SBP, SLC elections focus

by David Kaminski

Today the preliminary election for SBP and the final election for SLC seats are being held. The candidates propose the vote-taking tickets will advance to the finals on Friday, March 1. No write-in or blank ballots will be tabulated.

Several students may have already voted but for those who have not, The Observer offers a capsule summary of each ticket's platform.

Villarosa-Zimsky

Steve Villarosa and Bill Zimsky called for united student action in their campaign for SBP. "There is not a student and the controversial winter sports service-oriented program. Their major platform proposed increased service to the off-campus student and the controversial winter sports service. They urged the students in the halls to take more interest in gathering information on student housing. They also proposed a meat co-op and an off-campus shuttle service. Mr. Zimsky was unfeasible. However, The Observer claimed that he didn't want to make a lot of wholesale beef purchases for the off-campus student. Based on their research, the candidates claim that the University Conservation Committee, was contacted by the Villarosa and Zimsky were hampered in early campaigning when signs announcing their appearance in Zeller and Sorin Halls were torn down prior to their arrival.

Capp-Erickson

Ray Capp and Greg Erickson ran what they called a "well-organized" campaign. Their major platform proposals dealt with increased service to the off-campus student and the controversial winter sports service-oriented program. The candidates proposed the formation of six off-campus constituent committees which would work toward a unified and in gathering information on student housing. They proposed a meat co-op and an off-campus shuttle service. Several candidates charged that for various reasons the Stephon sports center guaranteed by Capp and Greg Erickson is unfeasible. However, The Observer checked and discovered that many of the objections were unfounded. See story below.

McLaughlin-Flanagan

Pat McLaughlin and Frank Flanagan made dealing with the administration the main thrust of their campaign. They said they didn't want to make a lot of campaign promises because they wouldn't be sure they could keep until they were in office.

McLaughlin and Flanagan called for a revision of the judicial code of SLC action. They criticized Fr. Hesburgh's ability to review any judicial case independently of the judicial system. "The task is not an inexpensive one but neither is it in excess of $4,000," he said. In his appearance at the Morrey forum Sunday night, SBP candidate Pat McLaughlin had stated that the University Conservation Committee had been investigating the possibility of closing down Stepan Center during the winter months to conserve heat and electricity. When Father James Flanagan, president of student affairs and chairman of the Conservation Committee, was contacted by the Observer, he replied, "The idea of shutting down Stepan Center during the winter months has never come up during the meetings."

Pat McLaughlin contacted the Observer Monday night and informed him that he planned to present a formal apology to Father Capp at the Walsh forum. "We are sorry that we misunderstood the story. The Student Affairs Office had told us," McLaughlin stated. "I'm sure my mistake is for themselves." Father David Schlaefer, Director of Student Activities explained the Stepan basketball proposal in this way:

"Back in early February, Ray Capp and Greg Erickson came to me with the idea of using Stepan Center, when it was available, as basketball courts. The whole proposal was simply to install baskets and places to line on the cement floor. The idea was good one and it was brought before the Student Affairs Central Staff where it was OK'd. The task is to put in two basketball courts. It can't be done without a game plan."

"The task is not an inexpensive one but neither is it in excess of $4,000. The basketball court naturally be ordered through the Athletic Department. I haven't really had a chance to look into it but plans are being formulated," he said.

Philip Facenda, vice-president for student affairs, verified Capp's statements that he had agreed to the proposal and that he had asked the Central Staff. He added, "It seems like a good idea but there is nothing definite yet."

Shankel-McErlane

Steve Shankel and Bill McErlane proposed "accountability sessions" where they could determine student desires and work on those desires from a position of strength. The candidates claimed they researched nearly every past and present student organization in the University. Based on their research, the candidates claimed that many of the Capp-Erickson proposals were based on "hard facts." In particular, they criticized the Capp-Erickson plans for Stepan Center basketball and warehouse. Capp-Erickson students for the off-campus student. Shankel and McErlane called for the abolition of the Student Union Board of Directors, calling them "one weak link in the whole chain." The return of students' rights was the basic point of the Oberhardt platform. In addition, he advocated judicial changes and better conditions for the off-campus students. "I'm tired of being treated like a child in a sandbox," he commented in Sorin Monday night. Earlier in Morrissey Monday night, the Oberhardt platform ticket was "violated" by Notre Dame's judicial system. Oberhardt candidates made land management, standard evaluation committees, an information office, and a food coop. "The University owns some cooperation among its free students off-campus," he summed up.

