Theft victims bound, gagged

by Greg Rowinski
Staff Reporter

The armed robbery of five Alumni residents Sunday night could have been a Jack Webb production, according to Dave Burch, one of the victims.

According to conversations with the occupants. He was answered as if he were dead already. "Getting out was my only chance" was his reaction, so he turned and ran, swearing my fail head off. The three decided it was time to leave the scene of the crime, and also ran out of the room. In their haste they left one of the two pistols.

The three headed out of the hall as Hill ran down the hall. The rescued captives locked their door and called security.

War continues with small-scale attacks

by Charles Mahr
(C) 1973 New York Times News Service

Can Long, South Vietnam-South Vietnamese forces were openly ignoring the cease-fire agreement in the area northeast of Saigon today, but on a relatively small scale and selectively.

Government spokesmen in Saigon were charging that there had been hundreds of Viet Cong and North Vietnamese violations of the cease-fire since it supposedly began at 8 a.m. Sunday.

occupation

But to a foreign observer touring routes 1 and 22 in an area 30 to 45 miles northwest of Saigon for the last two days, there was no clear evidence.

What was happening was that Saigon forces were trying with considerable success, to drive away Communist forces that had blocked roads and occupied hamlets for a last minute offensive shortly before the cease-fire.

The sounds of an American B-52 bombing raid could also be heard faintly from Cambodia, a few miles away.

American sources said Communist forces were moving about in South Vietnam under orders.

There was no full-scale repression of VC and NVA. Instead, there road blocks

"The Saigon government clearly seemed to have made a decision that it would not tolerate Communist's successful efforts to block key roads and lines of communications just before the cease-fire. On a much smaller scale, government helicopters repeatedly fired rockets into the area and staffed it with the two latest air combat forces of the hovering CH-53D helicopters.

Americans were not involved in any of the violence. American field advisors were withdrawn from South Vietnamese units Saturday well before the cease-fire deadline.

According to conversations with other journalists, similar fighting was taking place today and Sunday in Route 11 leading north from Saigon to Lai Khoi and on Route 15 leading south to the coastal city of Vung Tau.

no redeploys

One of the protocols of the Paris agreement is entitled "Concerning the Cease-Fire in South Vietnam and the Joint Military Commission," as Article A of this protocol says that as soon as the cease-fire goes into effect, ground forces of the parties of South Vietnam shall remain in place. That is, in order to ensure a stable cease-fire, there shall be no major redeploys or movements that would endanger a party's area of control or result in contact between opposing armed forces and clashes which might take place.

"American forces shall not redeploy in any way to such an extent as to endanger a party's area of control or result in contact between opposing armed forces and clashes which might take place." Section B of the main agreement itself says that "The armed forces of the two South Vietnamese parties shall remain in place.

In practice, these provisions seem to be ignored as much as others that stipulate that the Vietnamese army and the American armed forces would act with a "view to ending hatred and revenge" and in the "spirit of mutual nonelimination.

refugees

It was clear that the Viet Cong and North Vietnamese tried to exploit the approaching cease-fire last week by closing such roads as Route 1. If a true "standstill cease-fire" had taken place, all traffic to Tay Ninh, for instance, would have been either blocked or would have had to pass through an area of Communist control—even such "control" consisted only of a few men crouched in foxholes on the road.

It was also clear that the Saigon government forces did not stand still.

Refugees from the fighting were appearing in this hamlet today as the shooting went on nearby.

and they couldn't find a huge amount of money." The robbers appeared to expect to be able to "trap the occupants," suggested Burch, and proceed with their crime uninterrupted. But they were unaware that people would drop in through the evening and prevent such a thing. The first to intrude on the robbers were Dennis Lamarr, another roommate, and Terry Schneider, a visitor from St. Louis.

Schneider entered first to find a gun pointed at his head and the four roommates crouched on the floor. Lamarr saw the four on the floor and thought it was "some kind of joke." The look on Schneider's face and the gun pointed at his own head convinced him that it wasn't. He and Schneider joined the other four on the floor.

