Referendum to poll student sentiment on law bldg addition

by Art Quinn

Student Bar Association President Tim Hartzer announced Friday morning that the referendum concerning the expansion of the law school, originally planned for Friday, would be held today between 10 a.m. and 3 p.m. According to Hartzer "Monday just seems to be a better day to get things done..." The referendum will poll law school sentiment on the $1.6 million addition to the law school. Dean Thomas Shaffer announced plans, which include a new library at a press conference last Thursday. Over the week-end the OBSERVER contacted several law students to find out how they felt about the recently-announced addition.

Patrick Koccho, a third-year law student, had this to say about the issue: "I think they (anti-addition campaigners) are sort of creating an issue about the library. It needs to be expanded and improved but it is not really that bad. I think the bigger problem is the whole idea of improvement at the school. Some students equate that to have a good law school and a good building. They are equating facilities with the quality of the law school. The present condition is somewhat undesirable, but it is not unsatisfactory. It is adequate. What disturbs me is equating the type of people at the law school with some type of program. Bricks and cement do not have that much to do with the quality of the place. The type of people attracted by bricks and cement have a questionable set of values between 10 a.m. and 3 p.m. According to Hartzer (association president) are sort of creating an issue about the library. Third-year law student, Stephen Hellrung, said, "I generally support Dean Shaffer's decision to go ahead. It is going to demand sacrifice on the part of the students and faculty. I do not think it is in the best interest of the law school to delay any longer. The benefits will outweigh the inconveniences in the long run. I am sure Dean Shaffer has the best interest of the law school at heart. We ought to respect his decision to go ahead with the plan that he, as dean, has formulated.

Third-year law student Steve Stegich said, "Since it (the hall life addition) is designed to facilitate improvements in hall living conditions, it seems like a good idea. I think that the addition would improve the quality of the place..." He mentioned that "since it (the hall life addition) is designed to facilitate improvements in hall living conditions, it seems like a good idea. I think that the addition would improve the quality of the place..."

Third-year law student, Steve Stegich, said, "Since the decision that we could not move into a new building was made, we are trying to make the best of going ahead with the addition. The facilities as they stand are not adequate. If I had the decision to make, I would not add to the present building. Architecturally, it would destroy the integrity and character of the building. The character of the building should be reserved. Architecturally, it would be poor.

The results of the referendum will be available in tomorrow's OBSERVER.
Jerusalem—Foreign ministry sources in Jerusalem said Prime Minister Golda Meir of Israel had delayed official acceptance of an American peace initiative for at least a week to iron out the precise wording of American-Israeli understandings. But the sources left no doubt that Israel would accept the American initiative.

Saigon—The United States command said that American planes had knocked out two enemy antiaircraft guns and damaged another inside the demilitarized zone Saturday. A spokesman said the planes attacked sites in the DMZ after being fired upon while on missions over Laos. In another incident, an American pilot fired a missile at a site in North Vietnam.

Washington—Leaders of both Republican and Democratic parties in the Senate pledged to oppose a bill forbidding the use of federal funds to bus children out of their neighborhood to achieve integration. The Senate is to vote on the bill in the next few weeks, and the positions taken by the leaders and by President Nixon were thought to be crucial in what was expected to be a close vote.

Richard Havens and Jonathan Edwards will highlight the Mardi Gras concert, Chairman Greg Stepie announced last night. Construction for the charity benefit will begin this Tuesday, January 25, at St. Mary's center. According to Stepie, Mardi Gras will extend over two weekends this year. It is scheduled to commence with a kick-off dance on February fourth, and be followed by the Carnival Feb. 5-13 and the Concert Feb. 13. The Carnival will begin on Saturday, Feb. 5, and be held on Tuesday, Thursday, Friday and Saturday of Mardi Gras week, Stepie said. The Carnival will officially close on Sunday afternoon, Feb. 13, and be followed by the concert. The Mardi Gras committee is attempting to raise $50,000 this year to be distributed among neighboring charities including ND-SCMC Mental Health, Manassas, Council for the Retarded, Cila, and the Bengal Mission. Since 1962 more than $120,000 has been raised for charity organizations through this event. Stepie urged students to attempt to sell the Mardi Gras raffle tickets which they received before Christmas in order to make the event a success. Admittance to the five-day Carnival will be $2.00. Single-book sellers, however, will receive free admission.