Gahagan-O'Connell

More student representation with a fact-finding subcommittee is necessary to implement any other changes, according to Villarosa-Zimsky. "Students are looking at the little things and missing the big picture," he noted at Morrissey Monday. In stead of shooting for smaller goals, students should vote for 20 per cent representation on campus councils, everything else will come more easily, he explained. VP candidate Frank O'Connell added that LaFortune is a disgrace and should be removed by next fall. The Administration needs to be sensitized about the off-campus situation," he added.

Rahill-Wordal

Ed Rahill felt that action toward the Administration, rather than reaction to its policies, is a necessity of Student Government. "In SBP, Rahill felt that "Back in early February, Ray Capp and Greg Erickson ran what they called a "well-organized" campaign. UFO expert to speak here

One of the nation's foremost authorities on unidentified flying objects (UFO's), Dr. J. Allen Hynek of Northwestern University, will deliver a public lecture on the phenomena at 7:30 p.m. tonight in the Architecture Auditorium.

Since its founding Hynek has been the official astronomical consultant to the U.S. Air Force's "Project Blue Book," the official clearinghouse for all UFO reports. He also serves as associate director of the Smithsonian Astrophysical Observatory in Cambridge and headed its NASA-sponsored Sputnik Tracking Program.

The chairman of Northwestern's department of astronomy, Hynek is the author of "The UFO Experience: A Scientific Inquiry," a newly published book documenting and analyzing every UFO sighting in the U.S. and abroad. He interviewed the two Mississippi men who last fall reported being taken aboard a UFO by "flying looking" creatures. Later he said they "undoubtedly had a very real and frightening experience and should not be ridiculed."

The author-professor has organized the Center for UFO studies which will begin the first serious, systematic and scientific investigation of the phenomenon. Air Force and other studies, he says, were carried out with "scientific blinkers and preconceived notions." He added that they never looked at the UFO sightings because they think it is silliness.

Hynek's talk is sponsored by the Student Union Activities Committee and is open to the public without charge.

Dr. Hynek will answer questions after the lecture in the Grace pit.

Faculty shows mixed reactions to estimated tuition increases

by Katherine Lawrence
Staff Reporter

There were mixed feelings among faculty members yesterday over next year's proposed tuition increase: The increase, as reported in the Observer, is expected to approximately one hundred dollars and will help pay for salary raises, supplies and repair expenses.

Professor Lawrence Bradly, Assistant Archivist with the history department, reacted negatively to the increased tuition in the belief that students are now paying as much or more than they can afford and that high tuition will eventually "price out" the middle class student. Bradly went on to say that the money for pay increases should come from other sources, such as cutbacks in administration expenses.

Professor Thomas Werge of the English department had this statement: The University, like all individuals and institutions, is feeling the economic crunch. But unless rising tuition costs stop at some point this place and other universities will price themselves beyond the reach of all but the very wealthy. That would be un-acceptable and a tragedy. Dennis Dugan, Chairman and Associate Professor of the economics department, viewed the tuition hike differently in that he approved of the students covering the pay hike, if indeed the money is going to go the faculty. He mentioned some previous tuition increases that never reached the faculty and speculated on whether or not this money would be used as indicated. Professor Dugan said he sympathizes with the students but the faculty salaries are part of the education they're paying for.

Another opinion came from Professor Don Linger, Chairman of the Civil Engineering department, who expressed concern over the monetary burden placed on students but voiced confidence in the administration and their handling of funds. He did not feel that the tuition hike would show up substantially in faculty incomes next year. "Noatre Dame is not top heavy in people who are paid super salaries and don't do anything. You can't whittle down the administration," he said. Linger also commented that unless the University can come up with a 7 to 10 per cent cost of living increase it may lose some "awfully good men."

Erratum

In yesterday's article on "SC Candidates Views" John Farrell was misquoted as saying, "A member should be responsible to the students against the Administration, with an eye to the Administration, too. Also only the student body and faculty should have had a vote on the proposed calendar next year."

The quote should have read: "A member should be responsible to the students in confronting the administration, also having a respect for the administration's views. Also the students, faculty, and administration should have had a vote on the proposed calendar."

