Activities night packs Lafortune

by Colleen Feehan

Lafortune Student Center last Wednesday served as a showcase for Notre Dame and St. Mary’s “Activities Night,” and for the first time actually appeared to fulfill its function as a “student center.”

“I was most impressed with the use of the center,” commented Gary Caruso, one of the night’s organizers.

Interested students packed the building to meet with members of some sixty-five campus organizations representing a diverse cross-section of interests: athletics, media, politics, community service, debate, student government, major-related clubs, and regional groups.

Some, such as WSN and the Chess Club, reported marked increase in membership in comparison with past years, while others registered a comparative decline. Despite such a drop in some, the overall attendance seemed to indicate a general interest in extracurriculars on the part of the student body.

A few complaints surfaced, one of which was that some of the clubs were not adequately represented. This harmed them in that they lost some potential members because students received an impression of apathy. However, the main problem was the half-hour blackout which discouraged many. Security cleared the building until the lights came back on, but that time most of the crowd had dispersed.

Hesburgh speech highlights picnic

By Mike O'Hare
Observer Staff Reporter

Speeches by University President Fr. Theodore M. Hesburgh and Notre Dame Humanities Instructor Ms. Mary Lyn Broe highlighted the Campus Ministry’s “A September Thing Picnic and Celebration” yesterday.

Described by Campus Minister Director Fr. William A. Toohey as a “highly festive warm welcome for Notre Dame students,” “A September Thing” featured a picnic with live rock music, speeches by Fr. Hesburgh and Ms. Broe concerning Notre Dame’s first year of coeducation, followed by an evening Mass on the South Quad. Fr. Toohey hopes that this event will “inaugurate a year long concern about coeducation, human sexuality, and how we are going to live at Notre Dame.”

Fr. Toohey emphasized that “the campus ministry has a special concern with the new area of coeducation. We are concerned with helping the student find his own identity.” After the low key beginning of “A September Thing,” the campus ministry has under consideration the use of different approaches and subject matter to questions of human sexuality and individual identity, including lectures, films, group discussions, and workshops. Fr. Toohey hopes that this program will help the students adjust to living in closer proximity and will be a very positive step toward the student’s maturation.

Proclaiming that “each one of us is a part of the new history at Notre Dame,” Fr. Hesburgh spoke of the hopes and challenges that coeducation will bring to Notre Dame. Hesburgh told the crowd of students, “You are making this place what it might yet be.” and cited that Notre Dame in the past lacked a dimension which he hoped coeducation would restore.

Hesburgh described his past attempts to “do something about bridging the gulf in the worst gulf between persons of different races and different religions.” He then related his concerns over the gulf between men and women, stating “One thing always troubled me, the fact that there wasn’t a healthy attitude about women on this campus.”

Citing that “we have a long way yet to go,” Hesburgh expressed the hope that “part of education from Notre Dame will be to communicate a meaningful way with all persons.” He challenged Notre Dame students to “work together, be open to change, and to respect and love each other.”

Hesburgh concluded his remarks on coeducation by stating, “It coeducation is part of a great adventure that we are going on together,” and hoped that coeducation at Notre Dame would bridge the gulf.

Hesburgh: learn together, be open to change, and to respect and love one another.

In response to Fr. Hesburgh’s remarks on coeducation, Ms. Broe spoke of the “paradox of women at Notre Dame.” She described “the delirium of women” by endorsing them with such feminine virtues as “compassion, emotion, and intuition,” and the “immodest use of these virtues against women to keep them from upholding nobility in the intellectual order.” To her, “The real value of coeducation is the process of undoing, of recovering lost territory, and that only by this process can you discover those feminine virtues.”

Broe spoke of the quota system of 300 women and 7,000 men as “conspiring against Notre Dame women.” She stated that the heightened visibility of women on campus excludes their intellectual and creates a false image that could have detrimental effects on the women if they personally accept this image. Broe viewed the effects of coeducation on St. Mary’s students as requiring a transition from “a sought after public identity to a private identity.”

Broe also complained about not being adequately informed concerning “the content or direction of Fr. Hesburgh’s remarks.” She also spoke critically of her instructions to speak for only five minutes and “to raise hard hitting questions.”

Reactions to the remarks of the two speakers varied among the female students in attendance. One student complained about women indirectly being called a piece of the scenery” by Hesburgh. Another female student, was annoyed by Broe’s statements, commenting that “she used a bunch of big words, but didn’t represent the opinions of the average girl.”

Students pessimistic about SLC

by Don Ruane

Student Life Council elections for the six student representatives will be held this Wednesday. This is the first part of a three-week campaign the student body is spending to present the outlook for 1972-1973 SLC from the point of view of student, faculty, and administrative representatives who are either running or re-electing. Members last year, or are returning as nearly as the faculty, student, and administrative representatives.

Theoretically today is the last day to submit your petition for an SLC seat from one of the six campus districts, but Student Body President Bob Kerschen said last week that, "It's alright with me, if they are returned this weekend.

As of Thursday afternoon, only district five (Sorin, Walsh, Alumni, Badin, and Riddle) is without a candidate. Dennis Etienne, executive vice president of student government, said he would like to see a woman candidate, and that he would not object to women candidates from this or any other district.

The other districts shape up as follows: Off campus, one candidate; District 2 (Varley, Breen, Proctor, North, St. Ed's) one candidate; Towers, one candidate; District 4 (Stanford, Kegel, Lee) one candidate; District 6 (Fisher, Panborn, Lyons, Morrissey, Howard) two candidates.

