," White House Press Secretary Ronald Ziegler said.

Observers said the Nixon administration supposedly was adopting an extremely cautious attitude because of the possibil­ity that Sihanouk might still return to power and because of the generally delicate nature of Cambodian politics.

News of the ouster reached Sihanouk as he was ending a four-day visit to Moscow during which he was reported to have urged the Soviets to use their influence in obtaining the with­drawal of North Vietnamese and Viet Cong forces from his Kingdom.

Before flying to Peking Wed­nesday, Sihanouk said he had been told by Premier Alexei N. Kosygin that "war will be inevitable between Cambodia and Vietnam, if the extreme rightists continue to attack our allies."

Hippies hijack U.S. munitions ship

WASHINGTON (UPI) – The captain of the hijacked SS Columbia Eagle believes that as many as five crewmen might have been involved in the mutiny that diverted the munitions ship to Cambodia, it was disclosed yesterday.

Capt. Donald Swann said in a cablegram that the ship was seized at gunpoint by "two armed hippies, Clyde McKay and Alvin Glatkowski," but that three other seamen were believed to be "involved to some extent." He identified them as Dan Monin, Bruce Gray and Maurice Sather.

The disclosure was made here by Sen. Mark O. Hatfield (R-Ore.), who released the contents of a cablegram from Swann to J.C. Thayer, president of the Columbia Steamship Co., which leased the vessel to the Military Sea Transportation Service.

In Portland, Ore., Thayer's company listed Monin as being from Phoenix, Ariz., Gray from Merrick, N.Y., and Sather from Motley, Minn. Glatkowski, 20, is from Long Beach, Calif. McKay, 25, is from Escondido, Calif.

The State Department said yesterday the vessel was being "detained temporarily" while Cambodian authorities investigated to determine how it came to enter their waters.

The Defense Department said Adm. John McCain Jr., commander of all U.S. forces in the Pacific, rejected suggestions from subordinates that the Navy forcibly retrieve the Columbia Eagle from Cambodia, which granted political asylum to McKay and Glatkowski.

Sources described McKay and Glatkowski to UPI as marijuana-smoking hippies who opposed the Vietnam War. The ship was taking munitions to Thailand for use in Vietnam.

Jerry W. Friedheim, a Defense Department spokesman, said Swann radioed that one of the mutineers indicated there would be more such hijackings.

"McKay and Glatkowski stated from the beginning that if the Cambodian government would not seize the vessel that they would scuttle it, that everyone would have to get off at the earliest opportunity," Swann said.

But later, Swann said, "This was changed to where the master could stay aboard."

Swann said "a Cambodian gunboat made fast alongside while another circled the vessel."

Sweeney asks for return of pictures

The Observer got a call yesterday from Sweeney's Shamrock in South Bend.

During the St. Patrick's Day festivities some Notre Dame students walked off with some pictures that have little monetary value but a lot of sentimental value for Mrs. Sweeney and the members of the people down there.

The first picture was presented to Mr. Paul Sweeney a number of years ago by Notre Dame football star Frank Coughlin.

Two other pictures taken from the backroom of Sweeney's were of some former Notre Dame football players.

Mrs. Sweeney informed The Observer that she hoped that the students who took them would return them. She said that if they were returned there would be no questions asked. They could be returned personally or mailed to Mrs. Sweeney, 701 E. Market, or through to the Observer office.

Mrs. Sweeney indicated that a fine relation existed between Notre Dame students and people down there and she expressed the hope that they would understand the sentimental value that the pictures had to her and that they would be returned.

Faculty Senate debates parking fee proposal

A resolution to create a University Architectural planning committee to advise the administration on building priorities, selection of architects, supervision of construction and furnishing, and cooperation with local government was passed 35-1. The motion recommended that faculty members of professional competence in this area be appointed to the committee.

The final article of business was the creation of an ad hoc committee to investigate faculty participation in long and short range budgetary planning and report its findings to the Senate proper.

The Faculty Senate will meet again next month.

Kunstler coming Sunday

Academic Commission to set up Kunstler’s schedule so that he could speak early in the afternoon and still have time to make plane connections to be in Chicago by five.

“Were we very pleased to learn that Kunstler said he wanted to speak at only two Universities in the country and that Notre Dame was one of them,” McDonough said. “The other was Harvard. Kunstler believes Notre Dame’s free speakers policy gives him an opportunity to expand his views in close proximity to the Chicago area where many universities had previously denied him the right to speak.