O-C assistance offered

by William Murphy
Staff Writer

Ed Byrne and Stan Cardenas explained the results of their recent off-campus poll of student living conditions to the Presidents Council last night. According to Byrne, the poll shows that the students feel the University is lacking in consideration for the situation of the off-campus student and he asked for a statement of assistance from the HPC in an attempt to make these sentiments known to the Administration.

Byrne pointed out several examples of areas where help from the University would improve the living situation of the off-campus student. Byrne felt that the University could do more to help students in these areas.

Byrne pointed to several Universities which have established food co-op programs operating at minimal profit, which he felt would be the greatest help Notre Dame could offer to those students forced off-campus. He also noted that help by the University in rent control of apartment complexes such as Campus View is needed. Byrne stated that Campus View was supposed to be competitive with ND Apartments but it really isn't much cheaper.

Byrne claimed that, according to his poll, there was a need for University black list of landlords as well as a more extensive housing list. He claimed this was presently impossible because Father Shilts' office was grossly understaffed.

The HPC agreed to send a letter of support for the findings of the poll to Dr. Facenda, the vice president for student affairs. Stan Cardenas also announced some money saving ideas drawn from the poll for those who will be living off campus. Cardenas advised students to watch for advertised sales and use as many newspaper coupons as possible. He also pointed out that students can qualify for food stamps, which helps save money on food. Using less heat and light, showering at the Rock or ACC and buying meat in quantity were also suggested. Jim Roe announced that Student Government will begin a program of recycling on April 1st, the proceeds of which will go to Goodwill Industries. Roe said the guidelines for the program weren't established yet except that a great deal of the work in the program would have to be taken on by the individual.

Rich O'Connor, the president of Pangborn, announced that Father Burchalet would give an informal lecture Wednesday night in Pangborn at 7:30. O'Connor also announced that the Birch Bayh Re-election Committee was starting a student voter registration drive in an effort to give students a voice in the community where they live. Anyone interested in working on the drive or anyone having any registration questions can contact O'Connor at BS11.

Today

The student body of Notre Dame goes to the polls today to elect a new Student Body President and a new group of student representatives to the SLC.

In the past two days, The Observer’s Editorial Board has published recommendations for these elected positions. These endorsements reflect the opinions of the members of the editorial board and serve as our recommendations.

The board meets with all of the candidates, in this case the meeting being held all day Sunday. From the meeting, the board then debates what we’ve heard and what we know of the political situation on campus. From that debate emerges our endorsement.

This year, as in all years past, complaints have arisen about the fact that The Observer even endorses anyone. No complaints arise when The Observer takes sides on issues like the calendar, off campus, and all other news. The election is news like all other news. The fact that The Observer takes the responsibility of reporting the news carries with it the privilege and the obligation of commenting on the news. Our endorsement of candidates is that comment.

This year, The Observer has decided to endorse Ray Capp and Greg Ericksen for president and vice-president. Ray Capp and Greg Ericksen have withstood the multitude of charges leveled at them Monday during the campaign. With the clearing of the charges comes the reaffirmation of The Observer’s stance behind the candidacy of these two men.

This election has distinguished itself from those of the past year’s already because of the quality of the field of candidates. But the problem with the campaign this year was that despite the quality field, the issues degenerated into a discussion of basketball courts and frozen food lockers. It was disappointing to see a quality field descend to trivial discussions.

Despite the triviality, there are many, many excellent ideas circulating in this campaign as well as the many good candidates. Whoever wins the election, it would be an absolute shame if the ideas and the personnel are not incorporated into the new administration.

Before any of this incorporation can occur though, someone must be elected. Voting today will be at the noon hour and at dinner time. All on-campus residents can vote in their halls and off-campus students can vote at the o-c office in LaFortune. Make an effort and vote today. It is an important vote and you have a quality group of candidates to pick from. The Observer contends, though, that the quality candidates notwithstanding, Ray Capp and Greg Ericksen are the best of the bunch. Vote today and vote for them.

The Vote

The University’s human sexuality rule is the most ridiculous legal farce since the Tennessee Monkey Trial. Or rather it would be if it were not for the very real harm it has done and probably will do again. The harm is far in the suggestion of the Dillon student for breaking a rule which did not exist. The harm ahead is more such suspensions and expulsions for breaking a rule which still does not exist.

