Wolfe speaks in finale

by Mike Mooney

Replete in his electric white suit, author Tom Wolfe spoke to a packed Washington Hall last night in the finale of this year's Sophomore Literary. Wolfe's comments, the last in a series of nightly lectures, highlighted the originality and newness of American literature in the late 1960s and early 1970s.

"The new journalism," he said, "is a new way of getting inside the world. It's a way of getting inside the mind of the person you're writing about."

Wolfe opened the evening by welcoming the students to the event and introducing them to the concept of the "New Journalism." He explained that this new form of writing is characterized by its immediacy, its engagement with the present moment, and its ability to capture the imagination of the reader.

The evening's discussion began with Wolfe's controversial essay, "The Kandy-Kolored Tangerine Fringe," which was included in his book of the same name. Wolfe discussed the significance of this work, which challenged traditional literary conventions and introduced a new, more journalistic style of writing.

Wolfe then moved on to his other major works, including "The Electric Kool-Aid Acid Test" and "The Bonfire of the Vanities." He spoke about the themes and techniques of these books, and how they reflected the cultural and social changes of the time.

The evening concluded with Wolfe's thoughts on the future of American literature. He expressed his belief that the new journalism is just the beginning of a new era in American writing, one that will continue to explore new forms and methods of expression.

The audience was left with a sense of awe and excitement, inspired by Wolfe's words and his vision for the future of literature.
SMC trustees to meet

by Joanne Sweeney

SMC News Editor

The Board of Trustees, the Associate Board of Trustees and the four committees under it, will meet today, April 17th, and tomorrow April 18th at St. Mary’s College. This morning all will meet and then on Saturday the Board of Trustees will convene. The committees this afternoon will be discussing various topics and hearing reports presented by particular people connected with the college.

The Board tomorrow will discuss what the committees said or recommended on the day before, as they are the main decision body.

The Educational Policies Committee will be given a report on the Board’s April 17th and tomorrow April 18th, and a report on the Board’s April 17th and tomorrow April 18th, and the Associate Board of Trustees and the Board of Trustees, the Finance Committee, the Student Development Committee, and the Finance Committee will meet and discuss various items on their agendas. The committees consist of specific Board and Associate Board members, faculty, and students, except for the Finance committee on which students do not hold a seat.

During the afternoon the Associate Board of Trustees will meet and then on Saturday the Board of Trustees will convene. The Board of Trustees will hear reports from the various committees and discuss the Finance Committee’s report. According to Dr. Jack Detler, Vice-President and Provost, who is on this committee, these topics “will all follow up discussions of earlier matters.”

One new topic to be reported on is the University’s budget and the future of the student union’s student development and student services. The University will be discussing the future of SMC and other cooperation with CCMC.

The Development Committee will also discuss the question of some kind of addition to or improvement of library facilities. A report on the Student Development Committee will discuss improved science facilities after hearing a report by Dr. Lee Benton.

Educational Television at St. Mary’s will be the subject of an address by Mr. James L. White, Director of Audio-Visual Department. Mr. Recker, the Vice President of Public Relations and Development and Secretary of this committee, said, “Many of the topics were already discussed at previous meetings, but a more overall picture can now be given and objectives have been solidified.”

The policy statement on drugs will be one of the main discussion topics for the Student Policy Committee. Student Body President, Ann Marie Tracey, explained that they will discuss Fr. McGarth’s statement on drugs. Miss Tracey hopes to introduce some changes in the statement to correct some ambiguities. She also wants to have the committee discuss the possibility of drug education on campus.

Pat McDonough and Rick Libowitz, Notre Dame’s pool-bahs-turned-athletes, are among the hundreds scheduled to compete in Sunday’s Boston Marathon. McDonough, former student Union Academic Commissioner, and Libowitz, former head of the free University, will be running under the banner of the Corky Steere Strollers.

SLC in retrospect

Student representative Guy DeSapio notes that the newest of the SLC poses some of its problems. He feels that the area of concern are not thoroughly outlined. A big question, especially for students, is what the exact powers of the Council are. Theoretically, DeSapio stated, the SLC can enact anything passing through Fr. McCarragher’s office and demand a response from the president and Board of Trustees. What happens is that there is little giving in on the part of the Trustees. Students ask for freedom so to show their responsibility, whereas the Trustees are going to make the rules. Roickle feels that the SLC is little more than a recommending Council, since all legislation enacted may be vetoed by the President and Board of Trustees.