In addition, he thinks Notre Dame’s national student body will give him the chance to reach the widest possible range of student opinion.”

McDonough indicated that there had been some opposition in the campus of Kunstler’s speak­ing but that the Committee had received the complete support of both Fr. Hesburgh and Fr. McCarther.
He also said he had heard some

When I read the press release that the Student Union Academic Commission sent me concerning the upcoming Kunstler lecture, I was struck with a pair of thoughts. The first was my strong distaste in the courtroom. The second thought, no less important than the first, was in the form of a question.

Don't the Academic Commission have some sort of policy concerning speakers which says that they will attempt to bring people from both sides of the political fence to Notre Dame? And even if they haven't such a policy shouldn't it? With all due modesty, I think that the conservative philosophy has something to offer Notre Dame. Even if students think differently they still will have the opportunity to hear the other side. As I see it, and I'm sure the commissioners agree, the function of the Academic Commission is to educate students by arranging to have persons representing various points of view speak on campus. I feel that the Academic Commission is lacking the balance necessary to be considered an educative service. The commissioners' political feelings seem to determine the points of view to be represented.

Out of the sum total of all the speakers the commission has sponsored I could only remember three, that could be considered conservative. The first, Russell Kirk, was obviously conservative. Yet I stretched the point a bit in classifying Cmndr. Loyd Bucher as a conservative. I remember a conversation between myself and the current Academic Commissioner in which he told me that he had ascertainment about the same time that the Cmndr. was going to make a speech on his own political views, since "the students wouldn't be interested in it." It seems the Cmndr. made the horrible mistake of talking about patriotism and loyalty and all kinds of other rot like that in his last speech before some alumni. The commission wanted to make sure that he would talk about the Pueblo incident only. Yet I will concede the fact that Cmndr. Bucher is conservative.

The third person which I felt had a conservative point of view was Dr. Edward Teller. The nature of his talk did not exactly lend itself to expressing a conservative point of view. Rather it was an explanation of the reasons behind present governmental nuclear policy. However Dr. Teller is conservative.

There was one other person that I almost forgot. Brig. Gen. Richard Dunn who was also conservative. The only objection I have is that I would hesitate to match the General's drawing power against such eminent liberals as Charles Goodell, Roger Hiltman, Vance Hartke, and Richard Hatcher. However he is conservative.

Still though if one leaves back and considers the various speakers that have been sponsored by SUAC you can't help but feel that there was a limited number of liberal and radical speakers brought here, in proportion to conservative.

A quick rundown of the list of speakers brings forth such names as David Steinberg, Dr. Benjamin Spock, Hans Morgenthau, Rennie Davis, David Dellinger, Paul Goodman are scarcely the guiding lights here, in proportion to conservative.

I realize that there may be problems in getting some major conservative speakers to come to campus. Yet for two years now I have heard three different Academic Commissioners tell me that they were going to have such men as Barry Goldwater, Bill Buckley, and James Farmer and Jackson to speak on campus. Yet somehow they have never materialized. Instead we have been treated with the bombastic rhetoric of Rennie Davis and Benjamin Spock.

Maybe I'm wrong, but I for one would like the Academic Commission to come out and admit the truth. I would like them to admit that they don't really follow a balanced speaker policy, but rather they follow the political leanings of the individual commissioners.
Women's liberation: a radical restructuring

by Kathy Celly

The end's of liberation are two. The first is personal transcendence, the basic in ways in which a human being experiences herself. The second end is community transformation, the individual is finally cognizant of the conditioning that has been exerted upon her, and her and its sources in social institutions is part. The second ends are closely intertwined and interdependent.

Women experiences herself as a free and autonomous being. She finds, however, when confronting the world that she is conditioned to be. Her lack of education increases her dependency on others, her desire for a husband to care for her. Marriage is presented as an opportunity to evade her personal responsibilities and reactions which the man takes upon himself when he goes out into the world each day. The woman's role is to see her husband to get married as ideal. She cares for the house and children in return for a security and her existence. She is cared for, and through her husband and children she remains more influential and secure in society than she would be able to attain on her own. The paradox here is, that while the man seeks to deny himself through his husband, he seeks self realization through her.