If the University insists on resorting to legalisms to protect private morality it should at least make those legalisms clear. But total chaos surrounds the sex rule, making any prosecution under it plainly unjust. On its face it simply says that sex is immoral. Nothing prohibits people who disagree with the University from acting on their disagreement. If you reject this simple interpretation you can choose between at least eleven more, including seven offered by members of the SLC who helped write the rule. Then the only thing clear about the rule is that it is unclear. But students are guaranteed “a clear statement of all actions or behavior that shall be considered a violation of University rules” before they can be prosecuted. Therefore the rule is either simple philosophy or void for vagueness. Either way no prosecution is must.

It is easy enough to end this confusion. The SLC can write a new and clearer rule and F. Redhough can carry it. But no rewrite could be retroactive. It could not apply to the Dillon case.

Of course the Dillon student was prosecuted mainly for parietal violations, with the evidence of a violation of the sex rule thrown in to “aggravate” them, according to Dr. Faccenda. But this “aggravation” idea itself is unjust. It is roughly like a prosecutor who does not have the evidence to prove a murder charge prosecuting the man for jaywalking and then toning down the emphasis he has to get the jury to give the defendant life imprisonment for jaywalking.

Further, parietals are broken only by having a “member of the opposite sex” in your room after hours. There is nothing in the rule which even states or implies that the rule is more seriously broken by what you are doing together or how long after hours you are doing it. (If all this seems like legal nitpicking I can only say that if the University insists on legalisms we must do along for our own safety.)

The conclusion to all this is that the Dillon student was guilty of only three or four simple parietal violations for having his girl friend stay with him three or four nights. The parietals rule the violations should have been handled like any other parietals cases by the hall judicial board. Instead he was unconstitutionally suspended by the University for a supposed violation of a non-existent rule twisted to aggravate a completely different rule.

Of course mistakes happen and nothing can be done about this one now, but when the errors were brought to its attention did student affairs at least apologize? Did it agree that the rule needed to be rewritten to avoid further injustice? Hardly. Dean Macheca merely said that he would continue to prosecute anyone he could catch under the old “unwritten rule”, even though he agreed that the new rule was the only one in effect. The SLC may give the rule priority attention, but not until April.

If student affairs acts in the future as they have reacted to date they will make a farce out of the potentially excellent rules document. Its statement of commitments will become a vain propaganda blast, its carefully drawn discipline procedures hollow trash, and its proclamation of student rights a campus joke. I doubt that the administration is so blind that they would go on like that indefinitely. But for now the message to the student is clear: Beware—in loco parentis means “We’re never wrong.”

The Bob Hope Benefit Special at the ACC Monday night was for the greater part of the audience a unique experience. Subjected to infrequent retakes for lost camera shots and technical difficulties, and a half hours. Yet the audience was never really bored. Hope was left often to his own devices and in his ad-libbing he was superb. With his quickly assembled show, Hope and company presented to a largely South Bend audience the combined talents of some of the most durable professionals in show business.

Hope originally thought of coming to Notre Dame three months ago. In an interview Monday afternoon, Hope said that his next task was "to get a list of stars that will fit this show and people and also get us a rating on television, which is the combination you want."

Rock stars seldom do benefits. But this Monday night four of them will be donating their time and even putting their own expenses to raise money for a most worthy cause. John Denver, whose greatest hit album, "Rocky Mountain High," recently made its spot in the Billboard Hot 100 this week, will be taking a day off from his cross-country tour to headline the Prison Reform Benefit concert in the Convocation Center. Also headlining will be the Nitty Gritty Dirt Band, who last week drew raves at "The Cellar Door in Washington."

The man who put it all together is George Mische, the Executive Director of the National Coordinating Committee for Justice Under Law (NCCUL). The NCCUL is seeking to initiate programs for penal reform in this country through informed legislation. In particular, they have been working on an "Alternative Sentencing" program whose main goal is to give those convicted of nonviolent drug offenses an alternative to incarceration, while at the same time providing helping them re-enter society.

The concert itself is being carefully planned to allow ample time for each artist. However, the highlight of the evening will be John Denver, who will feature the talents of all the musicians in a semi-planned jam session. Provision may be made for some sort of audience participation at that point. Nothing like this has ever been done at Notre Dame, so the impact could be incredible.