Etienne, who holds the seat normally, and is the coordinator of student body Vice President, expresses pessimism to prevail, unless there is a major issue which is at least partially decided in the student's favor.

Somewhat in sympathy with Etienne, but a self declared "pessimistic optimist" is Floyd Kezele of the Towers District. He was vice chairman of the council the past two years, and is the only candidate with a solid background in SLC procedures. He is up for reelection.

"There's going to be a lot of hard nose barganing on both sides, but the real year and a half has begun. I feel this is the only major issue which is at least partially decided in the student's favor.

In the past students have found more friends among the faculty delegates than the administrative members, and the situation has changed according to Kezele. "The present administration is making a point of saying and this is unfortunate for the students," noting especially the loss of Fred F. D'Marco, a well known student reporter.

"I had expected something more. This is going to be an SLC of entirely new faces," Kezele added.

Although "Things could go" this year, according to Kezele, "he doesn't plan to attend any meetings. He went to one last year and "found it so boring" that he read his art history assignment, and didn't go to any more after.

According to Kerschen, who claims "I really don't give a shit, the SLC is 'all we got or the time being.'" He is pessimistic about the whole thing, and it is expressed when he says the function of the council is "to make it appear as if a tri-party body is running things around here."

Kerschen adds that the SLC is supposed to effect "real change" but adds that this is done by the administration.

Both Kershen and Kezele agree that there seems to be potential for change in the SLC this year. Kerschen attributes it to the reorganization of the Vice President for Student Affairs office.

Kezele feels there have been signs, particularly from the administration, that indicate the advent of more open discussion of issues. In particular, he noted remarks by R. F. James, dean of students, which indicate a greater willingness to consider such as those made Tuesday in Sorin Hall. Fr. Riehle said for example, that greater communication between administration and students is essential for productive achievements.

Another factor noted by Kezele, which might contribute to better relations, is this "wholes new faces." He said this puts the administration "on the defensive" and will force them "to cater to the students" to a greater degree.

"I am not sure that the SLC will be able to do this," Kezele added. "The SLC probably will not meet before the last week in September or early October. According to Kezele, "it will have to be well conceived and fast. It can't be hasty, or change for change's sake."

The SLC has treated many issues, although not very thoroughly in most instances, since it was formed in 1968. This year it appears that coeducation will be a major and continuing issue.

Already, Fr. Riehle has recommended the SLC look into solving the freshman room crisis and preparing for the possibility of another woman dorm in their territory, and there is even the possibility that discussion of coed dormitory will begin, according to Kezele.

Kerschen agrees that coeducation will generate some issues, and Washington—After more than a month of debate, the Senate Thursday approved the United States-Soviet agreement to freeze a major part of their offensive nuclear arsenals for five years. However, it added a proviso that any future treaty affecting the weapons should be on the basis of numerical equality. The agreement was approved by a vote of 72 to 2.

Washington—The White House said it expected the signing of a comprehensive trade agreement with the Soviet Union before the end of the year, and possibly within weeks. But opposition to the proposed agreement appears to be growing in Congress where sentiment was running increasingly as a result of the Soviet Union requirement that all Jews who wish to emigrate pay high exit taxes.

Home—Pope Paul VI ordered isolation of the tonsure, the circular shaving of the crown of the head that has been a mark of Roman Catholic clerics since the early middle ages. The command that "first tonsure is not to be imposed again in any case, otherwise" the entrance into the clerical order was contained in one of two papal documents reforming church ministry beyond the priesthood.

Student govt fee for special activities

by Bruce Petrovick
Observer Staff Reporter

Students attending N.D. may have seen an optional Student Governments Fee of $14.00 in their university bill. This fee is used by Student Government to support its various extracurricular activities on campus.

Student Government usually gets $70,000-80,000 from students paying the fee. With these funds the Finance Committee makes recommendations and the Board of Commissioners then takes action on these proposals thereby producing the budget.

The breakdown of last year's Activities Fee found seven of every $14 going to the Student Union which sponsors concerts, movies, and general activities for all students. Various student groups accounted for three of every fourteen dollars. These included such organizations as the Afro-American Society and Neighborhood Study Help Program. The President's Council received one of every fourteen dollars, which was used for hall renovations and An Annual. The remainder was used by Student Government for maintaining its office in Lafayette and sponsoring Freshman Orientation.

The Office of Student Government was of the opinion that the fee was ample. However, as is usually the case, if they had more money they could do more.

The formulation of this year's budget has been delayed because of the Administration's changes in it's accounting system. The tentative target date for the budget is the first week of October. Distribution of the money should begin shortly afterward.

Halls get money

by Jim Eder

As a result of last year's appeal by a committee of residence hall presidents, the University's board of trustees has agreed to provide up to $50,000 for major hall renovations.

The money is to be distributed through the office of Fr. Jerome Wilson, Vice President for Business Affairs, who will review and evaluate any petitions for funds.

In order to receive such financial assistance, a hall president and his council must first demonstrate the need and validity of their request. According to Fr. Wilson, the express purpose of this fund is to support "worthwhile projects aimed at improving hall life on campus." Consequently, the money is not to be used for individual needs, such as a new bed or desk, but for major renovations that will benefit everyone in the hall.