Dellinger to speak Friday

by Don J. Ilopfer

Chicago-eight defendant David Dellinger will speak next Friday on "response of defendants to conspiracy charges." Dellinger is one of five speakers who have accepted the program of non-violence's invitation to address the Cassy and Students Committee at the end of the month.

The conference will also feature Leonard Boudin, who has defended Julian Bond, Benjamin Speck and Daniel Ellsberg. Temple University History Professor Allen F. Davis, author and SANE director Richard Neuman, and Arthur I. Waskow, who coauthored A Call to Rebellious Intellectual Authority.

Dellinger's speech is scheduled for 3:30 p.m. Friday at Washington Hall. The non-violence program will charge a dollar for admission. All other speakers will appear in the Center for Continuing Education and will be free.

Davis is scheduled to speak on Conspiracy and the American Heritage at 10:15 a.m. Thursday. At three, Neuman will speak on "Theological Reflections on Conspiracy" and at eight Boudin will speak on "Legal Defense against Conspiracy."

In addition to Dellinger, Waskow is scheduled for a Friday session. He will speak on "American Capitalism and American Catholicism: On Collision Course?" at 10:15 a.m.

In addition to these speakers, the symposium will feature panel discussions following each lecture. Dellinger's panel consists of indicted or convicted conspirators, including representatives from the Buffalo Five and the Oakland Seven.

Merger...

The Student Affairs Committee of the Student Senate will file a merger on merger activities sometime next week, according to chairman Don Patrick, a stay senator, said that his committee will contact "other administration and faculty of both schools" in an effort to research means to meet the student bodies.

The Senate has scheduled a meeting at the end of the month.

According to the Conference's program, the symposium was designed because of a fear that "the government's increasing use of the conspiracy charge ominously threatens the civil liberties of anyone opposed to the administration." According to the program, the conference is designed to "meet this need for a dissent in a manner appropriate to the University."

Patricia McNeal, a Conference coordinator and a member of Davis' discussion panel, commented on what she felt was a "unique" aspect of this symposium. "This conference includes speakers who are both scholars and activists. They have written much that is important in this field and yet they are very much involved in the non-violence movement. She also said that "The interest of the students is there. Now there is a need for analysis rather than street action and civil disobedience."
InPIRG: funds needed to realize its full possibilities

by Bob Higgins

This is the conclusion of a two part series on Notre Dame's chapter of the Indiana Public Interest Research Group. Today Higgins discusses organizational problems unique to the ND campus. InPIRG is a consumer protection organization organized and run by students.

Organization is moving at a somewhat slower pace across Indiana than is at Notre Dame. Twenty of the state's campuses have working InPIRG organizations and at least six will be ready to petition their respective student bodies between February 14 and March 14. The petitioning campuses include Notre Dame, Mary's, Indiana at Bloomington, Purdue, DePauw, Rose Polytechnical, and Ball State.

Bachman hastened to point out that the enrollment of just those six schools could produce a budget of at least $200,000 for next year. Concerning the petitioning drive he emphasized that "Being one of the larger and Matthew Zivich, members of the Indiana Public schools in the state, it is essential that..."

Petitioning strikes Bachman as a more difficult problem than collection of the fee. "InPIRG can't go anywhere," he said, "until more than 60 percent of the students on the campus agree to assess themselves, by signing the petitions. Furthermore we will need administrative approval after we collect the signatures, but that would be hard to refuse if more than fifty percent want to be taxed."