He states that the main question for the future may be who are going to make the rules and what the rules will be. Roickle states that the SLC needs a need for a change in the tripart board structure. "The board should be at least 50% students, since the students know most about what’s going on," Roickle said.

He noted that the student body shouldn’t be complaining about representation. He suggested that if more people would sit in on meetings, that they would see the difficulties which arise in dealing with faculty and administration.

Roickle concluded by noting that "if students would take a bigger interest in what’s going on, things would be a lot easier."
Campus leaders answer trustees

by Mike Ruffer

Late Wednesday afternoon the Board of Trustees issued their new proposal for the improvement of the current situation. Their statement sparked off a rash of comments from one end of the campus to the other.

Shortly after this new statement was read, Grace Tower President Chun Wolfe was contacted and asked for immediate comments on the issue at hand. "I welcome the extension of hours and I feel that the new limitations are sensible ones. It is interesting that the trustees have made an accurate diagnosis of the existing situation, where students are unhappy and won't enforce any rule around here despite student poobah's promises to the contrary," Wolfe said.

Student support sought

by Ed Ellis

After a lengthy series of meetings with University officials, Charlie Zappala, leader of the group which has requested additional funds to prevent the restriction of Government courses to Government majors alone, has decided that his group will begin a campaign to organize student opinion for next year in the fiscal priorities matter, since changes for next semester are impossible at this late date.

Zappala said that he thought the Administration was aware of some of the problems currently being faced by the various departments in the College of Arts and Letters, and that the people concerned were sincerely interested in helping these departments. However, because of past spending priorities which have favored the "technotchy" of the Science and Engineering Colleges, the imbalance that Zappala said exists will not be corrected soon without massive student support in favor of such action.

In addition to the Government Department, Zappala mentioned the Economics, Sociology and History Departments as being in situations nearly "critical" with regard to student-faculty ratios. The only department in somewhat "good" shape, according to Zappala, is the English Department but the figures for this are somewhat deceiving because of the University requirement, which is not included in the computed departmental student-faculty ratios.

Of all the departments in Arts and Letters, Zappala cited Government, with its 25-to-1 ratio, as worst, despite the expected addition of one new faculty member next year and a 15% rise in the budget. He contended that the recent closing of Government courses to non-Government majors was the only course of action open to department head Brinkley.

"He had to hurt someone," said Zappala, "either the majors or non-majors."

He went on to explain that it was University policy which had forced the department's action, since the current "unsatisfactory situation" had not been remedied despite several requests for action from Chairman Brinkley.

Unfortunately, nothing can be done about next fall's classes, he said.

In order to organize student opinion for the issue, Zappala said there would be a meeting Sunday night in room 104 O'Shaughnessy. All students are invited to attend.

Poster controversy settled

A controversial poster by the Notre Dame Zero Population Growth chapter, censored Tuesday in the Huddle, will be seen today after a sudden change of mind by the Huddle manager.

Mr. Ernest Ferro yesterday called his removal of the poster "a thoughtless action," and said "if they want to put it up again, I will not take it down."

Rick Shank, president of zero-population growth, said a poster will be put up today and a statement released by the chapter called Ferro's action a "blatant act of censorship."

Father MacCarragher, Vice-President for Student Affairs, has "ultimate" authority over the subject matter on the Huddle bulletin boards, but he was not informed of the dispute.

The poster which reads "By the time tomorrow, the net population of the earth will increase by a mass of people equal to the total population of Salt Lake City. 190,000 individuals every 24 hours. Each week at least 10,000 human beings will die of starvation; consider the consequences of continued growth," was torn down at Ferro's request. Ferro was removing other material from the bulletin boards.

It’s unfortunate

Saint Mary’s seniors will soon tuck their diplomas under one arm, the blissful natures of “the best years of their lives” under the other and depart with their wistful view.

There is nothing left to say but “Alas, yes, it is unfortunate,” if you have that much enthusiasm. Most of us don’t. Most of us simply want out. The majority of the underclassmen would say we’ve grown stiff in our old age. We would agree.

It is unfortunate that all our “revolutionary” plans for change were stunted somewhere along the line. Unfortunate that we may not have Alma Mater in 5 years. Unfortunate that for some reason a breach exists between the administration, the faculty, and the students. Unfortunate that no one seems to be able to find the formula for honest communication and understanding.