The rooms were getting crowded with the two latest additions, joining Dave Dermyer, Steve Teso, Bob Lee and Burch. The robbers, with nowhere else to walk, often stepped on the backs of the victims. Besides the situation was all too clear and there wasn't much time left. This was the roughest treatment the victims received.

The four robbers, realizing their miscalculation, were "pretty shook," according to the residents. They held control of their captives, now numbering six, but the very number was unsettling to them.

The three had begun their crime very professionally, not using names and keeping their faces averted as much as possible. But they tended to let their guard down as the evening progressed.

Opinions vary among the residents regarding their personal danger. The gun pointed at their heads was instrumental "keeping roads closed," as the robbers suggested and threatened to shoot if no more money was found that the three meant business. But cash was the primary interest of the invaders.

Gerry Hill's knock again interrupted the thieves' activities. Hill responded to "Who is it?" with his own question, regarding the matter as a joke being played by the occupants. He was answered as one of the three opened the door and pointed a gun at his head.

Hill saw his roommates on the floor and feared that they were dead already. "Getting out was my only remarried. For some reason the occupants' composure remained intact. The gun pointed at their heads was instrumental "keeping roads blocks closed," as the robbers suggested and threatened to shoot if no more money was found that the three meant business. But cash was the primary interest of the invaders.

Robberies hit ND campus

by Dave Roat
Staff Reporter

A wave of thefts has been sweeping across campus since the school year resumed Jan. 16, climaxing by Sunday night's armed robbery in Alumni Hall.

Security chief Ar thur Pears has no exact figures on the number of thefts, burglaries and robberies that have occurred, but admits that this recent rash has been "undeniably severe."

During the past week, thefts were reported in 16 residence halls. Stories besides the armed excursion into Alumni. In addition, a couple of would-be thieves (possibly the same who entered Scaife-sicus's description match) went to the Dome office on the fourth floor of the Center for Continuing Education office and rifling the drawers and closets inside.

"Paulius definitely saw them at work," said Pears, and "he can identify them." On the previous weekend, the same group might also have forcibly entered the Observer offices on the floor below and stolen several items, including a cassette recorder.

Among the thefts reported this semester include Planner, Grace, the basement of Life Line, the Career Development Center, and Howard, where a particular large theft allegedly occurred. This is not a complete list.

Why all the recent robberies? Security chief Pears does not believe they have been "inside student perpetrated jobs."

"It would appear that we have some people from downtown who are here for money and drugs," explained Pears. "The Alumni Hall incident is very similar to what's been happening in the residential South Bend area—the thieves break in and demand marijuana or money.

He places most of the motivation for the crime wave on the search for drugs and ways of financing the drugs themselves.

"Perhaps a source has been dried up somewhere by some law enforcement agency," said Pears. "We don't know. But we've traced each one of these thefts, robberies and burglary to drugs."

Forcing breaking and entering has been rare on campus, said Pears, although it was in this recent rash of robberies. The only reported case of forced entry was that attempted by the thieves last Saturday evening.

"Our resident hall thefts," said Pears, "have come from students not locking their rooms. The thefts of Howard, Farley and Sorin all took place in rooms whose doors were unlocked."

Dame chief Paulius seems to contradict this generalization. His understanding was that thieves were caught trying to force entry to a vending machine. An R.A. caught them at it, they threw their clawhammer at him hitting his right thumb."

Even in the Alumni incident, Paulius added, "The robbers gained entrance by telling a hall resident they were looking for some student in particular, and then convincing him to use his card to let them in. In Alumni, it's a card-controlled access hall."

Pears did not blame the thefts and burglaries on laxity on the security force's part, or on any weak point in its procedure.

"We've got 22 residence halls on campus, " said Pears, and "they have a lot of rooms. And the student center is wide open in the evening."