As of this date no money has been allocated. Rumors that $250,000 had been designated and $150,000 of it spent renovating Badin and Walsh proved untrue.

Law school modernization begins

by J. Peter Berry
Observer Staff Reporter

The ND law building will face the knife this week Thomas L. Shaffer, dean of the law school, said Wednesday, as he revealed plans for the building's announced renovations.

The renovations, which are expected to provide extra floor space, will cost an estimated $1.6 million. "Book capacity will be doubled and student seating space tripled, and the rooms will be air conditioned and modernized," the dean noted. "We were severely cramped over there," he said.

About 450 law students and 25 professors are now holding classes at the old Wenneninger Kirsch biology building. The students come from more than 110 colleges and universities throughout the U.S. and the world. Sometimes a college degree isn't necessary to be accepted. "We try to get a spread of people from all different backgrounds. We take some people just because they're interesting people," Associate Dean David T. Link said. "We like people who really got turned on to something," Dean Shaffer added. The law school often accepts people already in other careers some with Ph.D. degrees, a few in their forties and fifties.

Women and Minorities

The first woman was admitted in the fall of 1966. This year there are more than fifty women law students. On the subject of minority group students the dean said, "We actively recruit minority group students and we have a full time grant program. Ten or 15 percent of the entering class are minority group students."

He added that 46 minority group students had been accepted to this year's first year's class but 15 are attending classes. Every tenth student at the law school is on scholarship. There are also three loan programs available.

One of the pearls offered Notre Dame law students is the chance to study law their second year at ND's school in London. The experience helps 20 students to become more familiar with British and international law. Foreign year abroad programs in Latin America and Japan are planned for the future. Dean Shaffer noted that the Japan program would require fluency in Japanese.

Summing up the school's changing ways the dean said "It's much more diverse than it used to be." Indeed, a sequence of courses on environmental law is offered and 11 students are involved in a three year and two summer course which combines a degree in law and environmental engineering.

"Asking about ND undergrads, Dean Shaffer said he likes it when they apply. "An ND applicant has some advantage getting in because we can learn more about him, but we don't exercise any conscious bias towards him," he added.

Double Donors

The dean mentioned that ND graduates usually make-up about 35 percent of the school. "They make good lawyers," Associate Dean Link added, himself a graduate of the Notre Dame law school. "I'm a double doner." Dean Shaffer sees a great future for the ND law school. "We promise to be one of the top schools in the country and we already are," he said.
Catholic presses scarce in US

by Ann Throsar Darin

Catholic university presses in the United States are like the number of sunny days in South Bend lately...there just aren't that many.

Yesterday, The Observer tried to locate a few Catholic university presses to use as comparisons to Notre Dame's financially-troubled press operations. After unsuccessful tries at Boston College, Georgetown University, Xavier University, John Carroll University, St. Louis University, and St. John's University is Queens, New York, a press was located at Loyola University, Chicago, Ill.

Loyola can maintain one of the few Catholic presses in the nation, although Notre Dame, its operation is not directly funded by the University. Since 1962, it has been incorporated.

Although the press there has lately been losing money, it tries to offset losses by producing a substantial number of Jesuit-written English grammar and religion textbooks geared to grades 3-12. In addition, it publishes 15 scholarly manuscripts. In contrast, Notre Dame reduced textbook publishing several years ago in religion-a previous money-maker.

Fordham University, Bronx, New York, operates the only other Catholic Press which The Observer could locate. The key to their continued existence is that the university pays the salaries of the University Press employees. The Press, which has a modeled appropriation, is only required to pay for the production and marketing of its products.

This, of course, may be one of the most successful Fordham is one of the few university presses in the country to be moving into new, larger quarters. According to Ronald Manbridge's article, "Towards an Ideal University Press" (Scholarly Publishing, April, 1971), there are five ways to finance a university press. First, by an annual appropriation from university funds. Second, by obtaining a capital endowment which will provide an income sufficient to meet annual deficits. Third, by obtaining a succession of subsidies to cover the cost of individual books or journals." Manbridge states.

Manbridge also looks to communal operation and commission making the operation self-sustaining with risk (best-seller) publishing. Despite these five different ways to fund a university press, The Observer could only locate two other operating Catholic university presses west of the Mississippi besides Notre Dame's.

Commercial publishing companies took over presses which previously were operated by Catholic and Duquesne University for cost-saving. Marquette University, Milwaukee, Wis., has also ceased publication in the last decade. But, the financial squeeze is not limited to Catholic university presses. Many state and private universities have also re-evaluated their publications lately.

At Harvard University, the Press operates similarly to Notre Dame As a division of the University, it is not profit making. For the last two years, it hasn't even come close.

"We had the biggest loss that a press at Harvard has ever had, two years ago," recalled Mr. Brian Murphy, business manager. "Our houses totaled over $200,000. Last year, by comparison, our loss was only $87,000."

Murphy attributes the lower figure to a reduction in the number of manuscripts published and greater selection in the quality of books chosen. At Loyola, Murphy added that Harvard also publishes a lot of textbooks which are used nationwide, including The Harvard Dictionary of Music.

Among the 150 titles published by Harvard last year alone, Murphy said that almost every department on campus was represented including the Law School and the Graduate Business School. Notre Dame, on the other hand, only has confined itself to only a few humanities departments in the University.

At Yale University, New Haven, Conn., the Press is financed by a different means. "We're actually a department of the university," explained Whitney Blake, assistant Press director. "But, we have our own endowment fund."