But fortune had nothing to do with the problem. The students have made SMC the sterile breeding pot that it is. They cannot seem to understand that the school’s problems will never be solved by optimistic small-time euthanasia, that they must begin to use their calculating minds.

St. Mary’s students have become infamous for deploying massive amounts of energy constructing toothpick castles.udent Government punts off each year armed with more or less idealistic plans in search of “true Christian community.” They have a most elaborate governmental structure in place to decide the major issues of student life—the number of open houses to be held each month, the amount of punishment to be levied against a first offender with 5 late minutes, etc.

Those students who are earnestly and logically working for change must, in the last analysis, be counted as either the most courageous or the most foolish of individuals; they are bucking the system of the mindless herd and those “looking out for the good of the college,” a system which can change either drastic or “revolutionary,” is destruction.

The very presence of dissenters so threatens a large block of St. Mary’s that the system is herd-prepared to even the existence of a hostile faction.

Yet, (underclassmen note) the mindless herd is the most potentially dangerous to the college. They operate under no rules of logic and are subject to spats of interest and support which will never fail to disappoint you.

We seniors have had our share of the disillusionment the school hands out. We no longer care. It is difficult to even wish you well.

Letters to the Editor

Black aid

Editor: Having read the article on minority students receiving money I think that a more appropriate heading would have been “black students get money.” Just as the civil rights movement today has shifted to a movement for blacks to have the same educational opportunities afforded to other minority groups as much as Notre Dame’s minority recruitment. I doubt that Bro. Kieran’s figures (if he has any) of 90% of other minority groups amount to much.

Notre Dame’s lack of balance in minority recruitment is unjustifiable. How can it explain the fact that at least 50% of minority students applying for aid are black students? There must be an expansion of minority recruitment now. The other minorities must not be forgotten. Perhaps we have been less demanding but will change that if necessary.

Juan M. Nieto P.S. Thanks for the figures anyway.

Stoic resignation

Editor: Many curious and unexplainable things happen at Notre Dame and by the time you are a junior you have either become so apathetic or disillusioned that you accept any new development, whether beneficial or detrimental to the welfare of the students, with a kind of Stoic resignation “the powers that be.” The degree to which our life at Notre Dame becomes taut acceptance might be clearly demonstrated by the unquestioning response of the student body to that fresh mound on the main quad that bears a marked resemblance to a grave. Have we all become such Demers, whether in our liberalism or conservatism, that actions taken from above never provokes any suspicion on the students’ part? With that grave like mound blankly confronting I am wondering: Who did they bury on the main quad? I don’t know anything about you, but I have not seen a friend of mine for three days. Are you missing a roommate? Compliant and complacent? Dig it! Proddingly yours,

John Pappo

Pharisees

Editor: Perhaps you might wish to print this in your Letters to the Editor or fill in some cartoon space! I’m sick and want to vomit—vomit over a new generation of pharisees who have self-righteously castigated their fathers for erecting an ungodly establishment which allows starving, yet-hungry children to die in polluted slums while their lucky adult cousins kill in Viet Nam. The “New System” generation tells us all this only in the next sweet breath to rotate of their Easter sauris to Florida for fun and games.

A dollar will buy a month’s bowl of rice for a Viet Nam child. (There’s more ways to kill than one.) $10.00 will put shoes on a St. Bend urchin. A Notre Dame converted action band a scholarship (or three) to a hopeless lad. If SMC’s student development is made of stern stuff, and, of course, the old pharisees know all this.

Campus Opinion

Edited by Glen Corso

The following was a letter that was submitted in rebuttal to the article I wrote earlier in the week concerning bussing. The author of the rebuttal is Dennis M. Powers from Fisher Hall.

Brown v. Board of Education, 347 U.S. 483 (1954), struck down school segregation where required, enforced, or encouraged by operation or under color of law. Affected districts were, in the future, to maintain only unitary systems. Today, however, the time for “all deliberate speed” has run out. The so-called “freedom of choice” is acceptable if, and only if, it does in fact terminate racial dualism.

Last October, the Court ordered it immediate and without further delay. So much is settled law.