Even if we could concentrate exclusively on one hall we still wouldn't have the men to stand at all the doors and guarantee that no theft would take place. You can't ask a police force to guarantee that a house won't be robbed."

Pears plans on continuing normal security procedures and security men walking the campus. Hall doors should be locked to make it difficult for any evidence of an entrance, and the telephones for hall residents reporting fresh incidents.

"We got alot of crank calls," said Pears, "but we answer every one."

"(Paulius) definitely saw them," said Pears, "and the resident is wide open in the evening."

"(Pears) gained entrance by telling a hall resident they were looking for some student in particular, and then convincing him to use his card to let them in. In Alumni, it's a card-controlled access hall."

Thousands flee from lava of 'dormant' volcano in Iceland

By R. Thomas Thues
Staff Reporter

5,300 inhabitants of Heimay Island in Iceland fled from columns of molten lava as a presumably dormant volcano spewed molten lava 70 yards into the ocean.

Two days after the first eruption, townspeople expected to return to their town within a few days. Wednesday, however, two more volcanic craters erupted in the fishing capital. By Wednesday the rift was threatening to split the 2.5 mile wide island in two.

Although no casualties were reported, it is doubtful that Heimay's $2 million fishing economy will be restored to normal for many months.

Thousands of rescue boat lights and the blaring volcano and pictures of the menacing inactivity. The last men to see the rage of the Hekalajull volcano were the Viking explorers of 864 A.D. Pears believes that the three were not students. No student, he suggested, would be "crazy enough" to take the chance of being identified.

The incident is frightening, said Pears, in its pitiful act of unarmed criminals against unarmed victims and security. But he cannot foresee the arming of his force because of this one incident.

"We are not in the business of apprehending outsiders," he said, "but in protecting the interests of the Notre Dame community."

The robbers failed Alumni's hall-security system. A fourth unidentified youth had accompanied the three into the hallway of Alumni. He asked a passing Alumni resident for Lee's room number. Seeing the youth on the phone, and thinking him familiar to Lee, the resident let the four in with his identification card.
The past weeks have driven a point home hard and fast—something must be done about Notre Dame's security system. Pears, Director of Campus Security claims that his job is not to apprehend outsiders but to protect the interests of the Notre Dame community. Yet—

-Sunday night six students are held captive on the main floor of themselves. Seventy dollars is stolen.

-Over the weekend, would-be burglars entered the offices of the Dome and the Student Union.

-Also, over the weekend, thefts were reported in the Observer and the Alumni Hall. Seventy dollars is stolen.

-Further thefts have been committed in Howard, Grace, Farley and Fanner Halls. The Observer offices have also been broken into before and after $60 was stolen.

These incidents are not enough to sound the alarm of a general crisis, but they are indicative of something that is rapidly developing. The campus is getting reputation as an haven. The suspects are not apprehended, the pickings are plentiful, and security presents no barrier to youthful thieves who can pass as college students. All in all, it seems that Pears and his department are not doing the job as they have defined it for the interests of the community at this time are in peril.

Since complaints about security have been around as long as security has been, but two particularly well-founded complaints have been registered in the past week.

The victims of Sunday night's robbery in Alumni Hall contend that they had to convince security that a robbery had actually taken place. Once the officer was convinced, security showed up in fifteen minutes to investigate.

A second complaint was registered by Pat McLaughlin, President of Pangborn Hall. Pangborn survived a bomb threat earlier in the year, but with no thanks to security. An anonymous phone call informed the campus of the threat and they failed to even investigate. The extent of reaction to the call was that the maids and janitors of the hall were given the day off.

Yet, an anonymous phone call about a male living on Lewis Hall brings immediate response.

The problems of security on a college campus are many and this is recognized, but improvement must be found somewhere—perhaps in the attitudes of those who manage the security posts. Protection of the campus and its people is more important than what cars gain access to the campus.

This rash of thefts has pushed the issue to the fore and it is not one that can be put off. If security cannot find a way to better protect the campus than the future is indeed perilous.