Although Blake could not release Yale's latest Press budget, he confirmed that it has a $1 million sales volume. This compares with Notre Dame's $143,548.64 figure for the same period.

Despite this endowment, Yale is also losing money, but by a very insignificant amount when viewed with the other universities The Observer polled. Blake traces the Press's loss to the fact that the University pays the salaries of the first edition.

Voter registration focuses on campus-wide canvas

Call the University of Notre Dame to find out a student's telephone number and special student operators, members of the Arnold Airforce ROTC Society, will not only fulfill your request, but also remind you to register to vote.

This is only one of many techniques being used by both Notre Dame and neighboring St. Mary's College to insure that its students, an electorate of 15,000 votes, are franchised under the new 18 Year Old Voting Act.

At the college, we believe our job is educating people to become educated electorate since it has been shown that the American people get the kind of government that they deserve, we feel that we would be raising the standard of American Government by encouraging the students to get involved," explained Ms. Kathleen Mullaney, St. Mary's College dean of students.

The college plans a door-to-door canvas in all dormitories using the school's resident assistants, aides in the dean of students. During registration for the fall term classes last week, both the college and university sponsored voter registration desks manned by Indiana State deputy registrars, which added close to 500 new student voters to the rolls.

A technique being used at the College, which is becoming popular is to encourage students to register both at home and at school to avoid the intricacies of applying for and filing an absentee ballot. According to Richard Bohan, SMC political science instructor, this is perfectly legal as long as the voter does not cast ballots more than once during a national election.

At the University of Notre Dame, Ms. Jeannine Swartz, assistant to Acting Vice-President for Student Affairs Philip Forcendo, is not sure about the dual registration. The campus office has informed that if a student registers at school as well as at home, and is covered under his parents home owner's insurance, this may invalidate the premium.

Because of a special Congressional enactment, any one who has lived in an area for thirty days prior to a national election may register to vote for only a presidential and vice-presidential candidate.

Questioned on whether students can maintain more than one voter registration, Tom Broden, a voting registrant, referred all problems to the Legal Aid Office.

"I do not think that it can be done," Broden said. "The Law School which is temporarily being housed in the old Biology Building has established a voter counseling service with difficulties." Broden, director of the Urban Studies Institute, reports that three deputy voting registrants will work in the Urban Studies Office (214 Rockne Memorial) to enfranchise voters until September 23rd.

After the 3rd, qualified students may register to vote at the Fire Station behind McDonald's on Michigan Avenue south of Notre Dame.

"The reason that we got involved in voter registration at Notre Dame," Ms. Swartz said, "is that the McGovern people approached us to register students on campus. In Indiana voting registration is wound. Each party has its own voting registrars. We didn't want to appear to be opening up Notre Dame strictly to McGovern forces, so we invited the GOP voting registrar and the League of Women Voters to come in, too."

Ms. Swartz stressed the University's non-partisanship, however, she added that the McGovern forces are very strong on campus with voter registration, while the Nixon supporters do not have the same momentum. McGovern supporters have dorm captains and floor captains in every hall on campus acting as catalysts for getting out the student vote.

Everyone knows there is a new constituency on campus. Not the female students, but the 18 year old voter. These votes, more than any single development in the lifetime of any college student, have the potential to transform the resigned disillusionment that has settled on Notre Dame and many other college campuses into a vibrant, very exciting couple of months.

It's a newspaperman's dream come true. Now all the coverage of national politics has been legitimized in a manner completely impossible before the enfranchisement of college students. Throughout the country students have sampled the power of electoral politics and many have found the uniqueness of the 18 year old vote has many events possible that may never be so easy again.

Voter power

In Ann Arbor, Michigan, the Human Rights Party which is completely controlled by students at the University of Michigan won two seats on the nine seat City Council. By forcing a coalition with Richard Nixon and George McGovern budgeted large sums of money for advertising by both major parties, Nixon is already planning extensive coverage of the November elections. An in-depth feature on a local convention attended by several staff members is coming next week. Two faculty members and a member of the newly re-organized Vice-president of student affairs staff have already agreed to do periodic election analyses. The articles will focus on the major economic and political issues of the campaign.

In addition, reviews of Robert Sam Anson's biography McGovern and John O'shorn's Second Year of the Nixon Watch are being prepared.

Hopefully, this coverage will not be in vain. The last two years have not been very good political years on campus—here or anywhere else. But many students are already registered to vote. If the faculty registration drive on campus isn't let up until nearly all Notre Dame and St. Mary's students have registered either in South Bend or in their hometowns.

It may be a little aggravating to be constantly reminded to register every time you dial 3222 (campus directory assistance), but the results promise to be intriguing or at the very least fun to watch.

from the editor's desk:

A Political Year

In the past few years, there has grown a seemingly infinite number of "movements" that congratulate themselves on the genuine genius of their inception and the startlingly new reason for those in power to tremble. Most of these movements, however, have only the quixotic pursuit of liberty and the individual's pursuit of happiness, and many are definitely to be lauded. This is rapidly becoming the era of increased human freedom of expression, though hopefully it will not increase as much as to become anarchy.

On the one hand, there is no one curous aspect of the movements is the demand for immediacy. This is an idea whose time has come; the current situation must be changed, is the cry and the implication of the members of the varied groups. Never mind what the situation is; it has to be changed. As fellow citizens are the buttons of many, many jokes and stories, and that must stop now. Black slaves have been in one way or another for two hundred years, and that must be halted now. Gay men have been shunned and ostracized for far as back as anyone can remember; that must be changed now. Women have been treated as inferiors everywhere, so we must stop this now.