What the Court has not yet parted on, however, is de facto segregation by race in the public schools—segmentation as a result of residential housing patterns, rather than legal dictate. Does this pattern display the same unconstitutional facets as were found in its de jure cousin? That is the fundamental question. For if it does there would seem to be an equivalent, coercive obligation to eradicate it also.

In Brown, the core constitutional finding was that racial segregation inculcated inerradical infertility complexes in the black children discriminated against. Dualism was unequal, therefore, and cannot be made equal. 347 U.S. 483, 493-95. That was the issue there. Equally in physical plants, educational materials, and teaching staffs were not stipulated. Indeed, the lower courts in two of the three cases consolidated for de jure in Brown explicitly found the dual systems substantially even in those aspects. Brown v. Board of Education, 98 F.Supp. 797 (D.D.Kan. 1951); Briggs v. Elliott, Civ. No. 2657 (E.D.S.C. 1952). Yet they still failed to pass constitutional muster. The Court rested its decision squarely on the psychic damage to the students involved. This is the crucial difference.

This critical move, to borrow a term from nuclear physics, is equally present in the de facto circumstance. Discrimination’s effect on the child, I submit, and not its source, is the crux of the matter. When neighborhood patterns produce a school system segregated by race, such systems would seem to occur the interdict of the Constitution fully as much as those de jure. State inaction, permitting the status quo to continue, constitutes sufficient nexus with the state to invoke the XIV Amendment rationale of Brown. It may be that the effect is greater when enforced by positive law, 347 U.S. 483, 494. Discrimination’s unconstitutional aspects, however, are present nonetheless. If housing is the only way to overcome the neighborhood obstacle, then that is the means that must be used. De facto segregation, by whatever means necessary, must end. And as soon as possible.

So here it is Tuesday and I'm lying on my bed like a morose-stiff, doing exactly nothing. And from down the hall the crumbling, stentorian voice of Tom Wolfe rou ses me from my introversion. TC is talking up a storm for the Sophomore Literary Festival and TC leaps over me, goes like a pain-in-the-ass, and booms a wry song-and-dance. I managed to escape the eyes of this Tom Wolfe clown who will be jetting and grac ing it into South Bend tomorrow, that's Wednesday, I nod OK.

Wolfe's plane is supposed to kiss runway at 12:31 PM. So at thirteen after the three of us; TC who is my chauffeur but as it turns out remembers, blissfully, that he never learned, baby baby, how to drive no car-machine; and Tim O'Meilia who little brother typography who but who forgets to pack up a camera, and me, on our way already stupid-self-like.

Me at the wheel, shortcutting and growing like a dart into the belly of Punk, and TC and Tim just sitting there, dating the eggnogs. Eggnogs, for Chrissakes. TC, we were all slopping lunches you see, TC grabbed us all for his special College experience. And Angela and I just squeeze into a Humble in the middle of a million catalytic conversion dollars and we're off again. Flying through stop signs.

Tim Wolfe, the author of Squeals and sighs—N. D. Wolfe, TC giggles at this—squeals and sighs—12.35 and I stick the car against a four-penny meter and the three of us stumble and the parabolic-arch St. Joe terminal. My nose pressed to the glass window I'm gazing on the airfield and saying, "We made it, he's not here yet."

Tim turns me around and no more than five minutes away is Mr. Wolfe with his ruddy yellow Nifty white suit; the shirt: blue pin-stripe; the tie, maroon, pushing out with an ascot to match; blue and grey dreams made the socks.

Tim Wolfe is not alone, by his side an erudite pose; I roll down the window and there I am blabbering at this wide-eyed goon-cop telling him that TC is Paul Wolfe. Welsh poet laureate from Porthclawco, and that he has to be over at 1:00 for a TV show. Right time, says the cop. Right on, we blow into the station's production studio and Tom Wolfe is sitting up there besides some bud with her hair in a "beehive" boustaf and a red glare lights are bouncing on the walls, and everyone is saying "shhhhh" at Tom Wolfe it is speaking nice and low to this chic bud. Talking about the "New Journalism" and about Tom Wolfe's books and about Tom Wolfe. And I ask the Sophomore Literary Festival people who is this hanging around like bodyguards or something if I can talk to this Tom Wolfe. They are cool profession al and they tell me, oh so smartly: "There will be a press conference at 3:30 in the lobby of Morris Inn. You may speak to Mr. Wolfe then."