One of the headliners will be the Nitty Gritty Dirt Band, which has been around for a fair number of years. Their first hit was "Mr. Bojangles," probably the best version of the Jerry Jeff Walker song ever recorded. Since then they have gone through several personnel changes, but produced consistently high quality music. Their latest big album was a three-record set called "Will the Circle Be Unbroken." It featured some of the finest country musicians in Nashville and is regarded as a classic folk album.

Swofford became famous with "Good Morning Starshine" and "Jean," but has changed his billing to going along with his more progressive style. Playing concerts and major night clubs around the country, his basic instrumentation of Fred Rivera on bass and Chris Brooks on lead guitar and pedal steel adds a feeling to the music that is unique to his style. All of Swofford's albums, with the exception of the Ed Sullivan Show album, have been released in the near future. Those who expect to hear the sweet style they remember from the Ed Sullivan Show will be disappointed. Those who expect a solid, progressive set will be more than pleased.

Tickets are still available at ACC and Student Union Ticket Offices.

New coffeehouse opens near ND

by Tom Russo

A coffeehouse called "Emma's" recently opened on the 800 block of Howard Street in South Bend. Situated directly opposite the parking lot adjacent to "The Library" package store, its storefront facade belies its cozy interior.

"Presently," commented Joe Schlosser, founder and manager, "we are open Friday and Saturday nights with live folk and classical music. Sunday is reserved for 'reading night,' either poetry or whatever happens to come up."

"Whatever happens to come up."

Despite "Emma's" close proximity to Notre Dame, its clientele is not exclusively University students. "We get a lot of people in here who are residents of South Bend, people who work here or who just hang around since they've graduated. There's also a number of students from IUSB. Although we've had some trouble with some of the people in here who are residents, we're trying to get coffee beans so we can have fresh-ground coffee soon," said Schlosser.

The manager, a 1973 Notre Dame graduate who presently lives and works part time in South Bend, said he started organizing the coffeehouse last November in order "to fulfill a need which I felt was missing. I thought the community needed a cultural place, a place for people to get together, to listen to music, to perform, to be stimulated. It's a new alternative to the bar scene. It's always been a sort of dream of mine to open a place like this in South Bend. And since I used to work at the old St. Mary's Coffeehouse, when it was located under McLaughlin, I've had some experience in running a coffeehouse."

"I would like to emphasize," continued Schlosser, "that what we're trying to do is fulfill a need. I am not in this business to make a profit, but to provide a service to people in the community and to students who live off-campus. I feel there are many services of this type which need to be done, such as an off-campus food co-op."

The idea of service is evident at the coffeehouse. The core group of about ten people who man the kitchen and run the place are all University students. "We welcome anyone who wants to get away from the purely boring taverns; Louie's, Nickie's, etc." continued Schlosser, "that what we're trying to do is fulfill a need. I am not in this business to make a profit, but to provide a service to people in the community and to students who live off-campus. I feel there are many services of this type which need to be done, such as an off-campus food co-op."

Despite "Emma's" incipient success, Schlosser noted the success of IUSB's annual Folk Festival in the spring. "Emma's will stay open at least until the end of this summer. After that, I have to find someone who really wants to carry on the tradition. It requires a certain stamina and financial attitude," noted Schlosser.

Irish win eighth from BSU, 93-69

by Hal Munger

Not in seven years had the Ball State Cardinals been able to handle Notre Dame, and last night proved no different. It was the taller, faster Irish team through BSU for a 93-69 victory, the eighth in series. That leaves ND with a 2-1-1 record, 15 straight home wins, and only the memory of an NCAA tourney invitation.

Two heroes of Saturday's 106-80 win over Ball State were obvious. John Shumate, who scored 42 against the Mountaineers, had to be 30 at this time. The taller, 93-69 victory, the eighth in series. Adrian Dantley, of the contestants comes first and the enjoyment of the spectators change from day-to-day, it is refreshing, perhaps even assuring, that this ceases to be a contest, then stop it - don't let the boy get hurt.

As a team, Ball State made 42 percent of their field goals and 22 percent from their right. But when they finish, they look like pros.

It seems such a small price to pay, and it is, especially with the money going to those less-fortunate than us. When you get down to it, it's just a muscle game."

"At the moment, the bus accommodations are still being worked out. Hopefully, these problems will be taken care of," anyone interested in making the trip should call Mattes at 283-1800.

"The Irish, who were picked second in preseason national polls, have yet to clinch a playoff spot in the league. Notre Dame's first real rival for that eighth spot, Colorado College, is but one point behind."