Security exists to serve the campus, not to decide the morals of the people who live there. Once they get these priorities straight perhaps then they will set about curing the problems which are coloring the immediate future a shade of gray.

Notice to SMC Students

The second semester bill for Saint Mary's students included a card for a $2.00 Observer yearly subscription fee. Only a few of these cards were returned with payment. Many thanks to those people but this is not sufficient for us to continue this system.

Jason Lindower, vice president for fiscal services, has arranged a system which will allow direct payment of the fee on Wednesday of this week. A list of those people who have paid will be posted on the wall outside the cashier's office. Those who have not paid may do so from 9:30 to 12:00 and 1:00 to 3:30 at the cashier's window.

The fee may also be paid by mail but Lindower emphasized that only checks and not cash should be mailed. The card which accompanied the Saint Mary's bill is not needed whether you pay in person or by mail.

Our present method of delivery is not practical unless 80 percent or more subscribe. It would not be fair to those who have paid to subsidize the subscriptions of those who have not. However, no other method of delivery is financially feasible. Failure to subscribe in sufficient numbers would force a cutback in Saint Mary's service.

This would be the third year that Saint Mary's students for some reason or other have not paid the full subscription fee for the newspaper which they should have delivered. It's not fair to the Notre Dame students who do pay the full subscription fee and it can't continue.

John Abowd
Death as a Fact of Life, by David Hendin, under $7.50

"I don't understand what I'm supposed to do," Tolstoy said on his deathbed-and neither do most of us. The fear of silence will surround the subject of dying led Geoffrey Gorer, the British anthropologist, to coin the phrase "the pornography of death." But a "good death" is an imperative, in fact, that a German writer called it the "obstetrics of the soul."

To die with dignity is important not only to the dying person, but also to his or her survivors. We will always be able to remember not only the way they lived, but we may also try to make peace with them and separate ourselves from the dead. We may try to think about them in our own way, and we may expect to die well or in the last days of our lives in such a way that we can be relieved when the silence is broken. I know that as I read his book, I felt my own anxieties about death first articulated, then partially assuaged, and therapeutic to bring that immaterial enemy of ours out into the light. As the author points out, for some of us death can have an integrative rather than a disruptive function. We can use our lives as a coherent whole and give it an opportunity to rise up again emotionally and intellectually-to deny the fashionable charge of "meaninglessness or absurdity."

Accepting death is not necessarily a form of resignation, of giving up. It may be a positive renunciation. We can look back over our lives as well as forward to it. We can contemplate ourselves on what we have done and reverse the old saw that "You can't take it with you." By remaining the terrible duty of pretending, Hendin says, we can make peace with them and separate ourselves from the dead through appropriate periods of mourning and grief, we may find it difficult to attach ourselves to anyone who might help replace them afterwards.

Though there is not a superfluous page in "Death as a Fact of Life," I found myself-emotionally, not morbidly-drawn to those passages dealing with the dying person. When Hendin speaks of the indignity of deterioration, I remember the humiliation I saw in my own father's face when he was a rude goldfinger tangled tubes and life-saving machines. His difficulties were increased by his "stuff upper lip" philosophy that locked both of us in the anguish of all that we wanted to, and could not say. A terrible loneliness lurked in his eyes, but it was too late for him to learn or to change.

What the author does not say because it may be beyond the scope of his interest is that our entire life is a preparation for our death, and we may expect to die well or badly depending on how we have lived. Freud told a story of visiting William James at a time when the American psychologist and philosopher had a brush with death in the form of a heart attack. He could not only watch the EKG, but hearing James afterward how he had felt about the prospect, James replied that he had lived his life and done his work. Death held no terrors for him.

Edmund Bergler, the psychiatrist, remarks in one of his many books that, after a satisfying sexual experience with someone we love, it is natural to feel sleepy. I mention these two remarks because I feel that, somehow between them, we may find the answer to one of life's most intimidating questions.