So it's 3:30 and Tim finally has his camera and the two of us are playing it cool over at the Morris Inn. Tom reads, not pleasingly, on two I-am-hip-and-beau tiful-inside-and-I-dress-to-show-it types. And Angela and I just squeeze in to a Humble and everybody is saying "shhhhh" at Tom Wolfe; TC is mumbling the answer games with him. I forgot Tom Wolfe, just so, and wheeled it over to the pay cafeterias for an eggnog.

Call me a stud, too.
But exactly.

THE LAST OF ZAP
by T. C. Trenner

Last issue, the Observer reviewed, among other things, R. Crumb's and Zap's position on race. Zap occupies an ambiguous position: Crumb patronizes, stereotypes, and even taunts the black man in some of his works ("Buy Nigger in Morbidity."); the Sophomore Literary Festival people, the conversation is polite. I want to approach W olfe like an old war buddy and hand him my scheme, hurried and tacky, and break into the huddle. I am to approach W olfe as dark; grotesque figures warn "This is number one dude for answer games with him."

But I'm at the wheel like a loony and my voice tired and abrupt, tells me he'll over to the pay cafeterias for an eggnog. Call me a stud, too. But exactly.

NSA announces discounts; low rates set on books

Newly-appointed NSA Coordinator Steve Novak announced yesterday that Notre Dame, along with 24 other campuses across the country, is participating in the NSA's Social Action Books Experimental Program. The program, which involves sales of books at reduced prices to students at NSA member schools, kicks off this month with 19 offerings, 12 of them concerning the Environmental Crisis.

Novak indicated that he was contacted in early March concerning the program. At that time he was serving as assistant to Mike Shaughnessy, who has recently assumed leadership of the Free University. He was told then that the Book program would be inaugurated in April and informed of the experimental nature of the program.

"Social Action Books is something new that NSA is trying," he said, "and it is being conducted on an experimental basis until the end of this year. If the response proves to be large enough, the program will be expanded to more schools next year, and will operate during the entire school year."

Commenting on the importance of the program, Novak said: "I think it is very important that we get a good response to these early offerings, since the future of the program is based on these results."

The selection pamphlet was distributed in the residence halls on Monday and Tuesday. To order books, students are requested to bring the order form included on the pamphlet to either the Student Government Office or the Cabinet office.

Novak indicated that delivery of the books was expected within a week.

"I call New York every three days, and they send me out the books that have been ordered up to that time," Novak said. "This guarantees delivery within a period of no more than eight days from the date they are ordered." The Observer

McGrath submits drug policy by Mary Kay Day

On April 13, Father John McGrath submitted a statement of policy concerning the use of drugs on the St. Mary's College program, not only because of the effects of it on the book program, but also because of the way in which we will evaluate it ourselves. Students grippe a good deal of responsibility for the prices at the book store, and this is the first real positive step that has been taken to underpin it. If students don't show interest in this program, it will force us to rethink any idea we might have of establishing any sort of discount store on campus. In a sense, this is the first step in the establishment of such a discount service, and if this proves unsuccessful, it could severely hamper development of this type of service, on the part of Student Government, in the future.

Opinions aired on parietal statement

(continued from page 3) was nice to accommodate for the need for the extension of visitation hours for summer women. Although the decision isn’t consistent with the original SLC proposal, I think the students should accept it, since it is a fair solution.

When contacted, Junior Stay- Senator Tom Thrasher said, “I was pleasantly surprised by the continuing faith of the Board of Trustees at the whole parietal hours experiment as well as their willingness not only to carry on with the present situation, their breaking new ground by radically extending parietal hours. The state of the Hall Life Board and its revised role outlines in the trustees’ report are promising.”

“I hope the SLC and students will accept the trustees’ report and I share the trustees’ hope that the experiment will work out well,” Flanner Hall Rector, Rev. Maurice Amen, having read the new proposal of the trustees, commented, “I am disappointed in the statement made by the Board of Trustees. It is a fair proposal with workable restrictions and it more adequately fits the needs of the students. I wish the Board of Trustees had taken the opportunity to say something about where we’ll go in the future, it would have given a different tone to the document.

“arar, I don’t like the composition of the new Hall Life Board because I see no value in the tri-task set-up. The HLB should have gotten some discretion power to allow it more flexibility to the situations that can arise,” he went on to say.