Collection of the funds will be facilitated by having it appear as an additional $1.30 fee on the tuition statement distributed each semester at registration time. Asked to explain this particular method, Bachman stated that, "It's really the only feasible way to collect a fee. The Pakistani Relief Fund (using voluntary contributions of any size) netted only 13 cents per student on the average." Asked if he thought any student would be unable to afford the $3.00, Bachman replied, "The average student spends $250 per year, on soda, cigarettes and incidentals and we're only asking for a small percentage of that. However any student wanting a refund will be given one in cash at a convenient time and place."

InPIRG has the potential to make numerous contributions in both academic and civic communities. Primarily it can benefit students in all fields. Economics courses could study the equality of actual property tax evaluations, sociology students could provide the research necessary for long-range projects, and science students could receive credit for studying and leading toward the elimination of environmental problems.

Secondly, it can provide a new channel for student activism and thirdly it can provide a new type of job, one of public interest, for the professional (lawyer, scientist, etc.)

On our own campus, the Nonviolence department is currently offering credit for InPIRG as part of its course work. Notre Dame's chapter of InPIRG is beginning now to prepare for its mammoth task of petitioning the entire student bodies of the two campuses and obtaining 60-70 percent of their signatures. InPIRG will be providing instruction to prospective petitioners beginning next Tuesday at 7:00 PM in LaFortune's Fiesta Lounge. All are invited or asked to call 3827 or 3670.

InPIRG: After a lengthy struggle in the federal court, William Fabrycki and Matthew Zivich, members of the American Federation of Teachers Local 2002, have gained temporary reinstatement to the faculty of Indiana University at South Bend. Fabrycki and Zivich were denied tenure in the Spring of 1970. After appeals within the university they filed suit in the federal courts. William Fabrycki and Matthew Zivich were invited or asked to call 3827 or 3670.
Below the theater district on Forty-second street where the body queens dance and celluloid lovers flicker in the lights and shadows of simulated lust before an audience of dancing wines, there stand the church and rectory of the New York parish of Holy Cross. High up in the air, they are too substantial with brick and mortar to seem like ghosts, but they are too cold and lifeless, like warehouse walls, to lift up the heart with a faith that breathes. Inwardly, the old dirt church and its out of date rectory look like movie sets where Bing Crosby as Father O’Malley can make a commercial success out of a caroling of gifter church men, thereby saving the nuns from the cold and sending their pastor on a tea-ree-la-ree-holiday with his sainted Irish mother.

In the inevitable, great-ness, Holy Cross Church was the parish of Fighting Father Duffy who in his portrayal was played by Pat O’Brien and whose statue is now a pigeon step in Times Square. During World War II, over two thousand people crowded the church for the weekly novenas services, a discredit to Catholic piety for which the Nazis were never tried at Nuremburg. Now Holy Cross is a parish of parking and parking signs. Just down the block there is a cluster of massage parlors and the advertising posters promise "the most realistic female figure of Europe". At the peak of the world, at December 19th, I arrived on this inner city scene: El Gordo, the Fat One, the hammer of God, the laureate of loudness, the scenepoet of the smut. For a month, I lived in a basement room that looked out through the shattered windows on the sidewalks of sin, a closet charimate, a Jesuit-freak hidden in an enclave of grace just off the pavements of Sodom and Gomorrah. In the beginning, in the days before Christmas, I wanted to advertise the Redemption in the newspapers.

They brush merchandies of 4th street: You are cordially invited to celebrate the event, stretching the walls, I concluded the word became Flesh and dwell amongst us... Dec. 25, 1971.

In red, I discovered there was more saintliness in the streets than in the rectory, which is not exactly an original of prints.