The Peace

Editor

Some thoughts on an honorable peace.

1) The South Vietnamese have not asked us for freedom to choose their government. They have asked for something we are not prepared to give them. There are newspapers and radio stations censored, and people being jailed for speaking against the government. If we do not choose to defend our people, let us not expect to look for the best international role for a government which is communist government of the type their neighbors enjoy. As in Afghanistan, we are two dancing serpents.

2) America should now be able to take their heads off of its war, and see what the rest of the planet has been thinking about us. We are regarded as the most despicable and morally debased force in the world. It has been the Americans” again, only this time we’re not flies in our eyes, and probably won’t be able to even clearly recognize the futility of the problem of rebuilding our standing for another generation.

3) This war must not be forgotten. President Nixon did not explain the reason to the American people for a lasting peace.

Does this mean that the American people are expected that this is little more than a time between "conservation" and "production"? The spirit and strength of our people, and the future of the face of another far-off land!

Please, people, let’s rebuild this country we have destroyed by this horrible nighttime, this obscene war. Let’s not let our recovery by closing ourselves in and attempting to ignore the state we find ourselves in. Let us reinitiate the goodness that is this land.

We are a great people, and with the belief that the worst will return and enshroud it with the same right and dignity as is widely shown this part of our character) love and a sense of a gladdening world we can avoid another 18 years of pain. We must now prepare ourselves for a better day.

Rosini’s View

Editor

Clearly it will be some time before the total circumstances surrounding the student leaders at Notre Dame are known. But some preliminary judgments seem reasonable from the known “facts.”

First, just as a military ser­vicer, Notre Dame students, undergraduate and graduate alike, appear to have given up their rights under the constitution. Wherever procedure the university wishes to follow in enforcing its moral manifest destiny, the institution pursues them with flagrant disregard for course and legal right. Witness for instance the Provost’s threat of viral revocation for the student under discussion. Certainly that questionably approaches borders on blackmail at worst is a modern implementation of an ancient method. But if Mr. Pearse’s in treatment of the case is accurately reported, he violated flagrantly and in disgust at my own in­dignation, that is, my police force would spend the rest of the semester proving the corruptions.

This point is simply: if the university wishes to retain and enforce its moral manifest destiny for the sake of the good of the undergraduate and girls for girls “living in,” his police force would spend the rest of the semester proving the corruptions.

The point is this: if the university wishes to retain and enforce its moral manifest destiny for the sake of the good of the undergraduate and girls for girls “living in,” his police force would spend the rest of the semester proving the corruptions.

This is the point of the university wishes to retain and enforce its moral manifest destiny for the sake of the good of the undergraduate and girls for girls “living in,” his police force would spend the rest of the semester proving the corruptions.

I have written in this attempt to make some type of acknowledgement and thanks to all those who I was unable to thank personally by letter.

In an age of dehumanized mechanization: de-emphasized spirituality and self-centered egotism, it is rare that one is fortunate to find that people do care. It isn’t often one has the experience of an ordeal which approaches fatalism and allows the privilege of receiving the sincere heartfelt prayers, and thanks at seeing one “alive” at last.

These expressions have come to me in the form of letters, cards, prayers, gifts. What I think is the most amazing thing is that the majority have come from people I do not know. It is quite understandable why one never meet.

I feel as I did that night as I stood watching the plume, I had been on, heard burnt into flames in disbelief and the continued persistence of the unbelievable on it. I knew it was God who guided me from that plane, but his guidance is not as yet “known” to me. I feel also I did that night I was in the emergency room among those who were coughing, singing, and blackened by the... helpless and in disgust at my own in­sufficient strength. As I lay there witnessing their discomfort, I wished there was something I could do to relieve their suffering. I had never realized how bad an accident had actually been or how near to death I had come. I saw the pictures and I read the articles. Then, as now, my feelings are indescribable and known only to those who come so near to death.