Commenting on the new proposals, John Houck, Professor of Management, said, “The trustees aren’t miscalculating. Their statement will be read as just allowing more hours, without the process of community formation taking place. This new stand is a proclamation by generous men and it won’t achieve what I hoped it to achieve.”

“The trustees are setting up rules for those who break them (infringers) not those who follow them (good men). The good men want and realize the need for hall community. The trustees are setting up a tight rope which the bad men know is the end of the line, but will they stop there. The total result is not a striving for community and learning,” he added.

Commenting on the new Hall Life Board, Prof. Houck said, “I’d rather see three faculty couples on the board than those faculty members. This could aid in the understanding of the problems. Also, I feel that some of the student members of the board should be girls; after all they are the ones who will be doing the visiting.”

In conclusion Prof. Houck stated that whatever could help the growing of a community feeling is good.

Monsignor Hall President John Barkett expressed general dissatisfaction with the statement handed by the Board of Trustees.

“The trustees missed the boat just by looking at the problems of parietal hours and drinks. They should look at hall life as a whole picture.”

“There was very little mention of the rector in the report. The rector is the focal point in the continuity of leadership in the hall and he plays an important factor of hall life. It is the rector along with the hall government who will determine whether or not the hall will progress,” he added.

“A decision on making body cannot legislate fairly at a distance on matters that effect students. There are more important ways to look at problems.

They should go into the halls themselves and see problems on the hall levels. They should listen to the students’ views before rules are made, if they themselves don’t make them.”

Barkett said.

“The creation of the new Hall Life Board was a slap in the face to the SLC. It seems to intringe on the major responsibilities of the SLC. I question whether the HLB will have a power to change a hall’s staff in order to provide the best hall environment consistent with good order.”

“The trustees missed the boat just by looking at the problems of parietal hours and drinks. They should look at hall life as a whole picture.”

“There was very little mention of the rector in the report. The rector is the focal point in the continuity of leadership in the hall and he plays an important factor of hall life. It is the rector along with the hall government who will determine whether or not the hall will progress,” he added.

“A decision on making body cannot legislate fairly at a distance on matters that effect students. There are more important ways to look at problems.

They should go into the halls themselves and see problems on the hall levels. They should listen to the students’ views before rules are made, if they themselves don’t make them.”

Barkett said.

“The creation of the new Hall Life Board was a slap in the face to the SLC. It seems to intringe on the major responsibilities of the SLC. I question whether the HLB will have a power to change a hall’s staff in order to provide the best hall environment consistent with good order.”

The Roundball Classic

Each year at the end of each high school basketball season there is an all-star game played in Pittsburgh's Civic Arena. This year was the sixth game of this sort to be held. The school-boy talent displayed may have been the best that the Dapper Dan Roundball Classic (Dapper Dan is a sports minded charitable organization in the Senior High School basketball ranks). This is quite a statement. If you’re not familiar with this game it might interest you to know that over half of the participants go on to star in major college basketball. The feature event of the evening is a game pitting the Pennsylvania All-Stars against the best of the "other forty-nine." Some former greats of the U.S. team are Dean Memminger (Marquette), Howard Porter (Villanova), Bob Whitmore (St. John’s and Western Kentucky), Carlin Murphy (Niuga), Lanny Taylor (Georgia’s leading scorer this season) and Rick Yunkus (N.C. State) to name a few.

Although it may seem like a mismatch the Pa. boys have produced a number of standouts also. Jim Hill (one of the top five scorers in the nation) and Norm Vander (now with the Cincinnati Royals), Ken Durrett (LaSalle’s leading rebounder and score), Dick DeVenzio (Duque’s playmaker), and Dennis Wysock (a starter as a sophomore) are all previous performers. The U.S. team leads in the series four to two but nearly each game has been an awesome display of basketball skills. As was mentioned before this season’s crop of hoopsters may be the best to date. It may not be just by coincidence that Notre Dame coach Johnny Dee was conducting a clinic in the 'Burgh the weekend that this contest was played. (This department is hopeful of having a report of how coach Dee made out with the prospects that he met that weekend. This will not appear for a few weeks, when all signings are definite.)

Although many of the platers have signed letters of intent for various colleges, some of the better ones are still open prey for college recruiters. The leading figure among these is “6’11” Tom McMillan of Mansfield, Pa. Although the highest scorer in Pennsylvania history (he “averaged” 47 points per game and shot an unheard of 75% for the season) he has yet to announce the college of his choice as we go to press. Word is McMillan might be able to lure some of these touted individuals to the State. If not then it will be mighty hard to keep playing the schedule we have and finish with the same results.