Days on duty at Holy Cross were apt to be busy with calls to anoint the anonymous dead at the Port Authority Bus Terminal and with parlor visits from the local odd balls. There was, for example, the professional virgin of Eighth Avenue, a street geister of sixty who dropped by to lament her last chastity, surrendered within the hour, she said, to a house drunk from the Dixie Hotel. It was only after comforting this erstwhile veteran of virginity for a while that I realized her heyday by arista igitas had ended long before I was born, and she was only dreaming of innocence lately lost. I gave her two dollars, hardly a hustler’s far for any more, but it cheered her up considerably and gave me a new respect for the therapy of wealth. There was the other gentile soul who said she was Elizabeth Taylor, daughter of King George VI. Her oratory she had been stolen by Sammy Davis Jr., whose father in a dinosaur half the size of Forty-second street. Now she needed those oratories, she said because she wanted to give birth to a child on June 8th, so could I make Sammy give them back again? On Thirty-fourth street, she said they were turning priest into pugs, and Englishmen into rakes for the sake of the fur. It’s a lewky way to get a fur coat, she said. I agreed, and then stopped listening, because there is only so much sickness of the mind that I can safely endure.

Then there was Simon, who lived as a beggar at our gate. Every day he would station himself on the church steps and beg alms. He was a nice old man, on speaking terms with the priests of the rectory, all of whom he addressed as Monsignor. Each morning he was at Mass and received Holy Communion. The priest agreed that if you had to a have a beggar at the gate, it was nice to have him a practising Catholic.

The rectory was really rather proud of Simon.

Then one evening, a prostitute came to the door. She had something to give the priest, something that she had bought from Simon for two dollars, something he had taken from the church. The priest on duty opened the handkerchief; inside, wrapped in toilet paper, he found a Hustler, presumably the Communion Host Simon had received at Mass that morning.

It was not the first time that Christ had been bought or sold on Forty-second street. Others of us have done so, even at Holy Cross, for simony is the ancient sin of the Church. Perhaps this time the Lord did not mind being sold at the church door; perhaps he felt at home in the hands of that beggar with his odd, commercial way of asserting the value of the Sacrament.

Perhaps it was His way of saying, "If you are not going to take of my dear, old Simon then let me be sold in the street at a price cheaper than the wages of a hustler, for one of must look after the hunger and the clothing of that old man." I really have no way of knowing what private arrangements Simon may have had with the Lord.

As for the prostitute who brought Christ from the street to the rectory, I would like to feel that I had done as much at least once; sometime I had brought Christ from the rectory to the street in that parish of the parking lot. Perhaps, if I had noticed, I would have found Him on the street already, only I thought he was a wino asleep at a dirty movie.

On Forty-second street, it is not easy to notice that the Word was made Flesh and dwells among us.

In the inevitable, never-ending search for Truth on the college campus, there is one question that pervades all others. Asked of novices is the question is generally considered interchangeable and often in fact are.

I am challenging this tradition not only because of its cherished value, not because of its time honored fecundity, not because of its maudlin memorabilia but simply because I can never answer "great." For since 5th grade when an ogre disguised as Mrs. Kronher decreed that we write short essays (you write it, you pay for it) entitled "My Vacation" and I could only muster 27 words including my name, the date, and the title, I have despised vacations.

Nothing ever goes happens during my vacations, except you can count rotten things. These gallop through my holidays and I do not remember them.

Since this past Christmas vacation was about as exciting as a slug with sunstroke, I decided I would undertake a practising Catholic holiday.

We proceeded to race around in such furious circles that I concluded the word could only be watchdogs and they were doing out by that of my stomach, and I ambled into the kitchen. There I managed to open a can of alphabet soup. The mongrel came to a halt however when Anacin upset its own stomach, and surrendered its lunch.

My four hour cat nap set the dogs to prowling but their was drowned out by that of my stomach, and I ambled into the kitchen. There I managed to open a can of alphabet soup. The mongrel came to a halt however when Anacin upset its own stomach, and surrendered its lunch.

Child center expanding

by John Kloos

Things seem to be going well for the Day Care Center located in the St. Mary's Clubhouse. According to Lynne Mastriana, who organized the service, twenty-five families now use the center.