But is this possible? Is it a practical viewpoint that sees that hundreds of years of Nuodes of prejudice will completely change with the thought that that is a poor reflection on mankind, but that is what mankind is: a mixture of every man's own desire to change the life of groups for liberty will never be realized; I truly mean they will never be realized.

But is this possible? Perhaps. Surely an incomprehensible one to the members of such groups demanding immediate cure to so many social ills. For example, by not trying to mean a vaguely foreseen, important in the future, a word meant to place the less in the head of the groups. I meant in this case cannot be scheduled right away. Granted, that could mean 100 years, but it could mean any unexpected week. The time has come for any, one is the one that the product of a carefully thought out process, therefore carefully thought that that is worthwhile enough to reach that goal.

And that is the main bar under the saddle of a great deal of modern movements: they are not really working on them, they only become one of the activities in the infancy of the sly,

"Day living, ideas that appear and promptly disappear because the vast is not really ever really give back so much."

"Why?" Because they are not thought out. And an important part of thought is thinking and planning the future. Since you cannot change something unless you know what it is, and that is not possible unless you have the time to think about it.

Prize examples of this failure appeared recently in an article in the Observer by Maria Callahan on campus movement: women's rights, on the few favorable ones left. Her thesis that St. Mary's women are finally realizing their potential as persons, rather than women, again a laudable one.

However, while her movement and thesis are both worthy of support, I am not sure of the conclusion. Ms. Callahan is on behalf of the editorial board. Columns reflect the opinion of the individual writer; they are not to be taken as editorial comment.

"Day living, ideas that appear and promptly disappear because the vast is not really ever really give back so much."

"Why?" Because they are not thought out. And an important part of thought is thinking and planning the future. Since you cannot change something unless you know what it is, and that is not possible unless you have the time to think about it.

Prize examples of this failure appeared recently in an article in the Observer by Maria Callahan on campus movement: women's rights, on the few favorable ones left. Her thesis that St. Mary's women are finally realizing their potential as persons, rather than women, again a laudable one.

However, while her movement and thesis are both worthy of support, I am not sure of the conclusion. Ms. Callahan is on behalf of the editorial board. Columns reflect the opinion of the individual writer; they are not to be taken as editorial comment.
McGovern: Much of things
By W. R. Apple Jr. (c) New York Times
Des Moines, Iowa — As seen from Washington, Sen. George McGovern's presidential campaign has been a money problem, organizational confusion, listless rerun of the familiar 1972 Democratic nominee's campaign plans, with a few more ambitions on the campaign trail and no real gains.
Indeed, McGovern sounds a lot like his old adversaries; he is a bit too much like the aggressive "trust-the-Democrat" thrust of his rhetoric. It is traditional Democratic management of the administration while whole enterprise seems lacking in substance.
McGovern is running with what he has often described as a very cold campaign.

Senior bar switches labels

by Pete McInugh
Observer Staff Reporter

The members of the Alumni Club will not be grabbing for all the gusto they can this year. This is just one of the many changes and renovations made by the club last month.

Besides switching beer distributors from Schlitz to Pabst and Pabst, the organization, under manager James D. Cooney, also installed new ice machines and coolers. The bar area has been tripled from its eight foot length of last year and both the first and second floors have been tiled. The renovations, done solely by students, amounted to an excess of five thousand dollars.

Officially registered as the Alumni Club at Notre Dame, Indiana, this establishment has been the gathering spot for seniors and occasionally an alumnus for the past four years. Often referred to as the Senior Bar, the club is the first of its kind at Notre Dame. It was created by the Alumni Association and is governed by the Alumni Board.

While only in its fifth year, the building in which it is housed is in its fifths. What now is a bar, once was a convent, a monastery, and a professor's home. It has also been the residence of an ROTC captain and the University Club. Despite the popular rumor, Knute Rockne never called it home. Cooney summed up the unusual history of the building in these words, "If the walls could talk, they'd tell a half of a story."

Regina Hall to be revamped

St. Mary's will have a student center of its own located in Regina Hall within a month, according to student government sources. Regina was chosen by the Committee of Social and Recreational Expansion headed by Dr. Mary Alice Cannon, Vice-President of Student Affairs, because of its extensive size, ease of adaptability and already present equipment. The committee was appropriated $5,000 by the board of Regents for the new complex and expects its completion by October.

The new center will provide ample spacing for authorized college organizations, and student recreation. Student Government and Campus Ministry have already moved into their new offices on First Floor North, with Student Publications Chimes, the literary magazine and Blue Masque, the yearbook soon to follow.

First Floor South basically functions as a recreational entertainment area, featuring two small parlors offering a more personal atmosphere for dates, and an aseem and kitchenette for group dining within the college. The north wing of the basement offers total recreational equipment, housing two complete furnished dining rooms and kitchenettes, a small room for checkers and cards, an area for roller skating, ping pong and billiard tables, a craft room, a conservation area, and a small auditorium for movies and student productions.

The south wing of the basement is the only area in the student center restricted to women only. It has its own kitchenette, lounges, and exercise room.