The man is able to view woman as an object through which he can realize his ego. Woman then is all that man desires object through which he can realize his ego. She sets herself up as an object rather than subject in her own mind. A split is, of course, a severe condition for her. She can accomplish nothing alone. She too needs an object to which she can respond and so determine. The object which man seeks, constantly defines her categories by suggestion of a personal subjectivity which has nothing to do with her. The woman then is all that man desires (self realization) and she is simultaneously an intimation of what he cannot attain (a perfect object to the struggle for his own transcendence.)

While he wants her as an object he is always aware that because of the role he imposes on her, she is immersed in the immediate. She is a hint of death. Man threatened. When her body takes on a consciousness of its own, that consciousness becomes a thing that must be fought. The struggle then, one between two conscious beings neither of whom can be free as long as the other remains conscious. For the woman, consciousness denies the objectivity a perfect object imposes on itself and assert its own subjectivity. It is the woman who is forced by the threat of social efforts of society to define her subjectivity in lieu of the man's. She must define herself in such a way that she is forced to glorify her ignorance. She becomes an ideal and claim pride in herself. She applied a term to herself, consider herself a fascinating and mysterious entity. The woman must maintain this illusion because it is the basis of her appeal. She finds herself involved in an unbalanced situation. The basic inequality lies in the fact that the man finds self realization in his work. He at least has that opportunity, that choice. For the woman that liberty has strictly negative connotations. The world thwarts her. In the home she is safe and she must be assumed to do a fine job on her own. She finds herself in a situation which man seeks, constantly defies his own.

A generation of American youth are growing up with the mistaken impression that the blues were discovered—or invented—by the Rolling Stones and in May at the Woodstock Festival. They will live under another misconception—that Blood, Sweat and Tears were the first group to appear in their own right. What will they be talking about tonight? Well, you can be pretty sure that questionnaire will arrive about folk and jazz musicians. Critics claim that Blood, Sweat and Tears are just trying to get offers than they can take, while they themselves aren't getting any. Yet there is a difference in behavior because BSAT are good at what they do, but what they do isn't jazz, and certainly isn't as creative as the things that Herbie Hines cock or Gary McFarland are doing, with far less attention from the music community than they deserve.

The media tells her that she is something to be acquired. As a desirable object she is valuable for selling other products. The desire in purely sexual terms becomes more blatant here. The man's role, as possessor and aggressor, is called to the fore. To be a man is to possess the type of woman the media establishes as desirable. And to possess her is in daily to own a car or to use a certain after shave lotion which she adores. She cannot concretely realize her. In the home she is safe and finds herself with something universal and her subjectivity in lieu of the man's. She finds this to be the most

Hesburgh's Studebaker victim of attack

An anonymous phone call was received early morning Tuesday for the driver of the Studebaker of the Observer. The caller identified himself as a member of the Studebaker Liberation Front. He revealed the car was stolen from the clinic, where it was being serviced to keep the drivers from controlling their own bunch.

The caller was trying to adopt a policy of "live and let live" between the hippie communities and tourists using the recreational facilities of the industriously in pursuit of the vehicle's owner. The anonymous caller didn't give hint of whose car was attacked, so beingimity among the hippies was immediately called the ever alert nite security guards. The campus crime fighters were unable to give any assistance in tracing the auto's ownership, this being a private issue. He guard contact the South Bend police victim of attack Upon learning this the staff suggested that the caller identify himself to the South Bend Police Department. He did not want to call the South Bend police. They're "fun stories like these." The caller's identity was traced to Fr. Hesburgh. He was immediately notified of such a leftist assault.

Letters to the Editor

The following is clarifying a statement attributed to Tom Lang which was in an article written by Mark Day in Monday's paper. The article was a report of a meeting on military obligation which was a part of the Junior Parent's Weekend activities.

Editor:

Mr. Day wrote: "He also defended ROTC on campus, saying that, like engineering and Business Administration, it teaches how to do, not to think." Now if I really was defending ROTC, why would I say a damning thing like that? Actually, I was explaining that I felt such criticism of ROTC stemmed from a misconception of the idea of a university. I likened this position to that which would get rid of the College of Business Administration because it allegedly teaches one "to do, and not to think or know." Never at any time did I state or even imply that these charges were true, especially with respect to ROTC. In fact, I recall implying that they were unwarranted.