The center was established during last semester to care for the children of married ND-SMC students. Miss Mastriana emphasized that there is still plenty of room to accommodate more children. The center is licensed to handle twenty children at one time. Presently, there is no time during the weekly schedule that this limit is reached.

There are no major financial problems in sight for the center. The plan is to hire a full-time administrator to take over the managerial duties, now taken care of by Miss Mastriana and one of the full-time staff members.

"The program for the center is basically the same as last semester. The center is open from 7:00 a.m. to 5:30 p.m. and cares for children between two and one-half and five years of age. The day is divided into an afternoon and morning session. Families can sign up for one or both of these periods for any day of the week. The sessions consist of free time for physical exercise and play and two hours of structured time. The structured time can be spent in a Montessori section, science class, or an art class. The staff consists of three full time members and student volunteers. The full-time staff members are wives of Notre Dame graduate students, while the student volunteers have been recruited through the education and psychology departments of Saint Mary's. Students having experience in these areas who wish to volunteer are welcome to call the Day Care Center to arrange an interview. Those wishing to inquire about the services of the Day Care Center should call 284-6177 on the weekdays between 7:00 a.m. and 5:30 p.m."

Kennedy to file non-candidacy

(P) 1972 New York Times

Portland, Ore.--As things now stand Sen. Edward M. Kennedy's name will not be on the ballot in 23 of the 23 presidential primary states because he intends to file affidavits of non-candidacy.

In Oregon, where primary day is May 22, the Massachusetts democrat will have nothing to say about the election. The decision whether or not to place a name on the ballot is left by state law solely to the discretion of the Secretary of State. Oregon's secretary of state is Clay Myers, a liberal Republican.

As a result of watching Kennedy's standing in the polls, and hearing the amount of national magazine attention devoted to his activities, Myers is inclined to let Kennedy on the ballot. "How would that hurt Kennedy?" Myers asked.

"If it turns out he's really not a candidate and he doesn't come here, people won't vote for him. If he's a late bloomer, then the people of Oregon can vote him up or down and we don't have to leave it up to the whim of the candidate or the scheme of some campaign managers."

The Oregon law was amended in 1962 to eliminate the affidavit of non-candidacy because, as Myers explained it, the Oregon legislature tired of people saying they weren't candidates--such as the late Adlai E. Stevenson in 1960 and Gov. Nelson A. Rockefeller in 1968-only to start running later.

In the view of Oregon politicians, it is just possible that, if the democratic race has not been resolved by late may, and a substantial number of candidates are still active, an unauthorized or semi-authorized Kennedy campaign could gather momentum--even though Oregonians have historically preferred candidates willing to come here and work for their votes.

The prospect is sufficiently alarming to the backers of Sen. Edmund S. Muskie of Maine who is ahead here Robert Straub, the Oregon State Treasurer, who is one of Muskie's state chairmen, said Muskie is strong here "basically because he's Oregon's kind of guy--liberal but a little cautious."

At the moment, even those who support his rivals concede that Sen. Edmund S. Muskie of Maine is ahead here Robert Straub, the Oregon State Treasurer, who is one of Muskie's state chairmen, said Muskie is strong here "basically because he's Oregon's kind of guy--liberal but a little cautious."

Irish sweep past at Minnesota

by Joe Pasciarese

Voluble Al McGuire brings his unbeaten, high-flying Marquette Warriors, 14-0, to the Convocation Center after publicly blasting his players. DIGger Phillips counters with a running commentary on the Gophers' shortcomings, but nobody seemed anything for respect. It makes for an unusual situation when you have not seen a hockey game in the nets.

With five different players scoring and many taking turns at the line, the veteran Irish were able to take the win, although, on two occasions, the Gophers had Minnesota pass in the slot. Tomasoni.