Cheerleaders need money, not publicity
by Beth Wille
Observer Staff Reporter

For a cheering squad that won first place in the nation last year from the National Cheerleading Foundation, Notre Dame's cheerleaders are receiving practically no help from the University.

"We gave this school a lot of recognition and publicity and the only financial assistance that we're receiving is $265 for our uniform cleaning," Squad Captain Joe Cowin related.

Last year the members had to pay for all their travelling expenses, equipment and one half the cost of the uniforms. This year instead of improving the situation has gotten worse. Revenue for some expenses was raised last year by selling "rumper stickers" for fifty cents. This year the bookstore has started selling "cheap imitations" of the squads only income for fifteen cents. Also, the squad must pay the entire cost of their uniforms this year.

The main problem lies in the fact that the cheerers come under the Department of Student Affairs which siphons the majority of its money to the band. Dr. Robert Ackerman told the members that no money was allotted for them in the present budget.

For the job they do the squad feels that the Athletic Department should help them out. Joe Cowin and junior member Bob Bekendorf went to see Moose Krause, head of the Department, and were told only that the matter would be looked into.

Last year, with their number one rating, the squad did receive $2,000 with which they reimbursed themselves for all their expenses and bought needed equipment. But they realize that they can't count on the average $250 a piece for travelling expenses.

Noon bomb threat proves false
by Tom Drape

An alleged "bomb threat" was made by phone Wednesday noon against St. Joe's and Pangborn Hall.

Except for Pangborn, where the word was leaked, the residents were uninformed. At Pangborn, Peers reported, the maids and janitors were sent home. Security men remained until after 1 p.m. without detecting any bombs.

Jerusalem, Israel—On a hill halfway between this city, sacred to the world's three monotheistic religions, and Bethlehem—where the founder of one of those religions was born, Notre Dame will dedicate this month a landmark in Christian ecumenism.

The holy land hill is called Tantur, and the landmark, fashioned from native stone and blending into its olive tree-lined and rock-strewn surroundings, is the University's Ecumenical Institute for Advanced Theological Study.

The formal dedication is actually a year late. The Institute had already completed its first academic term, but there was no time for opening ceremonies last November when the first of its scholars moved into the not-quite-finished center. Belated though they may be, inaugural events will last four days, starting September 24, and include a religious service, a reception and open house and an academic symposium on the topic of "Salvation in Christ—the Problem and the Promise."

Symbol of Reconciliation

The idea for the Institute came out of a precedent-shattering meeting between Pope Paul VI and the late Orthodox Patriarch Athenagoras in the course of the Holy Father's pilgrimage to the Holy Land in April 1964. To commemorate this meeting—a vivid symbol of reconciliation among Christians—the Pope asked Notre Dame's president, Rev. Theodore M. Hesburgh, C.S.C., then serving as head of the International Federation of Catholic Universities, to organize under the Federation's auspices an ecumenical institute in Jerusalem. Administration of the Institute was subsequently transferred to Notre Dame.

Thus it was in November of 1965 that a group of Roman Catholic, Protestant, Orthodox and Anglican theologians gathered at the Rockefeller Foundation's conference center at Bellaio, Italy and formed an Academic Council to plan the Institute. Deliberately, there were only nine Roman Catholics among the 29 scholars on the Council.

Nucleus of five or six

The task of raising the money for the Institute's building was left to Father Hesburgh, and he interested I. A. O'Shaughnessy, a St. Paul, Minn., Notre Dame trustee and benefactor, in underwriting construction.

Notre Dame's president then turned his energies to raising money for an endowment of $13 million, the financial aspects of construction. Meanwhile, planning went ahead on the academic organization. The Ecumenical Council envisioned a nucleus of five or six resident scholars invited to make the Institute their home for a period of two or three years. Added to that were to be from eight to ten senior scholars who would come for a period of eight months, and perhaps as many as 20 junior scholars who would visit for shorter periods, perhaps to finish dissertation work or to carry on postdoctoral research.

Colloquia and Seminars

Meals and worship would be in common, and the academic dialogue would be carried forward in colloquia, informal conversation, seminars, and invited lectures. All organized around a theme, which initially would be the Christian understanding of salvation. An annual report was to be published in order to circulate essays produced at the Institute and to keep scholars abreast of the work being done at Tantur. The scholars selected were to be first-rate, and their research on the cutting edge of theological investigation. One Methodist Church official saw the Institute as a kind of think tank. "It may well be other theological centers will feed their kindred problems to Jerusalem."

The first occupants of the new

The first occupants of the new building at Tantur were six Spanish Benedictine monks from Montserrat, who form the nucleus of what is hoped will be a cross-confessional permanent staff for library work and hospitality. The first group of fellows included Rev. Charles E. Steedly, Notre Dame's theology dean, who served as a vice-president and treasurer, Rev. Edmund P. Joyce, C.S.C., handled the financial aspects of construction.

We have something to prove — Dampeer
by Vic Durr

Every so often, Notre Dame's football program recruits a first-class ball-player who also rates as a first-class "ideal." John Lukejuck was one. So was Paul Hornung. And so is John Dampeer.

Dampeer, ND's 1972 offensive co-captain, is a native of Kermit, Texas, and he came to South Bend from Longhorn Country largely through the efforts of an ND alumnus who saw him play in a high school game.

"I was lucky enough to play on a good high school team," said the 6-1, 235 pound senior, "and a Notre Dame alumnus saw me on a day when I had a good game. He wrote to the university, and pretty soon they got in touch with me."