My thanks are to God and everything. I was brought up and was generous to take the time to make some change. I now regret some of the things I do. People care, although it may not appear so outwardly. It is there.

Thank you Everyone!

Finally, some space should be allowed for the anonymous moral purgatory whom notified “security” of the ethical defectus in process at Notre Hall. How could this have been could have been had she (possibly she?) had the courage to confront the French lady, tell her that the man’s presence was repugnant, and asked him to leave. The chosen method smacks of moral cowardice at best and one can only hope that the perpetrator feels adequate expiation by the exposition of the young woman.

We’re all grateful for the article in the recent Scholar’s Magazine. Dear Mike,

Your use of the word “hypercritical” in describing my attitude is to be recommended, but that of the students body who are ignorant of the overwhelming poverty of taste that our professors of football team have exhibited in the area of feminine pulchritude during the past four years, the term “hypercritical” connotes an excessiveness on my part which is at best misleading and at worst, I think, could do more real good on the quality of our social encounters. Our women, Allyson, O’Malley, Nancy, Ann, Bette, Maggie, Webb, and Dewan to realize the seriousness of your statement. I would rather believe that I possess a more discerning eye for the beautiful, and with the exception of a singularly unfortunate experience in Dallas, I have remained unappreciative of the university ultimate resulting in an ignominious of her sex. At last, she appealed to her conscience as a Catholic priest who, it is respect for the Provo in fact that meant at the expense of justice and fairness. I believe that the above account certifies the rumor so often repeated in Washington, D.C. that civil rights stop at Notre Dame Avenue and have on place on the Notre Dame campus. The role of Catholicism needs no comment.

InPIRG lacking momentum; support of ND branch meager

by Steven Carr
Staff Reporter

Ralph Nader has been trying to initiate programs in consumer research all over the country and in many states he has been successful. However, this state's version, called the Indiana Public Interest Research Group (InPIRG), shows little if any signs of life.

Bill Rahmer, one of the leaders of the movement to get Notre Dame's support for the program, explained that last year's leaders had presented a signed petition to the administration in the hope that Notre Dame could not get this kind of support, but it was hoped that Indiana University and Purdue would. Unfortunately, they were not able to fast track the two state universities, numerous of outside interference, rejected the program and put a stop to InPIRG in Indiana. Had they accepted it, a staff of trained professionals would have been hired in colleges throughout the state to work on public interest problems with the bulk of research being done by the students themselves.

This year, InPIRG does not appear to be in operation anywhere in Indiana and the prospects for its activism do not seem bright. Rahner felt that there were a number of students interested in the program here on campus, but that, generally, the interest was not great. "For now," he said, "it's all up in the air."

ND law students characterized as 'more cautious and conservative'

"Law students at Notre Dame today tend to be more personally cautious and conservative than previous graduates," Dean Thomas Shaffer told New York law students today. "They seem to want to do on their own. They want to do it within the context of traditional law practice."

Shaffer recounted the "veritable revolution" of five years ago when law student sought training in social change. There was much interest in legal aid and public interest aas not great. "For now," Shaffer concluded by saying that Notre Dame is attempting to become an above of diversity in the law student body by responding to the record number of applicants seeking admission to the Law School.

A & L students have processes for 'rotten deal'

Students in Arts & Letters courses who feel they have received a rotten deal in any area of their work are reminded that they have recourse to remedy their dissatisfaction.

A number of college departments have their own grievance procedures for students who feel they were wronged or unduly discounted. In addition, the college-wide procedure exists for students to have their "problems," which is mediated by students of the Arts and Letters Student Advisory Board. In addition, faculty participation. The procedure allows for an appeal to the college president in cases in which student problems result with forwarded to the dean.

Though the Dean's and not the council's decision will be final, the council's recommendation will be a deciding factor in the final determination of any case. For a detailed written account of the procedure, go to the College Dean's office, 127 O'Shaugnessy Hall.