McGuire's son Allie is a starting forward, usually gets whatever he wants, and did most of his scoring play, making a pass from the right point. Faber pulled the Hasting in favor of a sixth situation. Ed Bumbacco and Dan Gebhart added ten more. He and the freshmen noticed his fourth goal of the period.

Despite nine Notre Dame penalties in the period, the Irish were able to come up against the Gophers and took a 2-1 lead into the final period.

Noble made it 4-2, 6:10 into the first period, giving up a rebound shot by Regan. Pat Conroy gave the Irish another three-goal lead by humping what proved to be the winning tally at 10:21.

Sixty-two seconds later, Paul Regan pumped in Notre Dame's second goal, taking a 6-3 lead after the second faceoff. Dave Campbell were credited with the tally.

Minnesota was finally "bared" by their daring tactics at 18:48 when Regan shot the puck back at the Gophers' net and made it 6-3. That was as close as Minnesota could get, as they kept the Gophers at bay, despite controlling the puck in the left corner and, after the second period got underway. Defenseman Steve Curry picked up his first goal of the year just 17 seconds after the opening faceoff, driving home a wicked slap shot from the right point.

The Irish tallied another goal in the third period to keep the Gophers in a power play situation. Ed Bumbacco and Campbell were credited with assists on the play.

Two Irish goals, one by Bill Green, at 2:47 of the second period, gave Notre Dame a 5-4 lead. Nyrop led Green at the right point with a nifty stick work, he skated behind his own net, and, as he came skating from the cage in a vain attempt to stop his shot, Dan Gebhart added ten more. He and the freshmen noticed his fourth goal of the period.

Minnesota was finally "bared" by their daring tactics at 18:48 when Regan shot the puck back at the Gophers' net and made it 6-3. That was as close as Minnesota could get, as they kept the Gophers at bay, despite controlling the puck in the left corner and, after the second period got underway. Defenseman Steve Curry picked up his first goal of the year just 17 seconds after the opening faceoff, driving home a wicked slap shot from the right point.

The Irish tallied another goal in the third period to keep the Gophers in a power play situation. Ed Bumbacco and Campbell were credited with assists on the play.

Two Irish goals, one by Bill Green, at 2:47 of the second period, gave Notre Dame a 5-4 lead. Nyrop led Green at the right point with a nifty stick work, he skated behind his own net, and, as he came skating from the cage in a vain attempt to stop his shot, Dan Gebhart added ten more. He and the freshmen noticed his fourth goal of the period.
Minorities lectures scheduled

Several noted educators will participate in an American Studies Lecture Series beginning next month. Each will spend two days on the campus and deliver three talks on "Socio Political Movements and Liberation Movements" of their minority interest.

One lecture in each series will be an evening event and will be open to the public without charge.

Two of the series will have a grant-in-aid to the department for research on "Buckling of Large Scale Dynamical Systems" by Dr. Ray and Richard Saeks, professor and associate professor of aerospace and mechanical engineering - $42,105 from the NSF as an institutional grant for science.

The largest award was $100,000 from the National Science Foundation (NSF) for a study of "Longevity and Senescence in Germfree Rats" by Dr. Morris Pollard, director of the Lаборан Laboratory.

$30,000 from the U.S. Navy for research on "Reckling of 'Cylindrical Shells Under Pressure' by Dr. Lawrence H. N. Lee, professor of aerospace and mechanical engineering.

$2,000 from the Sun Oil Co. as a grant in aid to the department of chemical engineering.

$100 from Corley B. McFarland, M.D., as a graduate fellowship for educational programs and new service programs and new faculty.

$9,000 from an anonymous donor for an "Interterm workshop in Economics" administered by Dr. Dennis J. Dugan, chairman of the economics department.

$450 for the James A. McCarty Scholarship Fund in civil engineering donated by three faculty in the department. The College of Arts Festival received $3,000 from the National Endowment for the Arts.

The Art Gallery received art-work titled "Tishauano Poncho" valued at $9,000 from Mr. And Mrs. Everett McNear.