"I was excited when they contacted me, but it was when I visited the campus — I spent a weekend here, living in the dorms, and all — that I knew that I decided. I was most impressed by the people who make up Notre Dame, and that's the point I try to make: whenever you talk about the place to someone else. Of course, you can't play down the academic or athletic excellence here, either."

Dampeer has won Two monograms for his work as an offensive tackle, and he was a member of the 1972 Cotton Bowl Champion, as well as a very hard, strong, dedicated-minded team. And he has little doubt that this year's squad will be returning the explosive brand of football that Irish fans have come to expect.

"I can speak for the offense," he said, "and I'm personally very optimistic about the season. But with any team there are questions."

"We were 8-2 last year, and people were on our backs all season long. 8-2 in the Big Ten. The mood here is expecting more this season. We'll have a better offense than we did last year — we'll score more, and we'll be more exciting.

"We'll have some new personnel in some key positions," he continued. "Only Miami grid tix left

Notre Dame Ticket director Don Boudaft has announced that three 1972 home football games with Purdue, Missouri and Texas Christian are already sold out.

The Irish open the home campaign against Purdue, September 22, and while Missouri invades October 13 and Texas Christian October 28. The few remaining tickets for home games with Pittsburgh and Miami went on sale August 14.

Tickets are still available for road games against Northwestern, Michigan State, Air Force, Navy and Southern California.

Krause given NCAA post

Notre Dame Athletic Director Edward (Moine) Krause has been elected to the executive committee of the National Association of Collegiate Directors of Athletics. Krause, starting his 23rd year as the Irish athletic director, will serve as the university division representative for District Four. The appointment will continue through the next four years. Krause replaces Bill Robe of Ohio University.

Other university division representatives include Sawyer Peters, Dartmouth, J. O. Cop-edige, Navy; Bob Woodruff, Tennessee; Ernie Barrett, Kansas State, Rix Yard, Tulane; Pete McDowell, New Mexico and Jim Barratt, Oregon State.

"What we did in the spring game didn't surprise me that much, either. We knew that we had a real fine offense, and we knew all we had to do to have a good game was to eliminate mistakes and develop some consistency."

But still there is some question as to who will actually be at the controls of the offense when the Irish open next Saturday against Northwestern. Cliff Brown and Tom Clements have been battling for the number one role since spring, but the Irish coaches have yet to name a starter.

"I can't say anything either," said Dampeer, "but I can tell you that this is probably the best thing that has happened to us last year. But I don't really know why.

"But probably," he continued, "it's because we aren't feeling the pressure of being picked number one before the season even starts."

"We'll be looser out there, we'll be more at ease, we'll have something to prove."

Pomarico keeps the True Faith'

By "Lefty" Buschmann

It has been almost been required procedure for sportswriters to compare Frank Pomarico with his first three predecessors in the Irish No. 2 role. Frank has seen a lot of people, he’s seen a lot of games, and some of the games you can’t even explain and some of them have been very fun. We have to carry the team while the defense matures, but we’re playing together as a team this year.

Pomarico cites academics as the chief factor in his decision to come here, after being a varsity football player at St. Francis High School.

"Since Larry and I, and a couple of other St. Francis graduates (Jerry, Dick, and John O’Donnell) played football at Notre Dame, the people around Howard Beach have begun to follow the team." Pomarico loves the game of football, a feeling which, obviously, causes him to hesitate about entering pro ball. "How solid is the pro game? It’s not a job, it’s a job." Pomarico lists his main goals as the return to his community of Howard Beach. Frank admits that he would like to play as a pro, but he is not sure he can make it. Who knows, an injury can end their careers.

The Irish Eye

ND defense needs improvement

by Jim Donaldson

During his nine years at Notre Dame, Ara Parseghian has figured out how to beat Texas, Purdue, Michigan State, and Southern Cal, but there’s one opponent that continues to frustrate him—the weatherman.

Weather’s unpredictable conditions resulted in a decision by the Irish coach to forego the usual mid-week practice and conduct a split-squad, four-hour workout.

Still the Irish managed to get in plenty of work as the number one and second defensive units played against the third and fourth defensive teams in one half of the field while the third and fourth offensive clubs dealt the first and second defensive units on the other side of the 50 yard line.

"In view of the weather, this sort of workout was the only way we could have practiced otherwise," Parseghian explained. "We didn’t want to tear up the wet turf in the Stadium and, by practicing out here (Carter Field) we were able to work on some fundamentals and still get in as much as possible.

Parseghian devoted almost all of his attention during the scrimmage to his top defensive units and wasn’t happy with their performance.

"The defense is playing with a lot of confidence," said Parseghian. "We’ve got a lot of people and they work a lot of work. Being young, they have a tendency to fumble and, on defense, one mistake can mean the difference in any game for the opposition. We’ve got to work on reducing our defensive errors."

"In the scrimmage, the second unit showed quite a lot of promise and we’re happy with their work."

Football picks

As anyone who’s spent more than a casual afternoon at the racetrack could tell you, it’s not a pastime for most of the state’s high school football coaches.

You can estimate horse’s potential by its class and recent workouts but you can’t be sure of anything until it’s displayed its form in competition.

The same goes with college football. A club may look great in the pre-season guides but there’s no guarantee that its games are no easy business even in mid-season, when a team’s capabilities can be more accurately judged. In the first place, the coin flip sometimes seems like the most reliable method of selection. Second, a win and a loss and a team’s total point spread was only equal to one.