Indiana Pacer Release For the second time in three years, Notre Dame has been chosen as the Most Valuable Team of the 1969-70 season. Brown also won the honor for the 1967-68 season. The selection, determined by a poll of press, radio, and television of the area, came as no surprise. Rich Brown is currently enjoying the best season of his career.

Roger is leading the Pacers in scoring with a 23.3, which is 8th best in the league and second best for a forward. His percentage from the 2-1pt., 3-1pt. and free-throw lines are all above .50. His .517 percentage from the 2-1pt. range is 4th best in the league and his .818 free throw shooting is 10th best in the league and 2nd best among forwards. This season Roger has added a new weapon to his offense the outside shot. His 16th bid for the 3-1pt. club, set a personal and school record for Roger. In 34 of 112 for a 29.6 percentage, which is the leading percentage on the squad.

Besides being a great scorer, Roger is also a top rebounder. His season total of 69 is second only to Bob Sallinger in the top 10 in assists with 387 and is second only to Bob Sallinger in rebounds per game. A superb athlete, Roger is respected by everyone through out the league. His ability to go to the basket and pull up short and shoot the jumper, makes him one of the most difficult men in all basketball to guard. A graduate of the Brooklyn Plantgrounds, Roger is poetry in motion. On more than one occasion, Roger has drawn a long from the crowd for a spectacular driving, twirling layup.

Roger has been denied a spot on the 1st team All-Pro team both of his two previous seasons, but with the consistent talent he compiled this year, it will be extremely difficult to leave Roger off the 2nd All-League team.

Homesick Irish suffer two losses

by Jim Donaldson

Spartan Sportswriter

It looks like the Irish basketball team is homesick. After playing two more games on the road this week, 3-4 .429 at Michigan on Tuesday and 7-5 at Detroit U. Wednesday, the club's record dropped to a dim 1-9. All ten games have been played away from the ND diamond.

Pitchers Ron Schmitz and Rick Fich hurtled sixteen innings of abundant ball between them in the two games but Schmitz surrendered fourteen hits and innings runs to absorb a heart-breaking loss against Michigan while Fich was burned for six runs in the first inning against Detroit and, although he pitched hitless ball for five innings, the ND batters couldn't overcome the 4-1 deficit in the first inning Titan outburst.

The Irish appeared to be well on their way to victory in the Michigan game after Rich Lucke and Joe Keenan singled in a run, splice to break up a scoreless battle in the top of the eighth. When the Irish were just six runs behind in the ninth  the Irish still had runners on second and third, Lucke's single drove in the go-ahead run, and Keenan's two out safety plated the second run.

Michigan was retired in the eighth and the Irish went down without scoring in their half of the ninth but the Wolverines could not get the last out of the game on the 1st chance at the plate on a two-run double by Mike Rufferty and a wild throw that scored the winning run. The Irish throw to the plate was far too late on Dan Votier's opening that frame by rapping a single. Nick Scarpelli followed Votier and hit a groundout back to the pitcher but when the Michigan hurler threw the ball into center field the Irish had runners on second and third. Lucke's single drove in the go-ahead run, and Keenan's two out safety plated the second run.

At Detroit the Irish apparently had not recovered from the shock of having a win wrested from them by a record day and fell behind 7-0 after an inning of play. In all fairness to Rick, the lefty freshman who was pitched 20-0 and was touched for five hits and three walks in the opening stanza, it should be said that he had not started a game since the Eastern break trip to Florida and once he gut the feel of the mound nothing else seemed to go wrong. His fastball, slider, curve and changeup were sharp.

The Irish tried gamely to come back in the later innings but didn’t get enough firepower to bounce all the way back. A third inning single by Chuck Horn and Nick Scarpelli’s double plated the first ND run and the Irish added another solo tally in the fourth on a two-out single by Joe Keenan and a double by Horan. Phil Krill's lone triple in the fifth  was pushed two more runs home and closed the gap to 7-5 but the Irish couldn’t score again until the ninth inning when they came up short, notchting just one run. It came on singles by Deony Patryso, pinch hitter Bob Keenan and Horan, and Keenan and Horn each rapped a pair of hits in the game for the Irish.