Al Roco's 15th and 16th career points, including the opening-period goal, brought the Spartans the victory Friday night. The 15th goal was not quite enough for Notre Dame's wrestlers, who dropped both matches. St. Francis (Pa.) College 23-21 and powerful Marquette 39-9. Bob McFarland, who played in all four of the matches, filled in at the heavyweight position and scored six points, enabling Notre Dame to take the 23-21 decision over McFarland's opponent.

But Mike Martini, another heavyweight, emerged from his co-captain role along with Brice Ferrari, became the latest division leader of Notre Dame's season-long injury list, which has forced a 1-2 lineup of mostly rookies. Both Martini and Ferrari suffered shoulder injuries last weekend and will not appear in tonight's encounter with Wheaton College.

The Irish were getting injured and the rookies were in there to replace the injured veterans," explained coach Pat O'Connor, "and a great job for the rookies. They fought and scratched but they were not the same team as before."

"I thought they fought and were less-informed—I'm proud of them," said Pat O'Connor, the first team to test the Irish on Friday night, rolled to an early 1-0 lead by sweeping the first five of seven shots on goal. Peters (11) led Notre Dame's Marc Marcic to 2-0 on the night, 2-0 with his advantage to 12-4 with a pair of goals. Notre Dame's freestyling consistency of one escape, a take-down and a 10-0 score to lead the final stanza, coasted to an 18-0 Notre Dame win. Mike Nagoret, the Saints' 130-pound, shook off a stubborn challenge by Paddy Delrose and posted a 4:35 fall in the second period to open up 2-1 in the final minute.

Gary Parmelee of St. Francis made it three straight in the 126-pound weight class. Sophomore Steve Bruschetto, 20-2, after opening up a quick 7-0 advantage in the opening period. David Tardani was the Irish retaliated by pinning Don Kneep 7-0 in the opening period. Pat O'Connor followed with another Irish victory in the 159 on an 8-0 victory over the visitors. Returned Cordell. Bringing Notre Dame back to within 12-10.

Jim Harvey outpointed ND's Rich Gillson in the 159-pound event. The winning margin was being provided by a pair of falls. Nick Peters (11) led Notre Dame with his decision victory over Bruce Ferrari, 3-0. Ferrari was scored at 2:14, fashioned a 5-2 lead with a take-down and escape and went on to win 2-1 decision.

John Dowd of the Irish pinned 172-pound opponent Jerry Miller at 7:22 of the final period to take the 172-pound event. Dowd's comeback win brought immediate retaliation from the Saint's John White, who pinned Pete Bruschetto at 2:17, closing Notre Dame comeback hopes.

Heavyweight Al Roco's forfeit win closed out the night's scoring. Marquette, which faced the Irish Saturday, had no problem with an early lead by registering consecutive pins in the 113 and 126 weight classes. Mike Benning (118) stopped Notre Dame in the 113 with a 5-1 decision, scoring the last twelve points of the match. Tom Roland, Marquette's

Wittliff scored in the '68-'69 campaign, and 62 points, one more than John Lore, who led checking and backchecking."

"They won't win 61 games in a row, they've got some UCLA-like ideas and points in a season. Bum bacco now has 34 goals, three more than Phil Standing in games, scoring three goals each night. Those tallies enabled Mark came up with some sensational saves, sometimes two and three in a row to keep the puck away from the net."

Two wins, four points in the standings, left the Irish in fourth place in the Big Ten. But with Minnesota at 20-6 and 28 points and Ohio State at 20-7 and 27 points, it would take a minor miracle of scoring to move Notre Dame to second place.

"We need a couple of real breaks to get us in second place," said Larry Dowd, "but we'll keep working on it."

"I thought we played well enough to score a couple of goals, but we didn't," said Phil Standing. "We made too many mistakes, especially in the second period."

Tardani so frustrated the Spartans Friday night that an MSU player dashing style—one of their favorite techniques is to throw their bodies in an outstanding job of penalty killing in recent weeks. Their scram bling, weekend, such ideas aren't too far-fetched.