There weren’t many people that looked at UCLA and Stanford and there was some satisfaction in predicting the end of Toledo’s 35-game winning streak last weekend.

This weekend marks the first game of the season for most of the nation’s colleges that didn’t start last Saturday, with the exception of many of the Eastern schools and notables like Notre Dame and Texas.

With another abundance of opening games slated, it’ll again be a tough week for pickers. Nevertheless, here’s the way the Irish Eye sees the outcome of this week’s top collegiate encounters:

Bostian College over Tulane — Boston’s running over the Red Sox but coach Joe Yukon’s Eagles may divert Beantown’s interest to football tonight.

Georgia Tech over South Carolina — Look for Tech to play two halves of good football this weekend.

Northwestern over Nebraska — The Cornhuskers, two in a row. No way.

Michigan over Northwestern — Michigan will face some tough defenses in battle of its first title, but this doesn’t figure to be one of them.

Arizona State over Southern — Sun Devils should come up with most of the points in this meeting of potent offenses.

Air Force over Wyoming — The Falcons will get off to a flying start.

Ohio State over Iowa — The Buckeyes seldom lose in Columbus.

Bulldogs over Tennessee — Georgia Tech gave the Vols a victory last Saturday. The Nittany Lions won’t be so generous.

Ann Arbor over Notre Dame — At least Notre Dame will win one game this season.

Purdue over Bowling Green — The Boilermakers open with a louter.

Michigan over Illinois — A big game for the school’s own, but State’s Duffy Daugherty, always optimistic, has real reason to be.

Washington State over Montana — The Mountaineers ought to pick up win number two.

Washington over Duke — Sonny Sikkirler and his gang were almost ambushed last weekend. They’ll be ready tomorrow.

Florida State over Miami — Miami’s (Fla.) over Ohio State — Fran Curci has built himself a good ball club at his alma mater. Good enough to beat the 15th ranked Buckeyes.

By "Lefty" Buschmann

Jim Donaldson

Commenting on the progress of the players at some of the various defensive positions, Parseghian said, "The tackles are progressing, the ends are consistent, and the linebackers have been hard hit."

At the start of practice this fall, Notre Dame’s linebacking corps appeared to possess both depth and talent, if an abundance of game experience. But the suspensions of seniors Jim Musuraca, a regular last season, and Pat McGraw's knee injuries to Tom Devine and Mike Webb that will likely require a corrective surgery, have depleted the Irish at that key position.

A third defensive back against the third and fourth teams.

"We’ve got to work on reducing our defensive errors," Parseghian remarked. "Right now, the situation doesn’t look bright."

Jim O’Malley, who started a year ago, junior Gary Potempa and sophomore Drew Mahlic and Sherm Smith were working as linebackers with the first unit Wednesday.

Things weren’t so gloomy on the southern half of the field, where the top two offensive units were slugging it out. The ball moved the ball into the end zone against the outclassed third and fourth defensive units.

"We could have almost passed at will," said offensive line coach Tom Pagna, who directed the offensive part of the workout. "Instead, we used the time to work and polish up our running plays."

It was very crisp at first before the weather forced a leveling off.

Parseghian was satisfied with the workout, saying "I thought it was a good deal. We had 44 people working full time and we got a good chance to look at both the defense and offense."

 alles easy to obtain. At facilities as well as a beautiful new building shared only with the course bulletin editors, it is free.

At other state schools, funding is equally easy to obtain. At Nebraska, $80,000 of the payroll for the press is paid by the State Offices, storage facilities and telephone service. The same is true, Wisconsin similarly pays its Press employees. Civil servants working for the State. However, Notre Dame's budget is not as vast as those of bigger.

Arnold Air Society holds open house

In recognition of the 25th Anniversary of the United States Air Force, the Arnold Air Society will host an open house at the ROTC building on the campus of Notre Dame on Friday, September 15, from 2:00 to 4:30 pm. To help stimulate an interest in aviation and to the Air Force ROTC program, the open house will feature an exhibit covering the span of aviation from the beginning to the present space age. There will also be exhibits, which in the personal collection of Robert Jaques, COC of the 18th, features old photographs, and original autographs of the aviators who actually made aviation what it is today.

Letters by men like Richard Bennett and Doolittle will be seen, as will air mail covers signed by aviators like Sikorsky, Lindbergh, and others. Also on exhibit will be a complete collection of autographs of the famous aviators of the Air Force, and the upcoming Skydive program.

Another item rarely seen will be a set of colored photos personally autographed by the Russian Cosmonauts. All students and members of the Faculty are invited to attend state-funded universitates. Reportedly the University can only fund the Press annually with Student outlooks on SLC pessimistic speculated that partisanship might reappear on the agenda. "The students go out of the apartment that issue last year," he said. Etienne agrees with the suggestion that raising the issue is "like beating dead horses... a few most certainty ing parties anyway.

However, "there's always some bastard that'll try to enforce them," Gutierrez tried to do in Dillon last year, and then there is always one or two R.A.'s that try," Etienne added.

The Indiana state law concerning fracking could become an issue according to Etienne, but not Kero. Etienne feels the age will be lowered to 18, which would require changes in the student manual.

Kerle feels that its passage is contingent upon the election of a new state governor, and that the law would not be changed until next year. He said it seems to be a Republican policy to veto any such change, and the present Governor is Republican.