Sincerely,

Thomas Lang

Editor:

I find the recent statements in The Observer by Mr. Peter Dubois to be a particularly salient example of the irresponsible sophisms fashionably put forth as meaningful comments on important political and social problems. Of special interest is his statement in the March 15 Observer concerning the selling of a local building for the relief of Biafran war victims. His rationale is that "So long as we give charity instead of ourselves we are saving the victims of the world with our right hands and murdering them with our left."

Leaving aside the question of the misty-eyed liberal masochism that this type of manifesto implies, one might ask Mr. Dubois: a) in just what way is the giving of money obtained by hocking a church building not charity, and how does this money substantially differ from money raised by other means; b) is giving money ever truly giving "ourselves," assuming that one would wish not to cling to the traditional American ethic "pay as you pray"; c) since when does the rather serious indictment of murder, even if used in hyperbole, follow from the premise that charity is suffering from a deficiency of "giving of ourselves"; d) how do you save someone and murder them at the same time?

These criticisms are in no way intended to apologize for the terrific obtuseness of most of us in regards to less fortunate people than ourselves. It seems to me, however, that grandiloquent statements and moral posturing of this kind do little to further advance the spiritual and mental enlightenment of the hardened or the neglectful. It is only rhetoric. One suspects that this is the kind of language referred to by Robert Brustein in the last issue of the "New Republic" as the language of "cocktail party revolutionaries," that is, passionate language spoken "against a background of institutional safety." Notre Dame is a very safe institution.

Sincerely,

Thomas M. Booker

Zinn to speak

Howard Zinn, author of Disobedience and Democracy, will speak in the Engineering Auditorium Thursday at 8:00. The topic of Zinn's speech is "The Necessity of Disobedience."

Zinn's book Disobedience and Democracy, is an answer to the Fortas' treatise entitled Concerning Dissent and Civil Disobedience, which, as Zinn's opinion, contains nine basic fallacies.

Zinn was a leader in the civil rights movement and is presently engaged in the draft resistance movement.

Presently, Zinn is a professor of government at Boston University. The speech is sponsored by The Program for the Study and Practice of the Non-Violent Resolution of Human Conflict.

"We haven't made any special security precautions at all," McDough said. "We really don't think there will be a need for it. We feel the students will have enough integrity not to disrupt the lecture or cause any violence. Then will be no restrictions on the audience."

The Academic Commission has received no official word as yet from Kunstler as to the topic of his speech but it is believed that he will address himself to the question of justice in the contemporary American courtroom. Kunstler's background includes work in the civil rights and free speech movements, representing such groups as the CORE Freedom Riders, the Catholic Draft Protestors in Milwaukee and Baltimore, the Southern Christian Leadership Conference, the Mississippi Freedom Democratic Party, and the Black Panthers.

Kunstler also argued the famous case that declared de facto segregation unconstitutional in Washington DC schools. He lists among his more notable past clients Dr. Martin Luther King, Jerry Rubin, and Jack Ruby. McDough said he didn't think there would be a need for it.

Sam Thong fighting continues

(UPI)-Reliable military sources said fighting yesterday was reported still going on in the outskirts of Sam Thong, the U.S. refugee and logistic base about 75 miles north of Vientiane. At the same time, the sources said Laotian officials are still trying to sort out confused reports which indicated Sam Thong fell during the night to North Vietnamese forces.

Sam Thong is only six miles from Long Cheng, the main Daotian military headquarters for the Meo tribesmen army commanded by Gen. Vang Pao. The sources said Long Cheng appeared to be the major objective of the Communist forces which have pushed down from the Plain of Jars.

The sources said radio contact with Sam Thong was lost about noon Wednesday but there were reports of at least two battles between government and Communist forces immediately east of the U.S. hospital there. The hospital was evacuated earlier and the last four American officials were flown out Tuesday.

"We don't know exactly where things stand at this point," one official source said. He said the hospital at Sam Thong was not burned as reported earlier but that a warehouse nearby was on fire Wednesday morning. One report said government wounded had been taken to hospitals at Long Cheng and elsewhere but gave no figures. The sources said the North Vietnamese and Communist Pathet Lao had at least seven battalions, an estimated 4,200 troops-in the area and that Sam Thong was hit by about 2,000.
